PREFACE.

THIS is the Third Edition of the New Civil Court Manual, in two volumes.

Like the second edition of the Manual the present one includes the rulings of the Bengal, Madras, Bombay, N.-W. P. and Agra High Courts Reports, the Calcutta Law Reports, Moore's Indian Appeals, Law Reports Indian Appeals, Sutherland's Weekly Reporter and the Indian Jurist, the reports of Messrs. Hays, Marshall, Coryton, Hyde and Bourke and the four series of Indian Law Reports up to December 1892 and contains all the Acts most of which are amended and brought up to October 1893. It is therefore hoped that this Manual would be very useful in this and other Presidencies both to the Bench and to the Bar.

The increasing demand for our Manual as shown by the rapid sale of the second edition, has much encouraged us in the compilation of this edition to devote considerable time and labour to its further improvement, thus rendering the Manual to prove itself most useful both to the Judge and to the Practitioner.

It is our pleasant duty to express our thanks for many useful suggestions with which several gentlemen favoured us from time to time. We hope we may be favoured with many more such.

In conclusion we must thank our friend Mr. Cokala Cunniah Naidu for the valuable help rendered to us by him in passing this work through the press.

THE NEW CIVIL COURT MANUAL. GENERAL CLAUSES.

ACT No. I. OF 1868.*

RECEIVED THE G.-G.'S ASSENT ON THE 3RD JANUARY 1868.

An Act for shortening the language used in Acts of the General of India in Council and for other purposes.

Preamble. WHEREAS it is expedient to shorten the language used in Acts made by the Governor-General of India in Council, and to make certain provisions relating to such Acts; It is hereby enacted as follows:—

Short title. 1. This Act may be cited as “The General Clauses’ Act, 1868.”

Interpretation-clause. 2. In this Act and in all Acts made by the Governor-General of India in Council after this Act shall have come into operation, unless there be something repugnant in the subject or context,—

(1.) Words importing the masculine gender shall be taken to include females;

(2.) Words in the singular shall include the plural, and vice versa;

(3.) “Person” shall include any company, or association, or body of individuals, whether incorporated or not;

(4.) “Year” and “month” shall respectively mean a year and month reckoned according to the British calendar;

(5.) “Immoveable property” shall include land, benefits to arise out of land, and things attached to the earth, or permanently fastened to anything attached to the earth;

Note.

The obligee of a bond, dated the 29th October, 1869, sued to recover the amount due thereunder from the property hypothecated therein. By the terms of the bond the obligor agreed to pay the sum of Rs. 75 with interest at two rupees per cent. per mensem on the 12th May, 1873. The amount thus secured exceed Rs. 200. The property mortgaged was the tenant holding of the obligor. Held that the interest of a tenant in his holding was right or interest to or in immoveable property; that consequently such bond, which affirmed as a security a right of which the value, estimated by the amount secured, exceed Rs. 100, ought to have been registered; that being unregistered it could not affect the "immoveable property comprised therein," or be "received in evidence of any transaction affecting" the same; and that the suit brought on the basis of such bond, for the enforcement of the lien, must, in the absence of the bond, fail.—I. L. R., 3 Al. 422.

See I. L. R., 13 Al. 432, noted under section 3 of the Transfer of Property Act. (IV of 1882.)

(6.) "Moveable property" shall mean property of every description, except immoveable property;

(8.) "British India" shall mean the territories for the time being vested in Her Majesty by the Statute 21 & 22 Vic., cap. 106 (An Act for the better Government of India);*

(9.) "Government of India" shall denote the Governor-General of India in Council, or, during the absence of the Governor-General of India from his Council, the President in Council, or the Governor-General of India alone, as regards the powers which may be lawfully exercised by them or him respectively;

(10.) "Local Government" shall mean the person authorized by law to administer executive government in the part of British India in which the Act containing such expression shall operate, and shall include a Chief Commissioner;

(11.) "High Court" shall mean the highest Civil Court of appeal in such part;

(12.) "District Judge" shall mean the Judge of a principal Civil Court of original jurisdiction, but shall not include a High Court in the exercise of its ordinary or extraordinary original civil jurisdiction;

(13.) "Magistrate" shall include all persons exercising all or any of the powers of a Magistrate under the Code of Criminal Procedure;

(14.) "Barrister" shall mean a barrister of England or Ireland, or a member of the Faculty of Advocates in Scotland;

(15.) "Section" shall denote a section of the Act in which the word occurs;

(16.) "Will" shall include a codicil and every writing making a voluntary posthumous distribution of property;

* In cl. 8, the words, "other than the Settlement of Prince of Wales's Island, Singapore, and Malacca," have here been omitted, having been repealed by Act XII of 1891.

(17.) "Oath," "swear," and "affidavit," shall include affirmation, declaration, affirming, and declaring in the case of persons by law allowed to affirm or declare instead of swearing ;

(18.) "Imprisonment" shall mean imprisonment of either description as defined in the Indian Penal Code ;

(19.) And in the case of any one whose personal law permits adoption, "son" shall include an adopted son, and "father" an adoptive father.

Note.

See I. L. R., 13 Bom. 87, noted under Article 5 Sch. I. of Act I of 1879 (Stamp Act.)

3. In all Acts made by the Governor-General of India in Council after this Act shall have come into operation—

(1.) for the purpose of reviving, either wholly or partially, a Statute, Act, or Regulation wholly or partially* repealed, it shall be necessary expressly to state such purpose ;

Revival of repealed enactments.

(2.) for the purpose of excluding the first in a series of days or any other period of time, it shall be sufficient to use the word "from "

Commencement of time.

(3.) for the purpose of including the last in a series of days or any other period of time, it shall be sufficient to use the word " to ;"

Termination of time.

(4.) for the purpose of expressing that a law relative to the chief or superior of an office shall apply to the deputies or subordinates lawfully executing the duties of such office in the place of their superior, it shall be sufficient to prescribe the duty of the superior ;

Official chiefs and subordinates.

(5.) for the purpose of indicating the relation of a law to the successors of any functionaries, or of corporations having perpetual succession, it shall be sufficient to express its relation to the functionaries or corporations ; and Successors.

(6.) for the purpose of indicating the application of a law to every person or number of persons for the time being executing the functions of an office, it shall be sufficient to mention the official title of the officer at present executing such functions, or that of the officer by whom the functions are commonly executed.

* The words " wholly or partially" are to be deemed to have been inserted here from the Commencement of the Act.—See Act I. of 1887, sec. 9.

and the first appeal therefrom heard, subsequently to the passing of that Act. Hurrosundari Debi v. Bhojohari Das Manji, I. L. R., 13 Cal. 86, approved.—15 Cal. 107.

Section 21, sub-section 2 of Act VIII of 1885 is expressly retrospective, and applies to suits pending at the date of the commencement of that Act. Jogessur Das v. Aisani Koyburto, I. L. R., 14 Cal. 553, followed.—15 Cal. 376.

Before the Bengal Tenancy Act of 1885 came into operation, a decree for rent was obtained under Bengal Act VIII of 1869. After the Bengal Tenancy Act of 1885 had become law, the tenancy, in respect of which the rent had become due, was attached in execution of such decree. A claim was subsequently put in to the attached property by a third person, which claim was disallowed as being forbidden by sec. 170 of the Bengal Tenancy Act of 1885: Held that the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act of 1885 were applicable to the proceedings in execution; the term "proceedings" in sec. 6 of Act I of 1868 not including proceedings in execution after decree.—16 Cal. 267.

Held, in the case of a document executed while Act VIII of 1871 was in force, the registration of which under that Act was optional, and which was not registered thereunder, and of a document executed after Act III of 1877 had come into force, the registration of which under that Act was compulsory, and which was registered thereunder both documents relating to the same property, that under the provisions of sec. 50 of Act III of 1877, the registered document took effect as regards such property against the unregistered document, the provisions of sec. 6 of Act I of 1868 notwithstanding.—2 Al. 851.

Prior to the 1st May, 1882, the Secretary and Manager of a projected Company (which was to be limited by shares) applied to the Registrar of Joint Stock Companies for a certificate of incorporation of the Company, intending that it should be registered under Act X of 1866, the Indian Companies Act then in force, and forwarded the memorandum and articles of association with the necessary stamp-fees, and did everything that was required to be done by or on behalf of the Company to obtain a certificate under that Act. No order was passed by the Registrar upon this application until the 6th May, and owing to delay, for which the applicants were not responsible, registration was not effected and the certificate was not issued until the 3rd July, when a certificate was given purporting to be granted in pursuance of Act X of 1866. Meanwhile, on the 1st May, 1882, the Indian Companies Act (VI of 1882) repealing Act X of 1866 came into force, sec. 28 of which provided that every share in any Company should be deemed to have been taken and held subject to payment of the whole amount thereof in cash, unless the same had been otherwise determined by a contract in writing filed with the Registrar. No such provision existed in Act X of 1866. The shareholders of the Company paid nothing upon their shares in cash; but had agreed (not in writing filed with the Registrar) that, in consideration of certain property conveyed by them to the Company at the time of its formation, fully paid-up shares were to be allotted to them. Subsequently the Company having gone into liquidation, the official liquidator sought to make the shareholders contributories to the assets of the Company as the holders of shares upon which nothing had been paid, with reference to sec. 28 of the Indian Companies Act, VI of 1882. Held that the proceedings for obtaining registration of the Company and a grant of a certificate of such registration commenced, within the meaning of sec. 6 of the General Clauses Act, when the memorandum and articles of association were received in the Registrar's office in April 1882, while Act X of 1866 was in force; that therefore the repeal of that Act by Act VI of 1882 did not affect those proceedings; that consequently the Company must be taken to have been incorporated under the former Act; and that the provisions of sec. 28 of Act VI of 1882 not being applicable, the shareholders were not liable to be placed on the list of contributories as not having paid the full amount of their shares.—11 Al. 349.

Recitals in Acts to be prima facie evidence of truth of fact recited.

ACT No. I. OF 1887.

RECEIVED THE G.-G.'S ASSENT ON THE 14TH JANUARY 1887.

An Act for further shortening the language used in Acts of the Governor-General in Council, and for other purposes.

WHEREAS it is expedient further to shorten the language used in Acts made by the Governor-General in Council, and to make certain further provisions relating to those Acts and to Regulations under the Statute 33 Victoria, chapter 3, section 1; It is hereby enacted as follows:—

Title and commencement.

1. (1) This Act may be called the General Clauses Act, 1887; and

(2) It shall come into force at once.

PART I.

ADDITIONAL CLAUSES.

This Part shall apply to this Act and to all Acts made by the Governor-General in Council under the Indian Councils Act, 1861, after the passing of this Act.

3. In any Act to which this Part applies, unless there is something repugnant in the subject or context,— Definitions.

(1) “abet,” with its grammatical variations and cognate expressions, shall have the same meaning as in the Indian Penal Code:

(2) “Chapter,” “Part,” and “Schedule,” shall denote, respectively, a Chapter and Part of, and Schedule to, the Act in which the word occurs:

(3) “sub-section” shall denote a sub-section of the section in which the word occurs :

(4) “commencement,” used with reference to an Act, shall mean the day on which the Act comes into force :

(5) “financial year” shall mean the year commencing on the 1st day of April :

(6) “local authority” shall mean a municipal committee, district board, body of port commissioners, or other authority legally entitled to, or entrusted by the Government with, the control or management of a municipal or local fund :

(7) “ship” shall include every description of vessel used in navigation not exclusively propelled by oars :

(8) “master,” used with reference to a ship, shall mean any person (except a pilot or harbour-master) having for the time being control or charge of the ship :

(9) “offence” shall mean any act or omission made punishable by any law for the time being in force :

(10) “public nuisance” shall have the meaning assigned to that expression in section 268 of the Indian Penal Code :

(11) “registered” shall mean registered under the law for the time being in force for the registration of documents :

(12) “sign,” with its grammatical variations and cognate expressions, shall, with reference to a person who is unable to write his name, include “mark,” with its grammatical variations and cognate expressions :

(14) “write,” with its grammatical variations and cognate expressions, shall include “print” and “lithograph,” with their grammatical variations and cognate expressions.

4. Where, by an Act to which this Part applies and which is not to come into force immediately on the passing thereof, a power is conferred on the Governor-General in Council or on a Local Government or a High Court to make rules, or to issue orders with respect to the application of the Act, or with respect to the establishment of any Court or office, or the appointment of any Judge or officer thereunder, or with respect to the person by whom, or the time when, or the place where, or the manner in which, or the fees for which, anything is to be done under the Act, the power may be exercised at any time after the passing of the Act, but rules or orders so made or issued shall not take effect till the commencement of the Act.

5. Any power conferred on the Governor-General in Council or on a Local Government by an Act to which this part applies may be exercised from time to time as occasion requires.

Powers to be exercisable by the Government from time to time.

6. Where, by an Act to which this Part applies, a power to make rules is expressed to be given subject to the condition of the rules being made after previous publication, the following provisions shall apply, namely :—

Provisions applicable to making of rules after previous publication.

(1) The authority having power to make the rules shall, before making them, publish a draft of the proposed rules for the information of persons likely to be affected thereby.

(2) The publication shall be made in such manner as that authority deems to be sufficient, or, if the condition with respect to previous publication so requires, in such manner as the Governor-General in Council or the Local Government prescribes.

(3) There shall be published with the draft a notice specifying a date at or after which the draft will be taken into consideration.

(4) The authority having power to make the rules, and, where the rules are to be made with the sanction, approval, or concurrence of another authority, that authority also shall consider any objection or suggestion which may be received by the authority having power to make the rules from any person with respect to the draft before the date so specified.

(5) The publication in an official Gazette of a rule purporting to have been made in exercise of a power to make rules after previous publications shall be conclusive proof that the rule has been duly made.

7. (1) Where a limited time from any date or from the happening of any event is appointed or allowed, by an Act to which this Part applies, for the doing of any act or the taking of any proceeding in a Court or office, and the last day of the limited time is a day on which the Court or office is closed, then the act or proceeding shall be considered as done or taken in due time if it is done or taken on the next day afterwards on which the Court or office is open.

Computation of time.

(2) Where, by an Act to which this Part applies, any act or proceeding is directed or allowed to be done or taken in a Court or office on a certain day, then, if the Court or office is closed on that day, the act or proceeding shall be considered as done or taken in due time if it is done or taken on the next day afterwards on which the Court or office is open.

(3) This section does not apply to any act or proceeding to which the Indian Limitation Act, 1877, applies.

8. Where an act or omission constitutes an offence under two or more enactments of which either or any is an Act to which this Part applies, the offender shall be liable to be prosecuted and punished under either or any of those enactments, but shall not be liable to be punished twice for the same offence.

Provisions as to offences under more than one enactment.

PART II.

SUPPLEMENTAL PROVISIONS.

9. The words “wholly or partially” shall be inserted before the word “repealed” in clause (1) of section 3 of the General Clauses Act, 1868, and shall be deemed to have been there from the commencement of that Act.

Amendment of section 3 (1), Act I, 1868.

10. The provisions of this Act and of the General Clauses Act, 1868, shall, so far as they can be made applicable, apply to all Regulations which may receive the assent of the Governor-General under the Statute 33 Victoria, chapter 3, section 1, after the commencement of this Act.

Application of this Act Act I, 1868, to Regulations under 33 Vic. chap. 3, sec. 1.

M. ACT No. I. OF 1867.

PASSED BY THE GOVERNOR OF FORT ST. GEORGE IN COUNCIL.

An Act to shorten the language used in Acts of the Governor of Fort Saint George in Council, and to make certain provisions relating thereto.

WHEREAS it is expedient to enact once for all certain definitions of terms usually employed in the Acts of the Governor of Fort Saint George in Council, and to make certain other provisions regarding such Acts; It is enacted as follows:—

Preamble.

1. Whenever in any future Act of the Governor of Fort St. George in Council, any word or expression shall be employed which has been defined in Chapter II of the Indian Penal Code, or in Chapter I of the Code of Criminal Procedure, such word or expression shall be taken to have the meaning assigned to it in those Chapters, unless it be otherwise provided by the Act, or unless there be something either in the subject or context repugnant to such construction.

2. First.—The words “Magistrate of Police” shall denote any person exercising the powers of a Magistrate of Police, within the local limits of the ordinary original civil jurisdiction of the High Court of Judicature at Madras for the time being.

Second.—The words “Town of Madras” shall denote such places as are within the local limits for the time being of the ordinary original civil jurisdiction of the High Court of Judicature at Madras.

3. Where any Act repealing in whole, or in part, any former enactment is itself repealed, such last repeal shall not revive the enactment, or any of the provisions thereof before repealed, unless words be added reviving such enactment or provisions.

4. The repeal of any Act or Regulation shall not affect any act which shall have been done, or any offence which shall have been committed, or any fine or penalty which shall have been incurred, or any proceedings which shall have been commenced, before the repealing Act shall have come into operation.

5. Where in any future Act of the Governor of Fort Saint George in Council no time is mentioned at which the same shall come into operation, such Act shall take effect from such date as the Governor in Council may notify by publication in the Fort St. George Gazette.

6 & 7. [Repealed by Act XVI. of 1874.]

8. This Act may be cited for all purposes as “The Madras General Clauses’ Act, 1867.”

Words defined in Penal and Criminal Procedure Codes to be taken in the same sense.

“Magistrate of Police.”

Repeal of any Act not to revive laws repealed by such Act.

Matters done under Act before its repeal to be unaffected.

Acts to come into operation from date notified in Gazette.

7. Where, by an Act to which this chapter applies, a power to make rules is expressed to be given, subject to the condition of the rules being made after previous publication, the following provisions shall apply, namely—

Provisions regulating making of rules after previous publication.

(a) The authority having the power to make the rules shall, before making them, publish a draft of the proposed rules.

Publication of draft rules.

(b) The publication shall be made in such manner as that authority deems to be sufficient, or, if the condition with respect to previous publication so requires, in such manner as the Government prescribes.

Manner of publication.

(c) There shall be published with the draft a notice specifying a date at or after which the draft will be taken into consideration.

Notice to accompany draft rules.

(d) The authority having power to make the rules, and, where the rules are to be made with the sanction, approval or concurrence of another authority, that authority also, shall consider any objection or suggestion which may be received by the authority having power to make the rules from any person with respect to the draft, before the date so specified.

Consideration of suggestions in regard to draft rules.

(e) The publication in the Fort St. George Gazette of a rule purporting to have been made in exercise of a power to make rules after previous publication, shall be conclusive proof that the rule has been duly made.

Publication to be proof of due making of rules.

8. Where any Act, to which this chapter applies, repeals any other enactment, then the repeal shall not—

(a) affect anything done or any offence committed, or any fine or penalty incurred or any proceedings begun before the commencement of the repealing Act ; or

(b) revive anything not in force or existing at the time at which the repeal takes effect ; or,

(c) affect the previous operation of any enactment so repealed or anything duly done or suffered under any enactment so repealed ; or,

(d) affect any right, privilege, obligation, or liability, acquired, accrued, or incurred under any enactment so repealed ; or,

(e) affect any fine, penalty, forfeiture, or punishment incurred in respect of any offence committed against any enactment so repealed ; or,

(f) affect any investigation, legal proceeding, or remedy in respect of any such right, privilege, obligation, liability, fine, penalty, forfeiture, or punishment as aforesaid ; and any such investigation, legal proceeding, or remedy may be instituted, continued, or enforced, and any such fine, penalty, forfeiture, or punishment may be imposed, as if the repealing Act had not been passed.

9. In any Act to which this chapter applies—

(a) for the purpose of reviving either wholly or partially an Act or Regulation, wholly or partially repealed, it shall be necessary expressly to state such purpose ;

(b) for the purpose of excluding the first in a series of days or any other period of time, it shall be sufficient to use the word “from” ;

for the purpose of including the last in a series of days or any other period of time, it shall be sufficient to use the word “to”

(d) for the purpose of expressing that a law relative to the chief or superior, of an office shall apply to the deputies or subordinates lawfully executing the duties of such office in the place of their superior, it shall be sufficient to prescribe the duty of the superior ;

Application of law to persons for time being filling an office.

10. Where an Act, to which this chapter applies, confers power to make rules or bye-laws or to issue orders, expressions used in such rules, bye-laws or orders shall, unless a contrary intention appears in the rules, always been orders, have the same respective meanings as in the Act conferring the power.

Expressions used in bye-laws and orders to have same meaning as in Act under which they are made or issued.

11. Where, by an Act to which this chapter applies, any act or proceeding is directed or allowed to be done or taken in a Court or office, on a certain day or within a prescribed period, if the Court or office is closed on that day or the last day of the prescribed period, the act or proceeding shall be considered as done or taken in due time if it is done or taken on the next day afterwards on which the Court or office is open.

Necessary extension of prescribed periods.

This section does not apply to any act or proceeding to which the Indian Limitation Act, 1877, applies.

CHAPTER III.

General Provisions applicable to all Acts.

This chapter shall apply to all Acts made by the Governor of Fort St. George in Council, unless a contrary intention appears in any such Act, but it shall not affect anything done or commenced prior to the commencement of this Act under any enactment now in force.

Application of Chapter III to all Acts.

13. Where an Act confers a power or imposes a duty, then the power may be exercised and the duty shall be performed from time to time as occasion requires.

When powers and duties to be exercised and performed.

14. Where an Act confers a power or imposes a duty on the holder of an officer, as such, then the power may be exercised and the duty shall be performed by the holder for the time being of the office.

Exercise of power and performance of duty by temporary holder of office.

15. Where an Act confers a power to make any rules or bye-laws, or to issue orders, the power shall be construed as including a power exercisable in the like manner and subject to the like consent and conditions, if any, to rescind, revoke, amend, or vary the rules, bye-laws or orders.

Revocation and alteration of rules, bye-laws and orders.

16. Whenever by an Act any duty of customs or excise or in the nature thereof is leviable on any given quantity, by weight, measure, or value, of any goods or merchandise, a like duty shall be leviable according to the same rate on any greater or less quantity.

Duty leviable pro rata.

17. Whenever by an Act authority is given to confer powers or impose duties, such powers may be conferred or duties imposed by name or by office or on classes of officials generally by their official title.

Mode of conferring powers and imposing duties.

18. Where an Act repeals and re-enacts, with or without modification, all or any of the provisions of a former Act, references in any other Act to the provisions so repealed shall be construed as references to the provisions so re-enacted, and if notifications have been published, proclamations or certificates issued, powers conferred forms prescribed, local limits defined, offices established, orders, rules and appointments made, engagements entered into, licenses or permits granted, and other things duly done, under the provisions so repealed, the same shall be deemed, so far as the same are consistent with the provisions so re-enacted, to have been respectively published, issued, conferred, prescribed, defined, established, made, entered into, granted or done under the provisions so re-enacted.

References to provisions in Acts repealed and re-enacted.

19. The provisions of sections 63, 68, 69 and 70 of the Indian Penal Code shall apply to all fines imposed under the authority of any Act.

Recovery of fines.

20. Where an act or omission constitutes an offence under two or more enactments, the offender shall be liable to be prosecuted and punished under either or any of those enactments, but shall not be liable to be punished twice for the same act or omission.

Punishment for offences under more than one enactment.

21. Where in any Act, or in any rule passed under any Act, it is directed that any order, notification, or other matter shall be notified or published, such notification or publication shall, unless the Act otherwise provides, be deemed to be duly made if it is published in the Fort St. George Gazette.

Publication of orders and notifications in the Fort St. George Gazette.

22. When by an Act, Government is empowered to extend or apply an Act, or any provision of an Act to any place in, or to any portion of, the Presidency of Madras, the Government may, in any order extending or applying such Act or provision or in a subsequent order, notify the time at which the same shall come into force in the place or portion of the Presidency to which it is so extended or applied; and unless it is otherwise provided in the Act, Government may, by notification in the Fort St. George Gazette, from time to time postpone the time at which the Act or provision shall come into force in such place or portion of the Presidency, or cancel the order for extending or applying the same to such place or portion of the Presidency.

Provided that no order postponing the time at which an Act or provision shall come into force, or cancelling an order for extending or applying the same, shall be made after the Act or provision has actually come into force in the place or portion of the Presidency to which such order relates.

Proviso.

TRANSFER OF PROPERTY.

ACT No. IV. OF 1882.

RECEIVED THE G.-G.'s ASSENT ON THE 17TH FEBRUARY 1882.

(As amended up to date.)

An Act to amend the Law relating to the Transfer of Property by act of Parties.

Preamble. WHEREAS it is expedient to define and amend certain parts of the law relating to the transfer of property by act of parties ; It is hereby enacted as follows :—

CHAPTER I.

PRELIMINARY.

Short title. 1. This Act may be called “ The Transfer of Property Act, 1882 :”

Commencement. It shall come into force on the first day of July 1882 :

Extent. It extends in the first instance to the whole of British India except the territories respectively administered by the Governor of Bombay in Council, the Lieutenant-Governor of Punjab, and the Chief Commissioner of British Burma.

But any of the said Local Governments may, from time to time, by notification in the local official Gazette, extend this Act to the whole or any specified part of the territories under its administration.

And any Local Government may, with the previous sanction of the Governor General in Council, from time to time, by notification in the local official Gazette, exempt, either retrospectively or prospectively, any part of the territories administered by such Local Government from all or any of the following provisions, namely :—

Sections 54, paragraphs 2 and 3, 59, 107, and 123.

Notwithstanding anything in the foregoing part of this section, sections fifty-four, paragraphs two and three, fifty-nine, one hundred and seven, and one hundred and twenty-three, shall not extend or be extended to any district or tract of country for the time being excluded from the operation of the Indian Registration Act, 1877, under the power conferred first section of that Act or otherwise.*

Note.

In a suit filed in 1884 on a usufructuary mortgage, dated 20th April 1882, a decree was passed for the payment of the mortgage money, or in default for the sale of the mortgage property; Held, (semble under the Transfer of Property Act) that the decree for sale was the right decree.—I. L. R., 11 Madr. 91.

In the territories to which this act extends for the time being, the enactments specified in the schedule hereto annexed shall be repealed to the extent therein mentioned. But nothing herein contained shall be deemed to affect—

Repeal of Acts.

(a) the provisions of any enactment not hereby expressly repealed :—

(b) any terms or incidents of any contract or constitution of property which are consistent with the provisions of this Act, and are allowed by the law for the time being in force :—

Saving of certain enactments, incidents, rights, ties, &c.

(c) any right or liability arising out of a legal relation constituted before this Act comes into force, or any relief in respect of any such right or liability : or,

(d) save as provided by section 57 and chapter 4 of this Act, any transfer by operation of law, or by, or in execution of, a decree or order of a Court of competent jurisdiction; and nothing in the second chapter of this Act shall be deemed to affect any rule of Hindu, Muhammadan, or Buddhist law.

Notes.

The procedure laid down in the Act may be applied to the case of foreclosure of a mortgage executed before the Act came into operation, provided it be so applied as not to affect the rights saved by sec. 2, clause (c). Where, therefore, under the provisions of Regulation XVII of 1806 notice of foreclosure had been served on a mortgagor by conditional sale, the mortgage having been executed, and the foreclosure proceedings taken before the Act came into force, and after the expiry of the year of grace the money not having been paid, the mortgagee instituted a suit for possession on foreclosure, and when such suit was defended by a third party who had purchased the mortgaged property at an execution sale and obtained possession before the commencement of the foreclosure proceedings and the necessary notice had not been served upon him :—Held, that it was competent to the Court to apply the procedure prescribed by the Act and grant the mortgagee a decree in the terms of sec. 86, substituting the period of "one year" for the period of "six months" therein mentioned. Ganga Sahai v. Kishan Sahai. I. L. R., 6 Al. 622, referred to.—I. L. R., 11 Cal. 582.

A decree holder, who had obtained a decree in the year 1880 against his judgment-debtor, declaring his title on certain mortgaged properties and authorizing a sale, sought, after several previous applications keeping the decree alive, to execute his decree again on the 15th April 1885. The judgment-debtor objected on the ground that no suit had been instituted or decree obtained under sec. 67 of the Act as directed by sec. 99 :—Held, that sec. 99, of that Act was not intended to apply to decrees already obtained declaring a lien and authorizing a sale, but even assuming that it was so intended, sec. 2 of the Act saved the right of the decree-holder to obtain a sale of the mortgaged properties. Ganda Sahai v. Kishen Sahai. I. L. R., 6 Al. 262, distinguished.—12 Cal. 436.

Where a suit is brought, after the date of the Act, for the foreclosure of a mortgage dated previous to the Act the procedure to be followed is that given by the Act; the procedure of Regulation XVII, 1806 not being saved by sec. 2 clause (c.) of Act IV of 1882. I. L. R., 6 Al. 262, approved. F. Wilson, J.—It is a General rule in construing Statutes that in matters substantive right they are not to be so read as to take away vested rights but that in matters of procedure they are general in their operation. There is nothing in the Transfer of Property Act from which it can be beyond reasonable doubt concluded that the Legislature intended to depart from this settled principle of legislation. Per Trevelyan, J.—There is a clear distinction between “relief” and the mode or procedure for obtaining such relief. The “relief” remains unaffected by a change of procedure. The “rights and liabilities” of a mortgagor and mortgagee, and the “relief” in respect of such rights and liabilities, are the same under Act IV of 1882, as they were before. A different procedure for enforcing such rights and obtaining such relief has however been adopted by the Transfer of Property Act.—12 Cal. 583.

The year of grace allowed by sec. 8, Regulation XVII of 1806, is a matter of procedure, which it was open to the parties to extend by mutual agreement without prejudice to the proceedings already had under the section, and upon the expiration of such extended period the mortgagee acquired an immediate right to have a decree declaring the property to be his absolutely. The right so acquired by the mortgagee while the Regulation was in force is a right which falls within the meaning of cl. (c), sec. 2 of the Transfer of Property Act. Proceedings under sec. 8 had come to a close by the expiration of the stipulated period of extension while the Regulation was still in force, and the mortgagee brought his suit for possession in pursuance thereof after the passing of the Transfer of Property Act. Held that the mortgagee was entitled to a decree such as he would have had if the Regulation had been still in force.—14 Cal. 451.

A suit was brought on the 24th January, 1885, by a mortgagee upon a mortgage by conditional sale asking for a declaration that the mortgagor's right to redeem had been extinguished and that he was entitled to possession of the mortgaged properties. The mortgage was dated the 6th April, 1881, and the mortgage money was repayable on the 13th May, 1881. On the 9th July, 1881, the mortgagee caused a notice to be served on the mortgagor in compliance with the provisions of secs. 7 and 8 of Regulation XVII of 1806. The year of grace expired on the 10th July, 1882. It was contended by the mortgagor that, as the Transfer of Property Act came into force on the 1st July, 1882, the proceedings taken by the mortgagee should be regulated by the procedure laid down in secs. 86 and 87 of that Act, and not by the procedure prescribed by Regulation XVII of 1806. Held, that the procedure laid down by the Transfer of Property Act could not be applied to the case. Although the year of grace had not expired when that Act came into force, and the full and complete right of the mortgagee had not accrued, he had acquired the right to bring a suit under the provisions of Regulation XVII of 1806 at the expiration of the year of grace, and the mortgagor was under a liability to part with his property upon a suit being brought at the expiration of that year, and such right and liability came within the meaning of these terms as used in clause (c), sec. 2 of the Transfer of Property Act.—14 Cal. 599.

In a suit for foreclosure under a deed of conditional sale, where the due date of the deed expired and notice of foreclosure was served while Regulation XVII of 1806 was in force, but before the expiration of the year of grace that Regulation had been repealed by the Transfer of Property Act, Held, following Mohabir Pershad Narain Singh v. Gungadbur Pershad Narain Singh, I. L. R., 14 Cal. 599, that, proceedings for foreclosure having been commenced under the Regulation, those proceedings were saved by sec. 6 of the General Clauses Consolidation Act I of 1868. The "Proceedings" referred to in that section are not necessarily judicial proceedings only, but ministerial proceedings, as, in the present case, the service of notice of foreclosure.—15 Cal. 357.

In 1884, a mortgagee obtained a decree for arrears of interest due under a mortgage deed of 1879 and in execution of the decree attached and applied for the sale of the land mortgaged :—Held, that by reason of sec. 99 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, the land could not be sold otherwise than by a suit instituted under sec. 67 of the said Act.—I. L. R., 10 Madr. 129.

In a suit in 1888 to recover principal and interest due on a usufructuary mortgage executed on 15th June 1870 which contained a covenant for repayment of the secured debt on 5th June 1878 the defendant pleaded and proved that the mortgagee had permitted certain buildings on the mortgage premises to fall into a ruinous condition, and it appeared that the mortgagee had remained in possession after June 1878 :—Held, (1) that the defendant was entitled to have the amount of the loss occasioned by the plaintiff's failure to make repairs brought into the mortgage account under Transfer of Property Act, sec. 76, and a separate suit by him for that amount was not necessary ; (2) that the profits derived by the mortgagee after the date fixed for repayment should be regarded as having been enjoyed in lieu of interest.—15 Madr. 290.

In the course of the winding up of a Company, the official liquidator, with the sanction of the Court, sold the remainder of a lease for a long term of years, reserving a rent, which was held by the company. No written assignment was ever executed, but the official liquidator handed over the lease to the purchaser, who entered into possession. In a suit by the lessors against the purchaser for rent, Held that whether the assignment was invalid because not in writing and registered, or whether it fell within sec. 2 (d) of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), the defendant, even if not liable as assignee in law of the lease, was liable for rent as for the use and occupation, and under such circumstances the rent fixed by the lease would be a fair basis for the amount to be decreed.—14 Al. 176.

3. In this Act, unless there is something repugnant in the subject or context,—“immovable property” does not include standing timber.

Interpretation-clause.

“instrument” means a non-testament-

“registered” means registered in British India under the law for the time being in force regulating the registration of documents :

“attached to the earth :”

“attached to the earth” means—

(a) rooted in the earth, as in the case of trees and shrubs ;
(b) imbedded in the earth, as in the case of walls or buildings ; or

(c) attached to what is so imbedded for the permanent beneficial enjoyment of that to which it is attached :

and a person is said to have “notice” of a fact when he actually knows that fact, or when, but for wilful abstension from an inquiry or search which he ought to have made, or gross negligence, he would have known it, or when information of the fact is given to or obtained by his agent under the circumstances mentioned in the Indian Contract Act, 1872, Section 229.

Notes.

In a suit for the declaration of the priorities of mortgages and for foreclosure, it appeared that the mortgage premises had been purchased by the mortgagor from the second defendant and others in 1878, under a conveyance containing a covenant that they were free from incumbrances, and the mortgagor then received, inter alia, a Collector's certificate which was recited in another title-deed also handed over to her. The premises were mortgaged to defendant No. 2, who was an experienced sowcar in 1879 and to the plaintiff company in 1883 and again in 1884 and were conveyed absolutely by the mortgagor to defendant No. 2 in 1886. The mortgagor executed a rent agreement to the plaintiff company on the occasion of each of the mortgages of 1883 and 1884. The above mortgages were registered, but the plaintiff company and defendant No. 2 had no notice at the respective dates of their mortgages and conveyance of any previous incumbrance. The plaintiff company received the title-deeds of the estate from the mortgagor (but not the Collector's certificate) on the execution of the mortgage of 1883 ; the second defendant alleged that he had held them under a prior incumbrance which was consolidated in the mortgage of 1879, and that before the execution of that mortgage the mortgagor had obtained them from him for the purpose of obtaining a Collector's certificate and had told him that the Collector had retained them, in order to account for their not being replaced in his custody :—Held, (1) that the plaintiff company were not affected with constructive notice of the mortgage of the second defendant by reason of its registration or of their failure to search the registry or to inquire after the Collector's certificate ; (2) that the second defendant not having given a reasonable explanation of his conduct in leaving the title-deeds with the mortgagor four years after his mortgage, lost his priority by reason of his gross neglect under Transfer of Property Act, sec. 78, apart from the circumstances raising a suspicion of fraud on his part.—Quære : whether the not have been decided against the second defendant on the ground that his mortgage was merged in the conveyance of 1886.—I. L. R., 15 Madr. 268.

A and B jointly mortgaged certain immovable property to X by a simple mortgage-deed on the 10th September 1882. They again mortgaged the same property to X on the 23rd February 1884. On the 6th August 1885, A mortgaged a portion of the said property to Y. On the 12th August 1885, B mortgaged a portion of the same property to X. On the 21st August 1885, A mortgaged a portion of the same property to Z. On the 20th September 1886, A and B sold to X the property mortgaged to him and with the proceeds of that sale X's three mortgages were paid off. On the 8th January 1887, Y sued A, B and X for cancelment of the deed of sale of the 20th September 1886, and for sale of the property mortgaged to him under his deed of the 6th August 1885. Y did not make Z a party to this suit. He did not ask for redemption of X's mortgages nor for foreclosure of Z's mortgage. Upon these facts it was held by EDGE, C. J., Straight, Tyrrell and Knox, J. J :—Mahmood, J. dissentiente. (1) That X not having exhibited any intention of foregoing altogether his rights in respect of the mortgages of the 10th September 1882 and the 23rd February 1884, was entitled to keep those securities alive and to use them as a shield against the claim of Y, the subsequent mortgagee, to the extent of the amount which was due under them on the 20th September 1886. Gokuldoss Gopaldoss v. Rambux Seochand; Gaya Prasad v. Salik Prasad; Mul Chand Kuber v. Lallu Trikam; Shantapa v. Balapa; Ramu Naikan v. Subbaraya Mudali; Sirbadh Rai v. Raghunath Prasad; Janki Prasad v. Sri Matra Mantangui Debia, and Gangadhara v. Sivarama referred to. (2) That Y as subsequent mortgagee could not bring to sale under his mortgage-deed the property mortgaged to him without first redeeming X's two prior mortgages. Synd Wajed Hossein v. Hafez Ahmud Rezah; Khub Chand v. Kalian Das; Kasum-un-nisa Bibi v. Nilratna Bose; Har Prasad v. Bhagwan Das; Muhammad Ibrahim v. Tek Chand; Ali Hasan v. Dhirja and Zalim Gir v. Ram Charan Singh referred to, in addition to the cases cited above. Raghunath Prasad v. Jurawan Rai, distinguished. Vencata Chella Kandian v. Panjanadien; Gangadhara v. Sivarama and the judgments of Mahmood, J., in Sirbadh Rai v. Raghunath Prasad and in Janki Prasad v. Sri Matra Mantangui Debia dissented from. (3) That Z's mortgage of the 21st August 1885 having been registered, Y must be taken to have had notice of it, and, having had notice thereof, was bound to make Z a party to the suit for sale under his (Y's) mortgage. Damodar Dev Chand v. Naro Mahadev Kelkar and Dullabhdas Dev Chand v. Lakshmandas Sarup Chand referred to. (4) That the term "property" as used in Chapter IV of Act IV of 1882, means an actual physical object and does not include mere rights relating to physical objects. Held by the Full Bench. That the Transfer of Property Act (Act IV. of 1882), so far as the question of reliefs and procedure is concerned, applies to mortgages executed before the coming into force of the Act. Ganga Sahai v. Kishen Sahai; and Bhobo Sundari Debi v. Rakhal Chunder Bose referred to. Mahmood, J., contra :—Inasmuch as a mortgagee cannot bring the mortgaged property to sale without the intervention of a court, a private purchase by the mortgagee of the rights remaining to the mortgagor in such property, though it may be valid as against the mortgagor, can have no effect in defeating the rights of puisne and mesne incumbrancers. Moreover, where a second mortgage to a third party intervenes between the mortgage to and the purchase by the prior mortgagee of the rights of the mortgagor, such intermediate mortgage prevents the merger of the rights of the prior mortgagee as such with those which he might acquire by his purchase. The right of sale is an essential incident of a simple mortgage, and inheres as well in puisne and mesne as in prior mortgagees, subject to the rights of the prior mortgagees. The puisne or mesne mortgagee is not bound by the terms of the prior mortgage, or mortgages, but is entitled to bring the property mortgaged to sale, subject to such prior mortgage or mortgages. The provisions of sec. 85 of Act IV of 1882 are not absolutely imperative, and though thereunder a subsequent incumbrancer ought to be made a party to a suit by a prior mortgagee on his mortgage, the non-joinder of such subsequent incumbrancer is not a fatal defect in the suit. Registration of a subsequent mortgage is not necessarily any notice to a prior mortgagee of the existence of such subsequent mortgage; it being no part of a mortgagee's duty to be on the watch for incumbrances subsequent to his own. The term "property" throughout Act IV. of 1882 is used in its most generic sense and will include the right known as an "equity of redemption."—13 Al. 432.

Enactments relating to contracts to be taken as part of Act IX of 1872.

4. The chapters and sections of this Act which relate to contracts shall be taken as part of the Indian Contract Act, 1872.

And sections fifty-four, paragraphs two and three, fifty-nine, one hundred and seven, and one hundred and twenty-three, shall be read as supplemental to the Indian Registration Act, 1877.*

CHAPTER II.

OF TRANSFERS OF PROPERTY BY ACT OF PARTIES.

5. In the following sections "transfer of property" means an act by which a living person conveys property, in present or in future, to one or more other living persons, or to himself and one or more other living persons, and "to transfer property" is to perform such act.

6. Property of any kind may be transferred, except as otherwise provided by this Act or by any other law for the time being in force :

(a) The chance of an heir-apparent succeeding to an estate, the chance of a relation obtaining a legacy on the death of a kinsman, or any other mere possibility of a like nature, cannot be transferred.

(b) A mere right of re-entry for breach of a condition subsequent cannot be transferred to any one except the owner of the property affected thereby.

* This paragraph has been added by Act III. of 1885, sec. 3.

An easement cannot be transferred apart from the dominant heritage.

(d) An interest in property restricted in its enjoyment to the owner personally cannot be transferred by him.

(e) A mere right to sue for compensation for a fraud or for harm illegally caused cannot be transferred.

(f) A public office cannot be transferred, nor can the salary of a public officer, whether before or after it has become payable.

(g) Stipends allowed to military and civil pensioners of Government and political pensions cannot be transferred.

(h) No transfer can be made (1) in so far as it is opposed to the nature of the interest affected thereby, or (2) for an illegal purpose, or (3) to a person legally disqualified to be transferee.

(i) Nothing in this section shall be deemed to authorize a tenant having an untransferable right of occupancy, the farmer of an estate in respect of which default has been made in paying revenue, or the lessee of an estate under the management of a Court of Wards, to assign his interest as such tenant, farmer, or lessee.*

Notes.

The office of mutwali is a personal trust and may not be transferred, nor the endowed property conveyed to any person whom the acting mutwali may select.—I. L. R., 8 Cal. 732.

Under the Transfer of Property Act, property includes an actionable claim. There was sold in execution of a decree the judgment-debtor's right to get by division a quantity of land which had been reserved by him for his own use in a deed of gift, but which, at the time of the execution sale, was in the possession of the donee of the estate, the land never having been appropriated by measurement as provided in the deed. In a suit brought by the auction-purchaser decree-holder, for the area of the land reserved, by measurement and division: Held, that the claim of the judgment-debtor to the land was a transferable claim, and therefore capable of being attached and sold in execution under sec. 266 of the Civil Procedure Code.—14 Cal. 241.

An Archaka (a priest who alone is allowed personally to attend upon the idol) cannot sell the office and emoluments of Paricharaka (assistant to the Archaka—not allowed to touch the idol), inasmuch as they are extra commercium.—4 Madr. 391.

A condition in a lease providing that the landlord may re-enter on non-payment of rent is penal and will be relieved against, apart from the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act. Semble: The transfer of the reversion based on a clause for forfeiture is not invalid by reason of Transfer of Property Act, sec. 6, clause. (b).—15 Madr. 125.

* This paragraph has been added by Act III. of 1885, sec. 4.

Hereditary offices, whether religious or secular, are no doubt treated by the Hindu text writers as naturally indivisible; but modern custom, whether or not it be strictly in accordance with ancient law, has sanctioned such partition as can be had of such property by means of a performance of the duties of the office and the enjoyment of the emoluments by the different co-parceners in rotation. The alienation, therefore, by a divided member of a Hindu family to his sister's son, of the right of worshipping a goddess and receiving a share of the offerings was upheld.—6 Bom. 298.

The income of a religious endowment may be temporarily pledged for necessary purposes, such as repairs &c. But the endowment cannot be sold or permanently alienated.—6 Bom. 546.

The property of a temple cannot be sold away from the temple; but there is no objection to the sale of the right, title and interest of a servant of a temple in the land belonging to the temple which he holds as remuneration for his service; the interest sold being subject in the hands of the alienee to determination by the death of the original holder, or by his removal from his office on account of his failure to perform the service.—6 Bom. 596.

The right of managing a temple, which is a religious endowment, of officiating at the worship conducted in it, and of receiving the offerings at the shrine, cannot, in default of proof to the contrary, pass outside the family of the trustee until absolute failure of succession in his family, and such rights are therefore not saleable in execution of decree.—4 Al. 81.

The mere right to sue for compensation for the wrongful attachment of moveable property in execution of a decree is not transferable by sale.—5 Al. 207.

See I. L. R., 13 Al. 432, noted under sec. 3.

7. Every person competent to contract, and entitled to transfer. Persons competent to transfer. transferable property, or authorized to dispose of transferable property not his own, is competent to transfer such property either wholly or in part, and either absolutely or conditionally, in the circumstances, to the extent, and in the manner, allowed and prescribed by any law for the time being in force.

8. Unless a different intention is expressed or necessarily implied, a transfer of property passes forthwith to the transferee all the interest which the transferor is then capable of passing in the property, and in the legal incidents thereof.

Operation of transfer. Such incidents include, where the property is land, the easements annexed thereto, the rents and profits thereof accruing after the transfer, and all things attached to the earth; and, where the property is machinery attached to the earth, the moveable parts thereof; and, where the property is a house, the easements annexed thereto, the rent thereof accruing after the transfer, and the locks, keys, bars, doors, windows, and all other things provided for permanent use therewith ; and, where the property is a debt or other actionable claim, the securities therefor (except where they are also for other debts or claims not transferred to the transferee), but not arrears of interest accrued before the transfer ; and, where the property is money or other property yielding income, the interest or income thereof accruing after the transfer takes effect.

9. A transfer of property may be made without writing in every case in which a writing is not expressly required by law.

10. Where property is transferred subject to a condition or limitation absolutely restraining the transferee or any person claiming under him from parting with or disposing of his interest in the property, the condition or limitation is void, except in the case of a lease where the condition is for the benefit of the lessor or those claiming under him : provided that property may be transferred to or for the benefit of a woman (not being a Hindu, Muhammadan or Buddhist), so that she shall not have power during her marriage to transfer or charge the same or her beneficial interest therein.

Note.

In a suit for possession of certain shares in certain villages, a compromise was effected between the plaintiffs and B the defendant. The terms of the compromise were embodied in a deed, the terms of which were (inter alia) as follows :—“ The said B will hold possession as a proprietor, generation by generation, without the power of transferring in any shape..... The following shares recorded in B's name shall not be transferred or sold in auction in payment of any debt payable by the said B, and in the event of their being transferred or sold, such transfer will be invalid, and the plaintiffs will then be entitled to set aside that transfer, and to obtain possession.” B obtained possession of the shares allotted to him by the compromise. Subsequently, certain creditors of B attached the shares referred to in the deed in execution of a decree obtained against the heirs of B for money lent to B on a bond, which he had executed while in possession of the shares, and in which he made a simple mortgage of them. The representatives of the plaintiffs in the suit in which the compromise was made objected to the attachment :—Held, by Oldfield, J., that the deed of compromise passed an absolute estate to B and his heirs to which the law annexed a power of transfer, and that, in reference to sec. 10 of the Transfer of Property Act, the stipulation against alienation on B's part, or against sale by auction in execution of decrees against him, was void. Per Mahmood, J.—That the rule contained in sec. 10 of the Transfer of Property Act was not binding upon the Court in this case, inasmuch as the question was one of succession or inheritance, to be governed by sec. 24 of the Bengal Civil Courts Act; that it was for those objecting to the attachment to show that, under the Hindu Law, the rights of B in the property ceased to exist at his death, or that his estate devolved upon them free of his debts; that, the Hindu Law being silent on this subject, the principles of justice, equity and good conscience must be applied, to which, so far as transfer was concerned, effect was given by sec. 10 of the Transfer of Property Act; that the restriction imposed by the deed of compromise upon B's powers of alienating the absolute estate which it conferred upon him were opposed to the policy of the law and could not be recognized; and that B must be held to have had an absolute estate which would devolve upon his heirs, and which could be sold in execution of decrees for his debts. The Tagore Case referred to.—I. L. R., 7 Al. 516.

11. Where, on a transfer of property, an interest therein is created absolutely in favour of any person, but the terms of the transfer direct that such interest shall be applied or enjoyed by him in a particular manner, he shall be entitled to receive and dispose of such interest as if there were no such direction.

Nothing in this section shall be deemed to affect the right to restrain, for the beneficial enjoyment of one piece of immoveable property, the enjoyment of another piece of such property, or to compel the enjoyment thereof in a particular manner.

Notes.

According to Hindu law a restriction against alienation in a gift of land to Brahmans is inoperative as being a condition repugnant to the nature of the grant.—I. L. R., 4 Madr. 200.

M, a co-sharer in a village, transferred to A, another co-sharer a two annas share by deed of sale. Upon the same date A executed an ikrar-namah in which he agreed that he would not collect the rents of the two annas transferred to him, that he would not ever demand partition of that share, and that he would not alienate or mortgage it or otherwise exercise proprietary rights over it. It was further provided that in the event of A committing any breach of covenant the sale should be avoided, and the proprietary rights in the two annas share should re-vest in M. A suit was subsequently brought by M, upon the allegations that, in breach of the covenants of the ikrar-namah, A had collected the rents of the share; that he had sought to obtain partition of the same by certain proceedings in the Revenue Court; that, in consequence of his action in collecting the rents, the plaintiff had been compelled to sue the tenants; that in these suits the tenants exhibited receipts given by A, on the basis of which the suits were dismissed, and that he had been subjected to various costs and expenses. He therefore claimed, by way of damages, from A the amount of these costs and expenses, and also to recover certain sums of money realized by A as rent from the tenants, and further, by reason of the ikrar-namah to avoid the sale-deed which preceded it:—Held, that the deed of sale and the ikrar-namah must be regarded as recording one single transaction, i. e., they must be read together as stating the nature of the transaction entered into upon that date between the plaintiff and the defendant, which on the face of it professed to be a sale of a two annas share to the other by the former; and that, in this view, it was clear from the ikrar-namah that the proprietary title created by the sale-deed was cut down to nil, and limitations placed upon it which rendered it useless as a proprietary right. Sital Purshad v. Luchmi Purshad referred to :—Held, that provisions of this kind which absolutely debar the person to whom the proprietary rights have passed from exercising these rights, impose conditions which no Court ought to recognize or give effect to ; that a covenant in a sale-deed the effect of which is to disable the vendee from either alienating or enjoying the interest conveyed to him, is not only contrary to public policy, but in violation of the principal of sections 10 and 11 of the Transfer of Property Act ; and that, therefore, as the agreement on the basis of which the plaintiff asked for relief was one which no Court should assist him in enforcing, the suit must fail. Kolman v. Johnson, Anantha Tirtha Chariar v. Nagmuthu Ambulagaren v. Bradley v. Peixoto and Hussain Khan Bahadur v. Materi Srinivasa Charlu referred to. Balaji J. Rahalkar v. Narayanbhat distinguished. Held by Mahmood J.—With reference to the sums realized by the defendant as rent, that whatever may be the rights of a lambardar in reference to the collection of rents, the defendant, being a co-sharer in the village, and having, though perhaps irregularly, realized sums of money from the tenants, could not, in a Civil Court and in a suit of this nature, be made to repay the lambardar ; and the latter's only remedy was to deduct the items when the bujharat or rendition of accounts between the co-sharers and himself took place. Held by Mahmood, J.—With reference to the costs incurred by the plaintiff in the Revenue Court, that such Court in the suit former was entitled to deal with the question of costs, and dealt with it, and the costs could not be made the subject-matter of fresh litigation, and therefore could not be claimed in this suit by way of damages. Chengulva Raya Mudali v. Thangakhi Ammal, Jalam Punja v. Khoda Javra, Kabir v. Mahadu and Praushankar Shivshankar v. Govindhral Parbhudas referred to.—8 Al. 452.

12. Where property is transferred subject to a condition or limitation making any interest therein, reserved or given to or for the benefit of any person, to cease on his becoming insolvent or endeavouring to transfer or dispose of the same, such condition or limitation is void.

Condition making interest determinable on insolvency or attempted alienation.

Nothing in this section applies to a condition in a lease for the benefit of the lessor or those claiming under him.

13. Where, on a transfer of property, an interest therein is created for the benefit of a person not in existence at the date of the transfer, subject to a prior interest created by the same transfer, the interest created for the benefit of such person shall not take effect, unless it extends to the whole of the remaining interest of the transferor in the property.

Transfer for benefit of unborn person.

Illustration.

A transfers property of which he is the owner, to B, in trust for A and his intended wife successively for their lives, and after the death of the survivor for the eldest son of the intended marriage for life, and after his death for A's second son. The interest so created for the benefit of the eldest son does not take effect, because it does not extend to the whole of A's remaining interest in the property.

14. No transfer of property can operate to create an interest which is to take effect after the lifetime of one or more persons living at the date of such transfer, and the minority of some person who shall be in existence at the expiration of that period, and to whom, if he attains full age, the interest created is to belong.

Rule against perpetuity.

15. If, on a transfer of property, an interest therein is created for the benefit of a class of persons with regard to some of whom such interest fails by reason of any of the rules contained in Sections thirteen and fourteen, such interest fails as regards the whole class.

Transfer to class some of whom come under Sections 13 and 14.

16. Where an interest fails by reason of any of the rules contained in Sections thirteen, fourteen, and fifteen, any interest created in the same transaction, and intended to take effect after or upon failure of such prior interest, also fails.

Transfer to take effect on failure of prior transfer.

17. The restrictions in Sections fourteen, fifteen, and sixteen, shall not apply to property transferred for the benefit of the public in the advancement of religion, knowledge, commerce, health, safety, or any other object beneficial to mankind.

Transfer in perpetuity for benefit of public.

18. Where the terms of a transfer of property direct that the income arising from the property shall be accumulated, such direction shall be void, and the property shall be disposed of as if no accumulation had been directed.

Direction for accumulation.

Exception.—Where the property is immoveable, or where accumulation is directed to be made from the date of the transfer, the direction shall be valid in respect only of the income arising from the property within one year next following such date; and at the end of the year such property and income shall be disposed of respectively as if the period during which the accumulation has been directed to be made had elapsed.

Note.

A bequest was held void for uncertainty, and because a portion of the estate was left to accumulate for ever without a disposition of the profits.—I. L. R., 7 Cal. 269.

Where, on a transfer of property, an interest therein is created in favour of a person without specifying the time when it is to take effect, or in terms specifying that it is to take effect forthwith or on the happening of an event which must happen, such interest is vested, unless a contrary intention appears from the terms of the transfer.

A vested interest is not defeated by the death of the transferee before he obtains possession.

Explanation.—An intention that an interest shall not be vested is not to be inferred merely from a provision whereby the enjoyment thereof is postponed, or whereby a prior interest in the same property is given or reserved to some other person, or whereby income arising from the property is directed to be accumulated until the time of enjoyment arrives, or from a provision that, if a particular event shall happen, the interest shall pass to another person.

20. Where, on a transfer of property, an interest therein is created for the benefit of a person not then living, he acquires upon his birth, unless a contrary intention appear from the terms of the transfer, a vested interest, although he may not be entitled to the enjoyment thereof immediately on his birth.

When unborn person acquires vested interest on transfer for his benefit.

21. Where, on a transfer of property, an interest therein is created in favour of a person to take effect only on the happening of a specified uncertain event, or if a specified uncertain event shall not happen, such person thereby acquires a contingent interest in the property. Such interest becomes a vested interest, in the former case, on the happening of the event; in the latter, when the happening of the event becomes impossible.

Contingent interest.

Exception.—Where, under a transfer of property, a person becomes entitled to an interest therein upon attaining a particular age, and the transferor also gives to him absolutely the income to arise from such interest before he reaches that age, or directs the income or so much thereof as may be necessary to be applied for his benefit, such interest is not contingent.

to members of a class who attain a particular age.

22. Where, on a transfer of property, an interest therein is created in favour of such members only of a class as shall attain a particular age, such interest does not vest in any member of the class who has not attained that age.

23. Where, on a transfer of property, an interest therein is to accrue to a specified person if a specified uncertain event shall happen, and no time is mentioned for the occurrence of that event, the interest fails, unless such event happens before, or at the same time as, the intermediate or precedent interest ceases to exist.

Transfer contingent on happening of specified uncertain event.

24. Where, on a transfer of property, an interest therein is to accrue to such of certain persons as shall be surviving at some period, but the exact period is not specified, the interest shall go to such of them as shall be alive when the intermediate or precedent interest ceases to exist, unless a contrary intention appears from the terms of the transfer.

Transfer to such of certain persons as survive at some period not specified.

Illustration.

A transfers property to B for life, and after his death to C and D, equally to be divided between them, or to the survivor of them. C dies during the life of B. D survives B. At B's death the property passes to D.

25. An interest created on a transfer of property, and dependent upon a condition, fails if the fulfilment of the condition is impossible, or is forbidden by law, or is of such a nature that, if permitted, it would defeat the provisions of any law, or is fraudulent, or involves or implies injury to the person or property of another, or the Court regards it as immoral or opposed to public policy.

Conditional transfer.

(a.) A lets a farm to B on condition that he shall walk a hundred miles in an hour. The lease is void.

(b.) A gives Rupees 500 to B on condition that he shall marry A's daughter C. At the date of the transfer C was dead. The transfer is void.

(c.) A transfers Rupees 500 to B on condition that she shall murder C. The transfer is void.

(d.) A transfers Rupees 500 to his niece C if she will desert her husband. The transfer is void.

26. Where the terms of a transfer of property impose a condition to be fulfilled before a person can take an interest in the property, the condition shall be deemed to have been fulfilled if it has been substantially complied with.

Fulfilment of condition precedent.

Illustrations.

(a.) A transfers Rupees 5,000 to B on condition that he shall marry with the consent of C, D, and E. E dies. B marries with the consent of C and D. B is deemed to have fulfilled the condition.

(b.) A transfers Rupees 5,000 to B on condition that he shall marry with the consent of C, D, and E. B marries without the consent of C, D and E, but obtains their consent after the marriage. B has not fulfilled the condition.

27. Where, on a transfer of property, an interest therein is created in favor of one person, and by the same transaction an ulterior disposition of the same interest is made in favor of another if under the transfer shall fail, the ulterior disposition shall take effect upon the failure of the prior disposition, although the failure may not have occurred in the manner contemplated by the transferor.

But where the intention of the parties to the transaction is that the ulterior disposition shall take effect only in the event of the prior disposition failing in a particular manner, the ulterior disposition shall not take effect unless the prior disposition fails in that manner.

Illustrations.

(a.) A transfers Rupees 500 to B on condition that he shall execute a certain lease within three months after A's death, and, if he should neglect to do so, to C. B dies in A's lifetime. The disposition in favor of C takes effect.

(b.) A transfers property to his wife; but in case she should die in his lifetime, transfers to B that which he had transferred to her. A and his wife perish together, under circumstances which make it impossible to prove that she died before him. The disposition in favor of B does not take effect.

28. On a transfer of property, an interest therein may be created to accrue to any person with the condition superadded that, in case a specified uncertain event shall happen, such interest shall pass to another person, or that, in case a specified uncertain event shall not happen, such interest shall pass to another person. In each case the dispositions are subject to the rules contained in Sections ten, twelve, twenty-one, twenty-two, twenty-three, twenty-four, twenty-five, and twenty-seven.

Ulterior transfer conditional on happening or not happening of specified event.

29. An ulterior disposition of the kind contemplated by the last preceding section cannot take effect unless the condition is strictly fulfilled.

Fulfillment of condition subsequent.

A transfers Rupees 500 to B, to be paid to him on his attaining his majority or marrying, with a proviso that, if B dies a minor, or marries without C's consent, the Rupees 500 shall go to D. B marries when only 17 years of age, without C's consent. The transfer to D takes effect.

A transfers a farm to B for her life, and, if she do not desert her husband, to C, B is entitled to the farm during her life as if no condition had been inserted.

31. Subject to the provisions of Section twelve, on a transfer of property an interest therein may be created with the condition superadded that it shall cease to exist in case a specified uncertain event shall happen, or in case a specified uncertain event shall not happen.

Condition that transfer shall cease to have effect in case specified uncertain event happens or does not happen.

Illustrations.

(a.) A transfers a farm to B, for his life, with a proviso that, in case B cuts down a certain wood, the transfer shall cease to have any effect. B cuts down the wood. He loses his life-interest in the farm.

(b.) A transfers a farm to B, provided that, if B shall not go to England within three years, after the date of the transfer, his interest in the farm shall cease. B does not go to England within the term prescribed. His interest in the farm ceases.

32. In order that a condition that an interest shall cease to exist may be valid, it is necessary that the event to which it relates be one which could legally constitute the condition of the creation of an interest.

Such condition must not be invalid.

33. Where, on a transfer of property, an interest therein is created subject to a condition that the person taking it shall perform a certain act, but no time is specified for the performance of the act, the condition is broken when he renders impossible, permanently or for an indefinite period, the performance of the act.

Transfer conditional on performance of act, no time for performance.

34. Where an act is to be performed by a person either as a condition to be fulfilled before an interest created on a transfer of property is enjoyed by him, or as a condition on the non-fulfilment of which the interest is to pass from him to another person, and a time is specified for the performance of the act, if such performance within the specified time is prevented by the fraud of a person who would be directly benefited by non fulfilment of the condition, such further time shall as against him be allowed for performing the act as shall be requisite to make up for the delay caused by such fraud. But, if no time is specified for the performance of the act, then, if its performance is by the fraud of a person interested in the non-fulfilment of the condition rendered impossible or indefinitely postponed, the condition shall as against him be deemed to have been fulfilled.

Election.

35. Where a person professes to transfer property which he has no right to transfer, and as part of the same transaction confers any benefit on the owner of the property, such owner must elect either to confirm such transfer or to dissent from it; and in the latter case he shall relinquish the benefit so conferred, and the benefit so relinquished shall revert to the transferor or his representative as if it had not been disposed of,

subject nevertheless,

. where the transfer is gratuitous, and the transferor has, before the election died or otherwise become incapable of making a fresh transfer, and in all cases where the transfer is for consideration, to the charge of making good to the disappointed transferee the amount or value of the property attempted to be transferred to him.

Illustration.

The farm of Sultanpur is the property of C and worth Rupees 800, A by an instrument of gift professes to transfer it to B, giving by the same instrument Rupees 1,000 to C. C elects to retain the farm. He forfeits the gift of Rupees 1,000.

In the same case, A dies before the election. His representative must, out of the Rupees 1,000, pay Rupees 800 to B.

The rule in the first paragraph of this section applies whether the transferor does or does not believe that which he professes to transfer to be his own.

A person taking no benefit directly under a transaction, but deriving a benefit under it indirectly, need not elect.

A person who in his own capacity takes a benefit under the transaction may in another dissent therefrom.

Exception to the last preceding four rules.—Where a particular benefit is expressed to be conferred on the owner of the property which the transferor professes to transfer, and such benefit is expressed to be in lieu of that property, if such owner claim the property, he must relinquish the particular benefit, but he is not bound to relinquish any other benefit conferred upon him by the same transaction.

Acceptance of the benefit by the person on whom it is conferred constitutes an election by him to confirm the transfer, if he is aware of his duty to elect, any of those circumstances which would influence the judgment of a reasonable man in making an election, or if he waives enquiry into the circumstances.

Such knowledge or waiver shall, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, be presumed, if the person on whom the benefit has been conferred has enjoyed it for two years without doing any act to express dissent.

Such knowledge or waiver may be inferred from any act of his which renders it impossible to place the persons interested in the property professed to be transferred in the same condition as if such act had not been done.

Illustration.

A transfers to B an estate to which C is entitled, and as part of the same transaction gives C a coal-mine. C takes possession of the mine, and exhausts it. He has thereby confirmed the transfer of the estate to B.

If he does not, within one year after the date of the transfer, signify to the transferor or his representatives his intention to confirm or to dissent from the transfer, the transferor or his representatives may, upon the expiration of that period, require him to make his election; and, if he does not comply with such requisition within a reasonable time after he has received it, he shall be deemed to have elected to confirm the transfer.

In case of disability, the election shall be postponed until the disability ceases, or until the election is made by some competent authority.

Apportionment.

36. In the absence of a contract or local usage to the contrary, all rents, annuities, pensions, dividends, and other periodical payments in the nature of income, shall, upon the transfer of the interest of the person entitled to receive such payments, be deemed, as between the transferor and the transferee, to accrue due from day to day, and to be apportionable accordingly, but to be payable on the days appointed for the payment thereof.

Apportionment of periodical payments on determination of interest of person entitled.

37. When, in consequence of a transfer, property is divided and held in several shares, and thereupon the benefit of any obligation relating to the property as a whole passes from one to several owners of the property, the corresponding duty shall, in the absence of a contract to the contrary amongst the owners, be performed in favor of each of such owners in proportion to the value of his share in the property, provided that the duty can be severed, and that the severance does not substantially increase the burden of the obligation; but if the duty cannot be severed, or if the severance would substantially increase the burden of the obligation, the duty shall be performed for the benefit of such one of the several owners as they shall jointly designate for that purpose:

Provided that no person on whom the burden of the obligation lies shall be answerable for failure to discharge it in manner provided by this section, unless and until he has had reasonable notice of the severance.

Nothing in this section applies to leases for agricultural purposes, unless and until the Local Government, by notification in the official Gazette, so directs

Illustrations.

(a.) A sells to B, C and D a house situate in a village, and leased to E at an annual rent of Rupees 30 and delivery of one fat sheep, B having provided half the purchase-money, and C and D one quarter each. E, having notice of this, must pay Rupees 15 to B, Rupees $7\frac{1}{2}$ to C, and Rupees $7\frac{1}{2}$ to D, and must deliver the sheep according to the joint direction of B, C, and D.

(b.) In the same case, each house in the village being bound to provide ten days' labor each year on a dyke to prevent inundation, E had agreed as a term of his lease to perform this work for A, B, C, and D, severally require E to perform the ten days' work due on account of the house of each. E is not bound to do more than ten days' work in all, according to such directions as B, C, and D, may join in giving.

Notes.

The necessity for the apportionment of benefit of obligation arises in case where property held by one owner is transferred in bits to several.

A sale of a share in a tenure, let out to a tenant in its entirety, does not of itself necessarily effect a severance of the tenure or an apportionment of the rent; but if a purchaser of the share desires to have such a severance, he is entitled to enforce it. If he takes no steps for the purpose, then, the tenant is justified in paying the entire rent to all the parties jointly entitled to it. But, if the purchaser desires to effect a severance of the tenure and an apportionment of the rent, he must give the tenant due notice to that effect; and then, if the parties cannot agree to an apportionment the purchaser may sue the tenant for the purpose of having the rent apportioned, making all other co-sharers parties to the suit.—I. L. R., 5 Cal. 902.

(B).—Transfer of Immoveable Property.

38. Where any person, authorized only under circumstances in their nature variable to dispose of immoveable property, transfers such property for consideration, alleging the existence of such circumstances, they shall, as between the transferee on the one part and the transferor and other persons (if any) affected by the transfer on the other part, be deemed to have existed, if the transferee, after using reasonable care to ascertain the existence of such circumstances, has acted in good faith.

Transfer by person authorized only under certain circumstances to transfer.

Illustration.

A, a Hindu widow, whose husband was left collateral heirs, alleging that the property held by her as such is insufficient for her maintenance, agrees, for purposes neither religious nor charitable, to sell a field, part of such property, to B. B satisfies himself by reasonable inquiry that the income of the property is insufficient for A's maintenance, and that the sale of the field is necessary, and, acting in good faith, buys the field from A. As between B on the one part and A and the collateral heirs on the other part, a necessity for the sale shall be deemed to have existed.

39. Where a third person has a right to receive maintenance, or a provision for advancement or marriage, from the profits of immoveable property, and such property is transferred with the intention of defeating such right, the right may be enforced against the transferee, if he has notice of such intention, or if the transfer is gratuitous; but not against a transferee for consideration and without notice of the right, nor against such property in his hands.

Transfer where third person is entitled to maintenance.

Illustration.

A, a Hindu, transfers Sultanpur to his sister-in-law B in lieu of her claim against him for maintenance in virtue of his having become entitled to her deceased husband's property, and agrees with her that, if she is dispossessed of Sultanpur, A will transfer to her an equal area out of such of several other specified villages in his possession as he may elect. A sells the specified villages to C, who buys in good faith, without notice of the agreement. B is dispossessed of Sultanpur. She has no claim on the villages transferred to C.

Notes.

Plaintiff purchased a house in execution of a decree against R, while a suit was pending against R by the defendant for maintenance against the house, which was since decreed in her favour. Held, that what the plaintiff brought from R was his right, title and interest in the house, which, being subject to the decree in the defendant's pending suit, the plaintiff's purchase was likewise subject to the same, and the circumstance that the plaintiff had placed a prior attachment on the house made no difference. The plaintiff therefore could not eject the defendant during her life-time.—I. L. R., 6 Bom. 567.

An owner of property made a grant therefrom of an annuity, with a proviso that, in case of failure to pay the same, the grantee and her heirs should be entitled to take possession of the property. He subsequently mortgaged the same property, by an instrument which set out that it was his absolutely. After this he paid the annuity till the death of the grantee, whose heir he was. The mortgagees obtained a decree upon their deed, and in execution thereof the property was attached and sold, and the decree-holders obtained possession. The heirs of the mortgagor sued the decree-holders for recovery of possession, and for arrears of the annuity claiming under the terms of the grant:—Held, that the charge merged and was extinguished, and as the grantor had professed to transfer the property to the mortgagees unincumbered, he was bound to give it over to them free from incumbrance, and it would not lie in his mouth, nor in the mouths of his heirs, to set up the charge against the mortgagees and their vendees.—7 Al. 864.

40. Where, for the more beneficial enjoyment of his own immoveable property, a third person has, independently of any interest in the immoveable property of another or of any easement thereon, a right to restrain the enjoyment of the latter property, or to compel its enjoyment in a particular manner, or where a third person is entitled to the benefit of an obligation arising out of contract, and annexed to the ownership of immoveable property, but not amounting to an interest therein or easement thereon, such right or obligation may be enforced against a transferee with notice thereof or a gratuitous transferee of the property affected thereby, but not against a transferee for consideration and without notice of the right or obligation, nor against such property in his hands.

A contracts to sell Sultanpur to B. While the contract is still in force, he sells Sultanpur to C, who has notice of the contract. B may enforce the contract against C to the same extent as against A.

Notes.

A, by oral agreement, agreed to grant two mokurari leases of certain properties upon certain terms to B, and thereupon executed two mokurari leases in favor of B, which were not however registered and delivered. Afterwards, A granted two mokurari leases of the same mouzas, upon terms more favourable to himself, to C and D, who, at the time of such grant, had notice of A's previous agreement with B. Held, in a suit for specific performance brought by B against A, to which C and D were added as defendants, that, notwithstanding the provisions of sections 49 and 50 of the Registration Act III of 1877, B could obtain decree for specific relief, and a declaration that the leases to C and D were void as against him.—6 Cal. 534. See also M. H. C. R., 2-14 and 6-75.

In January 1883 a decree was obtained upon a bond executed in October 1875, whereby certain immoveable property was made security for a loan, the transaction being described not by the word "rehan" or mortgage, but by the words "arh" and "mustaghraq." The instrument contained no express covenant for sale of the property in default of payment, but it contained a covenant prohibiting alienation until payment, and a stipulation that, in the event of the property specified being destroyed or proving insufficient to satisfy the debt, the obligee might realize the amount from the obligor's person and other property. The decree directed the sale of the property as in the terms of an ordinary decree for the sale of mortgaged property. In 1885, before any steps had been taken in execution of the decree, the same property was sold in execution of a simple money decree against the obligor, and the purchaser obtained possession. It was found as a fact that at the time of the sale the bond of October 1875, and the decree thereon of January 1883, were not notified, but through no fault of the obligee decree-holder, and that the purchaser was a bona fide transferee for value without notice of the bond and decree. Held that the words "arh" and "mustaghraq" used in the bond implied a power of sale in default and denoted a mortgage without possession: that the transaction, though entered into prior to the passing of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), must be regarded as amounting to a simple mortgage as defined in sec. 58 (b) of that Act, and not as merely creating a charge as defined in sec. 100; and that consequently the rights of the obligee must prevail over those of the subsequent bona fide purchaser for value without notice of the bond and the decree thereon. Held also by Mahmood, J., that the title of the judgment-debtor at the time of the sale in 1885 in execution of the simple money decree was subject to the mortgage decree of January 1883, and the purchaser at that sale could acquire no higher title than the judgment-debtor possessed, and was equally bound by the terms of the decree of January 1883, in respect of the property which he had purchased, and could not prevent the property being sold under that decree except by paying up the decretal money. Unnopoorna Dassee v. Nufur Poddar and Rajah Enayet Hossein v. Giridhari Lal referred to. Per Mahmood, J.—The power of sale mentioned in sec. 58 (b) of the Transfer of Property Act is not a power in the mortgagee to bring the mortgaged property to sale independently of a Court. The observations on this point of Muttuswami Ayyar, J., in Rangasami v. Muttu Kumarrappa, of Birdwood and Jardine, J J., in Khemji Bhagvandas v. Rama and of Petheram, C. J., in *Sheoratan Kuar v. Where, with the consent, express or implied, of the Transfer by ostensible persons interested in immoveable property, a person is the ostensible owner of such property, and transfers the same for consideration, the transfer shall not be voidable on the ground that the transferor was not authorized to make it: provided that the transferee, after taking reasonable care to ascertain that the transferor had power to make the transfer, has acted in good faith.

Notes.

In a suit by a mortgagee against the father and sons to recover the mortgage-debt created by the father :—Held, that it was incumbent on the plaintiff to shew for what purpose the loan was contracted, and that that purpose was one which justified the father in charging, or which the plaintiff had at least good grounds for believing did justify the father in charging, the son's interests in the ancestral immoveable property.—I. L. R., 2 Cal. 438.

A purchaser for value from the ostensible owner without notice of the right of the benamidar was held entitled to get possession of the property purchased, from the benamidar.—7 Cal. 199.

See also I. L. R., 5 Cal. 855, 6 Cal. 749 and 8 Cal. 131. Also 6 Bom. 165 and 168.

42. Where a person transfers any immoveable property, reserving power to revoke the transfer, and subsequently transfers the property for consideration to another transferee, such transfer operates in favor of such transferee (subject to any condition attached to the exercise of the power) as a revocation of the former transfer to the extent of the power.

Transfer by person having authority to revoke former transfer.

Illustration.

A lets a house to B, and reserves power to revoke the lease if, in the opinion of a specified surveyor, B should make a use of it detrimental to its value. Afterwards A, thinking that such a use has been made, lets the house to C. This operates as a revocation of B's lease subject to the opinion of the surveyor as to B's use of the house having been detrimental to its value.

43. Where a person erroneously represents that he is authorized to transfer certain immoveable property, and professes to transfer such property for consideration, such transfer shall, at the option of the transferee, operate on any interest which the transferor may acquire in such property, at any time during which the contract of transfer subsists.

Transfer by unauthorized person who subsequently acquires interest in property transferred.

Nothing in this section shall impair the right of transferees in good faith for consideration without notice of the existence of the said option.

Illustration.

A, a Hindu, who has separated from his father B, sells to C three fields, X, Y and Z, representing that A is authorized to transfer the same. Of these fields, Z does not belong to A, it having been retained by B on the partition ; but, on B's dying, A as heir obtains Z. C, not having rescinded the contract of sale, may require A to deliver Z to him.

Note.

Held, that a statement in answer to interrogatories, which was made by the purchaser of mortgaged property, to the effect that at the time of the purchase, he was aware of the mortgage and believed that it had been satisfied, was no proof of the purchase having been made after notice of a prior mortgage, inasmuch as it was inconsistent with the knowledge of existing incumbrance.—I. L. R., 7 Al. 590.

See I. L. R., 14 Madr. 459, noted under sec. 18 of the Specific Relief Act.

Where one of two or more co-owners of immovable property legally competent in that behalf transfers his share of such property or any interest therein, the transferee acquires, as to such share or interest, and so far as is necessary to give effect to the transfer, the transferor's right to joint possession or other common or part enjoyment of the property, and to enforce a partition of the same, but subject to the conditions and liabilities affecting, at the date of the transfer, the share or interest so transferred.

Where the transferee of a share of a dwelling-house belonging to an undivided family is not a member of the family, nothing in this section shall be deemed to entitle him to joint possession or other common or part enjoyment of the house.

Note.

A purchaser from a member of an undivided Hindu family of that member's share in a specific portion of the ancestral family property cannot sue for a partition of that portion alone and obtain an allotment to himself by metes and bounds of his vendor's share in that portion of the property.—I. L. R., 13 Madr. 275.

Where immovable property is transferred for consideration to two or more persons, and such consideration is paid out of a fund belonging to them in common, they are, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, respectively entitled to interests in such property identical, as nearly as may be, with the interests to which they were respectively entitled in the fund; and where such consideration is paid out of separate funds belonging to them respectively, they are, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, respectively entitled to interests in such property in proportion to the shares of the consideration which they respectively advanced.

In the absence of evidence as to the interests in the fund to which they were respectively entitled, or as to the shares which they respectively advanced, such persons shall be presumed to be equally interested in the property.

46. Where immoveable property is transferred for consideration by persons having distinct interests therein, the transferors are, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, entitled to share in the consideration equally, where their interests in the property were of equal value, and, where such interests were of unequal value, proportionately to the value of their respective interests.

(b.) A, being entitled to a life-interest in mauza Atrali and B and C to the reversion, sell the mauza for Rupees 1,000. A's life-interest is ascertained to be worth Rupees 600; the reversion, Rupees 400. A is entitled to receive Rupees 600 out of the purchase-money; B and C to receive Rupees 400.

47. Where several co-owners of immoveable property transfer a share therein without specifying that the transfer is to take effect on any particular share or shares of the transferors, the transfer, as among such transferors, takes effect on such shares equally where the shares were equal, and where they were unequal, proportionately to the extent of such shares.

To give effect to the transfer, one-anna share is taken from the share of A, and half-an-anna share from each of the shares of B and C.

48. Where a person purports to create by transfer at different times rights in or over the same immoveable property, and such rights cannot all exist or be exercised to their full extent together, each later created right shall, in the absence of a special contract or reservation binding the earlier transferees, be subject to the rights previously created.

contrary, require any money which the transferor actually receives under the policy, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be applied in reinstating the property.

50. No person shall be chargeable with any rents or profits of any immoveable property, which he has in good faith paid or delivered to any person of whom he in good faith held such property, notwithstanding it may afterwards appear that the person to whom such payment or delivery was made had no right to receive such rents or profits.

A lets a field to B at a rent of Rupees 50, and then transfers the field to C. B, having no notice of the transfer, in good faith pays the rent to A. B is not chargeable with the rent so paid.

51. When the transferee of immoveable property makes any improvement on the property, believing in good faith that he is absolutely entitled thereto, and he is subsequently evicted therefrom by any person having a better title, the transferee has a right to require the person causing the eviction either to have the value of the improvement estimated and paid or secured to the transferee, or to sell his interest in the property to the transferee at the then market value thereof irrespective of the value of such improvement.

The amount to be paid or secured in respect of such improvement shall be the estimated value thereof at the time of the eviction.

When, under the circumstances aforesaid, the transferee has planted or sown on the property crops which are growing when he is evicted therefrom, he is entitled to such crops and to free ingress and egress to gather and carry them.

Note.

Although a successful pre-emptor becomes substituted for the original transferee, and thus becomes entitled to the benefits of the transfer, those benefits cannot be claimed by him for any period antecedent to such substitution itself, and a pre-emptor, before his pre-emption is actually enforced, possesses no such right in the subject of pre-emption as would entitle him to any benefits arising out of the property which he is entitled to take but has not yet taken. The original vendee cannot, whilst he is in possession, be regarded as a trespasser, who would have no right to enjoy the usufruct of the property which he has purchased. Udan Singh v. Muneri Khan dissented from. Manik Chand v. Rameshwar Rao, Buldeo Pershad v. Mohun, and Ajudhia v. Baldeo Singh followed:—Held, with reference to the last paragraph of sec. 51 of the same Act, that the Courts below were wrong in subjecting their decrees in favour of the plaintiff to the condition that the defendant should not be evicted till the crops he had sown were cut.—I. L. R., 8 Al. 502.

52. During the active prosecution in any Court having authority in British India, or established beyond the limits of British India by the Governor-General in Council, of a contentious suit or proceeding in which any right to immoveable property is directly and specifically in question, the property cannot be transferred or otherwise dealt with by any party to the suit or proceeding so as to affect the rights of any other party thereto under any decree or order which may be made therein, except under the authority of the Court and on such terms as it may impose.

pending suit relating thereto.

Notes.

A transfer of ownership of immoveable property is not a sale of an actionable claim, although the owner at the time of the sale may not be in possession. A and B being owners of an 8-annas share of certain immoveable property sold it under a kobala to C and D. At the time of the sale X and Y were in adverse possession of the share :—Held, that the transaction was a sale under section 52 of the Transfer of Property Act, to which the provisions of Chapter 8 of the Act, specially those of Section 135, were inapplicable. Semble, Section 135 refers to claims for money of some kind or the like, although the money claim may be a charge on immoveable property.—I. L. R., 13 Cal. 297.

A on the 9th September 1883 sold certain immoveable property to S for Rs. 99-12 by means of a conveyance which was not registered. On the 29th September 1883 S instituted a suit against A on that conveyance to obtain possession of the property. On the 5th October 1883, when that suit was pending, but before the summons was served on A, A by a duly registered conveyance sold the same property to R for Rs. 198-8. In the suit filed by S, A filed a written statement, but did not further contest it, and S obtained a decree and got possession of the property. In a suit subsequently brought by R to obtain possession of the property from S upon the ground that his registered conveyance was entitled to priority over the unregistered document of S, it was contended that, R's purchase having been made whilst S's suit was pending, his title could not prevail against that of S. Held, that the doctrine of lis pendens did not apply to the facts of the case, as at the time of R's purchase there was no contentious suit or proceeding in existence, the summons in S's suit not having been then served.—15 Cal. 647.

As soon as the filing of the plaint is brought to the notice of the defendant, the proceeding becomes contentious, and any alienation subsequent to that is subject to the doctrine of lis pendens. A mortgage was executed on 25th June and was registered. On the same day, a prior mortgagee filed a suit against the mortgagors on an unregistered mortgage of the same land : he obtained a decree and attached the mortgage property :—Held, that the registered mortgagee was entitled to priority and his mortgage was not affected by the rule of lis pendens.—12 Madr. 180.

Pending a suit for partition of land, &c., two of the parties to the suit sold part of the land in question to a stranger who was not brought on to the record. After the execution of the sale-deed the parties to the suit entered into a compromise and a decree was passed by consent accordingly. In a suit by the purchaser for possession of the land sold to him: Held, the purchaser was not bound by the decree passed by consent.—12 Madr. 439.

Of the three owners of certain properties, two executed a mortgage of their interest in December 1872. In 1879 a creditor of the three obtained a money-decree against them, and, in execution, attached, inter alia, the properties subject to the mortgage. In July 1880 the mortgagee intervened in execution, and an order having been made directing that the property be sold subject to his mortgage lien, filed a suit upon his mortgage. The property was brought to sale in execution of the money-decree in November 1880, and the defendant became the purchaser. The mortgagee obtained a decree in the following February, and the mortgaged property was sold in execution in March 1884 and was purchased by one who assigned his interest to the plaintiff:—Held, that the defendant's purchase was subject to the doctrine of lis pendens.—14 Madr. 491.

The plaintiffs sought to recover possession from the defendants of certain land claiming under a kararnama executed to them by one Mutyawa. The defendants contended that Mutyawa had never been in possession of the land. The lower appellate Court held that as Mutyawa was not in possession at the time when the kararnama was executed, the plaintiff's claim was not maintainable. On appeal to the High Court:—Held, reversing the decree of the lower appellate Court, that the circumstance of Mutyawa's not having been in possession at the time the kararnama was executed, did not prevent the plaintiffs from recovering possession from the defendants.—9 Bom. 324.

Two properties, A and B, belonging to different owners, were mortgaged under a joint bond for the same debt. The mortgagee put his bond in suit, and, having obtained a decree, caused property A to be sold, the proceeds of which proved more than sufficient to satisfy the whole mortgage-debt. Before such sale, however, X had, in execution of a simple money-decree, acquired a share in property A. X accordingly sued for contribution from property B, in that, so far as his share in property A went, he had satisfied the mortgage-debt, and ultimately obtained a decree in his favor; but, during the pendency of that litigation, property B had been transferred to Y. Held that Y must take the property subject X's right to contribution from it in respect of the loss of his share in property A.—13 Al. 371.

53. Every transfer of immoveable property, made with intent to defraud prior or subsequent transferees thereof for consideration, or co-owners or other persons having an interest in such property, or to defeat or delay the creditors of the transferor, is voidable at the option of any person so defrauded, defeated, or delayed.

Where the effect of any transfer of immoveable property is to defraud, defeat, or delay any such person, and such transfer is made gratuitously or for a grossly inadequate consideration, the transfer may be presumed to have been made with such intent as aforesaid.

Nothing contained in this section shall impair the rights of any transferee in good faith and for consideration.

Notes.

A voluntary transfer of property by way of gift, if made bona fide and not with the intention of defrauding creditors, is valid as against creditors.—4 M. H. C. R., 84.

Held that one co-sharers in a joint and undivided estate cannot deal with his share so as to affect the other co-sharers, but his assignee takes subject to their rights.—I. L. R., 4 Cal. 510.

The creditors of the ancestor, or testator, may follow his lands into the possession of a purchaser from the heir or devisee, if it can be proved that such purchaser knew (1) that there were debts of the ancestor or testator left unsatisfied; and also (2) that the heir or devisee to whom he paid his purchase-money intended to apply it otherwise than in the payment of such debts. But a purchaser ignorant on either of these points as a safe title, for no duty is cast upon the purchaser from the heir or devisee, to enquire whether there any debts of the ancestor, or testator, or to see to the application of his purchase-money, even when there is an express charge of debts by the testator on the devised estate; at least when the devisee is also executor, and in such a case, the burden of proof is entirely on the creditor to show that the purchaser from the devisee had notice that the latter intended to misapply the purchase-money.—4 Cal. 897. Also 8 Cal. 79.

In 1861, A mortgaged by deed certain land to B, who obtained a decree thereon in 1864. The decree, remained unexecuted. In 1869, the lands were sold in execution of a money-decree against A; and C became the purchaser. Thereupon, B, (the defendant,) began to attach the lands in execution of his decree obtained in 1864. Then, C (the plaintiff) objected to the attachment by petition, which was rejected. Hence this suit by C for possession on the ground that the mortgage on which decree was obtained in 1864 was a fictitious transaction, which was found to be so by the lower Courts.

Judgment.—"The contention is that the decree obtained (by B), whatever basis it rested on, caused a transfer of ownership to the intended extent; but looking to the current of recent decisions, we think that they shew a strong tendency to refuse effect to fraudulent and fictitious transactions, and undo them even in the interest of a party, where that can be done without unreasonable prejudice to the other party. And, if such transactions will be set aside even at the suit of a party, much more may they be treated as a nullity in the interest of an innocent purchaser for value. If the ostensible sale or mortgage was really a mere colorable transaction, the vendee from the mortgagor can claim that it be disregarded, even though the fraud has been carried a stage further, so as to give to the sham mortgage the corroboration of a decree, which is then allowed to lie by unexecuted for several years. The Courts will be slow and cautious in arriving at a conclusion that, where a decree has actually been obtained, it has not had its natural effect; but they must at the same time guard against its being made a means of furthering fraud and duplicity. Here, the Courts below have concurred in finding that this was the purpose of the mortgage, and we feel justified therefore in refusing to allow it to operate as against C's subsequent purchase."—3 Bom. 30.

A decree-holder instituted a suit against his judgment-debtor and the latter's son for a declaration that a gift by the judgment-debtor to his son of certain property was fraudulent, and that such property was liable to be taken in execution of the decree. Held, that, such gift having been made by the donor out of natural love and affection for the donee and in order to secure a provision for him and his descendants, and therefore for good consideration, and having operated, and the donor having reserved to himself sufficient property to satisfy the decree, the mere fact that the donor reserved to himself no property within the jurisdiction of the Court which made the decree was not a ground for holding that such gift was fraudulent and not made in good faith, and for setting it aside and allowing the decree-holder to proceed against the property transferred by it.

The law relating to voluntary alienations explained.—2 Al. 891.

See I. L. R., 13 Al. 371, noted under sec. 52.

CHAPTER III.

OF SALES OF IMMOVEABLE PROPERTY.

54. “Sale” is a transfer of ownership in exchange for a price paid or promised, or part-paid and part promised.
 “Sale” defined.

Such transfer, in the case of tangible immoveable property of the value of one hundred rupees and upwards, or in the case of a reversion or other intangible thing, can be made only by a registered instrument.
 Sale how made.

In the case of tangible immoveable property of a value less than one-hundred rupees, such transfer may be made either by a registered instrument or by delivery of the property.

Delivery of tangible immoveable property takes place when the seller places the buyer, or such person as he directs, in possession of the property.

A contract for the sale of immoveable property is a contract that a sale of such property shall take place on terms settled between the parties.
 Contract for sale.

It does not, of itself, create any interest in or charge on such property.

Notes.

“Tangible immoveable property”—means property that can be touched at once, i. e., capable of being possessed or realized.

“Intangible thing”—means property incapable of being touched or possessed at once, as in the case of sale of reversion, &c.

It is to be observed that from the date of this Act, a sale could be effected only by a registered instrument or by delivery of the property. Accordingly, it was held that one who holds under an unregistered deed of sale, the registration of which is not compulsory, and is in possession of the property conveyed, has a superior title to one who sets up a registered conveyance of a later date unaccompanied by possession. The second purchaser presumed to have notice of the title of the first purchaser from the fact of possession having been given.—I. L. R., 7 Cal. 753.

This section virtually abolishes optional registration. No transfer can now be made, by an instrument in writing, unless it is registered. It is true that, in the case of possessory interests, the value of which is less than Rs. 100, an oral transfer coupled with possession will pass the property ; but there will be no such thing as a transfer in writing unless it is registered.—8 Cal. 612.

A registered transfer without delivery of possession will pass any interest in land whether in possession or otherwise ; and when the value of the interest amounts to Rs. 100, there is no other means of transferring it.—8 Cal. 612.

Section 54 of the Transfer of Property Act is not exhaustive or imperative in requiring that the transfer of immoveable property of less than Rs. 100 should be made only by one of the modes there stated so as to confer a valid title. Where the plaintiff bought from the heirs of M, who were out of possession, their right title and interest in certain immoveable property, and such property was conveyed to the plaintiff by an unregistered deed, registration of the deed (the property being of value of less than Rs. 100) not being compulsory : Held, in a suit to recover the property from persons in possession without title, that the sale conferred a valid title on the plaintiff, though not made by registered deed or by delivery of the property. The dictum of Garth, C. J., in Narain Chunder Chuckerbutty v. Dataram Roy, dissented from I. L. R., 8 Cal. 597.—16 Cal. 622.

The transfer by sale of tangible immoveable property of a value less than one hundred rupees can be effected only by one of the two modes mentioned in sec. 54, para. 3 of the Transfer of Property Act, viz., by a registered instrument or by delivery of possession. Khatu Bibi v. Madharam Barsick overruled.—19 Cal. 623.

Plaintiff being in possession of certain land as an incumbrancer under a registered instrument agreed orally with the mortgagor in 1885 to purchase it. The mortgagor subsequently sold the land to others who took the conveyance which was registered with notice of the plaintiff's mortgage and of the oral agreement with him. Plaintiff now sued for a declaration that the conveyance was not binding on him and for specific performance of the oral agreement :—Held, (1) that the suit was not bad for want of a prayer for delivery up and cancellation of the conveyance ; (2) that the plaintiff's possession under his incumbrance together with the agreement to sell was equivalent to delivery of possession within the meaning of Registration Act, sec. 48 ; (3) that the plaintiff was entitled to have the oral contract specifically enforced notwithstanding the subsequent registered sale.—13 Madr. 324.

The wajib-ul-arz of a village gave the co-sharers a right of pre-emption in cases where any one of them should wish to " transfer his share wholly or partly by sale or mortgage." One of the co-sharers entered into a transaction by which he transferred the possession of his share to a stranger for Rs. 300 and had mutation of names effected in the Revenue Department, but, in order to avoid the right of pre-emption, the parties omitted to execute or register a deed of sale in respect of the transfer :—Held, by the Full Bench (Mahmood, J. dissenting) that the transaction gave rise to the right of pre-emption within the meaning of the wajib-ul-arz. Per Pethram, C. J.—That the terms of the wajib-ul-arz, meant that if any co-sharer transferred his right wholly or partly, the right of pre-emption should arise ; that although the legal interest in the share was never transferred, the effect of the transaction in question was to transfer absolutely the whole right of possession from the vendor to the vendee, and that it was therefore such a transfer as let in the right of pre-emption. Per Straight J.—That inasmuch as the defendants deliberately omitted to observe the necessary legal formality of a registered instrument with the object of defeating the pre-emptive right, it was very doubtful whether a Court of equity would be justified in allowing them to set up, and in giving effect to, a defence based upon their own intentional evasion of the law. Per Oldfield and Brodhurst J. J.—That the failure of the parties to the transfer to comply with the requirements of section 54 of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), as to the manner in which the transfer should be made, did not alter the nature of the transaction or affect the fact that a sale had been made, and could not affect a pre-emptor's right in respect of it. Per Mahmood. J.—That a valid and perfected sale was a condition precedent to the exercise of the pre-emptive right; that in the present case nothing had happened which could properly be termed a "sale" within the meaning of the wajib-ul-arz; that the application for mutation of names not having been registered, the provisions of section 54 of the Transfer of Property Act prevented it from taking effect as a sale, or passing the ownership from the vendor to the vendee; and that therefore, under the wajib-ul-arz the right of pre-emption could not arise.—7 Al. 482.

Non-payment of the purchase-money does not prevent the passing of the ownership of the property sold from the vendor to the purchaser; and the latter, notwithstanding such non-payment, can maintain a suit for possession of the property, subject to such equities, restrictions or conditions as the nature of the case may require. Mohun Singh v. Shib Koonwer, Goor Parshad v. Nunda Singh, Heera Singh v. Ragho Nath Sahai and Umedmal Motiram v. Dawa referred to. The difference between an executed contract of sale and an executory contract to sell observed on. Ikbāl Begam v. Gobind Prasad dissented from. A deed of sale of immoveable property having been duly executed and registered and delivered, and the purchaser having paid a portion of the purchase-money to the vendor's creditors—held, with reference to sec. 54 of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882) that these facts amounted to a full transfer of ownership, and the purchaser could maintain a suit for possession of the property sold, notwithstanding that he had not paid the balance of the purchase-money to the vendor or to a mortgagee of the property, as stipulated in the deed.—11 Al. 244.

55. In the absence of a contract to the contrary, the Rights and liabilities of buyer and the seller of immoveable property respectively are subject to the liabilities, and have the rights, mentioned in the rules next following, or such of them as are applicable to the property sold :

(1) The seller is bound—

(a) to disclose to the buyer any material defect in the property of which the seller is, and the buyer is not, aware, and which the buyer could not with ordinary care discover ;

(b) to produce to the buyer on his request for examination all documents of title relating to the property which are in the seller's possession or power ;

(c) to answer to the best of his information all relevant questions put to him by the buyer in respect to the property or the title thereto ;

(d) on payment or tender of the amount due in respect of the price, to execute a proper conveyance of the property when the buyer tenders it to him for execution at a proper time and place ;

(e) between the date of the contract of sale and the delivery of the property, to take as much care of the property and all documents of title relating thereto which are in his possession, as an owner of ordinary prudence would take of such property and documents ;

(f) to give, on being so required, the buyer, or such person as he directs, such possession of the property as its nature admits ;

(g) to pay all public charges and rent accrued due in respect of the property up to the date of the sale, the interest on all incumbrances on such property due on such date, and, except where the property is sold subject to incumbrances, to discharge all incumbrances on the property then existing.

(2) The seller shall be deemed to contract with the buyer that the interest which the seller professes to transfer to the buyer subsists, and that he has power to transfer the same :

provided that, where the sale is made by a person in a fiduciary character, he shall be deemed to contract with the buyer that the seller has done no act whereby the property is incumbered, or whereby he is hindered from transferring it.

The benefit of the contract mentioned in this rule shall be annexed to, and shall go with, the interest of the transferee as such, and may be enforced by every person in whom that interest is for the whole or any part thereof from time to time vested.

(3) Where the whole of the purchase-money has been paid to the seller, he is also bound to deliver to the buyer all documents of title relating to the property which are in the seller's possession or power :

provided that (a), where the seller retains any part of the property comprised in such documents, he is entitled to retain them all, and (b), where the whole of such property is sold to different buyers, the buyer of the lot of greatest value is entitled to such documents. But in case (a) the seller, and in case (b) the buyer of the lot of greatest value, is bound, upon every reasonable request by the buyer or by any of the other buyers, as the case may be, and at the cost of the person making the request, to produce the said documents, and furnish such true copies thereof or extracts therefrom as he may require; and, in the meantime, the seller or the buyer of the lot of greatest value, as the case may be, shall keep the said documents safe, uncanceled, and undefaced, unless prevented from so doing by fire or other inevitable accident;

(4) The seller is entitled—

(a) to the rents and profits of the property till the ownership thereof passes to the buyer;

(b) where the ownership of the property has passed to the buyer before payment of the whole of the purchase-money, to a charge upon the property in the hands of the buyer for the amount of the purchase-money, or any part thereof remaining unpaid, and for interest on such amount or part.

(5) The buyer is bound—

(a) to disclose to the seller any fact as to the nature or extent of the seller's interest in the property of which the buyer is aware, but of which he has reason to believe that the seller is not aware, and which materially increases the value of such interest;

(b) to pay or tender, at the time and place of completing the sale, the purchase-money to the seller or such person as he directs: provided that, where the property is sold free from incumbrances, the buyer may retain out of the purchase-money the amount of any incumbrances, on the property existing at the date of the sale, and shall pay the amount so retained to the persons entitled thereto;

(c) where the ownership of the property has passed to the buyer, to bear any loss arising from the destruction, injury, or decrease in value of the property not caused by the seller;

(d) where the ownership of the property has passed to the buyer, as between himself and the seller, to pay all public charges and rent which may become payable in respect of the property, the principal moneys due on any incumbrances subject to which the property is sold, and the interest thereon afterwards accruing due.

(6) The buyer is entitled—

(a) where the ownership of the property has passed to him, to the benefit of any improvement in, or increase in value of, the property, and to the rents and profits thereof;

(b) unless he has improperly declined to accept delivery of the property, to a charge on the property, as against the seller and all persons claiming under him with notice of the payment, to the extent of the seller's interest in the property, for the amount of any purchase-money properly paid by the buyer in anticipation of the delivery, and for interest on such amount; and, when he properly declines to accept the delivery, also for the earnest (if any) and for the costs (if any) awarded to him of a suit to compel specific performance of the contract, or to obtain a decree for its rescission.

An omission to make such disclosures as are mentioned in this section, paragraph (1), clause (a), and paragraph (5), clause (a), is fraudulent.

Notes.

On 16th August 1885 the defendant, having agreed to purchase a house belonging to the plaintiff, executed an agreement, in which it was stated "that that he had this day purchased the house belonging to Ghousiah Begum Sahiba (plaintiff) for Rs. 16,000, that he had paid Rs. 1,000 as an advance and taken possession, that he would pay the balance with interest at the rate of Re. 1 per cent. per mensem within fifteen days, and obtain a sale-deed from the said Begum." The plaintiff at the time of the agreement had not obtained a conveyance of the house to her, and was not able to tender a conveyance to the defendant until January 1887, when she did so. Meanwhile the defendant took possession under the agreement, paying only a portion of the balance of the purchase money; he also executed certain repairs on the house and let it to a tenant and enjoyed the rent. It further appeared that shortly after the above agreement he sought to obtain a sale-deed from the plaintiff and attempted to raise a sum of money on a mortgage of the house. On 22nd December 1885 the defendant wrote to the plaintiff demanding a conveyance and giving notice that if the sale be not completed in the following month, the interest on the balance of the purchase money should cease; but no evidence was given as to any appropriation of the purchase money by the defendant. In 1887 the plaintiff filed the present suit to recover the unpaid purchase money with interest at 12 per cent. :—Held, that the acts of the defendant amounted to a waiver of the implied covenant for title, and that the plaintiff was entitled to recover the unpaid purchase money with interest at the agreed rate up to the date of payment, and that he was further entitled to a lien on the property for that amount.—I. L. R., 13 Madr. 158.

When a vendee, who sues to cancel a sale on the grounds of fraud, misrepresentation or concealment by his vendor, fails to establish these grounds of relief, he is not entitled to set up in second appeal a case founded on the implied covenant for title under Transfer of Property Act, sec. 55 (2).—15 Madr. 50.

In a suit for possession of land alleged to have been purchased under a registered deed of sale, the defendant-vendor admitted the execution and registration of the deed but denied receipt of consideration. The deed was dated in January, 1876, and the suit was instituted in 1884. It was found that the vendor had been in possession during the whole of that period. The plaintiff produced no evidence in proof of the payment of consideration :

—Held that although under ordinary circumstances the party to a deed duly executed and registered who alleges non-payment of consideration is bound to prove his allegation, the fact that the plaintiff and his predecessor had silently submitted to the withholding of possession for upwards of eight years, combined with the continuous possession of the vendor, favoured the allegation of the latter that possession had been with-held because of the non-payment of consideration, and raised such a counter-presumption as to make it incumbent on the plaintiff to give evidence that consideration had in fact passed :—Held, therefore, that in the absence of such evidence, and of evidence to explain the fact of the plaintiff being out of possession, the suit failed.—8 Al. 641.

56. Where two properties are subject to a common charge, and one of the properties is sold, the buyer is, as against the seller, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, entitled to have the charge satisfied out of the other property, so far as such property will extend.

Sale of one of two properties subject to a common charge.

Discharge of Incumbrances on Sale.

57. (a) Where immoveable property subject to any incumbrance, whether immediately payable or not, is sold by the Court or in execution by Court for sale, freed therefrom.

Court may, if it thinks fit, on the application of any party to the sale, direct or allow payment into Court,

(1) in the case of an annual or monthly sum charged on the property, or of a capital sum charged on a determinable interest in the property,—of such amount as, when invested in securities of the Government of India, the Court considers will be sufficient, by means of the interest thereof, to keep down or otherwise provide for that charge, and

(2) in any other case of a capital sum charged on the property—of the amount sufficient to meet the incumbrance and any interest due thereon.

But in either case there shall also be paid into Court such additional amount as the Court considers will be sufficient to meet the contingency of further costs, expenses and interest, and any other contingency except depreciation of investments, not exceeding one-tenth part of the original amount to be paid in, unless the Court for special reasons (which it shall record) thinks fit to require a larger additional amount.

(b) Thereupon the Court may, if it thinks fit, and after notice to the incumbrancer, unless the Court, for reasons to be recorded in writing, thinks fit to dispense with such notice, declare the property to be freed from the incumbrance, and make any order for conveyance, or vesting order, proper for giving effect to the sale, and give directions for retention and investment of the money in Court.

(c) After notice served on the persons interested in or entitled to the money or fund in Court, the Court may direct payment or transfer thereof to the persons entitled to receive or give a discharge for the same, and generally may give directions respecting the application or distribution of the capital or income thereof.

(d) An appeal shall lie from any declaration, order, or direction under this section as if the same were a decree.

(e) In this section "Court" means (1) a High Court in the exercise of its ordinary or extraordinary original civil jurisdiction, (2) the Court of a District Judge within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the property or any part thereof is situate, (3) any other Court which the Local Government may, from time to time, by notification in the official Gazette, declare to be competent to exercise the jurisdiction conferred this section.

CHAPTER IV.

OF MORTGAGES OF IMMOVEABLE PROPERTY AND CHARGES.

58. (a) A mortgage is the transfer of an interest in specific immoveable property for the purpose of securing the payment of money advanced or to be advanced by way of loan, an existing or future debt, or the performance of an engagement which may give rise to a pecuniary liability.

"Mortgage" "mortgagor"

The transferor is called a mortgagor, the transferee a mortgagee; the principal money and interest of which payment is secured for the time being are called the mortgage-money, and the instrument (if any) by which the transfer is effected is called a mortgage-deed.

(b) Where, without delivering possession of the mortgaged property, the mortgagor binds himself personally to pay the mortgage-money, and agrees, expressly or impliedly, that, in the event of his failing to pay according to his contract, the mortgagee shall have a right to cause the mortgaged property to be sold, and the proceeds of sale to be applied, so far as may be necessary, in payment of the mortgage-money, the transaction is called a simple mortgage, and the mortgagee a simple mortgagee.

Mortgage by conditional sale.

(c) Where the mortgagor ostensibly sells the mortgaged property—on condition that, on default of payment of the mortgage-money on a certain date, the sale shall become absolute, or on condition that, on such payment being made, the sale shall become void, or on condition that, on such payment being made, the buyer shall transfer the property to the seller, the transaction is called a mortgage by conditional sale, and the mortgagee a mortgagee by conditional sale.

(d) Where the mortgagor delivers possession of the mortgaged property to the mortgagee, and Usufructuary mortgage. authorizes him to retain such possession until payment of the mortgage-money, and to receive the rents and profits accruing from the property, and to appropriate them in lieu of interest, or in payment of the mortgage-money, or partly in lieu of interest and partly in payment of the mortgage-money, the transaction is called an usufructuary mortgage, and the mortgagee an usufructuary mortgagee.

(e) Where the mortgagor binds himself to repay the mortgage-money on a certain date, and English mortgage. transfers the mortgaged property absolutely to the mortgagee, but subject to a proviso that he will re-transfer it to the mortgagor upon payment of the mortgage-money as agreed, the transaction is called an English mortgage.

Notes.

An instrument, mortgaging villages for a sum payable within a certain period by instalments, and making distinct provision that, upon default in payment of an instalment, the mortgagee by his servants was to take possession, and after paying the revenue and the expenses of collection, to credit the balance towards payment of the instalment, also contained the following: "Should on the expiration of the term of this instrument, any money remain due, then, till payment thereof, possession will continue according to the terms herein set out. If I do not accept this, then, as soon as the breach of promise occurs, they will at the end of the year realize the whole amount of instalment by sale of the villages and of other moveable and immoveable property belonging to me." Held, that such an instrument must be taken as a whole, and that the true construction to be put on it should be that which, being reasonable, would also give effect to all parts of it:—Held, accordingly, (on the contention that these words negatived the mortgagee's right to take possession upon default in payment of an instalment, leaving him only a right to proceed to sale) that, as this construction would not give due effect to the first part of the instrument, it must yield to a construction which, not only would give such effect, but would also be the more reasonable one, viz., that the mortgagee should take possession upon such a default, and also might sell if the mortgagor objected to his applying the rents in reduction of the principal and interest due.—I. L. R., 11 Cal. 237.

An instrument, mortgaging villages for a sum payable within a certain period by instalments, and making distinct provision that, upon default in payment of an instalment, the mortgagee by his servants was to take possession, and after paying the revenue and the expenses of collection, to credit the balance towards payment of the instalment, also contained the following: "Should on the expiration of the term of this instrument, any money remain due, then, till payment thereof, possession will continue according to the terms herein set out. If I do not accept this, then, as soon as the breach of promise occurs, they will at the end of the year realize the whole amount of instalment by sale of the villages to get possession. In a suit by the purchaser against B and A :—Held, that B's interest in the joint family property was unaffected by decree passed in the mortgage suit, and that the purchaser was not entitled to the relief he sought as regards his share. Subramaniyayan v. Subramaniyayan, I. L. R., 5 Madr. 125 followed.—11 Cal. 293.

A mortgage in the English form between Hindus of lands in the mofussil, outside Calcutta, has always been treated by the Courts as a mortgage by conditional sale.—12 Cal. 614.

The mortgage of Indigo crops that may be grown upon a certain plot of land is a valid transaction. The transaction is neither governed by the Transfer of Property Act nor by the Contract Act; but it is in the nature of an agreement to mortgage moveable property that may come into existence in future.—13 Cal. 262.

In 1832 a Muhamadan mortgaged certain land with possession on condition that if the money lent was not repaid within eight years, the land should be enjoyed by the mortgagee after that period as if conveyed by sale. In 1883 a suit was brought to redeem :—Held, that the title of the mortgagee became absolute by virtue of the terms of the contract on default of payment within the time specified. The obligation cast by Regulation 34 of 1802 upon a mortgagee to account for profits does not prevent a mortgage by way of conditional sale from becoming, after the period for redemption has elapsed, an absolute sale where no account has been rendered by the mortgagee. The rule laid down in Pattabhiramier's case (13 M. I. A., 560) applies to a mortgage executed by a Muhamadan.—8 Madr. 185.

The period of limitation for suits upon hypothecation bonds, which contain no power of sale, or effect no transfer of property, executed before the Transfer of Property Act came into operation, is twelve years under sch. II, art. 132, of the Limitation Act of 1877—Aliba v. Nanu (I. L. R., 9 Mad., 218) followed. Per Muttusami Ayyar, J.—"The transaction in suit appears to be of the kind described in sec. 100 of the Transfer of Property Act, which defines how a charge is created;" but "it seems to me that the Transfer of Property Act does not invest all prior hypothecations with the rights and liabilities arising from simple mortgages, whether or not those transactions satisfy the requirements of the definition it contains of simple mortgages."—10 Madr. 509.

In a suit for sale by a mortgagee, it appeared that the mortgage comprised a covenant by the mortgagor for payment of the mortgage amount, but otherwise answered the definition of an usufructuary mortgage contained in Transfer of Property Act, sec. 58 (d) :—Held, that the mortgagee was not precluded by Transfer of Property Act, sec. 67, from bringing the property to sale under the mortgage.—14 Madr. 232.

An unregistered mortgage-deed executed in 1885 contained a personal covenant by the mortgagors to pay the debt secured thereby :—Held, the mortgagee was entitled to sue on the covenant and obtain a personal decree against the mortgagors.—15 Madr. 253.

The jenmi of land in Malabar sued in 1886 to redeem a kanom of 1849, to which it was subject, and obtained a decree which merely directed the surrender of the land to the plaintiff, on payment of the kanom amount and the value of improvements, within three months of the date of the decree. This decree remained unexecuted, the money not being paid. The jenmi now brought another suit to redeem the same kanom :—Held, that the present suit was not barred by the former decree. The nature of a kanom discussed.—15 Madr. 366.

In 1866, R executed a sun mortgage of certain land to the plaintiff, and four years afterwards mortgaged the same land with possession to the defendant. In 1875 the plaintiff brought a suit against R alone upon the mortgage, obtained a decree, and he himself purchased the property at the Court sale held in execution of that decree. In attempting to take possession he was obstructed by the defendant, who was in possession of the property as mortgagee. The plaintiff now sued the defendant for possession. Both the lower Courts held that the plaintiff should satisfy the defendant's subsequent mortgage before he could recover possession. On appeal by the plaintiff to the High Court :—Held, reversing the lower Court's decree, that the plaintiff's claim should be allowed. The plaintiff having brought to sale, in execution of his decree, the estate as it stood at the date of his mortgage free from all subsequent incumbrances, the fact that he himself was the purchaser could not affect the estate which passed by that sale. As the defendant had not been a party to the plaintiff's suit against R, he was entitled to redeem the property if he wished.—10 Bom. 224.

In 1865, N was in possession of six shops in a market-place at Etawah. He was in possession of two as mortgagee, and of the remaining four as proprietor. The Municipal Committee of Etawah, having decided to establish the market in a fresh place, and to use the site of the old market for other purposes, arranged with N to take the sites of his six shops in the old market-place, and to give him in lieu of them sites for six shops in the new. Under this arrangement, he built six shops in the new market-place. Subsequently, the mortgagor of one of the old shops claimed possession of one of the six new ones on payment of the mortgage-money, and cost of constructing the shop :—Held that the claim could not be allowed, inasmuch as it could be justified only by proof of an agreement binding upon the parties at the time when the transaction occurred that some specific one among the new shops should be substituted for the old one which was the subject of the mortgage, and it had not been found that any such agreement was made.—7 Al. 436.

The mortgagee of immoveable property under a hypothecation bond entered into an agreement with one who has not a party to his mortgage, to release part of the property from liability under his mortgage. This agreement was not in writing and registered. The mortgagee subsequently sought to enforce the hypothecation against the whole of the mortgaged property :—Held that the agreement, being a new contract for a fresh consideration between persons who were not parties to the mortgage, was not, as between the parties to the mortgage, a release which the law required to be in writing and registered :—Held also that the party to the agreement with the mortgagee might have come into Court as a plaintiff to enforce the same, and that it was equally competent for him to plead it in avoidance of the mortgagee's claim to bring to sale the property referred to therein.—7 Al. 820.

By a deed of usufructuary mortgage dated in 1875, a sum of Rs. 30,000, with interest at Re. 1 per cent. per mensem, was advanced on the security of certain property, for a period of ten years. The deed contained various provisions for securing the payment of interest to the mortgagee, and among these a provision that he should have possession of the property and take the profits on account of interest, the profits being fixed at a certain amount yearly, leaving an agreed balance of interest to be paid yearly in cash. There was also a provision that, in the event of possession not being given, the mortgagee might treat the principal money as immediately due, and recover it at once with interest at the rate of Re. 1-6 per cent. per mensem. The mortgagee did not take possession of the mortgaged property, and took no steps to obtain such possession, or to recover the money for nine years, during which no interest was paid. In November, 1884 the mortgagee brought a suit against the mortgagors to recover the mortgage-money, claiming interest from the date of the mortgage-deed to the date of the suit at Re. 1-6 per cent. per mensem :—Held that the fair inference of fact from the circumstances above described was that the mortgagee waived the provisions for securing and recovering the interest, and that the transaction must be looked at as simply one of a loan for the specified period at the agreed rate, i e., Re. 1 per cent. per mensem.—8 Al. 194.

A deed of mortgage executed in 1879 for a consideration of Rs. 300 provided that the term of the mortgage should be four years certain, that certain interest should be payable, that the mortgagee should have possession, that the profits should be appropriated first in lien of yearly interest and any balance appropriated in payment of the principal debt, and that the mortgagor should be entitled to redeem if the principal and interest were paid at the expiration of the four years. The mortgagee never obtained possession ; and in 1882 he brought a suit against the mortgagor to recover the unpaid interest then due, and obtained a decree, which was satisfied by the sale of property belonging to the judgment debtor. In 1886 he brought another suit for recovery of the principal together with the residue of interest up to the date of suit. Held that, inasmuch as there was no stipulation in terms that the mortgagee was to remain in possession until payment of the mortgage money, the instrument did not strictly fall within sec. 58 (d) of the Transfer of Property Act (IV. of 1882), and that the rights and liabilities of the parties must be determined in accordance with the principles enunciated in sec. 98 of that Act. Held upon the construction of the instrument, that it must be regarded as a usufructuary mortgage not only during the four years, but after their expiration. Held that the cause of action in the suit of 1882 was the mortgagor's non-delivery of possession of the mortgaged property, by reason of which the mortgagee had been unable to realize his interest from the usufruct ; that the cause of action accrued to the mortgagee from the moment the instrument came into operation and possession was not delivered ; that the cause of action to recover the principal accrued at the same time and was the same cause of action ; that the plaintiff was therefore bound in the suit of 1882 to sue for the principal ; and that the present suit was consequently barred by sec. 43 of the Civil Procedure Code.—12 Al. 203.

The transaction known to Muhammadan law as a bai-bil-wafa is a mortgage within the meaning of sec. 58 of Act IV. of 1882, and not a sale. The plaintiff in a suit for pre-emption had, prior to the sale of the property claimed, executed a deed in respect of his share in the village in virtue of which he claimed the right to preempt, the material portion of which deed was as follows:—"Thirdly, if I, the vendor, or the heirs of me, the vendor, Ali Jan, alias Ali Ahmad, should pay off the entire consideration money mentioned above on the Puranmashi of Jeth Sudi 1299 fasli to the said purchaser, she should without any objection or hesitation receive the money, and, returning the property sold, described above in the document, to me the vendor, revoke the sale." Held that this deed was a bai bil-wafa or mortgage by conditional sale and that as the conditional sale had not become absolute at the time when the right of pre-emption accrued, the conditional vendor or mortgagor had still a subsisting right of pre-emption. Bhagwan Sahai v. Bhagwan Din distinguished.—14 Al. 195.

See I. L. R., 13 Al. 28, noted under sec. 40.

59. Where the principal money secured is one hundred rupees or upwards, a mortgage can be effected only by a registered instrument signed by the mortgagor and attested by at least two witnesses.

Where the principal money secured is less than one hundred rupees, a mortgage may be effected either by an instrument signed and attested as aforesaid, or (except in the case of a simple mortgage) by delivery of the property.

Nothing in this section shall be deemed to render invalid mortgages made in the towns of Calcutta, Madras, Bombay, Karachi, and Rangoon, by delivery to a creditor or his agent of documents of title to immoveable property, with intent to create a security thereon.

Notes.

A creditor holding a mortgage on the lands of his debtor does not necessarily surrender that mortgage or lower its priority, by taking a subsequent mortgage, including the same lands with other lands, for the same debt. Whether the earlier mortgage becomes merged and extinguished or not in a question of intention.—I. L. R., 3 Cal. 307.

In India, as in England, a mortgagee may transfer his rights to a third person by way of assignment. But such transfer must be without prejudice to the rights of the mortgagor.—2 Madr. 212.

In a recent case, Chief Justice Turner, of the Madras High Court, has expounded the law on mortgages as follows:—

The effect of a mortgage is to transfer to the mortgagee a portion more or less extensive according to the nature of the mortgage of the rights of the mortgagor.

In the absence of a condition restricting his powers, a mortgagor is clearly not precluded by the fact that he has entered into a contract of mortgage from dealing with the interest remaining in him as freely as he may deal with any other property, provided of course that, apart from the contract of mortgage, he enjoys a power of alienation.

It is clear that even where such a condition has been imported into a mortgage, it does not absolutely debar the mortgagor from dealing with the interest remaining in him. Where the mortgagor has transferred in whole or in part such interest, the transferee acquires against the mortgagee similar rights to those possessed by the mortgagor, so far as they are necessary for the enjoyment and preservation of the interest transferred to him.

If the mortgagee desires to foreclose the mortgage or to bring the property to sale, a purchaser from the mortgagor or a second mortgagee is entitled to redeem the first mortgage and thus to protect his own interest in the property mortgaged.—5 Madr. 184.

In another Full Bench Case Justice West of the Bombay High Court observed as follows :—

The successive charges created by the owner of an estate may be regarded as fractions of the ownership, which embraces the aggregate of advantages that can be drawn from it. Each charge in its turn constitutes a deduction from the original aggregate, and the nominal ownership may itself then be reduced to a small fraction of what it once was. Still, be it small or great, it is a possible object of sale or purchase, and there is no ground of reason for saying that an incumbrancer who is already owner of one fraction of the property may not buy this other fraction without forfeiting the former fraction in favour of other fractional owners in the remainder left after deduction of his prior share.—6 Bom. 404.

The plaintiff having consented to lend Rs. 10,000 to the defendant, latter deposited with him, on 2nd April, 1883, the title-deeds of a certain property. On receiving them the plaintiff told the defendant that he would take them to his attorney, have a deed drawn up, and then advance the money. The defendant applied to the plaintiff for the money before the deed was prepared, but the plaintiff refused, saying he would not advance the money until he was satisfied by his attorney, and the deed had been prepared. At the time the deeds were handed over to the plaintiff, (i.e., the 2nd April, 1885), there was no existing debt due by the defendant to the plaintiff. On the 6th April 1885, the mortgage-deed was executed, and on the same day the money was advanced by the plaintiff to the defendant. The plaintiff stated that he “had advanced the money on the security of the title deeds on the same day.” He did not say how long before the execution of the deed the money had been paid, but the deed itself recited that the Rs. 10,000 were paid immediately before the execution of the mortgage. The mortgage-deed was not registered. The plaintiff stated that he knew that it required registration but that it was left unregistered at the request of the defendant, who did not wish to be “exposed in the eyes of the public.”

The plaintiff sued for a declaration that he was entitled to an equitable mortgage upon the said property, and for the sale thereof, in default of the payment of the mortgage-debt. He contended that the loan had been made on the security of the title-deeds, which had been deposited on the 2nd April; that he had, no doubt, intended to obtain a legal mortgage, but that he had abandoned that intention by consenting to leave the mortgage-deed unregistered, and had on the 6th April elected to rely upon his equitable mortgage :—Held, that the plaintiff had no equitable mortgage. At the time when the deeds were deposited, there was no antecedent or existing debt, nor was any oral agreement made that the title-deeds should stand as a security for future advances, nor was any advance, in fact, made until the mortgage-deed was about to be executed. There could be no doubt, that if the defendant had not been ready to execute the deed, no advance would have been made. The money was really advanced on the security of the mortgage deed, though, at the time the money was advanced, the plaintiff had the title-deeds in his possession.—10 Bom. 634.

It is not necessary to the validity of a mortgage by deposit of title-deeds under sec. 59 of the Transfer of Property Act (IV. of 1882), that the property to which the title-deeds relate should be situated within the limits of one of the towns where such mortgages are allowed. Varden Seth Sam v. Luckpathy Royjee Lallah and Manekji Framji v. Rustomji Naserwanji Mistry, referred to.—14 Al. 238.

Rights and Liabilities of Mortgagor.

60. At any time after the principal money has become payable, the mortgagor has a right, on payment or tender, at a proper time and place, of the mortgage-money, to require the mortgagee (a) to deliver the mortgage-deed, if any, to the mortgagor, (b) where the mortgagee is in possession of the mortgaged property, to deliver possession thereof to the mortgagor, and (c) at the cost of the mortgagor either to retransfer the mortgaged property to him or to such third person as he may direct, or to execute and (where the mortgage has been effected by a registered instrument) to have registered an acknowledgment in writing that any right in derogation of his interest transferred to the mortgagee has been extinguished:

Provided that the right conferred by this section has not been extinguished by act of the parties or by order of a Court.

The right conferred by this section is called a right to redeem, and a suit to enforce it is called a suit for redemption.

Nothing in this section shall be deemed to render invalid any provision to the effect that, if the time fixed for payment of the principal money has been allowed to pass, or no such time has been fixed, the mortgagee shall be entitled to reasonable notice before payment or tender of such money.

Nothing in this section shall entitle a person interested in a share only of the mortgaged property to redeem his own share only, on payment of a proportionate part of the amount remaining due on the mortgage, except where a mortgagee, or, if there are more mortgagees than one, all such mortgagees, has or have acquired, in whole or in part, the share of a mortgagor.

Notes.

So inseparable, indeed, is the equity of redemption from a mortgage, that it cannot be disannexed even by an express agreement of the parties. Story § 1019—Also 7 M. H. C. R., 395.

According to the judgment of the Appellate Court below, a mortgagor, --- liberty by the terms of his mortgage to redeem at the end of its second year, on payment of the whole of the principal and interest, was not entitled to a decree for redemption, in a suit brought after the close of the second year, on showing only that in the first half of the second year the principal money had been deposited in Court, and that for the interest, for both years, decrees had been obtained by the mortgagee against him, before his suit was instituted. The above not showing payment or tender of the interest, of which payment was secured by the mortgage, an appeal was dismissed.—16 Cal. 307.

Where a day is fixed for the payment of a debt and nothing more appears, the presumption is that the date is fixed for the convenience of the debtor, and that he may repay the debt at an earlier period. The same rule applies to a mortgage-debt, but where the continuance of the enjoyment of the mortgaged property for a prescribed period forms a material part of the contract, the mortgagee cannot be deprived of his right to enjoyment on the ground that the contract was one of mortgage.—2 Madr. 314.

A decree obtained by a mortgagor, which declared that the mortgagee should deliver up possession on payment of the sum found due to him, not having been executed for three years, a purchaser of the equity of redemption sued the mortgagee to redeem:—Held, that this suit was not barred by the former decree and that the plaintiff was entitled to redeem. Sami v. Somasundram (I. L. R., 6 Madr., 119) approved. Gan Savant Bal Savant v. Narrayan Dhond Savant (I. L. R., 7 Bom., 467) dissented from.—I. L. R., 8 Madr. 478.

In 1873 R mortgaged to S seven parcels of land (items 1—7) for Rs. 300. In 1880, M purchased R's rights in items 1 and 2. In 1881 R redeemed item 5 on payment of Rs. 30 and executed a second mortgage of the rest to S for Rs. 200:—Held, that M, was entitled to redeem items 1 and 2 on payment of a proportionate amount of the first mortgage debt.—9 Madr. 453.

The breach of a condition in a mortgage deed to the effect that on default of payment on a certain date, the mortgage shall be deemed an absolute sale, does not amount to an extinguishment of the right of redemption by act of the parties within the meaning of the proviso to sec. 60 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882.—11 Madr. 409.

In 1884 A and B, being divided brothers, hypothecated to X and Y the house now in suit, which was A's family property, and a house belonging to B. In 1886 A hypothecated the house now in suit to the plaintiff. In 1888 B sold his house for Rs. 700 by a conveyance attested by X and Y who accepted Rs. 550 in discharge of a moiety of the debt secured by the hypothecation of 1884, the balance of Rs. 150 being retained by B. In this suit the plaintiff sought to recover the principal and interest due on his security of 1886, and he contended that X and Y who were defendants Nos. 4 and 5 were not justified in permitting B to retain Rs. 150 of the price and that that sum should accordingly be debited against them in the accounts:—Held, that under Transfer of Property Act, sec. 82, plaintiff was not entitled to compel defendants Nos. 4 and 5 to satisfy their debt against B's house so far as it extended.—14 Madr. 71.

In 1870 B mortgaged to N with possession a certain piece of land. On 17th June, 1871, M and T obtained a money decree against B. On 9th March, 1872, the defendants bought from B his equity of redemption. In July, 1872, M and T attached the land in execution of their decree. The defendants objected to the attachment under section 246 of the Civil Procedure Code, Act VIII of 1859, but on investigation of their claim an order was made disallowing their claim on the 23rd December, 1872. In June, 1873, the defendants paid off the mortgage debt and were put into possession by the mortgagee. In October, 1873, M and T put up the land for sale in execution of their decree and the plaintiff became the purchaser. On seeking to obtain possession the plaintiff was resisted by the defendants whose claim was allowed by the Subordinate Judge after inquiry. The plaintiff, therefore, brought this suit under section 335 of the Civil Procedure Code Act XIV of 1882. The lower Courts rejected his claim. On appeal to the High Court :—Held, that as the defendants had brought no suit within a year from that date, they could not now contest the plaintiff's title to the property. The defendants however having, since the date of the said order, paid off the mortgage, held that it would be contrary to justice, equity and good conscience for the Court to assist the plaintiff in obtaining possession unless he paid the defendants the amount paid by them to the mortgagee to free the property from the incumbrance.—9 Bom. 35.

The plaintiff sued to redeem certain land, alleging that it had been mortgaged by his father to the defendant in 1854-55. The defendant denied the mortgage, and alleged that he purchased it under a deed of sale from the plaintiff's father in 1849, and had ever since been in his possession as owner. The deed of conveyance was not forthcoming, nor was the alleged mortgage deed. The Court of first instance rejected the plaintiff's claim on the ground that the mortgage was not proved. The lower Appellate Court reversed the decree of the Court of first instance. The defendant appealed :—Held, that the defendant's possession was prima facie evidence of a complete title, and that the plaintiff, who alleged that the defendant was merely a mortgagee, was bound to prove his own right as mortgagor clearly and indefeasibly. Mere statements that the property had been mortgaged, which failed to establish any particular mortgage, did not shift the burden of proof, or require the mortgagee to show what were the terms of such mortgage, or his right to retain possession under it.—9 Bom. 137.

The mortgagor of an estate gave to the mortgagee, subsequently to the date of the mortgage, two successive money bonds in each of which it was stipulated that, if the amount were not paid on the due date, it should take priority of the amount due under the mortgage, and that redemption of the mortgage should not be claimed until the bond had been satisfied. The assignee of the equity of redemption sued for possession of the estate on payment merely of the mortgage money :—Held, that the two subsequent bonds did not create a further charge on the mortgaged premises, although they would prevent the original mortgagor from redeeming without paying their amounts.—9 Bom. 233.

Where the plaintiff, a minor, sought to redeem a certain property from the defendant who had purchased the equity of redemption at an auction sale in execution of a decree obtained against the plaintiff's mother alone as representative of her deceased husband :—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to redeem. The plaintiff having been ignored, the inheritance had not been substantially represented in the suit against his mother alone, and the plaintiff's right to the equity of redemption consequently remained unaffected by the sale to the defendant.—9 Bom. 429.

A condition in a mortgage, that if the mortgagor redeems the property the mortgage right should be extinguished, but that the property should for ever remain in the possession of the mortgagee on his paying a fixed rent, is a condition which cannot be enforced in a Court of Equity.—9 Bom. 524.

In 1805 a two-anna share in certain property held by co-sharers was mortgaged to the defendant. The mortgage was effected by the mortgagor as manager of all the co-sharers in union. In 1848 one of the co-sharers redeemed his share of two pies in the mortgaged property and a further share of two pies therein was redeemed by second co-sharer in 1867. The plaintiff was admittedly the owner of another two-pie share; but he now sued the defendant to redeem the whole of the property still unredeemed, viz., a one-anna eight pies' share of the original mortgage. The defendant objected that the plaintiff could only redeem his own two-pie share, which had become separated from the rest. The plaintiff denied that the estate had been divided:—Held, that the plaintiff's claim being to redeem all that remained, of the estate in the mortgagee's possession, the suit could not be maintained, unless all the other persons interested in the equity of redemption were before the Court either as co-plaintiffs or as defendants. Without their presence the suit could not be properly disposed of, and the excuse, that the defendant did not take objection at the right time, had, under such circumstances, no validity. As owner of a two-pie share, which by consent of all interested had become an estate wholly separated from the other parts of the original aggregate, the plaintiff would have been bound to set forth the transactions on which his right rested.—9 Bom. 128.

On the 15th of July, 1870, certain lands were mortgaged by their owners (Shambhu and his sons) to one Harlal with possession under a registered mortgage. On the 11th of June, 1871 the same lands were mortgaged without possession to the defendant; on the 10th of June, 1873, a second mortgage, purporting to give possession, was executed to Harlal; on the 12th of June, 1873, a second mortgage, also purporting to give possession, was passed to the defendant; on the 15th of November, 1877, Harlal obtained a decree against the mortgagors upon his mortgage of 10th June, 1873, and sold the lands, which were purchased by the plaintiff. The plaintiff sought to obtain possession, but was obstructed by the defendant. He thereupon brought this suit. The defendant contended that he had not been a party to the suit by Harlal, and was entitled to possession, and offered to pay to the plaintiff the amount of his purchase money, or to vacate the lands on satisfaction of his own mortgage lien:—Held, that the question whether Harlal's mortgage of the 15th July, 1870, was to be regarded as merged in his second mortgage of 10th June, 1873, so as to deprive him of priority of title over the defendant, depended on the intention of the parties to the said mortgage, and there was nothing in the second mortgage deed to show an intention to forego the benefit of the security created by the prior mortgage deed of 15th July, 1870, which was neither given up to the mortgagor, nor cancelled at the time, but remained with Harlal until handed over to the plaintiff with the other title-deeds. Under these circumstances the decree passed on the 15th November, 1877, conferred an absolute title on the plaintiff, who purchased at the auction sale free from all incumbrances created by the mortgagor subsequent to the mortgage of 15th July, 1870. The defendant, however, not having been made a party to Harlal's suit to enforce his security, did not lose his right of redemption, which still remained to him. The plaintiff therefore, purchased the property subject to the defendant's right of redemption.

The High Court passed a decree ordering the defendant to deliver up possession to the plaintiff, but that he (the defendant) should be at liberty to redeem by payment to the plaintiff within six months of the amount which would be due on the mortgage of the 15th July, 1870, if the same had remained unaffected by the mortgage of 10th June, 1873, or, in default, should remain for ever foreclosed.—10 Bom. 88.

In a suit by some of several co-mortgagors to redeem the entire property mortgaged, on the ground that the mortgage-debt had been satisfied out of the usufruct :—Held that the plaintiffs could only claim their own shares, and the Court of first instance should determine the extent of the shares after making the other co-mortgagors parties.—7 Al. 376.

A mortgage-deed dated the 15th March, 1883, stipulated that the mortgagor would “pay the interest every year, and the principal in ten years ;” that “the principal shall be paid at the promised time, and the interest every year,” and that upon failure by the mortgagor to pay the principal and interest “at the stipulated period,” the mortgagee should be at liberty to realize the debt from the mortgaged property, and from the other property and against the person of the mortgagor. The mortgagor instituted a suit for redemption on the 15th July, 1884 :—Held, upon a construction of the mortgage deed, that the advance by the mortgagee to the mortgagor was for a period of ten years certain ; that the case was essentially one in which, looking to the merits of the matter between the parties, their obligations were mutual and reciprocal, and there was nothing in the terms of the deed to take it out of the ordinary rules applicable to documents of the kind ; and that while on the one hand the mortgagee could not enforce his rights during the period of ten years, on the other hand the mortgagor was not entitled, before that period had expired, to redeem the property. Vadju v. Vadju referred to.—8 Al. 95.

A mortgagor is not entitled to redeem any portion of the property pledged without the whole debt being paid off. A mortgage transaction is one and indivisible, and the mortgagee has a lien over the whole estate until the whole amount due to him has been paid.—Macp. 110-111. See also I. L. R., 2 M. 223, 3 Madr. 230, 1 Al. 297, 2 Al. 565, 906.

61. A mortgagor seeking to redeem any one mortgage shall, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, be entitled to do so without paying any money due under any separate mortgage made by him, or by any person through whom he claims, on property other than that comprised in the mortgage which he seeks to redeem.

Illustration.

A, the owner of farms Z and Y, mortgages Z to B for Rupees 1,000. A afterwards mortgages Y to B for Rupees 1,000, making no stipulation as to any additional charge on Z. A may institute a suit for the redemption of the mortgage on Z alone.

62. In the case of a usufructuary mortgage, the mortgagor has a right to recover possession of the property—

(a) where the mortgagee is authorized to pay himself the mortgage-money from the rents and profits of the property—when such money is paid ;

(b) where the mortgagee is authorized to pay himself from such rents and profits the interest of the principal money,—when the term (if any) prescribed for the payment of the mortgage-money has expired, and the mortgagor pays or tenders to the mortgagee the principal money, or deposits it in Court as hereinafter provided.

Note.

A deed of usufructuary mortgage executed in 1846, under which the mortgagee had obtained possession, contained the following conditions:—“Until the mortgage-money is paid, the mortgagee shall remain in possession of the mortgaged land, and what profits may remain after paying the Government revenue are allowed to the mortgagee, and shall not be deducted at the time of redemption. At the end of any year, the mortgagors may pay the mortgage-money and redeem the property. Until they pay the mortgage-money, neither they nor their heirs shall have any right in the property.” In 1884, a representative in title of one of the original mortgagors sued to redeem his share of the mortgaged property, upon the allegation that the principal amount and interest due upon the mortgage had been satisfied from the profits, and that he was entitled to a balance of Rs. 45. It was found that from the profits, after deducting Government revenue, the principal money with interest at the rate of 12 per cent. per annum had been realized, and that the surplus claimed by the plaintiff was due to him. The lower appellate Court dismissed the suit, on the ground that under sec. 62 (b) of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), and with reference to the terms of the deed of mortgage, the plaintiff was not entitled to recover the property until he paid the mortgage-money:—Held that, although the word “interest” was not specifically used, the natural and reasonable construction of the deed was that it was arranged that the mortgagee should have possession of the property and enjoy the profits thereof, until the principal sum was paid, in the lieu of interest:—Held that the provisions of secs. 9 and 10 of Regulation XXXIV of 1803, which was in force when the deed of mortgage was executed, were not affected or abrogated by Act XXVIII of 1855 or Act XIV of 1870 or Act IV of 1882; that these provisions were incidents attached to the mortgagor’s rights of which he was entitled to have the benefit; and that the contract of mortgage being subject to these provisions, the charge would have been redeemed as soon as the principal mortgage-money with twelve per cent. interest had been realized by the mortgagee from the profits of the property.—I. L. R., 8 Al. 402.

63. Where mortgaged property in possession of the mortgagee has, during the continuance of the mortgage, received any accession, the mortgagor, upon redemption, shall, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, be entitled as against the mortgagee to such accession.

Where such accession has been acquired at the expense of the mortgagee, and is capable of separate possession or enjoyment without detriment to the principal property, the mortgagor desiring to take the accession must pay to the mortgagee the expense of acquiring it. If such separate possession or enjoyment is not possible, the accession must be delivered with the property, the mortgagor being liable, in the case of an acquisition necessary to preserve the property from destruction, forfeiture, or sale, or made with his assent, to pay the proper cost thereof, as an addition to the principal money, at the same rate of interest.

In the case last mentioned, the profits, if any, arising from the accession, shall be credited to the mortgagor.

Where the mortgage is usufructuary, and the accession has been acquired at the expense of the mortgagee, the profits, if any, arising from the accession shall, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, be set off against interest, if any, payable on the money so expended.

64. Where the mortgaged property is a lease for a term of years, and the mortgagee obtains a renewal of the lease, the mortgagor, upon redemption, shall, in the absence of a contract by him to the contrary, have the benefit of the new lease.

65. In the absence of a contract to the contrary, the mortgagor shall be deemed to contract with the mortgagee—

(a) that the interest which the mortgagor professes to transfer to the mortgagee subsists, and that the mortgagor has power to transfer the same ;

(b) that the mortgagor will defend, or, if the mortgagee be in possession of the mortgaged property, enable him to defend, the mortgagor's title thereto ;

(c) that the mortgagor will, so long as the mortgagee is not in possession of the mortgaged property, pay all public charges accruing due in respect of the property ;

(d) and, where the mortgaged property is a lease for a term of years, that the rent payable under the lease, the conditions contained therein, and the contracts binding on the lessee, have been paid, performed, and observed down to the commencement of the mortgage ; and that the mortgagor will, so long as the security exists, and the mortgagee is not in possession of the mortgaged property, pay the rent reserved by the lease, or, if the lease be renewed, the renewed lease, perform the conditions contained therein, and observe the contracts binding on the lessee, and indemnify the mortgagee against all claims sustained by reason of the non-payment of the said rent or the non-performance or non-observance of the said conditions and contracts ;

(e) and, where the mortgage is a second or subsequent incumbrance on the property, that the mortgagor will pay the interest from time to time accruing due on each prior incumbrance as and when it becomes due, and will, at the proper time, discharge the principal money due on such prior incumbrance.

Nothing in Clause (c), or in Clause (d), so far as it relates to the payment of future rent, applies in the case of an usufructuary mortgage.

The benefit of the contracts mentioned in this section shall be annexed to, and shall go with, the interest of the mortgagee as such, and may be enforced by every person in whom that interest is for the whole or any part thereof from time to time vested.

Notes.

Where the subject of a mortgage is leasehold property, and the mortgagee is put into possession under circumstances which amount to an assignment or transfer of the leasehold interest, the mortgagee becomes liable, as a rule, to pay the rent; but where the mortgagee is in possession and his name is registered in the landlord's books as the tenant, there can be no doubt as to his being liable for the rent.—I. L. R., 10 Cal. 443.

The defendants, having already mortgaged certain land to another, executed a hypothecation bond comprising the same land in favor of the plaintiff to secure a debt due by them to the plaintiff and covenanted therein to pay to him daily the proceeds of certain sales of firewood, of which the plaintiff was to credit part towards the secured debt. The defendants having failed to pay the amount due on the first mortgage, the first mortgagee obtained a decree and brought the land to sale. The plaintiff now brought a suit in the Small Cause Court to recover the amount due on footing of his hypothecation bond:—Held, that the hypothecation bond contained no personal covenant by the obligors, but that on the construction of secs. 65 and 68 of the Transfer of Property Act the obligors had committed default so as to entitle the obligee to sue them personally under the former section.—13 Madr. 192.

Under the ordinary law of mortgage the mortgagor is bound, so long as the equity of redemption remains with him, to indemnify the estate against expenses incurred in protecting the title. So that where a mortgage bond contains stipulations under which the mortgagor engages to repay to the mortgagee any costs he may incur in suits brought against him by the mortgagor's co-sharers, and also any debts charged upon the mortgaged property which the mortgagee may pay, the stipulations do not create any fresh obligation, and require no additional stamp duty.—9 Bom. 435.

66. A mortgagor in possession of the mortgaged property is not liable to the mortgagee for waste by mortgagor in possession. allowing the property to deteriorate; but he must not commit any act which is destructive or permanently injurious thereto, if the security is insufficient or will be rendered insufficient by such act.

Explanation.—A security is insufficient within the meaning of this section unless the value of the mortgaged property exceeds by one-third, or, if consisting of buildings, exceeds by one-half, the amount for the time being due on the mortgage.

Rights and Liabilities of Mortgagee.

67. In the absence of a contract to the contrary, the mortgagee has, at any time after the mortgage-money has become payable to him, and before a decree has been made for the redemption of the mortgaged property, or the mortgage-money has been paid or deposited as hereinafter provided, a right to obtain from the Court an order that the mortgagor shall be absolutely debarred of his right to redeem the property, or an order that the property be sold.

A suit to obtain an order that a mortgagor shall be absolutely debarred of his right to redeem the mortgaged property is called a suit for foreclosure.

Nothing in this section shall be deemed—

(a) to authorize a simple mortgagee as such to institute a suit for foreclosure, or a usufructuary mortgagee as such to institute a suit for foreclosure or sale, or a mortgagee by conditional sale as such to institute a suit for sale; or

(b) to authorize a mortgagor who holds the mortgagee's rights as his trustee or legal representative, and who may sue for a sale of the property, to institute a suit for foreclosure; or

(c) to authorize the mortgagee of a railway, canal, or other work, in the maintenance of which the public are interested, to institute a suit for foreclosure or sale; or

(d) to authorize a person interested in part only of the mortgage-money to institute a suit relating only to a corresponding part of the mortgaged property, unless the mortgagees have, with the consent of the mortgagor, severed their interests under the mortgage.

Notes.

In a suit to recover money due on a mortgage, defendant paid the money into Court and a notice was issued to the mortgagee under sec. 83 of the Transfer of Property Act. The mortgagee filed his suit before notice was served on him, and it was not proved that the mortgagee was aware of the fact of the payment into Court when he filed his suit:—Held, that the plaintiff was not debarred by sec. 67 of the Transfer of Property Act from obtaining a decree, and that under the rules of Court the pleader's fee was properly assessed as in a contested suit and not as in a case where there is a confession of judgment.—I. L. R., 11 Madr. 371.

A usufructuary mortgagee is not entitled, in the absence of a contract to that effect, to sue for sale of the mortgage property :—SEMBLE : The construction placed on sec. 67 (a) of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, in Venkatasawmi v. Subramanya (I. L. R., 11 Madr., 88) that a usufructuary mortgagee can sue either for foreclosure or for sale but not for one or other in the alternative is wrong.—12 Madr. 109.

The plaintiff, at the request of the mortgagors, paid off part of the debt due on a usufructuary mortgage to one of two mortgagees thereunder, and was placed by the mortgagors in possession under a usufructuary mortgage of that part of the mortgage premises which has been in the enjoyment of the mortgagee so paid off, who executed a release. The other mortgagee under the first mortgage obtained a decree for sale on the footing of that instrument, and the mortgage premises were sold “subject to the establishment” of the plaintiff’s claim : the decree-holder purchased and afterwards assigned his rights to two of the present defendants who dispossessed the plaintiff. The plaintiff now sued the mortgagors and mortgagees and the defendants above referred to :—Held, the plaintiff was not entitled to a decree for sale. Semble : the plaintiff might have sued to have the sale, which had taken place at the suit of the first usufructuary mortgagee, declared to be invalid as against him.—15 Madr. 174.

A mortgagee by conditional sale, under an instrument executed while Regulation XVII of 1816 was in force, and before the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, which repealed that Regulation, came into force, sued, after the repeal of that Regulation, for foreclosure of the mortgage, not having proceeded in accordance with the provisions of sec. 8 of that Regulation. Held (STUART, C. J., dissenting) that the procedure of that section was not saved by clause (c) of sec. 2 of the Transfer of Property Act, but the provisions of that Act were applicable to the suit.—6 Al. 262.

Upon the death of a sole mortgagee of zamindari property, his estate was divided among his heirs one of whom, a son, was entitled to fourteen out of thirty-two shares. The son executed a sale-deed whereby he conveyed the mortgagee’s rights under the mortgage to another person. In a suit for sale brought against the mortgagor by the representative of the purchaser, it was found that the plaintiff acquired, under the deed of sale, only the rights in the mortgage of the son of the mortgagee, though the deed purported to be an assignment of the whole mortgage. Held by the Full Bench that the plaintiff was not entitled, in respect of his own share, to maintain the suit for sale against the whole property, the other parties interested not having been joined ; that moreover he was not entitled to succeed, even in an amended action, in claiming the sale of a portion of the property in respect of his own share, and that the suit was, therefore, not maintainable. Bishan Dial v. Manni Ram, Bhora Roy v. Abilack Roy, and Bedar Bakht Muhammad Ali v. Khurram Bakht Yahya Ali Khan referred to.—9 Al. 68.

Under sec. 67 (a) of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), a usufructuary mortgagee whose possession has not been disturbed cannot maintain a suit either for foreclosure or for sale on non-payment of the mortgage money. Chowdhri Umrao Singh v. The Collector of Moradabad, Dulli v. Bahadur, Ganesh Kooer v. Deedar Buksh, Venkatasawmi v. Subramanya and Jahabbu Ram v. Girdhari Singh, referred to.—11 Al. 367.

Interest post diem on a mortgage-bond for a term certain and containing no express provision as to the payment of post diem interest is nothing else than damages for the breach of a contract. Such interest cannot be regarded as a mere continuance of the addiem interest due on the mortgage-bond, and, as such, as forming an integral part of the mortgage-debt, nor even as resembling such interest and forming a "charge" upon the property, though nominally damages. In respect of post diem interest given by way of damages, no distinction is to be drawn between simple bonds and mortgage bonds. Mansab Ali v. Gulab Chand and Bhagwant Singh v. Daryao Singh followed; Cook v. Fowler; Bishen Dayal v. Udit Narain; and Rajpati Singh v. Kesh Narain Singh referred to.—13 Al. 330.

A mortgagor or mortgagee cannot claim to foreclose or to redeem for a part of the estate or the debt. Norton 473. Also I. L. R., 1 Al. 297, 4 Cal. 475.

See I. L. R., 14 Madr. 232, noted under sec. 58.

68. The mortgagee has a right to sue the mortgagor for the mortgage-money in the following cases only:—

Right to sue for mortgage-money.

(a) where the mortgagor binds himself to repay the same:

(b) where the mortgagee is deprived of the whole or part of his security by or in consequence of the wrongful act or default of the mortgagor:

(c) where, the mortgagee being entitled to possession of the property, the mortgagor fails to deliver the same to him, or to secure the possession thereof to him without disturbance by the mortgagor or any other person.

Where, by any cause other than the wrongful act or default of the mortgagor or mortgagee, the mortgaged property has been wholly or partially destroyed, or the security is rendered insufficient as defined in Section sixty-six, the mortgagee may require the mortgagor to give him, within a reasonable time, another sufficient security for his debt, and, if the mortgagor fails so to do, may sue him for the mortgage-money.

Notes.

A landlord, who has obtained a decree for arrears of rent of an under-tenure, is not restricted by the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act (Act VIII. of 1885) to executing such decree in the first instance by sale of the under-tenure, but is at liberty to execute it in the ordinary manner against the person or other property, whether moveable or immovable, of his judgment-debtor. The provisions of sec. 68 of the Transfer of Property Act are not amongst those made applicable by sec. 100 of that Act to a person having a charge within the meaning of the latter section. Semble.—The "charge" referred to in sec. 65 of the Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII. of 1885) is not such a "charge" as that defined by sec. 100 of the Transfer of Property Act. Lalit Mohun Roy v. Bindodai Dabee, I. L. R., 14 Cal., 14, explained.—15 Cal. 492.

The sale of mortgaged premises under the Land Acquisition Act is not a destruction of the security within the meaning of sec. 68 of the Transfer of Property Act and does not enable the mortgagee to sue the mortgagor personally.—13 Madr. 321.

In a suit against a mortgagor for the principal and interest due on a mortgage, it appeared that the payment of interest had fallen into arrears, and that the mortgage deed provided that in such event the mortgagee should be entitled to possession of the mortgage premises; the mortgagor falsely alleged that all the interest due had been tendered:—Held, that the mortgagee was entitled to sue as above.—15 Madr. 65.

Suit for a personal decree on a usufructuary mortgage which contained no express covenant to pay, but, provided that if the mortgagor repaid the secured debt before a certain date (now passed), he should be replaced in possession. The mortgage premises had been attached in execution of a decree obtained by a third party against the mortgagor, and a claim preferred by the plaintiff having been erroneously rejected and the premises sold, he was dispossessed. The mortgagee accordingly brought his suit as above:—Held that the plaintiff was not entitled to maintain the suit either under the terms of the mortgage or under Transfer of Property Act, sec. 68.—15 Madr. 304.

A usufructuary mortgagee, to whom possession of the mortgaged property had been delivered, sued the mortgagor for the mortgage-money on the ground that the mortgagor had sold a part of the mortgaged property, and the purchaser had deprived him of possession of such part. One of the conditions inserted in the deed of mortgage was that, if “on the part of the mortgagor, or other persons, any kind of dispute or any interference or obstruction took place in obtaining possession by the mortgagee of the mortgaged property,” the mortgagee should be entitled to sue for the mortgage-money. Held that such condition contemplated the case of the mortgagor, in the first instance, in breach of the conditions of the mortgage, failing to deliver possession to the mortgagee, or to secure his possession from any obstruction or disturbance by other persons, but not the case of the mortgagee being deprived of possession after it had been once obtained and secured, and therefore the mortgagee was not entitled by virtue of such condition to sue for the mortgage money. Held, further, that, the mortgagee’s case being that he had been deprived of possession of a part of the mortgaged property, he would be entitled to sue for the mortgage-money only if he had been deprived thereof by or in consequence of the wrongful act or default of the mortgagor, and not if he had been deprived thereof by or in consequence of the wrongful act or default of other persons; that the sale by the mortgagor was not a wrongful act, there being no condition against alienation, and the sale by a mortgagor of his equity of redemption not being rendered wrongful or unlawful by any rule of law, nor being in itself a wrongful act; that a wrongful act by the purchaser, though committed under color of the purchase, could not be said to have taken place “in consequence of the wrongful act or default of the mortgagor”; and that therefore the mortgagee had no cause of action.—6 Al. 298.

Where a decree was obtained by a landholder for cancelment of a deed whereby an occupancy-holding was mortgaged with possession, and the mortgagee consequently failed to obtain possession, and brought a suit against the mortgagor to recover the mortgage money—held that inasmuch as the mortgagor must have known that he was mortgaging an estate not legally transferable, while the mortgagee might have believed that the estate was transferable, the act of the former was a default depriving the latter of his security within the meaning of sec. 68 (b) of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), and the mortgagee was, therefore, entitled to

69. A power conferred by the mortgage-deed on the mortgagee, or on any person on his behalf, to sell or concur in selling, in default of payment of the mortgage money, the mortgaged property, or any part thereof, without the intervention of the Court, is valid in the following cases "and in no others"* (namely)—

(a) where the mortgage is an English mortgage, and neither the mortgagor nor the mortgagee is a Hindu, Muhammadan, or Buddhist "or a member of any other race, sect, tribe, or class from time to time specified in this behalf by the Local Government, with the previous sanction of the Governor-General in Council, in the local official Gazette ; "*

(b) where the mortgagee is the Secretary of State for India in Council ;

(c) where the mortgaged property or any part thereof is situate within the towns of Calcutta, Madras, Bombay, Karachi, or Rangoon.

But no such power shall be exercised unless and until—

(1) notice in writing requiring payment of the principal money has been served on the mortgagor, or on one of several mortgagors, and default has been made in payment of the principal money, or of part thereof, for three months after such service ; or

(2) some interest under the mortgage amounting at least to five hundred rupees is in arrear and unpaid for three months after becoming due.

When a sale has been made in professed exercise of such a power, the title of the purchaser shall not be impeachable on the ground that no case had arisen to authorize the sale, or that due notice was not given, or that the power was otherwise improperly or irregularly exercised ; but any person damnified by an unauthorized, or improper, or irregular exercise of the power, shall have his remedy in damages against the person exercising the power.

The money which is received by the mortgagee, arising from the sale, after discharge of prior incumbrances (if any), to which the sale is not made subject, or after payment into Court, under Section fifty-seven, of a sum to meet any prior incumbrance, shall, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, be held by him in trust to be applied by him, first, in payment of all costs, charges, and expenses properly incurred by him as incident to the sale or any attempted sale ; and, secondly, in discharge of the mortgage-money and costs and other money (if any) due under the mortgage ; and the residue of the money so received shall be paid to the person entitled to the mortgaged property or authorized to give receipts for the proceeds of the sale thereof.

Nothing in the former part of this section applies to powers conferred before this Act comes into force.

The powers and provisions contained in Section six to nineteen (both inclusive) of the 'Trustees and Mortgagees' Powers Act, 1866, shall be deemed to apply to English mortgages wherever in British India the mortgaged property may be situate, when neither the mortgagor nor the mortgagee is a Hindu, Muhammadan, or Buddhist, "or a member of any other race, sect, tribe, or class from time to time specified in this behalf by the Local Government, with the previous sanction of the Governor General in Council, in the local official Gazette."*

Notes.

In a deed of mortgage of property, situate within the town of Madras, it was provided that a power of sale might be exercised after fifteen days' notice. The property was sold :—Held that, (sec. 69 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, requiring three months' notice before such a power of sale shall be exercised), the condition as to notice was invalid, but that the sale was nevertheless valid.—I. L. R., 11 Madr. 201.

A mortgagee purchasing the mortgaged property with the consent of the mortgagor, under the power of sale contained in the mortgage deed, acquires an unimpeachable title derived from the power of sale, which is altogether distinct from and overrides his title as a mere incumbrancer : the effect of such purchase being to vest the ownership of, and the beneficial title to, the property for the first time in himself, who had been previously a mere incumbrancer.

Obstruction to the obtaining possession by a mortgagee under his mortgage by persons who while claiming a lien on the property admitted the mortgagor's title to the property :—Held, not to be adverse possession as against the mortgagee's title as purchaser.—10 Bom. 49.

See I. L. R., 13 Al. 28, noted under sec. 40.

70. If, after the date of a mortgage, any accession is made to the mortgaged property, the mortgagee, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, shall, for the purposes of the security, be entitled to such accession.

(a) A mortgages to B a certain field bordering on a river. The field is increased by alluvion. For the purposes of his security, B is entitled to the increase.

(b) A mortgages a certain plot of building land to B and afterwards erects a house on the plot. For the purposes of his security, B is entitled to the house as well as the plot.

71. When the mortgaged property is a lease for a term of years, and the mortgagor obtains a renewal of the lease, the mortgagee, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, shall, for the purposes of the security, be entitled to the new lease.

72. When, during the continuance of the mortgage, the mortgagee takes possession of the mortgaged property, he may spend such money as is necessary—

(a) for the due management of the property and the collection of the rents and profits thereof ;

(b) for its preservation from destruction, forfeiture, or sale ;

(c) for supporting the mortgagor's title to the property ;

(d) for making his own title thereto good against the mortgagor ; and,

(e) when the mortgaged property is a renewable leasehold, for the renewal of the lease ; and may, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, add such money to the principal money, at the rate of interest payable on the principal, and, where no such rate is fixed at the rate of nine per cent. per annum.

Where the property is by its nature insurable, the mortgagee may also, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, insure and keep insured against loss or damage by fire the whole or any part of such property ; and the premiums paid for any such insurance shall be a charge on the mortgaged property, in addition to the principal money, with the same priority and with interest at the same rate. But the amount of such insurance shall not exceed the amount specified in this behalf in the mortgage-deed or (if no such amount is therein specified) two-thirds of the amount that would be required in case of total destruction to reinstate the property insured.

Nothing in this section shall be deemed to authorize the mortgagee to insure when an insurance of the property is kept up by or on behalf of the mortgagor to the amount in which the mortgagee is hereby authorized to insure.

73. Where mortgaged property is sold through failure to pay arrears of revenue or rent due in respect thereof, the mortgagee has a charge on the surplus (if any) of the proceeds, after payment thereout of the said arrears, for the amount remaining due on the mortgage, unless the sale has been occasioned by some default on his part.

The mortgagee has a charge on the surplus proceeds of the revenue sale of the property mortgaged.—I. L. R., 6 Cal. 142. Also 15 Cal. 546.

74. Any second or other subsequent mortgagee may, at any time after the amount due on the next prior mortgage has become payable, tender such amount to the next prior mortgagee, and such mortgagee is bound to accept such tender and to give a receipt for such amount; and (subject to the provisions of the law for the time being in force regulating the registration of documents) the subsequent mortgagee shall, on obtaining such receipt, acquire, in respect of the property, all the rights and powers of the mortgagee, as such, to whom he has made such tender.

S mortgaged land to P. G subsequently obtained a decree, by consent, against S, creating a charge on the same, and other land, and registered the decree. A, in ignorance of G's decree, paid off P's mortgage, but took no assignment thereof, and took a mortgage, from S of all the land covered by G's decree. In a suit by G against S and A to enforce payment of his mortgage debt :—Held, that A, not having had notice of G's decree, was entitled to stand as first incumbrancer in respect of the money paid to discharge P's mortgage, and that, even if registration was legal notice, an intention to keep alive P's mortgage was to be presumed in favour of A, in accordance with the ruling of the Privy Council in Gokul Dass Gopal Dass v. Rambux Seochand (I. L. R., 11 I. A., 126).—I. L. R., 8 Madr. 246.

Unless there is a regular assignment by the mortgagee, a person advancing money to the owner on the property mortgaged, cannot obtain the rights of the mortgagee to whom the money is paid by reason of a portion of his money being applied by the owner towards the discharge of the original mortgage.—6 Bom. 64.

At a sale in execution of a decree, J purchased certain property which was at the time subject to two mortgages, the first under an unregistered deed in favour of M and dated in 1872, and the second under a registered deed in favour of L and dated in 1880. The registration of the latter both deeds was optional, the former under Act VIII of 1871, and the latter under Act III. of 1877. J, subsequently satisfied the mortgage under the registered deed of 1880, which was delivered to him. M, then brought a suit to recover the money due to him under the mortgage deed of 1872 by sale of the mortgaged property:—Held, by Oldfield, J., that applying the rule laid down by the Privy Council in Gokaldas Gopaldas v. Purnamal Premsukhdas, J having paid off the mortgage under the registered deed of 1880, should have the benefits of that mortgage, and was entitled to set up the deed which he held against the unregistered deed of 1872, against which, under sec. 50 of the Registration Act (III of 1877) it would take effect, as regards the property comprised in it. Lakshman Dass v. Dip Chand referred to. Per Mahmood, J.—That the word “unregistered” in sec. 50 of the Registration Act, must, in reference to the circumstances of the present case, be read as “not registered under Act VIII of 1871,” and that, so reading the section, the registered mortgage-deed of 1880 was entitled to priority over the unregistered mortgage-deed of 1872. Lakshman Dass v. Dip Chand, and Sri Ram v. Bhagirath Lal distinguished. Also per Mahmood J.—That the position of J, by reason of his having paid off the registered mortgage of 1880 could at best be that of an assignee of that mortgage having priority over the mortgage deed on which the plaintiff was suing; that such priority could not enable him to place the equity of redemption upon a higher footing than it would have been had he not paid off the registered mortgage of 1880; and that, as a consequence, the sale of the property in enforcement of the mortgage of 1872 should be allowed to take place, but subject to the rights of priority which J had acquired by reason of his having paid off the registered mortgage of 1880. Sirbadh Rai v. Ragannath Prasad and Gokaldas Gopaldas v. Purnamal Premsukhdas referred to.—7 Al. 577.

The purchaser of the equity of redemption of land which had been mortgaged in 1866 and 1874 to different persons, paid off the prior mortgage. The second mortgagee sued to bring the property to sale in satisfaction of his mortgage:—Held that the prior mortgage was not extinguished and that the purchaser of the equity of redemption had, by paying off that mortgage acquired an equitable right to its benefits, which they could use against the second mortgage. Gokaldas Gopaldas v. Purnamal Premsukhdas followed.

Per Oldfield J., (Mahmood, J., dissenting).—That the prior mortgage afforded a defence against the claims of the second mortgagee seeking to bring the property to sale. Gokaldas Gopaldas v. Purnamal Premsukhdas followed.

Per Mahmood, J.—That the ruling of the Privy Council in Gokaldas Gopaldas v. Purnamal Premsukhdas did not go beyond laying down the proposition that when the purchaser of the equity of redemption pays off a prior mortgage, which carries with it the right possession of the mortgaged property the mortgage is not extinguished for all purposes, but such purchaser, acquiring the benefits of the usufructuary mortgage, is entitled to remain in possession, and can successfully resist a suit by a subsequent usufructuary mortgagee seeking to disturb such possession.

Also per Mahmood, J.—That although the persons who had paid off the prior mortgage were entitled to claim its benefits, they could not be understood to have acquired rights greater than those which the prior mortgagee himself possessed; that as holders of the equity of redemption they could not resist the suit which aimed at enforcing a valid security, and, as persons entitled to the benefits of the prior mortgage, they were at best in the posi tion of assignees of that mortgage; that the union of the two capacities could not confer upon them rights higher than those which the mortgage they had paid off created; that a puisne incumbrancer is not prevented by the mere fact of the existence of a prior mortgage from enforcing his security without paying off the prior mortgage so long as such enforcement does not clash with the rights secured by the prior mortgage; and that therefore the purchaser of the equity of redemption held that right subject to the plaintiff's mortgage of 1874, and the fact of their having redeemed the prior mortgage did not place the equity of redemption on a better footing, though it entitled them to the benefits of that mortgage secured to them in the same manner as to the original mortgage whose rights they had acquired by subrogation. Gaya Prasad v. Salik Prasad, Ramu Naikan v. Subbaraya Mudali, and Mal Chand Kuber v. Lall Trikam referred to.—7 Al. 568.

In 1874 a plot of land, No. 111 which, in 1866, had been mortgaged to L, was with other property mortgaged to R. In 1878 the equity of redemption in plot No. 111 was purchased by J, who paid off the mortgage of 1866. R brought a suit against J, to bring to sale the whole of the property included in the mortgage of 1874. The Court of first instance decreed the claim in part, exempting from the decree plot No. 111, on the ground that the defendant, by reason of having purchased the equity of redemption in that plot and having paid off the mortgage of 1866, stood in the position of a first mortgagee of that plot and his mortgage had priority over the plaintiff's mortgage of 1874. The Full Bench modified the decree of the Court of first instance by inserting after the words "land No. 111 be exempted from the hypothecation lien" the words "in that property the interest of the plaintiff as second mortgagee only to be sold."

Per Oldfield, J.—That the second mortgagee could not bring the land to sale so as to oust the first mortgagee, whose mortgage was usufructuary, and get rid of the first mortgage without satisfying it; but that he had a right to sell such interest as he possessed as second mortgagee.

Per Straight, J.—That the plaintiff was entitled to bring to sale the property charged to him under his mortgage of 1874, subject to the rights existing in favour of the first mortgagee of 1866: in other words, that a purchaser at a sale in execution of the decree would have no further right than a right to take the property subject to the right of the first mortgagee to possession of the property included in his instrument, and his other rights under that instrument, so long as it enured.—8 Al. 105.

75. Every second or other subsequent mortgagee has,

Rights of mesne mortgagee against prior and subsequent mortgagees.

so far as regards redemption, foreclosure, and sale of the mortgaged property, the same rights against the prior mortgagee or mortgagees as his mortgagor has against such prior mortgagee or mortgagees, and the same rights against the subsequent mortgagees (if any) as he has against his mortgagor.

76. When, during the continuance of the mortgage,

Liabilities of mortgagee in possession.

the mortgagee takes possession of the mortgaged property—

(a) he must manage the property as a person of ordinary prudence would manage it if it were his own;

(b) he must use his best endeavours to collect the rents and profits thereof ;

(c) he must, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, out of the income of the property, pay the Government-revenue, all other charges of a public nature accruing due in respect thereof during such possession, and any arrears of rent in default of payment of which the property may be summarily sold ;

(d) he must, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, make such necessary repairs of the property as he can pay for out of the rents and profits thereof after deducting from such rents and profits the payments mentioned in clause (c) and the interest on the principal money ;

(e) he must not commit any act which is destructive or permanently injurious to the property ;

(f) where he has insured the whole or any part of the property against loss or damage by fire, he must, in case of such loss or damage, apply any money which he actually receives under the policy, or so much thereof as may be necessary, in reinstating the property, or, if the mortgagor so directs, in reduction or discharge of the mortgage-money ;

(g) he must keep clear, full, and accurate accounts of all sums received and spent by him as mortgagee, and at any time during the continuance of the mortgage, give the mortgagor, at his request and cost, true copies of such accounts and of the vouchers by which they are supported ;

(h) his receipts from the mortgaged property, or, where such property is personally occupied by him, a fair occupation-rent in respect thereof, shall, after deducting the expenses mentioned in clauses (c) and (d), and interest thereon, be debited against him in reduction of the amount (if any) from time to time due to him on account of interest on the mortgage-money, and, so far as such receipts exceed any interest due, in reduction or discharge of the mortgage-money ; the surplus, (if any) shall be paid to the mortgagor ;

(i) when the mortgagor tenders, or deposits in manner hereinafter provided, the amount for the time being due on the mortgage, the mortgagee must, notwithstanding the provisions in the other clauses of this section, account for his gross receipts from the mortgaged property from the date of the tender or from the earliest time when he could take such amount out of Court, as the case may be.

If the mortgagee fail to perform any of the duties imposed upon him by this section, he may, when ^{Loss occasioned by his} accounts are taken in pursuance of a decree made under this chapter, be debited with the loss (if any) ^{default.} occasioned by such failure.

Notes.

The mortgagee will, in equity, be allowed for all repairs necessary for the support of the property, but not for general improvements made without the acquiescence or consent of the mortgagor, which enhance the value of the estate, especially if they are of such a nature as may cripple the right or power of redemption. And, in no case will a Court of Equity permit a mortgagee to commit waste or do damage to the estate, as for example, by pulling down cottages. Story 1016 bb. See also I. L. R., 4 Bom. 584.

Nothing can ever deprive the mortgagor of his right to have the accounts of the mortgagee in possession taken, not even an admission in his plaint that something may possibly still be due on the mortgage. And the onus prohandi does not lie upon the mortgagor; that is to say, he is not bound to prove, independently of the accounts filed by the mortgagee, that the mortgage-debt has been paid off. But if he fails eventually to prove that it has been satisfied, his suit will be dismissed with costs. And a condition in a mortgage deed that the mortgagor shall not claim an account from the mortgagee who has been in possession, does not in any decree bar the operation of the law, by which the lender is to account to the borrower for the proceeds during his possession. As a general rule, the mortgagee may be called on to account by the mortgagor at any time, on the mortgagor's allegation that the whole sum due with interest has been received by him. Macp. Also I. L. R., 6 Bom. 669.

Since the repeal of the usuary laws a mortgagor and mortgagee may make what contract they please with reference to the profits of the mortgaged estate, and the mortgagor may, by contract, deprive himself of the right to compel the mortgagee in possession to account for the profits. (Vide Act XXVIII of 1855). Judgment of C. H. C. in Appeal Nos. 184 and 185 of 1866. Vide Madras Jurist of 1867. Vol. II, p. 45.

By the terms of a usufructuary mortgage, it was provided that the annual profits of the mortgaged property should be taken to be a certain amount; that out of this amount the revenue should be paid annually by the mortgagee; that the balance should be taken by the mortgagee as representing interest on the principal amount of the mortgage-money; and that the mortgage should be redeemed on payment of the principal of the mortgage-money in a lump sum. It was further provided that the mortgagor should not be entitled to claim mesne profits nor the mortgagee to claim interest.

J, alleging that he had purchased the equity of redemption of the mortgaged property in 1869; that since the purchase the mortgagee had not paid any revenue and therefore he, J, had been compelled to pay it; and that consequently the mortgage-money had been paid out of the profits of the mortgaged property and a surplus was due, sued the original mortgagor and the mortgagee for possession by redemption of the mortgaged property and for surplus profits, or for possession of the mortgaged property on payment of any sum which might be found due. One of the defences to the suit was that the mortgage had already been redeemed in 1877 by the original mortgagor, and the suit was therefore not maintainable.

Held, (i) that, assuming that such redemption had taken place, that fact could not prejudice the plaintiff's rights arising out of the mortgage, whatever the effect of such redemption might be as between the original mortgagor and the mortgagee, and such redemption was therefore not a bar to the suit; (ii) that the plaintiff was entitled to take into account the amount of revenue which he had been compelled to pay by reason of the mortgagee's default; (iii) that in the accounting the plaintiff was entitled to avail himself of annual receipts; and (iv) that, the mortgagee having had notice of the plaintiff's purchase, any payments which he might have made to the original mortgagor on account of revenue after the purchase were improperly made, and could not be taken into account against the plaintiff.—I. L. R., 6 Al. 303.

77. Nothing in section 76, clauses (b), (d), (g), and (h), Receipts in lieu of inter- applies to cases where there is a contract
 est. between the mortgagee and the mortgagor that the receipts from the mortgaged property shall, so long as the mortgagee is in possession of the property, be taken in lieu of interest on the principal money, or in lieu of such interest and defined portions of the principal.

Priority.

78. Where, through the fraud, misrepresentation, or Postponement of prior gross neglect of a prior mortgagee, anmortgagee. other person has been induced to advance money on the security of the mortgaged property, the prior mortgagee shall be postponed to the subsequent mortgagee.

Notes.

The mere possession of the title deeds by a second mortgagee though a purchaser for value without notice, will not give him priority. There must be some act or default of the first mortgagee to have this effect.—4 M. H. C. R., 369.

A prior encumbrancer will not be postponed to a subsequent encumbrancer, unless he has been guilty of gross negligence. A mortgaged land to B. B having bought certain land from C pledged his mortgage-deed to C to secure the unpaid purchase money. C gave the bond to A who was his brother-in-law. A representing to D that the mortgage was redeemed, sold the land to him giving him the bond as a title-deed. In a suit by B against D to recover the mortgage amount by sale of the land: Held, that D even although a bona fide purchaser, could not resist the claim.—I. L. R., 8 Madr. 200.

On the 20th of February 1888, defendant No. 1 executed a mortgage in favor of the plaintiff Company. Defendants Nos. 2 and 3 bound themselves as sureties for the due payment of the mortgage amount, on default by the mortgagor. This mortgage had not been registered at the date of the execution of the mortgages next referred to. On the 27th of April 1888, the Secretary of the plaintiff Company handed over to defendant No. 1 most of the title-deeds which had been delivered to the plaintiff Company on the execution of the mortgage, and defendants Nos. 1 and 3 undertook that they would raise a loan thereon and discharge the debt due to the plaintiff, or return the title-deeds if they failed in raising the loan. On the 20th April 1888 defendant No. 1 deposited the title-deeds with defendant No. 4 and executed a mortgage to her for Rs. 4000; and on the 7th May 1888, he executed an instrument creating a further charge in her favor for Rs. 1,000. These two sums were applied by defendant No. 1 to his own use, and not in discharge of the prior mortgage. The mortgages to defendant No. 4 described the mortgage premises as being then free from incumbrances: Held, that the plaintiff Company had been guilty of gross negligence in letting the title-deeds out of their possession and that the mortgages of defendant No. 4 had accordingly priority over the mortgage to the plaintiff Company.—12 Madr. 424.

A mortgagee at the request of the mortgagors returned to them their certificate of title to the mortgage premises to enable them to raise money to pay off his mortgage. This mortgage was duly registered. The mortgagors, who remained in possession of the mortgage premises throughout, having shown the certificate to a third person whom they informed of the existence of the first mortgage, and borrowed Rs. 400 from him, subsequently informed him that the first mortgage was paid off, delivered the certificate to him, and executed to him a mortgage of the same premises to secure the sum of Rs. 400, and a further sum of Rs. 800: Held, that though the second mortgagee had been wanting in caution, yet since he had been thrown off his guard by the conduct of the first mortgagee, in returning to the mortgagors their certificate of title, the second mortgagee was entitled to priority in respect of his security over the first mortgagee.—12 Madr. 429.

In a suit for declaration of priorities of mortgages and for foreclosure, it appeared that the mortgage premises were mortgaged to defendant No. 2 in 1879 and to the plaintiff in 1883 and again in 1884, and were conveyed absolutely by the mortgagor to defendant No. 2 in 1886. The mortgagor executed a rent agreement to the plaintiff on the occasion of each of the mortgages of 1883 and 1884. The above mortgages were registered, but the plaintiff and defendant No. 2 had no actual notice at the date of their mortgage and conveyance, respectively, of the previous incumbrances. The plaintiff received the title-deeds to the estate from the mortgagor on the execution of the mortgage of 1883; defendant No. 2 alleged that he had held them under a prior incumbrance which was consolidated in the mortgage of 1879, and that previous to the execution of that mortgage the mortgagor had obtained them from him for the purpose of obtaining a Collector's certificate and had told him that the Collector had retained them, in order to account for their not being replaced in his custody:—Held, (apart from the question whether the mortgage of 1879 had been extinguished by the conveyance of 1886), that the conduct of defendant No. 2 in permitting the title-deeds to remain in the possession of the mortgagor amounted to gross negligence within the meaning of Transfer of Property Act, sec. 78, and that the registration of the mortgage to defendant No. 2 did not affect the plaintiff with constructive notice of its existence, and that accordingly the subsequent mortgages to the plaintiff were entitled to priority.—13 Madr. 883.

79. If a mortgage, made to secure future advances, the performance of an engagement, or the balance of a running account, expresses the maximum to be secured thereby, a subsequent mortgage of the same property shall, if made with notice of the prior mortgage, be postponed to the prior mortgage in respect of all advances or debits not exceeding the maximum, though made or allowed with notice of the subsequent mortgage.

Illustration.

A mortgages Sultanpur to his bankers, B & Co., to secure the balance of his account with them to the extent of Rupees 10,000. A then mortgages Sultanpur to C, to secure Rupees 10,000, C having notice of the mortgage to B & Co., and C gives notice to B & Co. of the second mortgage. At the date of the second mortgage, the balance due to B & Co. does not exceed Rupees 5,000. B & Co. subsequently advance to A sums making the balance of the account against him exceed the sum of Rupees 10,000. B & Co. are entitled, to the extent of Rupees 10,000, to priority over C.

80. No mortgagee paying off a prior mortgage, whether with or without notice of an intermediate mortgage, shall thereby acquire any priority in respect of his original security. And, except in the case provided for by section 79, no mortgagee making a subsequent advance to the mortgagor, whether with or without notice of an intermediate mortgage, shall thereby acquire any priority in respect of his security for such subsequent advance.

Tacking abolished.

Notes.

If loans are made by way of further charge, and questions as to priority arise, the mortgage will, no doubt as to each particular sum, be considered to bear date only from the time when that sum was charged on the mortgaged lands, and will not, as to the subsequent advances, take the date of the original contract. Macp. 57.

The further charge ought to be made by a new deed applicable only to the sum to be charged : and when the original mortgage deed is thrown aside, and a fresh deed executed by which the property is mortgaged for the consolidated sum, there is danger of the original mortgage as well as the further charge being held to rank only from the date of the latter deed. Macp. 59.

Marshalling and Contribution.

81. If the owner of two properties mortgages them both to one person, and then mortgages one of the properties to another person who has not notice of the former mortgage, the second mortgagee is, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, entitled to have the debt of the first mortgagee satisfied out of the property not mortgaged to the second mortgagee so far as such property will extend, but not so as to prejudice the rights of the first mortgagee or of any other person having acquired for valuable consideration an interest in either property.

Marshalling securities.

Notes.

Where the owner of certain property mortgages it to A, and afterwards sells a portion of the mortgaged property to B, it is not incumbent on A in suing to enforce his mortgage to proceed first against that portion of the property which has not been sold by the mortgagor.—11 Cal. 258.

Suit by the adoptive son of the obligee (deceased) of a hypothecation bond to recover principal and interest due on the bond against the land comprised in the hypothecation. Defendant No. 1, the obligor of the bond, had executed it as manager of a joint Hindu family, of which defendant No. 2 was a member, and for the rightful purposes of the family. The family subsequently became divided, and the hypothecated property was divided between defendants Nos. 1 and 2. Defendant No. 1 afterwards hypothecated part of his share for a private debt to defendant No. 3, who having sued on his hypothecation and brought the land to sale in execution became the purchaser. The District Munsif passed a decree for the plaintiff, against which defendants Nos. 2 and 3 preferred separate appeals, the plaintiff being the sole respondent to each appeal. The District Judge on appeal passed a decree directing that the plaintiff should first proceed against all the property which was not subject to the hypothecation to defendant No. 3, including the share of defendant No. 2. Defendant No. 2 preferred a second appeal joining all the other parties: (1) Held, that the plaintiff was under no obligation to obtain a certificate under Act XXVII of 1860 for the purpose of maintaining the suit; (2) that as the plaintiff and defendant No. 3 were not creditors of the same person having demands against the property of that person, no case for marshalling arose, and consequently that the direction of the District Judge was wrong. Per cur.—Though both defendants Nos. 2 and 3 preferred separate appeals from the original decree, they only made the plaintiff respondent, and defendant No. 3 omitted to make the appellant before us (defendant No. 2) party to his appeal, but the relief prayed for in each appeal was that the original decree might be set aside so far as it was in plaintiff's favour and against each appellant.....Having regard to the relief claimed.....we see no reason to hold that the appellant before us was a necessary party to the appeal preferred by defendant No. 3.—12 Madr. 255.

The equities which apply to a puisne incumbrancer in the marshalling of securities apply also to a bona fide purchaser for value, without notice, of a portion of property the whole of which was subject to a prior incumbrance. Tulsi Ram v. Munnoo Lal, Nowa, Koer, v. Abdul Rahim, Bishonath Mookerjee v. Kisto Mohun Mookerjee and Kheloosee Cherooria v. Banee Madhub Doss, referred to.

The mortgagees of two properties, one of which had, subsequently to the mortgage, been purchased for value bona fide by one who had no notice of the incumbrance, brought a suit to enforce their lien against both the properties originally owned by the mortgagor, impleading as defendants both the mortgagor and the purchaser:—Held that, while there was no doubt that, if the purchaser was compelled to pay more than the share of the mortgage debt apportioned on the property purchased by him, he would be entitled to contribution, yet, in a suit so framed, and having regard the array of parties, such an apportionment could not be made at the stage of second appeal.—I. L. R., 6 Al. 711.

82. Where several properties, whether of one or several owners, are mortgaged to secure one debt, such properties are, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, liable to contribute rateably to the debt secured by the mortgage, after deducting from the value of each property the amount of any other incumbrance to which it is subject at the date of the mortgage.

Where, of two properties belonging to the same owner, one is mortgaged to secure one debt, and then both are mortgaged to secure another debt, and the former debt is paid out of the former property, each property is, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, liable to contribute rateably to the latter debt after deducting the amount of the former debt from the value of the property out of which it has been paid.

Nothing in this section applies to a property liable under Section eighty-one to the claim of the second mortgage.

Note.—See I. L. R., 14 Madr. 71, noted under sec. 60.

Deposit in Court.

83. At any time after the principal money has become payable, and before a suit for redemption of the mortgaged property is barred, the mortgagor, or any other person entitled to institute such suit, may deposit, in any Court in which he might have instituted such suit, to the account of the mortgagee, the amount remaining due on the mortgage.

The Court shall thereupon cause written notice of the deposit to be served on the mortgagee, and the mortgagee may, on presenting a petition (verified in manner prescribed by law for the verification of complaints) stating the amount then due on the mortgage, and his willingness to accept the money so deposited in full discharge of such amount, and on depositing in the same Court the mortgage-deed if then in his possession or power, apply for and receive the money, and the mortgage-deed so deposited shall be delivered to the mortgagor or such other person as aforesaid.

Notes.

A sum of money having been deposited in Court under Transfer of Property Act, sec. 83, by a vendee of the mortgagor, the mortgagee refused to accept it in discharge of his mortgage except on the terms that the depositor should convey to him part of the mortgage premises, which he consented to do. This agreement was not communicated to the Court and the depositor refused to carry it out when the mortgagee had withdrawn the money as above:—Held, that the mortgagee was entitled to a decree for specific performance of the agreement to convey.—I. L. R., 13 Madr. 316.

The deposit intended by Transfer of Property Act, sec. 83, must be made unconditionally. Accordingly when the mortgagor in making the deposit prays that the amount should be paid out to the mortgagee on his producing certain deeds the provisions of the section are not complied with.—14 Madr. 49.

In February, 1883, a decree for pre-emption was obtained in respect of a mortgage by conditional sale executed in August, 1882. On the 23rd August 1883, the decree-holder executed his decree by depositing the principal amount of the mortgage-money, and obtained possession of the property in substitution for the original mortgagee. In June, 1884, the mortgagor, proceeding under section 83 of the Transfer of Property Act, deposited in Court the sum of Rs. 699, claiming the same to be adequate for redemption. The case was, however, struck off in consequence of the pre-emptor's objection to receiving the deposit on the ground that it did not include the interest due on the mortgage. The deposit remained in Court, and on the 21st August, 1884, the mortgagor deposited a further sum on account of interest, but this also the pre-emptor refused to receive, for the same reason as before. In a suit by the mortgagor for redemption of the mortgage, it was found that the amount deposited was all that was due on the mortgage on the 21st August, 1884:—Held that until the 23rd August, 1883, when the defendant enforced his pre-emptive decree by depositing the consideration for the conditional sale of August 1882, he had no interest in the subject of pre-emption as would entitle him to any benefits arising therefrom, and that the defendant was not entitled to claim any interest on the mortgage-money for the period antecedent to the 23rd August, 1883.

Semble that the proper person entitled to receive the interest for that period was the original conditional vendee, and the Court which passed the decree for pre-emption should have allowed him the amount of such interest in addition to the principal mortgage-money. Ashik Ali v. Mathura Kandu referred to.

Held, with reference to sec. 84 of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), that the Courts below were right in not allowing interest to the defendant after the 21st August, 1884, when the plaintiff, to his knowledge, deposited the whole money due on the mortgage.—8 Al. 502.

The plaintiffs were mortgagees in possession of certain shares in a village under a mortgage which, as to the principal amount advanced, was a simple mortgage, as to the interest, a usufructuary mortgage. The mortgagees, to save the property from sale, paid up certain arrears of Government revenue. Subsequently the defendant, who was the representative of the mortgagors, under sec. 83 of the Transfer of Property Act (XIV of 1882), paid the original sum due under the mortgage into Court. The mortgagees withdrew the money so paid in and deposited the mortgage-deed in Court. The mortgagees then, after relinquishing possession of the mortgaged property, sued to recover the money which they had paid as Government revenue by sale of the mortgaged property. Held that though the mortgagees might originally have treated the amount paid by them as Government revenue as part of the mortgage-money, they did not by such payment obtain a lien independently of their position as mortgagees, and when once they had abandoned their lien on the mortgaged property by accepting the money paid into Court by the mortgagors and by relinquishing possession of the mortgaged property, they could not afterwards revive it; and their suit, which was for realization of the Government revenue paid by them by sale of the mortgaged property, must fail. Semble, a mortgagee, who had given up his lien under circumstances similar to those above described, might bring a simple money suit to recover money paid by him to save the property from sale in execution for arrears of Government revenue. Kinu Ram Das v. Mozaffer Husain Shaha, Lachman Singh v. Salig Ram, Achut Ramchandra Pai v. Hari Kamti, Girdhar Lal v. Bhola Nath, Parsotam Das v. Jaijit Singh, Nikka Mal v. Sulaiman Shaikh Gardner, Kristo Mohinee Dossee v. Kaliprosono Ghose, and Nagenderchunder Ghose v. Sreemutty Kaminee Dossee, referred to.—13 Al. 195.

See I. L. R., 11 Madr. 371, noted under sec. 67; 16 Cal. 307, noted under sec. 60.

84. When the mortgagor or such other person as aforesaid has tendered or deposited in Court under section eighty-three the amount remaining due on the mortgage, interest on the principal money shall cease from the date of the tender, or as soon as the mortgagor or such other person as aforesaid has done all that has to be done by him to enable the mortgagee to take such amount out of Court, as the case may be.

Cessation of interest.

Nothing in this section or in section eighty-three shall be deemed to deprive the mortgagee of his right to interest when there exists a contract that he shall be entitled to reasonable notice before payment or tender of the mortgage-money.

Note.

See I. L. R., 8 Al. 502, noted under sec. 83; 11 Madr. 371, noted under sec. 67; 16 Cal. 307, noted under sec. 60.

Suits for Foreclosure, Sale, or Redemption.

85. Subject to the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure, section 437, all persons having an interest in the property comprised in a mortgage must be joined as parties to any suit under this chapter relating to such mortgage: Provided that the plaintiff has notice of such interest.

Parties to suits for foreclosure, sale, and redemption.

Notes.

On second appeal against a decree dismissing a suit which had been brought by a puisne mortgagee to redeem a prior incumbrance, it was ordered that the mortgagor be brought on to the record. On its appearing that it had not been intended that the plaintiff should take any interest under the mortgage sued on:—Held, that the second appeal should be dismissed.—I. L. R., 15 Madr. 54.

In a suit by a mortgagee against two of his three mortgagors, the defendants objected in their written statement that the suit was bad for non-joinder of the third mortgagor, and also alleged that subsequent encumbrances on the mortgage premises had been created with the concurrence of the plaintiff. It appeared that the third mortgagor, as a witness, renounced interest in the greater part of the mortgage premises. On second appeal:—Held, that the suit should be remanded to the Court of first instance for disposal after joinder of the third mortgagor and the subsequent encumbrancers.—15 Madr. 487.

Certain immoveable property was mortgaged in 1865 to H, in 1871 to G, and in 1873 again to H. In 1883 the property was purchased by M, the representative of G, in execution of a decree obtained in 1877 by G in a suit for sale brought by him upon the mortgage of 1871. To this suit and decree the mortgagee under the deeds of 1865 and 1873 was not a party. In 1885, M sued the representatives of H for redemption of the mortgage of 1865. One of the defendants pleaded that as he was a puisne incumbrancer in the property in suit at the time of the plaintiff's suit against the mortgagors in 1877, he ought to have been made a party to that suit, and thus afforded "an opportunity of protecting his rights by payment of the mortgage-money." He did not in the Court below ask in express terms to be allowed to redeem the plaintiff's mortgage, but he did so in appeal to the High Court. Held, with reference to the terms of sec. 85 of the Transfer of Property Act, that inasmuch as the defendant was in possession of the mortgaged property at the time of the suit of 1877, and his mortgage was a registered instrument, it must be presumed that the plaintiff had notice of its existence and should therefore have made him a party; and that, under the circumstances he should be placed in the same position as he would have held if the decree of 1877 had never been passed. Held also that, although it would have been more regular had the defendant in the Court below asked in express terms to be allowed to redeem the plaintiff's mortgage and brought into Court what he alleged to be due thereunder, or expressed his willingness to pay such amount as might be found to be due on taking accounts, yet, the defendant having pleaded that he ought to have been afforded an opportunity of protecting his rights by payment of the prior mortgage-money, the Court should not be too technical in such a matter, where the defendant had the undoubted right now asserted by him, and where the result of not recognizing such right would be to extinguish his security. The Court therefore passed an order declaring the defendant entitled to retain possession of the property in suit, if within ninety days he paid into Court the amount of the plaintiff's mortgage-debt, with interest, otherwise the lower Court's decree for redemption on payment of the amount due on the mortgage of 1865 would stand.—I. L. R., 9 Al. 125.

Foreclosure and Sale.

86. In a suit for foreclosure, if the plaintiff succeeds, the Court shall make a decree, ordering that an account be taken of what will be due to the plaintiff for principal and interest on the mortgage, and for his costs of the suit (if any) awarded to him, on the day next hereinafter referred to, or declaring the amount so due at the date of such decree, and ordering that, upon the defendant paying to the plaintiff or into Court the amount so due, on a day within six months from the date of declaring in Court the amount so due, to be fixed by the Court, the plaintiff shall deliver up to the defendant, or to such person as he appoints, all documents in his possession or power relating to the mortgaged property, and shall transfer the property to the defendant free from all incumbrances created by the plaintiff or any person claiming under him, or, where the plaintiff claims by derived title, by those under whom he claims; and shall, if necessary, put the defendant into possession of the property; but that, if the payment is not made on or before the day to be fixed by the Court, the defendant shall be absolutely debarred of all right to redeem the property.

Notes.

The provisions of sec. 8 of Regulation XVII of 1806 are not merely directory, but imperative, prescribing conditions precedent to the right of the mortgagee to enforce forfeiture of the estate of the mortgagor, and have for their object the protection of mortgagors from fraud. The prescribed procedure must be strictly followed. Norender Narrain Singh v. Dwarka Lall Munder, L. R., 5 I. A., 18; I. L. R., 3 Cal. 397, referred to and followed:—Held, that although the mortgagor the hearing of the foreclosure suit in the Court of first instance had not insisted on the insufficiency of the notification of the mortgagee's application to foreclose, but had relied on another defence, this could not be construed as a binding admission that notice had been duly given; that service of the copy petition for foreclosure, and of the parwana signed by the Judge, was essential; and that the mortgagor was not precluded from questioning the regularity of the proceedings in his subsequent appeal.—I. L. R., 11 Cal. 111.

Where a person mortgages his property by deed of conditional sale, and afterwards the right, title and interest of the mortgagor is sold in execution of a money decree previously obtained against him, the purchaser at such sale is entitled to due notice of foreclosure proceedings instituted subsequently to the sale, but before the confirmation thereof. Bhyrub Chunder Bundopadhyaya v. Raudamini Dabee, I. L. R., 2 Cal. 141, followed.—11 Cal. 341.

Mortgage made before the Act came into force and foreclosed under Reg. XVII. of 1806, may be decreed under sec. 86 of the Act, provided the procedure under the Act supplied, so as not to effect the rights saved by sec. 2 cl. (c.) of that Act.—11 Cal. 588.

The mortgagees of a certain tenure obtained, on 11th September 1884, under sec. 86 of the Transfer of Property Act, a decree for foreclosure, which declared that, on failure to pay the amount found due, the mortgagor's right of redemption should be barred on 11th March 1885; this time was subsequently extended on the application of the mortgagor to 30th April 1885. On the 6th April 1885, in execution of a decree for arrears of rent obtained by the superior holder of the tenure against the mortgagor, the tenure was sold free from incumbrances. The mortgagees applied under sec. 311 of the Civil Procedure Code to have the sale set aside for material irregularity:—Held, that under sec. 86 of the Transfer of Property Act, the mortgagees had such an interest in the property as brought them within the words of section 311, "person whose property has been sold," and entitled them to make the application.—13 Cal. 346.

A decree for foreclosure containing a distinct and separate order for costs was afterwards confirmed by an order absolute for foreclosure, and the mortgagee under such order obtained possession. Subsequently he applied for execution of the order for costs. Held that the costs awarded could not be considered part of the money due upon the mortgage, and, as such, superseded by the order absolute and the mortgagee's possession thereunder, and the application must, therefore, be allowed. Rutnessur Sein v. Jusoda referred to.—10 Al. 179.

87. If payment is made of such amount and of such Procedure in case of subsequent costs as are mentioned in payment of amount due. section ninety-four, the defendant shall (if necessary) be put into possession of the mortgaged property.

If such payment is not so made, the plaintiff may apply Order absolute for foreclosure. to the Court for an order that the defendant and all persons claiming through or under him be debarred absolutely of all right to redeem the mortgaged property, and the Court shall then pass such order, and may, if necessary, deliver possession of the property to the plaintiff :

Provided that the Court may, upon good cause shown, Power to enlarge time. and upon such terms (if any) as it thinks fit, from time to time postpone the day appointed for such payment.

On the passing of an order under the second paragraph of this section, the debt secured by the mortgage shall be deemed to be discharged.

In the Code of Civil Procedure, Schedule IV., No. 129, for the words "Final decree," the words "Decree absolute" shall be substituted.

Notes.

In a foreclosure action, the mortgagor can redeem at any time until the order absolute is made under sec. 87 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882.—I. L. R., 16 Cal. 246.

Sec. 244 of the Civil Procedure Code contemplates that there must be some question in controversy and conflict in execution which has been brought to a final determination and conclusion so as to be binding upon the parties to the proceedings, and which must relate in terms to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree. A judgment-debtor under a decree for foreclosure made an application to the Court two days after the expiry of time prescribed by the decree for payment of the amount due thereunder, in which she alleged that, by reason of the two previous days having been holidays, she had been unable to pay the money before, and asked to be allowed to deposit the same. Upon this application the Court passed the following order:—"Permission granted. Applicant may deposit the money." The money was deposited accordingly. Held that the order was merely a ministerial act, and nothing more than a direction from the Judge to his subordinate official to receive the money, which, as it did not fall within either sec. 244 or sec. 588 of the Civil Procedure Code, was not appealable; and that the proper remedy of the decree-holder, assuming the deposit to have not been made in time, was to apply for an order absolute for foreclosure, which order would be subject to any steps the parties affected by it might take by way of appeal or otherwise.—9 Al. 500.

The order mentioned in sec. 87 of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882) is an order in execution of the substantive foreclosure decree, and is appealable as a decree under sec. 244 read with sec. 2 of the Civil Procedure Code upon the stamp payable in respect of such orders. So held, by the Full Bench, EDGE, C. J.—doubting.—12 Al. 61.

An order under sec. 87 of Act IV of 1882 extending the time for payment of the mortgage money by a mortgagor is a decree within the meaning of secs. 2 and 244 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1882, and therefore no application will lie under sec. 622 of that Code for revision of such order.—14 Al. 420.

88. In a suit for sale, if the plaintiff succeeds, the Court shall pass a decree to the effect mentioned in the first and second paragraphs of section eighty-six, and also ordering that, in default of the defendant paying, as therein mentioned, the mortgaged property, or a sufficient part thereof, be sold, and that the proceeds of the sale (after defraying thereout the expenses of the sale) be paid into Court and applied in payment of what is so found due to the plaintiff, and that the balance, (if any) be paid to the defendant or other persons entitled to receive the same.

In a suit for foreclosure, if the plaintiff succeeds, and the mortgage is not a mortgage by conditional sale, the Court may, at the instance of the plaintiff, or of any person interested either in the mortgage-money or in the right of redemption, if it thinks fit, pass a like decree (in lieu of a decree for foreclosure) on such terms as it thinks fit, including, if it thinks fit, the deposit in Court of a reasonable sum, fixed by the Court, to meet the expenses of sale and to secure the performance of the terms.

Notes.

The holder of a decree on a mortgage obtained an order under sec. 88 of the Transfer of Property Act for sale of the mortgaged property, and the proceeds of this, when sold, being insufficient to satisfy the decree, he applied for a decree under sec. 90 for the sale of other properties belonging to the judgment-debtor. The Subordinate Judge refused the application on the ground that there was no such provision in the order for sale under sec. 88. Held, that the decree-holder was entitled to the decree asked for. The terms of sec. 90 contemplate a decree in the suit for recovery of the mortgage money after sale of the mortgaged properties under a decree given under sec. 88. The decree-holder can then apply to the Court, and if he can show that, after the sale of the mortgaged properties, there is still a balance due to him under the decree obtained under sec. 88, and that that amount is legally recoverable from the judgment-debtor, he can ask for and obtain a decree under sec. 90 for realization of the balance from other properties of the debtor.—I. L. R., 16 Cal. 423.

Where a suit to set aside a sale in execution of a decree was brought on the ground that by the fraud of the judgment-creditor the proclamation of sale had not been duly made, and the facts were that the sale was not an ordinary sale of attached property in execution of a decree, but a sale in execution of a mortgage decree which directed the sale of the mortgaged property in accordance with the provisions of secs. 88 and 89 of the Transfer of Property Act, but that there was no such decree in existence, as only a decree nisi and not a decree absolute directing the sale had been made; and it was contended that until a decree absolute was made for the sale, the right to redeem existed, and that the suit might be regarded as a suit to redeem; Held, that there was nothing in these facts to distinguish the case from the Full Bench case of Mohendro Narain Chaturaj v. Gopal Mondul, I. L. R., 17 Cal., 769, and that the suit was therefore not maintainable. An order directing a sale in such a case would be sufficient authority under sec. 89 of the Transfer of Property Act even if the order did not take the form of a decree such as is prescribed for a decree absolute in the case of a suit for foreclosure.—18 Cal. 139.

An application for execution of a decree for sale of mortgaged property under sec. 88 and which directed that if the decree were not satisfied within two months the property should be sold, ought not to be allowed before the expiration of the period therein provided.—7 Al. 194.

A decree in favour of a mortgagee for sale of the mortgaged property cannot be treated as one for money. According to the Transfer of Property Act, secs. 88, 89, and 90, the mortgagee must first sell the mortgaged property, and if the net proceeds of such sale be insufficient to pay the amount due for the time being on the mortgage, and if the balance be legally recoverable from the mortgagor otherwise than out of the property sold, he may ask the Court for a decree for such balance.—10 Al. 632.

The decree contemplated by sec. 90 of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882) can be made in the suit in which the decree for sale was passed; and it is not necessary to institute a fresh suit to obtain such decree.—11 Al. 486.

The holder of a decree under sec. 88 of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882) applied for execution to the Court charged with execution of the decree. Held that this was a good application under sec. 89 of the Act, and that it was not necessary that such application should be made to the Court which had passed the decree. An application for an order absolute for sale under sec. 89 of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882) is a proceeding in execution and subject to the rules of procedure governing such matters.—13 Al. 278.

89. If, in any case under section eighty-eight, the defendant pays to the plaintiff or into Court on the day fixed as aforesaid the amount due under the mortgage, the cost (if any) awarded to him and such subsequent costs as are mentioned in section ninety-four, the defendant shall (if necessary) be put in possession of the mortgaged property; but, if such payment is not so made, the plaintiff or the defendant, as the case may be, may apply to the Court for an order absolute for sale of the mortgaged property, and the Court shall then pass an order that such property, or a sufficient part thereof, be sold, and that the proceeds of the sale be dealt with as is mentioned in section eighty-eight, and thereupon the defendant's right to redeem and the security shall both be extinguished.

Procedure when defendant pays amount due.

Order absolute for sale.

Note.

See I. L. R., 18 Cal. 139, 10 Al. 632, 11 Al. 486, 13 Al. 278, noted under sec. 88; 14 Al. 513, noted under sec. 90.

90. When the net proceeds of any such sale are insufficient to pay the amount due for the time being on the mortgage, if the balance is legally recoverable from the defendant otherwise than out of the property sold, the Court may pass a decree for such sum.

Recovery of balance due on mortgage.

Notes.

In a suit for enforcement of a mortgage security the plaintiff prayed for a decree both as against the mortgaged property, and also, in the event of the mortgaged property not realising sufficient to satisfy his claim, as against the other property and the persons of the defendants, and the decree which the plaintiff obtained was framed in accordance with the prayer in the plaint, that is to say, the decree expressly provided that, should the mortgaged property not realise sufficient to satisfy the amount decreed to the plaintiff, the other property of three, and the persons of two, of the judgment-debtors were to be liable. Held that such a decree could be executed against the persons and other property of the parties named therein, without its being necessary for the decree holder to obtain a separate decree under sec. 90 of the Transfer of Property Act (Act IV of 1882). Miller v. Digambari Debya; referred to.—I. L. R., 13 Al. 360.

The plaintiff obtained a decree on a hypothecation bond, the decree providing that the money secured by the bond was to be realised by sale of the hypothecated property, and, if that proved insufficient to satisfy the decree, by sale of other property of the judgment debtor. The hypothecated property was sold and the proceeds were not sufficient to satisfy the decree. The decree-holder thereupon applied for enforcement of that portion of the decree which related to the other property of the judgment-debtor. To this application it was objected that it was necessary to obtain a decree under sec. 90 of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882). This objection was allowed and the decree-holder applied for and obtained a decree under the said section. The judgment-debtor then appealed against that decree on the ground, amongst others, that, looking to the terms of the original decree, the application under sec. 90 was superfluous. Held that the decree contemplated by sec. 90 of the Transfer of Property Act is, in fact, an order to be obtained in execution of a decree for sale; and though in the present instance the application for such a decree may have been superfluous, it may nevertheless be regarded as an application for execution of a decree by enforcement of a portion of it against property other than the mortgaged property. Miller v. Digambari Debya, distinguished; Hafiz-ud-din Ahmad v. Damodar Das, and Raj Singh v. Parmanand, referred to.—13 Al. 356.

Where there is nothing to show a contrary intention of the parties, every mortgage carries with it a personal liability to pay the money advanced; but a mortgagee must sue for his remedy against the property first. In so doing it is immaterial whether or not he prays in his plaint for relief over against non-hypothecated property. Unless in exceptional cases he can obtain such relief only under the provisions of sec. 90 of the Transfer of Property Act, and if such relief is refused the refusal will not bar a subsequent application under sec. 90. Hafiz-ud-din Ahmad v. Damodar Das approved, Batak Nath v. Pitambar Das distinguished, Sutton v. Sutton, Raj Singh v. Parmanand, Miller v. Digambari Debya and Durga Dai v. Bhagwat Prasad referred to.—Observations on the meaning and application of secs. 88, 89 and 90 of the Transfer of Property Act. Redemption.

91. Besides the mortgagor, any of the following persons may redeem, or institute a suit for redemption of the mortgaged property :—

Who may sue or redemption.

(a) any person (other than the mortgagee of the interest sought to be redeemed) having any interest in, or charge upon, the property.

(b) any person having any interest in, or charge upon, the right to redeem the property;

(c) any surety for the payment of the mortgage-debt or any part thereof;

(d) the guardian of the property of a minor mortgagor on behalf of such minor;

(e) the committee or other legal curator of a lunatic or idiot mortgagor on behalf of such lunatic or idiot;

(f) the judgment-creditor of the mortgagor, when he has obtained execution by attachment of the mortgagor's interest in the property;

(g) a creditor of the mortgagor who has, in a suit for the administration of his estate, obtained a decree for sale of the mortgaged property.

Notes.

The right of redemption is inseparable from mortgage, and is so much an essential as not to be variable by agreement of parties. Vide 7 M. H. C. R., 395; Also—I. L. R., 5 Madr. 184.

Purchasers of the right, title, and interest, of a mortgagor in certain portions of the mortgaged property, sold in execution of a prior decree against the mortgagor, were added as co-defendants in a mortgagee's suit against the mortgagor for foreclosure on failure to redeem. As against these purchasers the suit was dismissed with costs, on the ground that their claims to portions of the mortgaged property, under titles prior to, and independent of, the mortgagee's title, could not be decided therein. A decree was then made against the mortgagor, and on his subsequent failure to redeem or to pay the debt, his equity of redemption was sold, and was bought by the mortgagee. In a suit brought by the mortgagee against the representatives of one of the said purchasers, who refused to deliver possession of the portion:—Held, that (a), as this purchaser had disclaimed the right to redeem the portion, and had alleged a paramount title, causing the dismissal of the suit as against him, he, and those claiming under him were precluded from afterwards claiming to redeem; and (b), the proportion of mortgage charge for which he was liable could not be apportioned by the taking an account as between him and the mortgagee alone, in the absence of the purchasers of the other portions. Nawab Azmut Ali Khan v. Jowahir Singh, 13 Moore's I. A., 404, referred to. A decree which ordered that the defendants, without any account being taken at all, should retain possession of the portion purchased as above stated, clear of the proportion of mortgage debt chargeable thereon, on payment to the mortgagee of the sum for which he had bought the equity of redemption, was held to be incorrect, and was, accordingly, reversed.—12 Cal. 414.

A decree obtained by a mortgagor, which declared that the mortgagee should deliver up possession on payment of the sum found due to him, not having been executed for three years, a purchaser of the equity of redemption sued the mortgagee to redeem:—Held, that this suit was not barred by the former decree and that the plaintiff was entitled to redeem. Sami v. Somasundram (I. L. R., 6 Madr. 119) approved. Gan Savant Bal Savant v. Narayan Dhond Savant (I. L. R., 7 Bom. 467) dissented from.—8 Madr. 478.

A widow does not represent the estate so as to bind the son when the existence of the minor son is, from whatever cause, altogether ignored, and there is nothing on the face of the proceedings to show that she is sued as representing the minor son.

Accordingly where the plaintiff, a minor, sought to redeem a certain property from the defendant who had purchased the equity of redemption at an auction sale in execution of a decree obtained against the plaintiff's mother alone as representative of her deceased husband:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to redeem. The plaintiff having been ignored, the inheritance had not been substantially represented in the suit against his mother alone, and the plaintiff's right to the equity of redemption consequently remained unaffected by the sale to the defendant.—9 Bom. 429.

Upon a mortgage of land made little less than 60 years before the present suit a decree followed in 1825 to the effect that an account having been taken of what was due on the mortgage, the mortgagor might at any time make a tender of such mortgage money with interest up to date, and require that the land should be restored.

The plaintiff, representing the interest of the original mortgagor, sued for redemption of the mortgage, treating the above decree as regulating the rights of the parties from the time when it was made:—Held, that the right of the plaintiff was a right to execute the above decree, subject to the law of limitation, and not a right to obtain a decree for redemption and possession; the law also providing that questions between the parties to a suit relating to execution of decree must be determined by the order of the Court executing it:—Held, also, that the plaintiff not having sought by his plaint to redeem the mortgage, or alleged that there had been acknowledgment, could not in the present appeal fall back on a right to redeem such mortgage, although the latter might be within limitation, as that would be to make a case different from the one tried and decided in the Courts below. Accordingly, the suit had been properly dismissed.—10 Bom. 461.

A deed of mortgage was executed by P, T and S for Rs. 4,000. A, the purchaser of the share of S, brought a suit for recovery of possession of one-third of the mortgaged property against the mortgagees who had purchased the shares of P and T the other mortgagors.

Held, by the Full Bench with reference to section 7, art. IX of the Court-Fees Act (VII of 1870), that the defendants-mortgagees having brought up the equity of redemption of two of the mortgagors, and pro tanto extinguished their mortgage-debt, and so by their own act empowered the plaintiff to sue for redemption of one-third of the property, the principal money now secured as between them and the plaintiff must now be regarded as one-third of the original mortgage amount, namely, Rs. 1,333-5-4, more particularly as fiscal enactments should, as far as possible, be construed in favour of the subject. Balkrishna Dhondo v. Nagvekar referred to.—8 Al. 438.

See I. L. R., 15 Madr. 54, noted under sec. 85.

92. In a suit for redemption, if the plaintiff succeeds, Decree in redemption-suit. the Court shall pass a decree ordering—that an account be taken of what will be due to the defendant for the mortgage-money and for his costs of the suit (if any) awarded to him, on the day next hereinafter referred to, or declaring the amount so due at the date of such decree ; that, upon the plaintiff paying to the defendant or into Court the amount so due, on a day within six months from the date of declaring in Court the amount so due, to be fixed by the Court, the defendant shall deliver up to the plaintiff, or to such person as he appoints, all documents in his possession or power relating to the mortgaged property, and shall re-transfer it to the plaintiff free from the mortgage, and from all incumbrances created by the defendant or any person claiming under him, or, when the defendant claims by derived title, by those under whom he claims, and shall, if necessary, put the plaintiff into possession of the mortgaged property ; and that, if such payment is not made on or before the day to be fixed by the Court, the plaintiff shall (unless the mortgage be simple or usufructuary) be absolutely debarred of all right to redeem the property, or (unless the mortgage be by conditional sale) that the property be sold.

Notes.

In a suit to redeem a kanom a redemption decree was passed which provided that the kanom amount and the value of improvements be paid in three months. The decree amount was not paid within that period, but the decree-holder applied to execute the decree at a later date:—Held, that the decree-holder was not then entitled to have the decree executed. Poresh Nath Mojumdar v. Ramjodu Mojumdar (I. L. R., 16 Cal., 246) dissented from.—I. L. R., 13 Madr. 267.

A mortgagor obtained a decree for redemption of his mortgage “within six months from the date of this decree.” The mortgagee appealed, but the Appellate Court confirmed the decree. The mortgagor sought to redeem within six months from the date of the appellate decree:—Held, the Court to which the application of the mortgagor was made should, before passing orders on the application, have given the plaintiff time to apply to the District Court to amend the decree under Transfer of Property Act, sec. 92.—15 Madr. 170.

93. If payment is made of such amount and of such subsequent costs as are mentioned in section ninety-four, the plaintiff shall, if necessary, be put into possession of the mortgaged property.

In case of redemption, possession. If such payment is not so made, the defendant may (unless the mortgage is simple or usufructuary) apply to the Court for an order that the plaintiff and all persons claiming through or under him be debarred absolutely of all right to redeem, or (unless the mortgage is by conditional sale) for an order that the mortgaged property be sold.

In default, foreclosure or sale. If he applies for the former order, the Court shall pass an order that the plaintiff and all persons claiming through or under him be absolutely debarred of all right to redeem the mortgaged property, and may, if necessary, deliver possession of the property to the defendant.

If he applies for the latter order, the Court shall pass an order that such property or a sufficient part thereof be sold, and that the proceeds of the sale (after defraying thereout the expenses of the sale) be paid into Court and applied in payment of what is found due to the defendant, and that the balance be paid to the plaintiff or other persons entitled to receive the same.

On the passing of any order under this section, the plaintiff's right to redeem and the security shall, as regards the property affected by the order, both be extinguished:

Provided that the Court may, upon good cause shown, and upon such terms, (if any) as it thinks fit, from time to time postpone the day fixed under section ninety-two for payment to the defendant.

Power to enlarge time.

Notes.

In a suit for redemption of a usufructuary mortgage, a decree for redemption was passed conditional upon the plaintiff paying the defendants, within a time specified, a sum which was found still due to the latter, and the decree provided that if such sum were not paid within the time specified, the suit should stand dismissed. The plaintiff failed to pay, and the suit accordingly stood dismissed. Subsequently he again sued for redemption, alleging that the mortgage-debt had now been satisfied from the usufruct. Held, having regard to the distinction between simple and usufructuary mortgages, that the decree in the former suit only decided that, in order to redeem and get possession of the property, the mortgagor must pay the sum then found to be due by him to the mortgagee, and did not operate as res judicata so as to bar a second suit for redemption, when, after further enjoyment of the profits by the mortgagee, the mortgagor could say that the debt had now become satisfied from the usufruct. Having regard to sec. 93 of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), in a suit brought by a usufructuary mortgagor for possession on the ground that the mortgage-debt has been satisfied from the usufruct, and in which the plaintiff is ordered to pay something because the debt has not been satisfied as alleged, the decree passed against such a mortgagor for non-payment has not the effect of foreclosing him for all time from redeeming the property. The decision in Sheikh Golam Hossein v. Musammatt Alla Rukhee Beebee treated as not binding since the passing of the Transfer of Property Act. Chaita v. Purun Sookh and Anrudh Singh v. Sheo Prasad, referred to. Where the plaintiff in a suit for redemption of a usufructuary mortgage was the original mortgagor, who had by a registered instrument assigned his interest in the mortgaged property to another, and the assignee did not apply to be made a party to the suit, but put forward or consented to have put forward the original mortgagor as the person entitled to redeem,—held that as there was nothing in that litigation to show that the defendant-mortgagee was in any way induced to alter his position or to do any act which he would not otherwise have done in consequence of the assignee's conduct, the latter was not estopped by sec. 115 of the Evidence Act (I of 1872) or by any principle of equitable estoppel from afterwards suing on his own account for redemption.—I. L. R., 11 Al. 386.

See I. L. R., 13 Madr. 267 and 15 Madr. 170, noted under sec. 92.

94. In finally adjusting the amount to be paid to a mortgagee in case of a redemption or a sale by the Court under this chapter, the Court shall, unless the conduct of the mortgagee has been such as to disentitle him to costs, add to the mortgage-money such costs of suit as have been properly incurred by him since the decree for foreclosure, redemption, or sale up to the time of actual payment.

Note.—See I. L. R., 10 Al. 179, noted under sec. 86.

95. Where one of several mortgagors redeems the mortgaged property and obtains possession thereof, he has a charge on the share of each of the other co-mortgagors in the property for his proportion of the expenses properly incurred in so redeeming, and obtaining possession.

Costs of mortgagee subsequent to decree.

Charge of one of several co-mortgagors who redeems.

Notes.

In a suit by some of several co-mortgagors to redeem the entire property mortgaged, on the ground that the mortgage-debt had been satisfied out of the usufruct:—Held that the plaintiffs could only claim their own shares, and the Court of first instance should determine the extent of the shares after making the other co-mortgagors parties.—I. L. R., 7 Al. 376.

K and J jointly mortgaged 36 sihmas or shares of an estate to C giving him possession C transferred his rights as mortgagee to T and M. In execution of a decree for money against K held by M. K's rights and interests in the mortgaged property were sold, and were purchased by P, whose heirs paid the entire mortgage-debt, R, an heir of J, sued the heirs of P, to recover from them possession of J's sihmas in the mortgaged property, on payment of a proportionate amount of the mortgage-money paid by P. The plaintiff alleged that the mortgage, to C had been made forty years before suit. The defendants contended that a much longer period had expired since C the date of the mortgage, that forty-one years had elapsed since C transferred his rights as mortgagee, that they had redeemed the property twenty-one years ago and had been since its redemption in proprietary and adverse possession of the sihmas in suit, and that the suit was barred by limitation. Neither party was aware of the date of the mortgage, and neither adduced any proof on the point:—Held applying the equitable principle adopted in secs. 95 & 100 of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882) that the owner of a portion of a mortgaged estate, which has been redeemed by his co-mortgagor, has the right to redeem such portion from his co-mortgagor, and a suit brought for that purpose would be in the nature of a suit for redemption, and would naturally fall within the definition of No. 148, sch. ii. of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877), and it was not possible for one of two mortgagors, redeeming the whole mortgaged property behind the back of the other, to change the position of that other to something less than that of a mortgagor, or to abridge the period of limitation within which he ought to come in to redeem:—Held, therefore, that No. 148, and No. 134, of sch ii. of the Limitation Act was applicable to the suit.

Umrnissa v. Muhammad Yar Khan distinguished. Panchan Singh v. Ali Ahmad referred to:—Held, also that the defendants being admittedly in possession, though the existence of a mortgage as the origin of their possession was conceded by them, it lay upon the plaintiff to give prima facie proof of the subsistence of that mortgage at the date of suit, but that assuming that notice was given to the defendants by the plaintiff to produce the mortgage-deed, and that they failed to do so, very slight evidence would have been sufficient to satisfy the obligation which lay on the plaintiff. Aishan Dutt Ram v. Narendar Bahadoor Singh referred to —8 Al. 295.

Sale of Property subject to prior Mortgage.

96. If any property the sale of which is directed under

Sale of property subject to prior mortgage. this chapter is subject to a prior mortgage, the Court may, with the consent of the prior mortgagee, order that the property be sold free from the same, giving to such prior mortgagee the same interest in the proceeds of the sale as he had in the property sold.

97. Such proceeds shall be brought into Court and applied as follows :—
Application of proceeds.

first, in payment of all expenses incident to the sale or property incurred in any attempted sale ;

secondly, if the property has been sold free from any prior mortgage, in payment of whatever is due on account of such mortgage ;

thirdly, in payment of all interest due on account of the mortgage in consequence whereof the sale was directed, and of the costs of the suit in which the decree directing the sale was made ;

fourthly, in payment of the principal money due on account of that mortgage ; and lastly, the residue (if any) shall be paid to the person proving himself to be interested in the property sold, or, if there be more such persons than one, then to such persons according to their respective interests therein or upon their joint receipt.

Nothing in this section or in section ninety-six shall be deemed to affect the powers conferred by section fifty-seven.

Anomalous Mortgages.

98. In the case of a mortgage, not being a simple mortgage, a mortgage by conditional sale, a usufructuary mortgage, or an English mortgage, or a combination of the first and third, or the second and third, of such forms, the rights and liabilities of the parties shall be determined by their contract as evidenced in the mortgage-deed, and, so far as such contract does not extend, by local usage.

Mortgage not described in section 58, clauses (b), (c), (d), and (e).

Note.

The obligor of a bond acknowledged therein that he had borrowed Rs. 153 from the obligee at the rate of Rs. 1-8 per cent. per mensem, and promised to pay the principal with interest at the agreed rate upon a date named. The bond continued thus :—"To secure this money, I pledge, voluntarily and willingly, my wealth and property in favour of the said banker. Whatever property, etc., belonging to me be found by the said banker, that all should be available to the said banker. If, without discharging the debt due to this banker, I should sell, mortgage, or dispose of the property to another banker, such transfer shall be void. For this reason, I have of my free will and consent executed this hypothecation-bond that it may be of use when needed." The amount secured by the bond became due on the 6th May, 1879. The bond was registered under the Registration Act as a document affecting immoveable property, and the obligor was a party to such registration. On the 9th May, 1885, the obligee sued the heir of the obligor to recover the principal and interest due upon the bond by enforcement of lien against and sale of immoveable property belonging to the defendant. Held that the bond showed that the intention of the parties was to create by it a charge upon all the property of the obligor for the payment to the plaintiff of the principal monies borrowed, together with interest at the agreed rate. Najibulla Mulla v. Nusir Mistri referred to. Held also that the words used in the bond as indicating the property which was intended to be subject to the charge were sufficiently specific and certain to include, and were intended to include, all the property of the obligor; that, this being so, the maxim "certum est quod certum reddi potest" applied; that the bond created a charge upon the immoveable property of the obligor in respect of the principal and interest in question; that such principal and interest were monies charged upon immoveable property within the meaning of sch. ii, No. 132 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877); and that, so far as the claim was to enforce payment of such principal and interest by recourse to the immoveable property of the obligor, the suit was brought within time. Ram Din v. Kalka Prasad, Gauri Shankar v. Surju, and Tadhan v. D'Epineuil referred to.—I. L. R., 9 Al. 158.

Attachment of Mortgaged Property.

99. Where a mortgagee in execution of a decree for the satisfaction of any claim, whether arising under the mortgage or not, attaches the mortgaged property, he shall not be entitled to bring such property to sale otherwise than by instituting a suit under section sixty-seven, and he may institute such suit notwithstanding anything contained in the Code of Civil Procedure, section 43.

Notes.

The managing member of a joint Hindu family executed in 1878 a mortgage on certain lands, the property of the family, to secure a debt incurred by him for family purposes, and in 1881 he together with his brother executed to the mortgagee a money bond for the interest then due on the mortgage. In 1882 the mortgagee brought a suit on the money bond and having obtained a personal decree against the two brothers merely, brought to sale in execution part of the mortgaged property which was purchased by a third person:—Held, that the sale did not convey the interest of another undivided brother who was not a party to the decree:—Held, further per Kernan, J., that the sale in execution was invalid under Transfer of Property Act, sec. 99.—I. L. R., 12 Madr. 325.

A usufructuary mortgagee left the mortgage premises in the possession of the mortgagor under a rent agreement in 1878. The rent having fallen into arrear, the mortgagee sued the mortgagor in October 1882 and obtained a decree for the arrear which provided for its payment by the mortgagor "on the responsibility of the defendant's mulgeni right" in the mortgage premises. The decree-holder attached the mortgage premises in execution, and having brought them to sale and purchased them himself, he now sued for possession:—Held, that the sale was invalid under Transfer of Property Act, sec. 99.—14 Madr. 74.

Charges.

100. Where immoveable property of one person is by act of parties or operation of law made security for the payment of money to another, and the transaction does not amount to a mortgage, the latter person is said to have a charge on the property ; and all the provisions hereinbefore contained as to a mortgagor shall, so far as may be, apply to the owner of such property, and the provisions of sections 81 and 82 and all the provisions hereinbefore contained as to a mortgagee instituting a suit for the sale of the mortgaged property shall, so far as may be, apply to the person having such charge.

Nothing in this section applies to the charge of a trustee on the trust-property for expenses properly incurred in the execution of his trust.

Notes.

Under sec. 100 of the Transfer of Property Act, for a document to create a charge on immoveable property, it must be a document that creates such charge immediately on its execution, and not operate only as a charge at some future time, such as in the event of non-payment of the money secured by it, the latter being the possibility of a charge ultimately arising on the land, and not "a charge" within the meaning of that section. A lent B Rs. 99, and B executed a document on the 24th July, 1881, whereby he agreed to repay the amount with interest in the month of Baisakh, 1289, F. S. (April, 1882), and further agreed that, if he did not pay the money as stipulated, he should sell his right to certain land and that A should take possession thereof, and that after A took possession of the land no interest should be paid by him (B), and that A should pay the rent of the landlord out of the profits of the land without any objection. A instituted a suit on the 3rd August, 1885, to recover the Rs. 99. Held, that the document did not amount to a mortgage, nor did it create a charge under sec. 100 of the Transfer of Property Act, and that the suit was barred by limitation, three years being the period applicable.—I. L. R., 14 Cal. 687.

A co-sharer in a mahal, who was also the lambardar, paid arrears of Government revenue for the years 1882, 1883, and part of 1884, in respect of certain lands in the mahal which were the exclusive property of another co-sharer. These lands were subject to simple mortgages executed in 1873, upon which decrees were obtained in 1884, and had been sold in execution of these decrees in 1887. The co-sharer-lambardar having obtained a decree in a Court of Revenue against the mortgagors under sec. 93 (g) of the N.-W. P. Rent Act (XII of 1881) for recovery of the arrears of revenue paid by him, sought to execute that decree under sec. 177 of the Act by sale of the lands which had been sold in 1887 ; and thereupon the auction-purchaser at that sale objected under sec. 178, and the objection having been overruled, brought a suit as authorised by sec. 181 in a Civil Court to establish his title to the lands and to have them protected from sale in execution of the Court of Revenue decree. This suit was decreed, and the decree, not having been appealed against, became final. Subsequently, the co-sharer lambardar brought a suit in the Civil Court in which he claimed a decree for enforcement of lien by sale of the land for the amount of the Court of Revenue decree, and for a declaration that the said lien "which is on account of Government," be declared preferential to the mortgages of 1873, the decrees thereon of 1884, and the sales under those decrees of 1887. He claimed this lien not only in respect of the arrears of Government revenue paid, but also in respect of future interest. Held by the full Bench (Mahmood, J., dissenting:—(i) That the Legislature had not given or recognized in the North-Western Provinces any such right of charge or lien in favour of a person paying Government revenue as was claimed here, or provided any means by which such a charge could be enforced, and that any such charge would be at variance with the policy and intention of the Government as disclosed in its legislative enactments. (ii) That no Civil Court had jurisdiction to entertain the suit, and no Court of Revenue had jurisdiction to make a decree for sale of the immoveable property or a decree in execution of which the immovable property could be sold to the prejudice of incumbrances to which it was subject. (iii) That it was not the intention of the Legislature that a civil Court should have jurisdiction to invest, by declaration or otherwise, a decree of a Court of Revenue with the attributes of a decree for sale such as could be passed by a civil Court in a suit for sale under the Transfer of Property Act, 1882. (iv) That there is no general principle of equity to the effect that whoever, having an interest in an estate, makes a payment in order to save the estate, obtains a charge on the estate, and, therefore in the absence of a statutory enactment, a co-sharer who paid the whole revenue and thus saved the estate, does not, by reason of such payment, acquire a charge on the share of his defaulting co-sharer. Kinu Ram Das v. Mozaffer Hosain Shaha (I. L. R., 14 Cal. 809), approved. (v) That the principle of Maritime Civil Salvage had no application to the case, and that no analogy could exist between the case of a salvor in Maritime Civil Salvage and the case of a co-sharer in a mahal to whom sec. 146 or sec. 148 of the North-Western Provinces Land Revenue Act (XIX of 1873) applied. Leslie v. French (L. R., 23 Ch. D. 552), and Falcke v. Scottish Imperial Insurance Company (L. R. 34 Ch. D. 34), referred to.—14 Al. 273.

See I. L. R., 10 Madr. 509, noted under sec. 58; 15 Cal. 492, noted under sec. 68; 13 Al. 28, noted under sec. 40.

101. Where the owner of a charge or other incumbrance on immoveable property is or becomes absolutely entitled to that property, the charge or incumbrance shall be extinguished, unless he declares, by express words or necessary implication, that it shall continue to subsist, or such continuance would be for his benefit.

Notes.

If an incumbrancer buying, intends to retain the benefit of his charge, he must be allowed to retain it. Generally he will intend to retain it, and slight evidence will suffice to establish this. The fact that the mortgage deed remains with the mortgagee who purchases is evidence that he intends to retain the benefit of his mortgage.—I. L. R., 6 Bom. 404, and 561.

See also 7 M. H. C. R., 229 ; I. L. R., 2 Al. 826 , 3 Al. 682 , 4 Al. 196 , 8 Cal. 530 and 13 Madr. 383, noted under sec. 78 ; 15 Madr. 268, noted under sec. 3.

Notice and Tender.

102. Where the person on or to whom any notice or Service or tender on or to agent. tender is to be served or made under this chapter does not reside in the district in which the mortgaged property or some part thereof is situate, service or tender on or to an agent holding a general power-of-attorney from such person or otherwise duly authorized to accept such service or tender shall be deemed sufficient.

Where the person or agent on whom such notice should be served cannot be found in the said district, or is unknown to the person required to serve the notice, the latter person may apply to any Court in which a suit might be brought for redemption of the mortgaged property, and such Court shall direct in what manner such notice shall be served, and any notice served in compliance with such direction shall be deemed sufficient.

Where the person or agent to whom such tender should be made cannot be found within the said district, or is unknown to the person desiring to make the tender, the latter person may deposit in such Court as last aforesaid the amount sought to be tendered, and such deposit shall have the effect of a tender of such amount.

103. Where, under the provisions of this chapter, a Notice, &c., to or by person incompetent to contract. notice is to be served on or by, or a tender or deposit made or accepted or taken out of Court by, any person incompetent to contract, such notice may be served, or tender or deposit made, accepted, or taken by the legal curator of the property of such person ; but where there is no such curator, and it is requisite or desirable in the interests of such person that a notice should be served or a tender or deposit made under the provisions of this chapter, application may be made to any Court in which a suit might be brought for the redemption of the mortgage to appoint a guardian ad litem for the purpose of serving or receiving service of such notice or making or accepting such tender, or making or taking out of Court such deposit, and for the performance of all consequential acts which could or ought to be done by such person if he were competent to contract ; and the provisions of Chapter XXXI of the Code of Civil Procedure shall, so far as may be, apply to such application, and to the parties thereto, and to the guardian appointed thereunder.

104. The High Court may, from time to time, make rules consistent with this Act for carrying out in itself, and in the Court of Civil Judicature, subject to its superintendence, the provisions contained in this chapter.

Power to make rules.

CHAPTER V.

OF LEASES OF IMMOVEABLE PROPERTY.

105. A lease of immoveable property is a transfer of a right to enjoy such property, made for a certain time, express or implied, or in perpetuity, in consideration of a price paid or promised, or of money, a share of crops, service, or any other thing of value, to be rendered periodically or on specified occasions to the transferor by the transferee, who accepts the transfer on such terms.

Lease defined.

The transferor is called the lessor, the transferee is called the lessee, the price is called the premium, and the money, share, service, or other thing to be so rendered, is called the rent.

Lessor, lessee, premium, and rent defined.

In the absence of a contract or local law or usage to the contrary, a lease of immoveable property for agricultural or manufacturing purposes shall be deemed to be a lease from year to year, terminable, on the part of either lessor or lessee, by six months' notice expiring with the end of a year of the tenancy; and a lease of immoveable property for any other purpose shall be deemed to be a lease from month to month, terminable; on the part of either lessor or lessee, by fifteen days' notice expiring with the end of a month of the tenancy.

Duration of certain leases in absence of written contract or local usage.

Every notice under this section must be in writing, signed by or on behalf of the person giving it, and tendered or delivered either personally to the party who is intended to be bound by it, or to one of his family or servants at his residence, or (if such tender or delivery is not practicable) affixed to a conspicuous part of the property.

Notes.

A zamindari raiyat mortgaged the land comprised in his holding, and the mortgagee, having sued and obtained a decree on his mortgage, attached the mortgagor's interest in the land and purchased it at the court-sale held in execution of his decree. The zamindar, who had intervened unsuccessfully in execution, now sued to set aside the sale and to eject the decree-holder and the judgment-debtor from the land. Neither party adduced evidence:—Held, that as the burden of proof lay on the plaintiff, and had not been discharged, the suit must be dismissed.—I. L. R., 13 Madr. 60.

On the 11th December, 1882, A, who had, on the 1st July, 1882, let rooms in a dwelling house to B, sent a letter to the tenant in the following terms:—"If the rooms you occupy in the house No. 5, Thornhill Road, are not vacated within a month from this date I will file a suit against you for ejectment, as well as for recovery of rent due at the enhanced rate." On the 1st February, 1883, the lessor instituted a suit against the tenant for ejectment, with reference to the above letter:—Held, by the full Bench, with reference to the terms of sec. 106, that the letter was not such a notice to quit as the law required inasmuch as it was not a notice of the lessor's intention to terminate the contract at the end of a month of the tenancy. Per Straight J.—Quære, whether the letter was a notice to quit at all. Also per Straight, J.—A notice to quit must be certain, at all events in respect of the date of the determination of the tenancy: in other words, there must be a clear and explicit intimation to the tenants as to the date after which he will, if he remains in occupation of the premises, become a trespasser. Ahearn v. Bellman distinguished. The judgment of Mahmood, J., reversed, and that of Oldfield J. affirmed.—7 Al. 899.

On the 11th December, 1882, A, who had on the 1st July 1882, let rooms in a dwelling-house to B, sent a letter to the tenant in the following terms:—"If the rooms you occupy in the house No. 5 Thornhill Road, are not vacated within a month from this date, I will file a suit against you for ejectment as well as for recovery of rent due at the enhanced rate." On the 1st February, 1883, the lessor instituted a suit against the tenant for ejectment with reference to the above letter:—Held by Oldfield, J. (Mahmood, J., dissenting):—That, with reference to the terms of sec. 106 of the Transfer of Property Act, the letter was not such a notice to quit as the law required, inasmuch as the notice did not expire with the end of a month of the tenancy; and that this defect was not cured by the circumstance that the lessor waited until the end of the month to enforce his right to eject by suit:—Held, by (Mahmood, J., Oldfield, J., dissented):—That the letter dated the 11th December, 1882, was a valid notice to quit under sec. 106 and 111 of the Transfer of Property Act, and sufficient to determine the tenancy, inasmuch as it gave the tenant more than fifteen days notice, and its terms were such that he could with perfect safety have acted upon it by quitting the premises at the proper time, namely, by the end of the month, which he must be presumed to have known was the right time to leave, without any risk of incurring liability to payment of further rent, the landlord having clearly indicated his intention to terminate the tenancy, and the notice being binding upon him; that the additional time given by the notice must be taken to have been given for the convenience of the tenant, and not with the object of continuing the tenancy; and that the suit for ejectment, not having been brought till long afterwards, was maintainable. Doe v. Smith, Ahearn v. Bellman, Nocoordass Mullock v. Jewrōj Baboo, and Jagut Chander Roy v. Rup, Chand Chango referred to.

Also Per Mahmood, J.—The words “fifteen days” in sec. 106 of the Transfer of Property Act imply a fixation of the shortest period of notice allowed by the section ; and the terms “expiring” means that the terms of the notice must be such as to make it capable of expiring according to law at the right time, so as to sender it safe for the tenant to quit coincidentally with the end of a month of the tenancy, without incurring any liability to payment of rent for any subsequent period.—7 Al. 596.

107. A lease of immoveable property from year to year, or for any term exceeding one year, or reserving a yearly rent, can be made only by a registered instrument.

Leases how made.

All other leases of immoveable property may be made either by an instrument or by oral agreement.

108. In the absence of a contract or local usage to the contrary, the lessor and the lessee of immoveable property, as against one another respectively, possess the rights and are subject to the liabilities mentioned in the rules next following, or such of them as are applicable to the property leased :—

Rights and liabilities of lessor and lessee.

A.—Rights and Liabilities of the Lessor.

(a) The lessor is bound to disclose to the lessee any material defect in the property, with reference to its intended use, or of which the former is and the latter is not aware, and which the latter could not with ordinary care discover :

(b) the lessor is bound on the lessee's request to put him in possession of the property :

(c) the lessor shall be deemed to contract with the lessee that, if the latter pays the rent reserved by the lease, and performs the contracts binding on the lessee, he may hold the property during the time limited by the lease without interruption.

The benefit of such contract shall be annexed to, and go with, the lessee's interest as such, and may be enforced by every person in whom that interest is for the whole or any part thereof from time to time vested.

B.—Rights and Liabilities of the Lessee.

(d) If, during the continuance of the lease, any accession is made to the property, such accession (subject to the law relating to alluvion for the time being in force) shall be deemed to be comprised in the lease :

(e) if, by fire, tempest, or flood, or violence of an army or of a mob, or other irresistible force, any material part of the property be wholly destroyed or rendered substantially and permanently unfit for the purposes for which it was let, the lease shall, at the option of the lessee, be void :

Provided that, if the injury be occasioned by the wrongful act or default of the lessee, he shall not be entitled to avail himself of the benefit of this provision :

(f) if the lessor neglects to make, within a reasonable time after notice, any repairs which he is bound to make to the property, the lessee may make the same himself, and deduct the expense of such repairs with interest from the rent, or otherwise recover it from the lessor :

(g) if the lessor neglects to make any payment which he is bound to make, and which, if not made by him, is recoverable from the lessee or against the property, the lessee may make such payment himself, and deduct it with interest from the rent, or otherwise recover it from the lessor :

(h) the lessee may remove, at any time during the continuance of the lease, all things which he has attached to the earth ; provided he leaves the property in the state in which he received it :

(i) when a lease of uncertain duration determines by any means except the fault of the lessee, he or his legal representative is entitled to all the crops planted or sown by the lessee and growing upon the property when the lease determines, and to free ingress and egress to gather and carry them :

(j) the lessee may transfer absolutely, or by way of mortgage or sub-lease, the whole or any part of his interest in the property, and any transferee of such interest or part may again transfer it. The lessee shall not, by reason only of such transfer, cease to be subject to any of the liabilities attaching to the lease :

nothing in this clause shall be deemed to authorize a tenant having an untransferable right of occupancy, the farmer of an estate in respect of which default has been made in paying revenue, or the lessee of an estate under the management of a Court of Wards, to assign his interest as such tenant, farmer, or lessee :

(k) the lessee is bound to disclose to the lessor any fact as to the nature or extent of the interest which the lessee is about to take, of which the lessee is, and the lessor is not, aware, and which materially increases the value of such interest :

(l) the lessee is bound to pay or tender, at the proper time and place, the premium or rent to the lessor or his agent in this behalf :

the lessee is bound to keep, and on the termination of the lease to restore, the property in as good condition as it was in at the time when he was put in possession, subject only to the changes caused by reasonable wear and tear or irresistible force, and to allow the lessor and his agents, at all reasonable times during the term, to enter upon the property and inspect the condition thereof, and give or leave notice of any defect in such condition ; and when such defect has been caused by any act or default on the part of the lessee, his servants or agents, he is bound to make it good within three months after such notice has been given or left :

(n) if the lessee becomes aware of any proceeding to recover the property or any part thereof, or of any encroachment made upon, or any interference with, the lessor's rights concerning such property, he is bound to give, with reasonable diligence, notice thereof to the lessor :

(o) the lessee may use the property and its products (if any) as a person of ordinary prudence would use them if they were his own ; but he must not use, or permit another to use, the property for a purpose other than that for which it was leased, or fell timber, pull down or damage buildings, work mines or quarries not open when the lease was granted, or commit any other act which is destructive or permanently injurious thereto :

(p) he must not, without the lessor's consent, erect on the property any permanent structure, except for agricultural purposes :

(q) on the determination of the lease, the lessee is bound to put the lessor into possession of the property.

Note.—See I. L. R., 13 Madr. 60, noted under sec. 106.

109. If the lessor transfers the property leased, or any part thereof, or any part of his interest therein, the transferee, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, shall possess all the rights, and, if the lessee so elects, be subject to all the liabilities of the lessor as to the property or part transferred so long as he is the owner of it ; but the lessor shall not, by reason only of such transfer, cease to be subject to any of the liabilities imposed upon him by the lease, unless the lessee elects to treat the transferee as the person liable to him :

Provided that the transferee is not entitled to arrears of rent due before the transfer, and that, if the lessee, not having reason to believe that such transfer has been made, pays rent to the lessor, the lessee shall not be liable to pay such rent over again to the transferee.

The lessor, the transferee, and the lessee, may determine what proportion of the premium or rent reserved by the lease is payable in respect of the part so transferred, and, in case they disagree, such determination may be made by any Court having jurisdiction to entertain a suit for the possession of the property leased.

110. Where the time limited by a lease of immoveable property is expressed as commencing Exclusion of day on which term commences. from a particular day, in computing that time such day shall be excluded. Where no day of commencement is named, the time so limited begins from the making of the lease.

Where the time so limited is a year or a number of years, Duration of lease for a year. in the absence of an express agreement to the contrary, the lease shall last during the whole anniversary of the day from which such time commences.

Where the time so limited is expressed to be terminable Option to determine lease. before its expiration, and the lease omits to mention at whose option it is so terminable, the lessee, and not the lessor, shall have such option.

111. A lease of immoveable property determines—Determination of lease.

(a) by efflux of the time limited thereby :

(b) where such time is limited conditionally on the happening of some event—by the happening of such event :

(c) where the interest of the lessor in the property terminates on, or his power to dispose of the same extends only to, the happening of any event—by the happening of such event :

(d) in case the interests of the lessee and the lessor in the whole of the property become vested at the same time in one person in the same right :

(e) by express surrender ; that is to say, in case the lessee yields up his interest under the lease to the lessor, by mutual agreement between them :

(f) by implied surrender :

(g) by forfeiture ; that is to say, (1) in case the lessee breaks an express condition which provides that, on breach thereof, the lessor may re-enter, or the lease shall become void ; or (2) in case the lessee renounces his character as such by setting up a title in a third person or by claiming title in himself ; and in either case the lessor or his transferee does some act showing his intention to determine the lease :

(h) on the expiration of a notice to determine the lease, or to quit or of intention to quit, the property leased, duly given by one party to the other.

Illustration to Clause (f).

A lessee accepts from his lessor a new lease of the property leased, to take effect during the continuance of the existing lease. This is an implied surrender of the former lease, and such lease determines thereupon.

112. A forfeiture under section one hundred and eleven, Clause (g), is waived by acceptance of rent which has become due since the forfeiture, or by distress for such rent, or by any other act on the part of the lessor showing an intention to treat the lease as subsisting :

Waiver of forfeiture.

Provided that the lessor is aware that the forfeiture has been incurred :

Provided also that, where rent is accepted after the institution of a suit to eject the lessee on the ground of forfeiture, such acceptance is not a waiver.

113. A notice given under section one hundred and eleven, Clause (h), is waived, with the express or implied consent of the person to whom it is given, by any act on the part of the person giving it showing an intention to treat the lease as subsisting.

Waiver of notice to quit.

Illustrations.

(a.) A, the lessor, gives B, the lessee, notice to quit the property leased. The notice expires. B tenders, and A accepts, rent which has become due in respect of the property since the expiration of the notice. The notice is waived.

(b.) A, the lessor, gives B, the lessee, notice to quit the property leased. The notice expires, and B remains in possession. A gives to B as lessee a second notice to quit. The first notice is waived.

114. Where a lease of immoveable property has determined by forfeiture for non-payment of rent, and the lessor sues to eject the lessee, if, at the hearing of the suit, the lessee pays or tenders to the lessor the rent in arrear, together with interest thereon and his full costs of the suit, or gives such security as the Court thinks sufficient for making such payment within fifteen days, the Court may, in lieu of making a decree for ejectment, pass an order relieving the lessee against the forfeiture; and thereupon the lessee shall hold the property leased as if the forfeiture had not occurred.

115. The surrender, express or implied, of a lease of immoveable property does not prejudice an underlease of the property or any part thereof previously granted by the lessee, on terms and conditions substantially the same (except as regards the amount of rent) as those of the original lease; but, unless the surrender is made for the purpose of obtaining a new lease, the rent payable by, and the contracts binding on, the under-lessee shall be respectively payable to and enforceable by the lessor.

The forfeiture of such a lease annuls all such under-leases, except where such forfeiture has been procured by the lessor in fraud of the under-lessees, or relief against the forfeiture is granted under section one hundred and fourteen.

116. If a lessee or under-lessee of property remains in possession thereof after the determination of the lease granted to the lessee, and the lessor or his legal representative accepts rent from the lessee or under-lessee, or otherwise assents to his continuing in possession, the lease is, in the absence of an agreement to the contrary, renewed from year to year, or from month to month, according to the purpose for which the property is leased, as specified in section one hundred and six.

Illustrations.

(a.) A lets a house to B for five years. B underlets the house to C at a monthly rent of Rs. 100. The five years expire, but C continues in possession of the house, and pays the rent to A. C's lease is renewed from month to month.

(b.) A lets a farm to B for the life of C. C dies, but B continues in possession with A's assent. B's lease is renewed from year to year.

117. None of the provisions of this chapter apply to leases for agricultural purposes, except in so far as the Local Government, with.

the previous sanction of the Governor-General in Council, may, by notification published in the local official Gazette, declare all or any of such provisions to be so applicable, together with, or subject to, those of the local law (if any) for the time being in force.

Such notification shall not take effect until the expiry of six months from the date of its publication.

CHAPTER VI.

OF EXCHANGES.

118. When two persons mutually transfer the ownership of one thing for the ownership of another, neither thing or both things being money only, the transaction is called an "exchange."

"Exchange" defined.

A transfer of property in completion of an exchange can be made only in manner provided for the transfer of such property by sale.

119. In the absence of a contract to the contrary, the party deprived of the thing or part thereof he has received in exchange, by reason of any defect in the title of the other party, is entitled at his option to compensation or to the return of the thing transferred by him.

Right of party deprived of thing received in exchange.

120. Save as otherwise provided in this chapter, each party has the rights and is subject to the liabilities of a seller as to that which he gives, and has the rights and is subject to the liabilities of a buyer as to that which he takes.

Rights and liabilities of parties.

121. On an exchange of money, each party thereby warrants the genuineness of the money given by him.

Exchange of money.

CHAPTER VII.

OF GIFTS.

122. "Gift" is the transfer of certain existing moveable or immoveable property made voluntarily and without consideration, by one person, called the donor, to another, called the donee, and accepted by or on behalf of the donee.

"Gift" defined.

Such acceptance must be made during the life time of the donor and while he is still capable of giving.

Acceptance when to be made.

If the donee dies before acceptance, the gift is void.

123. For the purpose of making a gift of immoveable property, the transfer must be effected by a registered instrument signed by or on behalf of the donor, and attested by at least two witnesses.

Transfer how effected.

For the purpose of making a gift of moveable property, the transfer may be effected either by a registered instrument signed as aforesaid or by delivery.

Such delivery may be made in the same way as goods sold may be delivered.

Notes.

Assuming that delivery of possession was essential under the Hindu law to complete a gift of immoveable property, that law has been abrogated by sec. 123 of the Transfer of Property Act. The first para. of that section means that a gift of immoveable property can be effected by the execution of a registered instrument only, nothing more being necessary. Sembla.—The same is the case under that section with regard to moveable property, provided that a registered deed (and not the alternative mode of delivery) be adopted as the mode of transfer.—I. L. R., 14 Cal. 446.

K, a servant in the employment of the East India Railway Company, was recommended, by the Traffic Manager, a bonus in consideration of long and good services. This recommendation was sanctioned, and the amount of the bonus was received by the District Paymaster. Before payment to K, the money was attached in execution of a decree obtained against him by J. Held that inasmuch as the bestowal of the money was a gift of moveable property of date subsequent to the 1st July, 1882, and was not evidenced by a registered instrument, it could only be effected by actual delivery; that as there had been no such delivery as completed the transfer (sec. 123 of the Transfer of Property Act, and sec. 90 of the Contract Act), the money was not at K's disposal, and he could not have enforced payment; and that the money was therefore not liable to attachment in execution of a decree against him.—6 Al. 634.

124. A gift comprising both existing and future property is void as to the Gift of existing and future property.

125. A gift of a thing to two or more donees, of whom one does not accept it, is void as to the interest which he would have taken had he accepted.

Gift to several, of whom not accept.

126. The donor and donee may agree that, on the happening of any specified event which does not depend on the will of the donor, a gift shall be suspended or revoked; but a gift which the parties agree shall be revocable wholly or in part at the mere will of the donor is void wholly or in part, as the case may be.

Gift may be set aside or revoked.

A gift may also be revoked in any of the cases (save want or failure of consideration) in which, if it were a contract, it might be rescinded.

Save as aforesaid, a gift cannot be revoked.

Nothing contained in this section shall be deemed to affect the rights of transferees for consideration without notice.

Illustrations.

(a.) A gives a field to B, reserving to himself, with B's assent, the right to take back the field in case B and his descendants die before A. B dies without descendants in A's lifetime. A may take back the field.

(b.) A gives a lakh of rupees to B, reserving to himself, with B's assent, the right to take back at pleasure Rupees 10,000, out of the lakh. The gift holds good as to Rupees 90,000, but is void as to Rupees 10,000, which continue to belong to A.

127. Where a gift is in the form of a single transfer to the same person of several things of which one is, and the others are, not burdened by an obligation, the donee can take nothing by the gift unless he accepts it fully.

Where a gift is in the form of two or more separate and independent transfers to the same person of several things, the donee is at liberty to accept one of them and refuse the others, although the former may be beneficial and the latter onerous.

A donee not competent to contract, and accepting property burdened by any obligation, is not bound by his acceptance. But if, after becoming competent to contract, and being aware of the obligation, he retains the property given, he becomes so bound.

Onerous gift to disqualified person.

Illustrations.

(a.) A has shares in X, a prosperous joint stock company, and also shares in Y, a joint stock company in difficulties. Heavy calls are expected in respect of the shares in Y. A gives B all his shares in joint stock companies. B refuses to accept the shares in Y. He cannot take the shares in X.

(b.) A, having a lease for a term of years of a house at a rent which he and his representatives are bound to pay during the term, and which is more than the house can be let for, gives to B the lease, and also, as a separate and independent transaction, a sum of money. B refuses to accept the lease. He does not by this refusal forfeit the money.

128. Subject to the provisions of section one hundred and twenty-seven, where a gift consists of the donor's whole property, the donee is personally liable for all the debts due by the donor at the time of the gift to the extent of the property comprised therein.

129. Nothing in this chapter relates to gifts of moveable property made in contemplation of death, or shall be deemed to affect any rule of Muhammadan law, or, save as provided by section one hundred and twenty-three, any rule of Hindu or Buddhist law.

Saving of donations mortis causa and Muhammadan law.

Notes.

The Hindu law makes no distinction in favour of gifts in contemplation of death, as respects the legal requisities to constitute a perfect disposition by gift. Those requisites are,—a giving, either orally or by writing, with the intention to pass the property in the thing given, accompanied by its actual delivery and acceptance in the donor's life-time.—6 M. H. C. R., 276.

By Hindu Law, a man may make a gift of any of his property binding as against himself.

Where a Hindu made a gift to a person, whom he said he had taken as his manasaputra :—Held, that he could not set aside on the ground that he erred in supposing that the donee could perform his funeral rites.—1 M. H. C. R., 393.

Plaintiff sued to enforce a gift to him of immoveable property by a woman living under his guardianship as against her husband :—Held, that such taking of the woman's property by her kinsman is wholly repugnant to Hindu Law.—2 M. H. C. R., 360.

A voluntary Transfer of Property by way of gift, if made bona fide and not with the intention of defrauding creditors, is valid as against creditors.—4 M. H. C. R., 84.

According to Hindu Law, a restriction against alienation in a gift of land to Brahmins is inoperative as being a condition repugnant to the nature of the grant.—I. L. R., 4 Madr. 200.

A man cannot by gift inter vivos or by will give property absolutely to another, and yet control his mode of enjoyment in respect of portion or otherwise.—6 Cal. 105.

A complete and unconditional transfer of property in free gift under a written instrument cannot be revoked by any subsequent act of the grantor. Sabapathy v. Palaniyandi. Vide Sudr. Decisions of 1858 page 61.

CHAPTER VIII.

OF TRANSFERS OF ACTIONABLE CLAIMS.

130. A claim which the Civil Courts recognize as affording grounds for relief is actionable whether a suit for its enforcement is or is not actually pending or likely to become necessary.

Actionable claim.

Illustration.

A owes money to B, who transfers the debt to C. B then demands the debt from A, who, having no notice of the transfer, pays B. The payment is valid, and C cannot sue A for the debt.

Notes.

The transfer is not binding on the debtor unless he is given to understand of the transfer. No notice need be given to the debtor if he is otherwise aware of the transfer.

The assignee of a chose in action may sue in his own name, whether or not the debtor assents to the transfer.—1 M. H. C. R., 150.

A decree is not a "debt" within the meaning of that word as used in section 131 of the Transfer of Property Act. A "debt" under that section means an actionable claim, and not a claim which has already passed into a decree.—I. L. R., 12 Cal. 610.

The provisions of the Act apply to the assignment of a mortgage after that Act came into force, although the mortgage may have been made before the commencement of that Act. An assignment is perfectly valid though the notice referred to in section 131 of the Transfer of Property Act has not been given, though the title of the assignee as against third parties is not complete until such notice has been given; the object of such notice being the protection of the assignee. Section 131 of the Transfer of Property Act makes no alteration in the law as it obtained in England previous to the passing of that Act and as laid down in the cases cited in the note to Ryall v. Rowles, 2 W. and T. L. C., 777, the first portion of the section merely fixing the time when the section comes into operation, and the latter providing for the protection of the debtor if he deals with the debt before that time. Where therefore as assignee of a mortgagee brought a suit on the mortgage against the mortgagor and the mortgagee, and no notice of the assignment had been given to the mortgagor under section 131 of the Transfer of Property Act:—Held, that the Court was wrong in dismissing the suit merely on the ground that no notice was served, as after the suit was instituted the mortgagor became aware of the assignment, and the transfer accordingly came into operation on the date when he thus became aware of it.—12 Cal. 505.

Subsequent to the execution and registration of a bond, a jamog was made orally between the creditor, and the debtor by which the former agreed to take the rents of certain tenants of the latter in satisfaction of interest, the latter agreed to release the tenants from payment of rent to himself, and the tenants (who were parties to the arrangement) agreed to pay the rents to the creditor. No mutation of names in favour of the creditor was effected in the revenue registers. The creditor brought a suit against the debtor to recover the principal and interest agreed to be paid under the bond, alleging that he had never received any rents under the jamog. Held that whether or not the plaintiff could maintain a suit on the jamog against the tenants for the rent assigned to him in the Revenue Court, he could do so in the Civil Court, and the fact that the jamog was not in writing did not affect the question. Ganga Prasad v. Chandrawati referred to. Held also that the jamog was not a subsequent oral agreements rescinding or modifying a contract which was registered according to the law for the time being in force, within sec. 92, proviso (4) of Act I of 1872 (Evidence Act). Held that the effect of the jamog or novation was that the plaintiff's right to recover interest from the defendant was gone, and the plaintiff was therefore not entitled to maintain his suit against the defendant in respect of the interest which was payable under the bond.—9 Al. 249.

A sued for principal and interest due on a mortgage assigned to him for value by the mortgagee. No notice of the assignment was given to the mortgagors before the plaintiff's demand. The sum sued for exceeded the amount paid by the plaintiff for the assignment and reasonable interest on it; but such amount was not paid or tendered to the plaintiff:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to a decree for the whole amount due on the assigned mortgage.—10 Madr. 289.

132. Every such notice must be in writing signed by the person making the transfer, or by his agent duly authorized in this behalf.

Notice to be in writing signed.

133. On receiving such notice, the debtor or person in whom the property is vested shall give effect to the transfer, unless where the debtor resides, or the property is situate, in a foreign country, and the title of the person in whose favour the transfer is made is not complete according to the law of such country.

Debtor to give effect to transfer.

134. Where the transferor of a debt warrants the solvency of the debtor, the warranty, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, applies only to his solvency at the time of the transfer, and is limited, where the transfer is made for consideration, to the amount or value of such consideration.

Warranty of solvency of debtor.

135. Where an actionable claim is sold, he against whom it is made is wholly discharged by paying to the buyer the price and incidental expenses of the sale, with interest on the price from the day that the buyer paid it.

Discharge of person against whom claim is sold.

Nothing in the former part of this section applies—

(a) where the sale is made to the co-heir, to, or co-proprietor of, the claim sold;

(b) where it is made to a creditor in payment of what is due to him;

(c) where it is made to the possessor of a property subject to the actionable claim;

(d) where the judgment of a competent Court has been delivered affirming the claim, or where the claim has been made clear by evidence, and is ready for judgment.

Notes.

The co-sharers of a Hindu family, one of whom was a minor, owned certain immoveable property in Munshigunge near Dacca. In 1873 a perpetual lease of this property, executed by all the co-sharers except the minor, was granted to certain persons hereinafter called the lessees. On the minor's behalf the lease was executed by his elder brother as guardian of the minor. In May 1882, the minor, who had previously attained his majority, sued the lessees and his co-sharers for a declaration of his right to and for possession of his share in the said property, alleging that the perpetual lease was not binding on him. On the day after the institution of the suit the plaintiff sold all his interest therein to A for Rs. 600:—Held, that A's purchase was an actionable claim within the meaning of section 135.—I. L. R., 12 Cal. 470.

It is not the object of section 135 absolutely to prevent a transferee, who has purchased a claim at a smaller value, from recovering the full amount of the debt due from the debtor.—13 Cal. 145.

Section 135 of the Transfer of Property Act does not protect a defendant from payment of the full amount payable under a claim transferred for a sum less than that recoverable under the claim, where the money is recovered by suit after a contest as to the liability of the defendant.—Grish Chandra v. Kashisauri Debi, I. L. R., 13 Cal. 145, followed.—15 Cal. 436.

The first paragraph of section 135 of the Transfer of Property Act has no application to a case in which the debtors deny the existence of the claim altogether, and where the purchaser of the claim has to obtain judgment affirming the claim before any satisfaction is made or tendered. Clause (d) of that section is not limited to cases where the judgment of a Court affirming the claim has been delivered, or where the claim is made clear by evidence, before the sale of the claim. Girish Chandra v. Kasiswari Debi, I. L. R., 13 Cal., 145; Khosdeb Biswas v. Satis Mondul, I. L. R., 15 Cal., 436; and Subbammal v. Venkatarama, I. L. R., 10 Mad., 289, followed. Jani Begum v. Jahangir Khan, I. L. R., 9 Al., 476, dissented from.—18 Cal. 510.

In a suit against a debtor an assignee for value of the debt is precluded by Transfer of Property Act, sec. 135, from recovering more than the price paid by him for the assignment with interest thereon and the incidental expenses of the sale. Jani Begam v. Jahangir Khan (I. L. R., 9 Al. 476) approved.—13 Madr. 225.

In a suit upon a hypothecation bond brought by an assignee for value from the obligee, it appeared that the obligee had previously to the assignment obtained a decree by consent against the obligors for an instalment of the money due upon it, and had also made good his claim to the land comprised in it as against an attaching creditor of the obligors:—Held, that there had been no adjudication on the claim to exclude the rule in Transfer of Property Act, sec. 135, and accordingly the plaintiff was entitled to recover only the sum paid by him for the assignment with interest from the date of payment to the date of the decree.—13 Madr. 516.

A obtained a money decree against B and attached certain land in execution. C intervened in execution successfully. A then brought a suit to establish that the land was liable to be sold in execution, and obtained a decree. Meanwhile the land was taken up by Government under the Land Acquisition Act, and the compensation money was paid to C. A attached this sum as a debt due to B and sold it in execution, and it was purchased by the plaintiff. The plaintiff now sued C to recover the amount of the debt:—Held, that the suit was governed by Limitation Act, sched. II, art. 120, and not by act. 62, and that the plaintiff was entitled to recover without regard to the terms of Transfer of Property Act, sec. 135 — 15 Madr. 382.

Sec. 135 (d) of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882) means that if a creditor or party having an actionable claim against another, has put it into Court and has proceeded to proof of it to the point at which judgment has been delivered affirming it, or the liability of the defendant has been so clearly established that judgment must be delivered against him, the mischief or danger of any trafficking or speculation in litigation disappears, and the defendant can suffer no prejudice by any arrangement between the plaintiff and a third person as to who is to enjoy the fruits of the decree, nor is there any probability that the process of the Court will be misused. On the other hand, if one who has an actionable claim against another chooses to sell it for less than its actual value, the person who buys embarks more or less in a speculation which can be defeated by payment to him of the price paid for it with interest and incidental expenses. The debtor's right to discharge himself by such payment is not forfeited by his putting the assignee to proof of his case in Court, nor did the Legislature intend that the position of the assignee should be better after suit and decree than before. Grish Chandra v. Kashisanri Debi dissented from. Chedambara Chetty v. Renga K. M. V. Puchaiya Naicker and Ram Coomar Coondoo v. Chunder Canto Mookerjee referred to. The assignee, under an instrument dated the 18th December, 1885, and in consideration of Rs. 5,000, of a share of Rs. 10,000 out of Rs. 20,000 claimed by his assignors as unpaid dower-debt, joined with the assignors in instituting a suit for recovery of the dower-debt, on the 22nd December of the same year. Held that the assignee's proceedings were of the nature contemplated by sec. 135 of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), and that he was not entitled to a decree for anything in excess of Rs. 5,000, the price paid by him for the Rs. 10,000 share of the debt.—9 Al. 476.

A mortgagee by conditional sale having obtained an order for foreclosure under Regulation XVII of 1806, his heirs, who were out of possession, executed a deed of assignment to a third person, transferring to him the rights acquired by the mortgagee under that order. At the time of the execution of the deed no steps had been taken by the mortgagee or his heirs to bring a suit for declaration of their title and for possession of the property. A suit for that purpose was brought by the assignee, the defendants being the conditional vendors and also the assignors under the deed above mentioned. The latter made no defence, but admitted the justice of the claim, and a decree was passed in favour of the plaintiff against them as well as against the other defendants. Held that the answering defendants, the conditional vendors, could not take advantage of the terms of the assignment for the purpose of defeating the claim, on the ground that the assignment was an unconscionable bargain, so unfair that the Court should not enforce it. If a person who has an actionable claim against another chooses to sell it cheap, that is no reason why that other is to stand cleared and discharged of his liability to the assignor. Held also that the answering defendants were entitled to the benefit contained in the first paragraph of sec. 135 of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), and would be entitled to take the bargain off the plaintiff's hands by paying to him the price and incidental expenses of the sale with the interest on that price from the day that the plaintiff paid it to the date of its repayment to him. Jani Begam v. Jahangir Khan, followed. Grish Chandra v. Kashisauri Debi and Khoshdeb Biswas v. Satar Mondol, dissented from.—13 Al. 102.

See I. L. R., 13 Cal. 297, noted under sec. 52; 10 Madr. 289, noted under sec. 131.

136. No Judge, pleader, mukhtar, clerk, bailiff, or other officer connected with Courts of justice, can buy any actionable claim falling under the jurisdiction of the Court in which he exercises his functions.

Incapacity of officers connected with Courts of justice.

Note.

The owner of certain land in consideration of a sum of money, transferred to the plaintiff, a pleader, the right to elephants caught in pits in the owner's land, and the right to sue for the recovery of such elephants from any person in possession of them. The plaintiff sued the defendants to recover possession of an elephant which had been trapped and was in defendant's possession at the time of the transfer to plaintiff. The suit was dismissed on the ground that the plaintiff had bought an actionable claim within the meaning of sec. 136 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882:—Held, that the section was not applicable.—I. L. R., 11 Madr. 445.

137. The person to whom a debt or charge is transferred shall take it subject to all the liabilities to which the transferor was subject in respect thereof at the date of the transfer.

Liability of transferee of debt.

Illustration.

A debenture is issued in fraud of a public company to A. A sells and transfers the debenture to B, who has no notice of the fraud. The debenture is invalid in the hands of B.

138. When a debt is transferred for the purpose of securing an existing or future debt, the debt so transferred, if recovered by either the transferor or transferee, is applicable, first, in payment of the costs of such recovery; secondly, in or towards satisfaction of the amount for the time being secured by the transfer; and the residue (if any) belongs to the transferor.

Mortgaged debt.

Saving of negotiable instruments.

139. Nothing in this chapter applies to negotiable instruments.

EASEMENTS.

ACT No. V. OF 1882.*

RECEIVED THE G.-G.'S ASSENT ON THE 17TH FEBRUARY 1882.

An Act to define and amend the law relating to Easements and Licenses.

Preamble. WHEREAS it is expedient to define and amend the law relating to Easements and Licenses ; It is hereby enacted as follows :—

PRELIMINARY.

Short title. 1. This Act may be called "The Indian Easements Act, 1882 :"

Local extent. It extends to the territories respectively administered by the Governor of Madras in Council and the Chief Commissioners of the Central Provinces and Coorg ;

Commencement. and it shall come into force on the first day of July 1882.

Note.

1882, to a suit commenced before Act VIII of tenant cannot as against his landlord acquire by prescription an easement of way in favour of the land occupied by him as tenant over other land belonging to his landlord. So held by the Full Bench. Gayford v. Moffatt (1) referred to.—I. L. R., 14 Al. 185.

2. Nothing herein contained shall be deemed to affect any law not hereby expressly repealed ; or to derogate from—

(a) any right of the Government to regulate the collection, retention, and distribution of the water of rivers and streams flowing in natural channels, and of natural lakes and ponds, or of the water flowing, collected, retained, or distributed in or by any channel or other work constructed at the public expense for irrigation ;

(b) any customary or other right (not being a license) in or over immoveable property which the Government, the public, or any person may possess irrespective of other immoveable property ; or of 1891, the Indian Easements Act has been extended to the territories administered by the Governor of Bombay in Council and the Chief Commissioners of the North-Western

(c) any right acquired, or arising out of a relation created, before this Act comes into force.

Notes.

The Indian Government has, on many occasions, granted to individuals the exclusive right of fishery in certain navigable rivers.—15 W. R., 212. Also I. L. R., 11 Cal. 438.

Such grants however ought not to infringe the rights of the public.—I. L. R., 2, Bom. 19.

In a most learned and admirable judgment, respecting the rights of the Government and the public to fish in navigable rivers and the sea, WESTROPP, C. J., said,—“Assuming, as I think we may, that the proposition—that the beds of tidal rivers in British India are, like those of such rivers in Great Britain, prima facie, to be regarded as vested in the Crown—is established, the transition thence to the proposition—that the subjacent soil of the British Indian seas, within the territorial limit of three geographical miles from low-water-mark is also vested in the Crown—is (if the like proposition as to the territorial waters of Great Britain be true) not difficult, for a navigable river in such part of it as the tide flows and ebbs, is an arm of the sea.”—I. L. R., 2 Bom. 43.

3. Sections 26 and 27 of the Indian Limitation Act, 1877, and the definition of “easement,” contained in that Act, are repealed in the territories to which this Act extends. All references in any Act or Regulation to the said sections, or to sections 27 and 28 of Act No. IX. of 1871, shall, in such territories, be read as made to sections fifteen and sixteen of this Act.

Repeal of Act XV. of 1877, sections 26 and 27.

Note.

The acquisition of profits a prendre were brought by Act XV of 1877 within the prescriptive rules for the acquisition of easements enacted by Act IX of 1871.

Speaking of the Limitation Act, Sir RICHARD GARTH said, “easements may still be claimed in this country by prescription; and when they are so claimed, the principles which apply to their acquisition in England will be equally applicable in this country.”—I. L. R., 10 Cal. 214, 218.

CHAPTER I.

OF EASEMENTS GENERALLY.

4. An easement is a right which the owner or occupier of certain land possesses, as such, for the beneficial enjoyment of that land, to do and continue to do something, or to prevent and continue to prevent something being done in, or upon, or in respect of, certain other land not his own.

“Easement” defined.

The land for the beneficial enjoyment of which the right exists is called the dominant heritage, and the owner or occupier thereof

Dominant and servient

the dominant owner; the land on which the liability is imposed is called the servient heritage, and the owner or occupier thereof the servient owner.

Explanation.—In the first and second clauses of this section, the expression “land” includes also things permanently attached to the earth; the expression “beneficial enjoyment” includes also possible convenience, remote advantage, and even a mere amenity; and the expression “to do something” includes removal and appropriation by the dominant owner, for the beneficial enjoyment of the dominant heritage, of any part of the soil of the servient heritage, or anything growing or subsisting thereon.

Illustrations.

(a) A, as the owner of a certain house, has a right of way thither over his neighbour B's land for purposes connected with the beneficial enjoyment of the house. This is an easement.

(b.) A, as the owner of a certain house, has the right to go on his neighbour B's land, and to take water for the purposes of his household out of a spring therein. This is an easement.

(c.) A, as the owner of a certain house, has the right to conduct water from B's stream to supply the fountains in the garden attached to the house. This is an easement.

(d.) A, as the owner of a certain house and farm, has the right to graze a certain number of his own cattle on B's field, or to take, for the purpose of being used in the house, by himself, his family, guests, lodgers, and servants, water or fish out of C's tank, or timber out of D's wood, or to use, for the purpose of manuring his land, the leaves which have fallen from the trees on E's land. These are easements.

(e.) A dedicates to the public the right to occupy the surface of certain land for the purpose of passing and re-passing. This right is not an easement.

(f.) A is bound to cleanse a water course running through his land, and keep it free from obstruction for the benefit of B, a lower riparian owner. This is not an easement.

Notes.

It has been more than once decided in the High Court at Calcutta, that the illustrations appended to a section of an Act of the Legislature, ought never to be allowed to control the plain meaning of the section itself; and especially they ought not to do so, when the effect would be to curtail a right which the section, in its ordinary sense, would confer.—I. L. R., 7 Cal. 132.

The right to water flowing to a man's land through an artificial water-course constructed on a neighbour's land, is not a natural, but a conventional, right resting on some grant or arrangement, proved or presumed, from or with the owners of the land over which the water is brought, or on some other legal origin. Such right may be presumed from the time, manner and circumstances, under which the easement has been enjoyed.—I. L. R., 4 Cal. 633, 637.

The right to establish a market or hold a haat on land, is, in India, when exercised on one's own land, an ordinary right of property, and acquired as such. It is not, as in England, a franchise requiring a grant from the Crown.—N.-W. P. (H. C. R.) 104; I. L. R., 5 Cal. 7; 4 Cal. 309.

Similarly, a right to a ferry, taking tolls, and excluding other ferries, may be established in India by mere user of twenty years: per GARTH, C. J. and WHITE, J.; but MILLER J., dissented, thinking that no user could establish an indefeasible right of ferry.—I. L. R., 6 Cal. 608.

Continuous and discontinuous, apparent and non-apparent, easements.

5. Easements are either continuous or discontinuous, apparent or non-apparent.

A continuous easement is one whose enjoyment is, or may be, continual without the act of man.

A discontinuous easement is one that needs the act of man for its enjoyment.

An apparent easement is one the existence of which is shown by some permanent sign which, upon careful inspection by a competent person, would be visible to him.

A non-apparent easement is one that has no such sign.

Illustrations.

(c.) Rights annexed to A's land to lead water thither across B's land by an aqueduct, and to draw off water thence by a drain. The drain would be discovered upon careful inspection by a person conversant with such matters. These are apparent easements.

6. An easement may be permanent, or for a term of years or other limited period, or subject to periodical interruption, or exercise-able only at a certain place, or at certain times, or between certain hours, or for a particular purpose, or on condition that it shall commence or become void or voidable on the happening of a specified event or the performance or non-performance of a specified act.

Notes.

A right of easement may be acquired in the surplus water of a tank flowing through a defined channel whether natural or artificial.—I. L. R., 7 Madr. 530.

The owners of a tank fed by natural streams, which depended for their supply on natural rainfall and surface water, sued for an injunction to restrain superior riparian owners from damming the streams or interfering with the supply of water, over which the plaintiffs claimed a right of easement. The issue as to the ownership of the land on which the streams rose was undecided:—Held, (1) The Easement Act only declared the existing law as to easements over water; (2) An easement can therefore be acquired in regard to the water of the rainfall. But surface water not flowing in a stream and not permanently collected in a pool, tank or otherwise is not a subject of easement by prescription, though it may be the subject of an express grant or contract; (3) It is the natural right of every owner of land to collect or dispose of all water on the surface which does not pass in a defined channel; (4) Riparian owners are entitled to use and consume the water of the stream for drinking and household purposes, for watering their cattle, for irrigating their land, and for purposes of manufacture, subject to the conditions (i) that the use is reasonable, (ii) that it is required for their purposes as owners of the land, and (iii) that it does not destroy or render useless or materially diminish or affect the application of the water by inferior riparian owners in exercise either of their natural right or their right of easement if any; (5) It was therefore necessary to ascertain where the streams rose, and the course, source and length of their tributaries.—I. L. R., 11 Mad. 16.

7. Easements are restrictions of one or other of the following rights (namely):—

(a) The exclusive right of every owner of immoveable property (subject to any law for the time being in force) to enjoy and dispose of the same and all products thereof and accessions thereto.

The right of every owner of immoveable property to advantages arising from situation. (subject to any law for the time being in force) to enjoy without disturbance by another the natural advantages arising from its situation.

Illustrations of the Rights above referred to.

(a.) The exclusive right of every owner of land in a town to build on such land, subject to any municipal law for the time being in force.

(b.) The right of every owner of land that the air passing thereto shall not be unreasonably polluted by other persons.

(c.) The right of every owner of a house that his physical comfort shall not be interfered with materially and unreasonably by noise or vibration caused by any other person.

(d.) The right of every owner of land to so much light and air as pass vertically thereto.

(e.) The right of every owner of land that such land, in its natural condition, shall have the support naturally rendered by the subjacent and adjacent soil of another person.

Explanation.—Land is in its natural condition when it is not excavated and not subjected to artificial pressure; and the “subjacent and adjacent soil” mentioned in this illustration means such soil only as in its natural condition would support the dominant heritage in its natural condition.

(f.) The right of every owner of land that, within his own limits, the water which naturally passes or percolates by, over, or through his land, shall not, before so passing or percolating, be unreasonably polluted by other persons.

(g.) The right of every owner of land to collect and dispose within his own limits of all water under the land which does not pass in a defined channel, and all water on its surface which does not pass in a defined channel.

(h.) The right of every owner of land that the water of every natural stream which passes by, through, or over his land in a defined natural channel shall be allowed by other persons to flow within such owner's limits without interruption and without material alteration in quantity, direction, force, of temperature; the right of every owner of land abutting on a natural lake or pond into or out of which a natural stream flows, that the water of such lake or pond shall be allowed by other persons to remain within such owner's limits without material alteration in quantity or temperature.

(i.) The right of every owner of upper land that water naturally rising in, or falling on, such land, and not passing in defined channels, shall be allowed by the owner of adjacent lower land to run naturally thereto.

(j.) The right of every owner of land abutting on a natural stream, lake, or pond to use and consume its water for drinking, household purposes, and watering his cattle and sheep; and the right of every such owner to use and consume the water for irrigating such land, and for the purposes of any manufactory situate thereon, provided that he does not thereby cause material injury to other like owners.

Explanation.—A natural stream is a stream, whether permanent or intermittent, tidal or tideless, on the surface of land or underground, which flows by the operation of nature only and in, natural and known course.

Note.—See I. L. R., 7 Madr. 530 & 11 Madr. 16, noted under sec. 6.

CHAPTER II.

THE IMPOSITION, ACQUISITION, AND TRANSFER OF EASEMENTS.

8. An easement may be imposed by any one in the
 Who may impose ease- circumstances, and to the extent, in and ments. to which he may transfer his interest in the heritage on which the liability is to be imposed.

Illustrations.

(a.) A is tenant of B's land under a lease for an unexpired term of twenty-years, and has power to transfer his interest under the lease. A may impose an easement on the land to continue during the time that the lease exists or for any shorter period.

(b.) A is tenant for his life of certain land with remainder to B absolutely. A cannot, unless with B's consent, impose an easement thereon which will continue after the determination of his life-interest.

(c.) A, B, and C are co-owners of certain land. A cannot, without the consent of B and C, impose an easement on the land or on any part thereof.

(d.) A and B are lessees of the same lessor, A of a field X for a term of five years, and B of a field Y for a term of ten years. A's interest under his lease is transferable; B's is not. A may impose on X, in favour of B, a right of way terminable with A's lease.

Notes.

FIELD and BOSE, JJ., held that the mode of acquiring an easement provided by the Limitation Act, sec. 26, is not the only way in which an easement may be acquired ; but that it may also be acquired by implied grant : for example a way of necessity or one necessary at the time and absolute and continuous.—I. L. R., 8 Cal. 957.

MELVILLE and KEMBALL, JJ., held that immemorial user must be referred to a legal origin,—that is, either to a lost grant, or to an agreement between the predecessors in title of the parties ; and that the plaintiff, having a title by immemorial user, did not require the aid of the Limitation I. L. R., Act, 1887.—I. L. R., 6 Bom. 23.

9. Subject to the provisions of section eight, a servient owner may impose on the servient heritage any easement that does not lessen the utility of the existing easement. But he cannot, without the consent of the dominant owner, impose an easement on the servient heritage which would lessen such utility.

Servient owners.

Illustrations.

(a.) A has, in respect of his mill, a right to the uninterrupted flow thereto, from sunrise to noon, of the water of B's stream. B may grant to C the right to divert the water of the stream from noon to sunset : provided that A's supply is not thereby diminished.

(b.) A has, in respect of his house, a right of way over B's land. B may grant to C, as the owner of a neighbouring farm, the right to feed his cattle on the grass growing on the way : provided that A's right of way is not thereby obstructed.

10. Subject to the provisions of section eight, a lessor may impose, on the property leased, any easement that does not derogate from the rights of the lessee as such, and a mortgagor may impose, on the property mortgaged, any easement that does not render the security insufficient. But a lessor or mortgagor cannot, without the consent of the lessee or mortgagee, impose any other easement on such property, unless it be to take effect on the termination of the lease or the redemption of the mortgage.

Lessor and mortgagor.

Explanation.—A security is insufficient within the meaning of the section unless the value of the mortgaged property exceeds by one-third, or, if consisting of buildings, exceeds by one-half, the amount for the time being due on the mortgage.

11. No lessee or other person having a derivative interest may impose on the property held by him as such an easement to take effect after the expiration of his own interest, or in derogation of the right of the lessor or the superior proprietor.

Lessee.

12. An easement may be acquired by the owner of the immoveable property for the beneficial enjoyment of which the right is created, or on his behalf, by any person in possession of the same.,

Who may acquire easements.

One of two or more co-owners of immoveable property may, as such, with or without the consent of the other or others, acquire an easement for the beneficial enjoyment of such property.

No lessee of immoveable property can acquire, for the beneficial enjoyment of other immoveable property of his own, an easement in or over the property comprised in his lease.

13. Where one person transfers or bequeaths immoveable property to another,—

Easements of necessity and quasi easements.

(a) if an easement in other immoveable property of the transferor or testator is necessary for enjoying the subject of the transfer or bequest, the transferee or legatee shall be entitled to such easement; or

(b) if such an easement is apparent and continuous, and necessary for enjoying the said subject as it was enjoyed when the transfer or bequest took effect, the transferee or legatee shall, unless a different intention is expressed or necessarily implied, be entitled to such easement;

(c) if an easement in the subject of the transfer or bequest is necessary for enjoying other immoveable property of the transferor or testator, the transferor or the legal representative of the testator shall be entitled to such easement; or

(d) if such an easement is apparent and continuous, and necessary for enjoying the said property as it was enjoyed when the transfer or bequest took effect, the transferor, or the legal representative of the testator, shall, unless a different intention is expressed or necessarily implied, be entitled to such easement.

Where a partition is made of the joint property of several persons,—

(e) if an easement over the share of one of them is necessary for enjoying the share of another of them, the latter shall be entitled to such easement; or

(f) if such an easement is apparent and continuous, and necessary for enjoying the share of the latter as it was enjoyed when the partition took effect, he shall, unless a different intention is expressed or necessarily implied, be entitled to such easement.

The easements mentioned in this section, clauses (a), (c), and (e), are called easements of necessity.

Where immoveable property passes by operation of law, the persons from and to whom it so passes are, for the purpose of this section, to be deemed, respectively, the transferor and transferee.

Illustrations.

(a.) A sells B a field then used for agricultural purposes only. It is inaccessible except by passing over A's adjoining land or by trespassing on the land of a stranger. B is entitled to a right of way, for agricultural purposes only, over A's adjoining land to the field sold.

(b.) A, the owner of two fields, sells one to B, and retains the other. The field retained was at the date of the sale used for agricultural purposes only, and is inaccessible except by passing over the field sold to B. A is entitled to a right of way, for agricultural purposes only, over B's field to the field retained.

(c.) A sells B a house with windows overlooking A's land, which A retains. The light which passes over A's land to the windows is necessary for enjoying the house as it was enjoyed when the sale took effect. B is entitled to the light, and A cannot afterwards obstruct it by building on his land.

(d.) A sells B a house with windows overlooking A's land. The light passing over A's land to the windows is necessary for enjoying the house as it was enjoyed when the sale took effect. Afterwards A sells the land to C. Here C cannot obstruct the light by building on the land, for he takes it subject to the burdens to which it was subject in A's hands.

(e.) A is the owner of a house and adjoining land. The house has windows over-looking the land. A simultaneously sells the house to B, and the land to C. The light passing over the land is necessary for enjoying the house as it was enjoyed when the sale took effect. Here A impliedly grants B a right to the light, and C takes the land subject to the restriction that he may not build so as to obstruct such light.

(f.) A is the owner of a house and adjoining land. The house has windows overlooking the land. A, retaining the house, sells the land to B, without expressly reserving any easement. The light passing over the land is necessary for enjoying the house as it was enjoyed when the sale took effect. A is entitled to the light, and B cannot build on the land so as to obstruct such light.

(g.) A, the owner of a house, sells B a factory built on adjoining land. B is entitled, as against A, to pollute the air, when necessary, with smoke and vapours from the factory.

(h.) A, the owner of two adjoining houses, Y and Z, sells Y to B, and retains Z. B is entitled to the benefit of all the gutters and drains common to the two houses and necessary for enjoying Y as it was enjoyed when the sale took effect, and A is entitled to the benefit of all the gutters and drains common to the two houses and necessary for enjoying Z as it was enjoyed when the sale took effect.

(i.) A, the owner of two adjoining buildings, sells one to B, retaining the other. B is entitled to a right to lateral support from A's building, and A is entitled to a right to lateral support from B's building.

(j.) A, the owner of two adjoining buildings, sells one to B, and the other to C. C is entitled to lateral support from B's building, and B is entitled to lateral support from C's building.

(k.) A grants lands to B for the purpose of building a house thereon. B is entitled to such amount of lateral and subjacent support from A's land as is necessary for the safety of the house.

(l.) Under the Land Acquisition Act, 1870, a Railway Company compulsorily acquires a portion of B's land for the purpose of making a siding. The Company is entitled to such amount of lateral support from B's adjoining land as is essential for the safety of the siding.

(m.) Owing to the partition of joint property, A becomes the owner of an upper room in a building, and B becomes the owner of the portion of the building immediately beneath it. A is entitled to such amount of vertical support from B's portion as is essential for the safety of the upper room.

(n.) A lets a house and grounds to B for a particular business. B has no access to them other than by crossing A's land. B is entitled to a right of way over that land suitable to the business to be carried on by B in the house and grounds.

14.* When a right to a way of necessity is created under section thirteen, the transferor, the legal representative of the testator, or the owner of the share over which the right is exercised, as the case may be, is entitled to set out the way; but it must be reasonably convenient for the dominant owner.

When the person so entitled to set out the way refuses or neglects to do so, the dominant owner may set it out.

15. Where the access and use of light or air to and for any building have been peaceably enjoyed therewith, as an easement, without interruption, and for twenty years, and where support from one person's land, or things affixed thereto, has been peaceably received by another person's land subjected to artificial pressure, or by things affixed thereto, as an easement, without interruption, and for twenty years, and where a right of way or any other easement has been peaceably and openly enjoyed by any person claiming title thereto, as an easement, and as of right, without interruption, and for twenty years, the right to such access and use of light or air, support, or other easement, shall be absolute.

* In sec. 14 the italicized article a has been inserted by Act XII. of 1891.

Each of the said periods of twenty years shall be taken to be a period ending within two years next before the institution of the suit wherein the claim to which such period relates is contested.

Explanation I.—Nothing is an enjoyment within the meaning of this section when it has been had in pursuance of an agreement with the owner or occupier of the property over which the right is claimed, and it is apparent from the agreement that such right has not been granted as an easement, or, if granted as an easement, that it has been granted for a limited period, or subject to a condition on the fulfilment of which it is to cease.

Explanation II.—Nothing is an interruption within the meaning of this section unless where there is an actual cessation of the enjoyment by reason of an obstruction by the act of some person other than the claimant, and unless such obstruction is submitted to or acquiesced in for one year after the claimant has notice thereof and of the person making or authorizing the same to be made.

Explanation III.—Suspension of enjoyment in pursuance of a contract between the dominant and servient owners is not an interruption within the meaning of this section.

Explanation IV.—In the case of an easement to pollute water, the said period of twenty years begins when the pollution first prejudices perceptibly the servient heritage.

When the property over which a right is claimed under this section belongs to Government, this section shall be read as if, for the words “twenty years,” the words “sixty years” were substituted.

Illustrations.

(a.) A suit is brought in 1883 for obstructing a right of way. The defendant admits the obstruction, but denies the right of way. The plaintiff proves that the right was peaceably and openly enjoyed by him, claiming title thereto as an easement and as of right, without interruption, from 1st January 1862, to 1st January 1882. The plaintiff is entitled to judgment.

(b.) In a like suit the plaintiff shows that the right was peaceably and openly enjoyed by him for twenty years. The defendant proves that for a year of that time the plaintiff was entitled to possession of the servient heritage as lessee thereof, and enjoyed the right as such lessee. The suit shall be dismissed, for the right of way has not been enjoyed “as an easement” for twenty years.

shall be dismissed, for the right of way has not been enjoyed "as of right" for twenty years.

Notes.

In prescription at the common law, unity of ownership would extinguish the easement already acquired, unity of possession would only prevent the acquisition or suspend the right already acquired. In computing the period of twenty years a period during which the servient owner is disabled is not excluded.—I. L. R., 10 Cal. 214.

The plaintiff and defendant were proprietors of land and gardens upon opposite sides of a tidal creek which were protected by walls. The wall on the defendant's side becoming dilapidated, he constructed a fresh one altering its directions and encroaching five feet upon the bed of the stream. In a suit "for possession of the said land by demolishing the said wall," the plaintiff alleged that he was entitled to the soil upon which it was built, that the navigation was obstructed, and that there was a danger of his screw house falling down. It appeared, however, that the Government, and not the plaintiff, was owner of the soil, and that the plaintiff neither claimed, nor proved, a title to an easement to the flow of the water as it had been accustomed to flow, nor that the flow was seriously or sensibly diverted, so as to be an injury to his rights. The Privy Council reversed the decree of the High Court, and held that the plaintiff had failed to show either damage or injury.—L. R., 6 Indian App. Cas. 190.

16. Provided that, when any land upon, over, or from which any easement has been enjoyed or derived, has been held under or by virtue of any interest for life, or any term of years exceeding three years from the granting thereof, the time of the enjoyment of such easement during the continuance of such interest or term shall be excluded in the computation of the said last-mentioned period of twenty years, in case the claim is, within three years next after the determination of such interest or term, resisted by the person entitled, on such determination, to the said land.

Illustration.

A sues for a declaration that he is entitled to a right of way over B's land. A proves that he has enjoyed the right for twenty-five years; but B shows that during ten of these years C had a life-interest in the land; that on C's death B became entitled to the land; and that within two years after C's death he contested A's claim to the right. The suit must be dismissed, as A, with reference to the provisions of this section, has only proved enjoyment for fifteen years.

17. Easements acquired under section fifteen are said to be acquired by prescription, and are called prescriptive rights.

None of the following rights can be so acquired:—

(a) a right which would tend to the total destruction of the subject of the right, or the property on which, if the acquisition were made, liability would be imposed;

(b) a right to the free passage of light or air to an open space of ground ;

(c) a right to surface-water not flowing in a stream, and not permanently collected in a pool, tank, or otherwise ;

(d) a right to underground water not passing in a defined channel.

Note.—See I. L. R., 11 Madr. 16, noted under sec. 6.

18. An easement may be acquired in virtue of a local custom. Such easements are called customary easements.

Customary easements.

Illustrations.

(a.) By the custom of a certain village every cultivator of village land is entitled, as such, to graze his cattle on the common pasture. A having become the tenant of a plot of uncultivated land in the village breaks up and cultivates that plot. He thereby acquires an easement to graze his cattle in accordance with the custom.

By the custom of a certain town no owner or occupier of a house can open a new window therein so as substantially to invade his neighbour's privacy. A builds a house in the town near B's house. A thereupon acquires an easement that B shall not open new windows in his house so as to command a view of the portions of A's house which are ordinarily excluded from observation, and B acquires a like easement with respect to A's house.

19. Where the dominant heritage is transferred or devolves by act of parties, or by operation of law, the transfer or devolution shall, unless a contrary intention appears, be deemed to pass the easement to the person in whose favour the transfer or devolution takes place.

Transfer of dominant heritage passes easement.

Illustration.

A has certain land to which a right of way is annexed. A lets the land to B for twenty years. The right of way vests in B and his legal representative so long as the lease continues.

CHAPTER III.

THE INCIDENTS OF EASEMENTS.

20. The rules contained in this chapter are controlled by any contract between the dominant and servient owners relating to the servient heritage, and by the provisions of the instrument or decree (if any) by which the easement referred to was imposed.

Rules controlled by contract or title.

And when any incident of any customary easement is inconsistent with such rules, nothing in this chapter shall affect such incident.

Incidents of customary easements.

21. An easement must not be used for any purpose not connected with the enjoyment of the dominant heritage.

Bar to use unconnected enjoyment.

Illustrations.

(a.) A, as owner of a farm Y, has a right of way over B's land to Y. Lying beyond Y, A has another farm Z, the beneficial enjoyment of which is not necessary for the beneficial enjoyment of Y. He must not use the easement for the purpose of passing to and from Z.

(b.) A, as owner of a certain house, has a right of way to and from it. For the purpose of passing to and from the house, the right may be used, not only by A, but by the members of his family, his guests, lodgers, servants, workmen, visitors, and customers; for this is a purpose connected with the enjoyment of the dominant heritage. So, if A lets the house, he may use the right of way for the purpose of collecting the rent and seeing that the house is kept in repair.

22. The dominant owner must exercise his right in the mode which is least onerous to the servient owner; and when the exercise of an easement can, without detriment to the dominant owner, be confined to a determinate part of the servient heritage, such exercise shall, at the request of the servient owner, be so confined.

Exercise of easement.

Confinement of exercise of easement.

Illustrations.

(a.) A has a right of way over B's field. A must enter the way at either end, and not at any intermediate point.

(b.) A has a right annexed to his house to cut thatching-grass in B's swamp. A, when exercising his easement, must cut the grass so that the plants may not be destroyed.

Note.—See I. L. R., 1 Cal. 427; 4 W. R., 49.

23. Subject to the provisions of section twenty-two, the dominant owner may, from time to time, alter the mode and place of enjoying the easement, provided that he does not thereby impose any additional burden on the servient heritage.

Right to alter mode of enjoyment.

Exception.—The dominant owner of a right of way cannot vary his line of passage at pleasure, even though he does not thereby impose any additional burden on the servient heritage.

Illustrations.

(a.) A, the owner of a saw-mill, has a right to a flow of water sufficient to work the mill. He may convert the saw-mill into a corn-mill, provided that it can be worked by the same amount of water.

(b.) A has a right to discharge on B's land the rain-water from the eaves of A's house. This does not entitle A to advance his eaves if, by so doing, he imposes a greater burden on B's land.

(c.) A, as the owner of a paper-mill, acquires a right to pollute a stream by pouring in the refuse-liquor produced by making in the mill paper from rags. He may pollute the stream by pouring in similar liquor produced by making in the mill paper by a new process from bamboos, provided that he does not substantially increase the amount, or injuriously change the nature of the pollution.

24. The dominant owner is entitled, as against the servient owner, to do all acts necessary to secure the full enjoyment of the easement; but such acts must be done at such time and in such manner as, without detriment to the dominant owner, to cause the servient owner as little inconvenience as possible; and the dominant owner must repair, as far as practicable, the damage (if any) caused by the act to the servient heritage.

Rights to do acts necessary to secure the full enjoyment of an easement are called accessory rights.

Illustrations.

(a.) A has an easement to lay pipes in B's land to convey water to A's cistern. A may enter and dig the land in order to mend the pipes, but he must restore the surface to its original state.

(b.) A has an easement of a drain through B's land. The sewer with which the drain communicates is altered. A may enter upon B's land and alter the drain, to adapt it to the new sewer, provided that he does not thereby impose any additional burden on B's land.

(c.) A, as owner of a certain house, has a right of way over B's land. The way is out of repair, or a tree is blown down and falls across it. A may enter on B's land and repair the way or remove the tree from it.

(d.) A, as owner of a certain field, has a right of way over B's land. B renders the way impassable. A may deviate from the way and pass over the adjoining land of B, provided that the deviation is reasonable.

(e.) A, as owner of a certain house, has a right of way over B's field. A may remove rocks to make the way.

(f.) A has an easement of support from B's wall. The wall gives way. A may enter upon B's land and repair the wall.

(g.) A has an easement to have his land flooded by means of a dam in B's stream. The dam is half swept away by an inundation. A may enter upon B's land and repair the dam.

Notes.

The plaintiff having in a previous suit obtained a decree declaring his right of having the roof of his house projecting over the defendants' land, and discharging water thereon, now sued for a declaration of his right to go upon the defendants' land for the purpose of repairing the roof:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to the right claimed as being accessory to the easement already established, but that it should be exercised only once a year and after notice to the defendants.—I. L. R., 15 Madr. 286.

25. The expenses incurred in constructing works, or making repairs, or doing any other act necessary for the use or preservation of an easement, must be defrayed by the dominant owner.

Liability for expenses necessary for preservation of easement.

26. Where an easement is enjoyed by means of an artificial work, the dominant owner is liable to make compensation for any damage to the servient heritage arising from the want of repair of such work.

Liability for damage from want of repair.

27. The servient owner is not bound to do anything for the benefit of the dominant heritage, and he is entitled, as against the dominant owner, to use the servient heritage in any way consistent with the enjoyment of the easement; but he must not do any act tending to restrict the easement or to render its exercise less convenient.

Servient owner not bound to do anything.

Illustrations.

(a) A, as owner of a house, has a right to lead water and send sewage through B's land. B is not bound as servient owner to clear the watercourse or scour the sewer.

(b.) A grants a right of way through his land to B as owner of a field. A may feed his cattle on grass growing on the way, provided that B's right of way is not thereby obstructed; but he must not build a wall at the end of his land so as to prevent B from going beyond it, nor must he narrow the way so as to render the exercise of the right less easy than it was at the date of the grant.

(c.) A, in respect of his house, is entitled to an easement of support, from B's wall. B is not bound as servient owner to keep the wall standing and in repair. But he must not pull down or weaken the wall so as to make it incapable of rendering the necessary support.

(d.) A, in respect of his mill, is entitled to a watercourse through B's land. B must not drive stakes so as to obstruct the watercourse.

(e.) A, in respect of his house, is entitled to a certain quantity of light passing over B's land. B must not plant trees so as to obstruct the passage to A's windows of that quantity of light.

28. With respect to the extent of easements and the mode of their enjoyment the following provisions shall take effect:—

Extent of easements.

An easement of necessity is co-extensive with the necessity as it existed when the easement was imposed.

Easement of necessity.

The extent of any other easement and the mode of its enjoyment must be fixed with reference to the probable intention of the parties, and the purpose for which the right was imposed or acquired.

Other easements.

In the absence of evidence as to such intention and purpose—

(a) a right of way of any one kind does not include a right of way of any other kind :

Right of way.

(b) the extent of a right to the passage of light or air to a certain window, door, or other opening imposed by a testamentary or non-testamentary instrument, is the quantity of light or air that entered the opening at the time the testator died or the non-testamentary instrument was made :

Right to light or air acquired by grant.

(c) the extent of a prescriptive right to the passage of light or air to a certain window, door, or other opening, is that quantity of light or air which has been accustomed to enter that opening during the whole of the prescriptive period irrespectively of the purposes for which it has been used :

Prescriptive right to light or air.

(d) the extent of a prescriptive right to pollute air or water is the extent of the pollution at the commencement of the period of user on completion of which the right arose : and

Prescriptive right to pollute air and water.

(e) the extent of every other prescriptive right and the mode of its enjoyment must be determined by the accustomed user of the right.

Other prescriptive rights.

29. The dominant owner cannot, by merely altering or adding to the dominant heritage, substantially increase an easement.

Increase of easement.

Where an easement has been granted or bequeathed so that its extent shall be proportionate to the extent of the dominant heritage, if the dominant heritage is increased by alluvion, the easement is proportionately increased, and if the dominant heritage is diminished by diluvion, the easement is proportionately diminished.

Save as aforesaid, no easement is affected by any change in the extent of the dominant or the servient heritage.

Illustrations.

(a.) A, the owner of a mill, has acquired a prescriptive right to divert to his mill part of the water of a stream. A alters the machinery of his mill. He cannot thereby increase his right to divert water.

(b.) A has acquired an easement to pollute a stream by carrying on a manufacture on its banks by which a certain quantity of foul matter is discharged into it. A extends his works, and thereby increases the quantity discharged. He is responsible to the lower riparian owners for injury done by such increase.

(c.) A, as the owner of a farm, has a right to take, for the purpose of manuring his farm, leaves which have fallen from the trees on B's land. A buys a field, and unites it to his farm. A is not thereby entitled to take leaves to manure this field.

30. Where a dominant heritage is divided between two or more persons, the easement becomes annexed to each of the shares, but not so as to increase substantially the burden on the servient heritage: provided that such annexation is consistent with the terms of the instrument, decree, or revenue proceeding (if any) under which the division was made, and, in the case of prescriptive rights, with the user during the prescriptive period.

Illustrations.

(a.) A house to which a right of way by a particular path is annexed is divided into two parts, one of which is granted to A, the other to B. Each is entitled, in respect of his part, to a right of way by the same path.

(b.) A house to which is annexed the right of drawing water from a well to the extent of fifty buckets a day is divided into two distinct heritages, one of which is granted to A, the other to B. A and B are each entitled, in respect of his heritage, to draw from the well fifty buckets a day; but the amount drawn by both must not exceed fifty buckets a day.

(c.) A, having in respect of his house an easement of light, divides the house into three distinct heritages. Each of these continues to have the right to have its windows unobstructed.

31. In the case of excessive user of an easement the servient owner may, without prejudice to any other remedies to which he may be entitled, obstruct the user, but only on the servient heritage; provided that such user cannot be obstructed when the obstruction would interfere with the lawful enjoyment of the easement.

Illustration.

A, having a right to the free passage over B's land of light to four windows six feet by four, increases their size and number. It is impossible to obstruct the passage of light to the new windows without also obstructing the passage of light to the ancient windows. B cannot obstruct the excessive user.

CHAPTER IV.

THE DISTURBANCE OF EASEMENTS.

32. The owner or occupier of the dominant heritage is entitled to enjoy the easement without disturbance by any other person.

Illustration.

A, as owner of a house, has a right of way over B's land. C unlawfully enters on B's land, and obstructs A in his right of way. A may sue C for compensation, not for the entry, but for the obstruction.

33. The owner of any interest in the dominant heritage, or the occupier of such heritage, may institute a suit for compensation for the disturbance of the easement or of any right accessory thereto; provided that the disturbance has actually caused substantial damage to the plaintiff.

Explanation I.—The doing of any act likely to injure the plaintiff by affecting the evidence of the easement, or by materially diminishing the value of the dominant heritage, is substantial damage within the meaning of this section and section thirty-four.

Explanation II.—Where the easement disturbed is a right to the free passage of light passing to the openings in a house, no damage is substantial within the meaning of this section, unless it falls within the first Explanation, or interferes materially with the physical comfort of the plaintiff, or prevents him from carrying on his accustomed business in the dominant heritage as beneficially as he had done previous to instituting the suit.

Explanation III.—Where the easement disturbed is a right to the free passage of air to the openings in a house, damage is substantial within the meaning of this section if it interferes materially with the physical comfort of the plaintiff, though it is not injurious to his health.

Illustrations.

(a.) A places a permanent obstruction in a path over which B, as tenant of C's house, has a right of way. This is substantial damage to C, for it may affect the evidence of his reversionary right to the easement.

(b.) A, as owner of a house, has a right to walk along one side of B's house. B builds a verandah overhanging the way about ten feet from the ground, and so as not to occasion any inconvenience to foot-passengers using the way. This is not substantial damage to A.

34. The removal of the means of support to which a dominant owner is entitled does not give rise to a right to recover compensation unless and until substantial damage is actually sustained.

When cause of action arises for removal of support.

35. Subject to the provisions of the Specific Relief Act, 1877, sections 52 to 57 (both inclusive), an injunction may be granted to restrain the disturbance of an easement—

Injunction to restrain disturbance.

(a) if the easement is actually disturbed,—when compensation for such disturbance might be recovered under this chapter:

(b) if the disturbance is only threatened or intended,—when the act threatened or intended must necessarily, if performed, disturb the easement.

36. Notwithstanding the provisions of section twenty-four, the dominant owner cannot himself abate a wrongful obstruction of an easement.

Abatement of obstruction of easement.

CHAPTER V.

THE EXTINCTION, SUSPENSION, AND REVIVAL OF EASEMENTS.

37. When, from a cause which preceded the imposition of an easement, the person by whom it was imposed ceases to have any right in the servient heritage, the easement is extinguished.

Extinction by dissolution of right of servient owner.

Exception.—Nothing in this section applies to an easement lawfully imposed by a mortgagor in accordance with section ten.

Illustrations.

(a.) A transfers Sultanpur to B on condition that he does not marry C. B imposes an easement on Sultanpur. Then B marries C. B's interest in Sultanpur ends, and with it the easement is extinguished.

(b.) A, in 1860, let Sultanpur to B for thirty years from the date of the lease. B, in 1861, imposes an easement on the land in favour of C, who enjoys the easement peaceably and openly as an easement without interruption for twenty-nine years. B's interest in Sultanpur then ends, and with it C's easement.

(d.) A mortgages Sultanpur to B, and lawfully imposes an easement on the land in favour of C in accordance with the provisions of section 10. The land is sold to D in satisfaction of the mortgage-debt. The easement is not thereby extinguished.

Note.

A sale of the servient heritage, free from incumbrances for arrears of rent or revenue, does not, it is taken, extinguish a prescriptive easement. But an acquisition of land under the Land Acquisition Act free from incumbrances, extinguishes such incorporeal rights.—14 W. R. Cr. 72.

38. An easement is extinguished when the dominant owner releases it, expressly or impliedly, to the servient owner.

Extinction by release.

Such release can be made only in the circumstances and to the extent in and to which the dominant owner can alienate the dominant heritage.

An easement may be released as to part only of the servient heritage.

Explanation I.—An easement is impliedly released—

(a) where the dominant owner expressly authorizes an act of a permanent nature to be done on the servient heritage, the necessary consequence of which is to prevent his future enjoyment of the easement, and such act is done in pursuance of such authority ;

(b) where any permanent alteration is made in the dominant heritage of such a nature as to show that the dominant owner intended to cease to enjoy the easement in future.

Explanation II.—Mere non-user of an easement is not an implied release within the meaning of this section.

Illustrations.

(a.) A, B, and C, are co-owners of a house to which an easement is annexed. A, without the consent of B and C, releases the easement. This release is effectual only as against A and his legal representative.

(b.) A grants B an easement over A's land for the beneficial enjoyment of his house. B assigns the house to C. B then purports to release the easement. The release is ineffectual.

(c.) A, having the right to discharge his eaves-droppings into B's yard, expressly authorizes B to build over this yard to a height which will interfere with the discharge. B builds accordingly. A's easement is extinguished to the extent of the interference.

(d.) A having an easement of light to a window, builds up that window with bricks and mortar so as to manifest an intention to abandon the easement permanently.

The easement is impliedly released.

(e.) A, having a projecting roof by means of which he enjoys an easement to discharge eaves-droppings on B's land, permanently alters the roof, so as to direct the rain-water into a different channel, and discharge it on C's land. The easement is impliedly released.

39. An easement is extinguished when the servient owner, in exercise of a power reserved in this behalf, revokes the easement.

Extinction by revocation.

40. An easement is extinguished where it has been imposed for a limited period, or acquired on condition that it shall become void on the performance or non-performance of a specified act, and the period expires or the condition is fulfilled.

g of dissolving condition.

Extinction on termination of necessity.

41. An easement of necessity is extinguished when the necessity comes to an end.

Illustration.

A grants B a field inaccessible except by passing over A's adjoining land. B afterwards purchases a part of that land over which he can pass to his field. The right of way over A's land which B had acquired is extinguished.

Notes.

The Statute contains no special rule respecting the extinction of an easement acquired by or against Government.

This provision goes beyond an opinion expressed in Sham Churn's case, that abandonment, to be effectual, required an act of the servient owner done on the faith thereof.—I. L. R., 1 Cal. 426.

See 5 B. L. R., App. 66.

42. An easement is extinguished when it becomes incapable of being at any time and under any circumstances beneficial to the dominant owner.

43. Where, by any permanent change in the dominant heritage, the burden on the servient heritage is materially increased, and cannot be reduced by the servient owner without interfering with the lawful enjoyment of the easement, the easement is extinguished, unless—

Extinction by permanent
tage.

(a) it was intended for the beneficial enjoyment of the dominant heritage to whatever extent the easement should be used ; or

(b) the injury caused to the servient owner by the change is so slight that no reasonable person would complain of it ; or

(c) the easement is an easement of necessity.

Nothing in this section shall be deemed to apply to an easement entitling the dominant owner to support of the dominant heritage.

Note.—See I. L. R., 7 Cal. 453.

44. An easement is extinguished where the servient heritage is by superior force so permanently altered that the dominant owner can no longer enjoy such easement:

Extinction on permanent alteration of servient heritage by superior force.

Provided that, where a way of necessity is destroyed by superior force, the dominant owner has a right to another way over the servient heritage, and the provisions of section fourteen apply to such way.

Illustrations.

(a.) A grants to B, as the owner of a certain house, a right to fish in a river running through A's land. The river changes its course permanently, and runs through C's land. B's easement is extinguished.

(b.) Access to a path over which A has a right of way is permanently cut off by an earthquake. A's right is extinguished.

45. An easement is extinguished when either the dominant or the servient heritage is completely destroyed.

Extinction by destruction of either heritage.

Illustration.

A has a right of way over a road running along the foot of a sea cliff. The road is washed away by a permanent encroachment of the sea. A's easement is extinguished.

Illustrations.

(a.) A, as the owner of a house, has a right of way over B's field. A mortgages his house, and B mortgages his field to C. Then C forecloses both mortgages, and becomes thereby absolute owner of both house and field. The right of way is extinguished.

(b.) The dominant owner acquires only part of the servient heritage : the easement is not extinguished, except in the case illustrated in section forty-one.

(c.) The servient owner acquires the dominant heritage in connection with a third person : the easement is not extinguished.

(d.) The separate owners of two separate dominant heritages jointly acquire the heritage which is servient to the two separate heritages : the easements are not extinguished.

(e.) The joint owners of the dominant heritage jointly acquire the servient heritage : the easement is extinguished.

(f.) A single right of way exists over two servient heritages for the beneficial enjoyment of a single dominant heritage. The dominant owner acquires one only of the servient heritages. The easement is not extinguished.

Note.—See 15 B. L. R., 361.

47. A continuous easement is extinguished when it totally ceases to be enjoyed as such for an unbroken period of twenty years.

Extinction by non-enjoyment.

A discontinuous easement is extinguished when, for a like period, it has not been enjoyed as such.

Such period shall be reckoned, in the case of a continuous easement, from the day on which its enjoyment was obstructed by the servient owner, or rendered impossible by the dominant owner, and, in the case of a discontinuous easement, from the day on which it was last enjoyed by any person as dominant owner :

Provided that, if, in the case of a discontinuous easement, the dominant owner, within such period, registers, under the Indian Registration Act, 1877, a declaration of his intention to retain such easement, it shall not be extinguished until a period of twenty years has elapsed from the date of the registration.

Where an easement can be legally enjoyed only at a certain place, or at certain times, or between certain hours, or for a particular purpose, its enjoyment during the said period at another place, or at other times, or between other hours or for another purpose, does not prevent its extinction under this section.

The circumstance that, during the said period, no one was in possession of the servient heritage, or that the easement could not be enjoyed, or that a right accessory thereto was enjoyed, or that the dominant owner was not aware of its existence, or that he enjoyed it in ignorance of his right to do so, does not prevent its extinction under this section.

An easement is not extinguished under this section—

(a) where the cessation is in pursuance of a contract between the dominant and servient owners ;

(b) where the dominant heritage is held in co-ownership, and one of the co-owners enjoys the easement within the said period, or

(c) where the easement is a necessary easement.

Where several heritages are respectively subject to rights of way for the benefit of a single heritage, and the ways are continuous, such rights shall, for the purposes of this section, be deemed to be a single easement.

Illustration.

A has, as annexed to his house, rights of way from the high road thither over the heritages X and Z and the intervening heritage Y. Before the twenty years expire, A exercises his right of way over X. His rights of way over Y and Z are not extinguished.

48. When an easement is extinguished, the rights (if any) accessory thereto are also extinguished.

Extinction of accessory rights.

Illustration.

A has an easement to draw water from B's well. As accessory thereto, he has a right of way over B's land to and from the well. The easement to draw water is extinguished under section 47. The right of way is also extinguished.

49. An easement is suspended when the dominant owner becomes entitled to possession of the servient heritage for a limited interest therein, or when the servient owner becomes entitled to possession of the dominant heritage for a limited interest therein.

Suspension of easement.

50. The servient owner has no right to require that an easement be continued; and, notwithstanding the provisions of section twenty-six, he is not entitled to compensation for damage caused to the servient heritage in consequence of the extinguishment or suspension of the easement if the dominant owner has given to the servient owner such notice as will enable him, without unreasonable expense, to protect the servient heritage from such damage.

Servient owner not entitled to require continuance.

Where such notice has not been given, the servient owner is entitled to compensation for damage caused to the servient heritage in consequence of such extinguishment or suspension.

Compensation for damage caused by extinguishment.

Illustration..

A, in exercise of an easement, diverts to his canal the water of B's stream. The diversion continues for many years, and during that time the bed of the stream partly fills up. A then abandons his easement, and restores the stream to its ancient course. B's land is consequently flooded. B sues A for compensation for the damage caused by the flooding. It is proved that A gave B a month's notice of his intention to abandon the easement, and that such notice was sufficient to enable B, without unreasonable expense, to have prevented the damage. The suit must be dismissed.

51. An easement extinguished under section forty-five revives (a) when the destroyed heritage is, before twenty years have expired, restored by the deposit of alluvion; (b) when the destroyed heritage is a servient building, and, before twenty years have expired, such building is rebuilt upon the same site; and (c) when the destroyed heritage is a dominant building, and, before twenty years have expired, such building is rebuilt upon the same site and in such a manner as not to impose a greater burden on the servient heritage.

An easement extinguished under section 46 revives when the grant or bequest by which the unity of ownership was produced is set aside by the decree of a competent Court. A necessary easement extinguished under the same section revives when the unity of ownership ceases from any other cause.

A suspended easement revives if the cause of suspension is removed before the right is extinguished under section 47.

Illustration.

A, as the absolute owner of field Y, has a right of way thither over B's field Z. A obtains from B a lease of Z for twenty years. The easement is suspended so long as A remains lessee of Z. But when A assigns the lease to C, or surrenders it to B, the right of way revives.

CHAPTER VI.

LICENSES.

52. Where one person grants to another, or to a definite number of other persons, a right to do, or continue to do, in or upon the immovable property of the grantor, something which would, in the absence of such right, be unlawful, and such right does not amount to an easement or an interest in the property, the right is called a license.

"License" defined.

53. A license may be granted by any one in the circumstances and to the extent in and to which he may transfer his interests in the property affected by the license.

Who may grant license.

54. The grant of a license may be express or implied from the conduct of the grantor, and an agreement which purports to create an easement, but is ineffectual for that purpose, may operate to create a license.

Grant may be express or implied.

55. All licenses necessary for the enjoyment of any interest, or the exercise of any right, are implied in the constitution of such interest or right. Such licenses are called accessory licenses.

Accessory licenses annexed by law.

Illustration.

A sells the trees growing on his land to B. B is entitled to go on the land and take away the trees.

56. Unless a different intention is expressed or necessarily implied, a license to attend a place of public entertainment may be transferred by the licensee; but, save as aforesaid, a license cannot be transferred by the licensee or exercised by his servants or agents.

License when transferable.

Illustrations.

(a.) A grants B a right to walk over A's field whenever he pleases. The right is not annexed to any immovable property of B. The right cannot be transferred.

(b.) The Government grant B a license to erect and use temporary grain-sheds on Government land. In the absence of express provision to the contrary, B's servants may enter on the land for the purpose of erecting sheds, erect the same, deposit grain therein, and remove grain therefrom.

57. The grantor of a license is bound to disclose to the licensee any defect in the property affected by the license likely to be dangerous to the person or property of the licensee, of which the grantor is, and the licensee is not, aware.

Grantor's duty to disclose defects.

58. The grantor of a license is bound not to do anything likely to render the property affected by the license dangerous to the person or property of the licensee.

Grantor's duty not to render property unsafe.

59. When the grantor of the license transfers the property affected thereby, the transferee is not as such bound by the license.

Grantor's transferee not bound by license.

60. A license may be revoked by the grantor, unless—

License when revocable.

(a) it is coupled with a transfer of property, and such transfer is in force:

(b) the licensee, acting upon the license, has executed a work of a permanent character, and incurred expenses in the execution.

Revocation express or implied.

61. The revocation of a license may be express or implied.

Illustrations.

(a.) A, the owner of a field, grants a license to B to use a path across it. A, with intent to revoke the license, locks a gate across the path. The license is revoked.

(b.) A, the owner of a field, grants a license to B to stack hay on the field. A lets or sells the field to C. The license is revoked.

Note.

In a suit by a zamindar to have his right declared to build a house on some waste-land in the mauza, the defendants, who were tenants in the mauza, resisted the claim on the ground that they had built wells and water courses on the land, and had a right also to use it as a threshing-floor and for stacking cow-dung:—Held, that the defendants having acquired no right adverse to the plaintiff as owners, by prescription or otherwise in the land, their right of use could only be as licensees of the plaintiff; and although he could not interfere with their right to the wells, which were works of a permanent character, and on which the defendants had incurred expenses, he could revoke the license as to the other use claimed of the land, and his claim to build the house should therefore be decreed.—I. L. R., 8 Al. 69.

License when deemed revoked.

62. A license is deemed to be revoked—

(a) when, from a cause preceding the grant of it, the grantor ceases to have any interest in the property affected by the license :

(b) when the licensee releases it, expressly or impliedly, to the grantor or his representative :

(c) where it has been granted for a limited period, or acquired on condition that it shall become void on the performance or non-performance of a specified act, and the period expires, or the condition is fulfilled :

(d) where the property affected by the license is destroyed or by superior force so permanently altered that the licensee can no longer exercise his right :

(e) where the licensee becomes entitled to the absolute ownership of the property affected by the license :

(f) where the license is granted for a specified purpose, and the purpose is attained, or abandoned, or becomes impracticable :

(g) where the license is granted to the licensee as holding a particular office, employment, or character, and such office, employment, or character ceases to exist :

(h) where the license totally ceases to be used as such for an unbroken period of twenty-years, and such cessation is not in pursuance of a contract between the grantor and the licensee :

(i) in the case of an accessory license, when the interest or right to which it is accessory ceases to exist.

63. Where a license is revoked, the licensee is entitled to a reasonable time to leave the property affected thereby, and to remove any goods which he has been allowed to place on such property.

64. Where a license has been granted for a consideration, and the licensee, without any fault of his own, is evicted by the grantor before he has fully enjoyed, under the license, the right for which he contracted, he is entitled to recover compensation from the grantor.

ACT No. II. OF 1882.

RECEIVED THE G.-G.'s ASSENT ON THE 13TH JANUARY, 1882.

An Act to define and amend the law relating to Private Trusts and Trustees.

Preamble. WHEREAS it is expedient to define and amend the law relating to private trusts and trustees ; It is hereby enacted as follows :—

CHAPTER I.

PRELIMINARY.

Short title.
Commencement.

1. This Act may be called “The come into force on the first day of March 1882.

Local extent. It extends in the first instance to the territories respectively administered by the Governor of Madras in Council, the Lieutenant Governors of the North-Western Provinces and the Panjab, the Chief Commissioners of Oudh, the Central Provinces, Coorg, and Assam ; and the Local Government may, from time to Savings. time, by notification in the official Gazette, extend it to any other part of British India. But nothing herein contained affects the rules of Muhammadan law as to waqf, or the mutual relations of the members of an undivided family as determined by any customary or personal law, or applies to public or private religious or charitable endowments, or to trusts to distribute prizes taken in war among the captors ; and nothing in the second chapter of this Act applies to trusts created before the said day.

2. The Statute and Acts mentioned in the schedule hereto annexed shall, to the extent mentioned in the said schedule, be repealed in the territories to which this Act for the time being extends.

Repeal of enactments.

3. A “trust” is an obligation annexed to the ownership of property, and arising out of a confidence reposed in and accepted by the owner, or declared and accepted by him, for the benefit of another, or of another and the owner :

the person who reposes or declares the confidence is called the "author of the trust;" the person who accepts the confidence is called the "trustee;" the person for whose benefit the confidence is accepted is called the "beneficiary;" the subject-matter of the trust is called "trust-property" or "trust-money;" the "beneficial interest" or "interest" of the beneficiary is his right against the trustee as owner of the trust-property; and the instrument (if any) by which the trust is declared is called the "instrument of trust."

a breach of any duty imposed on a trustee, as such, by any law for the time being in force, is called a "breach of trust:"

and in this Act, unless there be something repugnant in the subject or context, "registered" means registered under the law for the registration of documents for the time being in force: a person is said to have 'notice' of fact either when he actually knows that fact, or when, but for wilful abstention from inquiry or gross negligence, he would have known it, or when information of the fact is given to or obtained by his agent, under the circumstances mentioned in the Indian Contract Act, 1872, section 229; and all expressions used herein, and defined in the Indian Contract Act, 1872, shall be deemed to have the meanings respectively attributed to them by that Act.

CHAPTER II.

OF THE CREATION OF TRUSTS.

4. A trust may be created for any lawful purpose. The purpose of a trust is lawful unless it is (a) forbidden by law or (b) is of such a nature that, if permitted, it would defeat the provisions of any law, or (c) is fraudulent, or (d) involves or implies injury to the person or property of another, or (e) the Court regards it as immoral or opposed to public policy.

Every trust of which the purpose is unlawful is void. And where a trust is created for two purposes, of which one is lawful and the other unlawful, and the two purposes cannot be separated, the whole trust is void.

Explanation.—In this section, the expression “law” includes, where the trust-property is immoveable and situate in a foreign country, the law of such country.

Illustrations.

(a.) A conveys property to B in trust to apply the profits to the nurture of female foundlings to be trained up as prostitutes. The trust is void.

(b.) A bequeaths property to B in trust to employ it in carrying on a smuggling business, and out of the profits thereof to support A's children. The trust is void.

(c.) A, while in insolvent circumstances, transfers property to B in trust for A during his life, and after his death for B. A is declared an insolvent. The trust for A is invalid as against his creditors.

5. No trust in relation to immoveable property is valid unless declared by a non-testamentary instrument in writing signed by the author of the trust or the trustee and registered, or by the will of the author of the trust or of the trustee.

Trust of immoveable property.

No trust in relation to moveable property is valid unless declared as aforesaid, or unless the ownership of the property is transferred to the trustee.

of moveable pro-

These rules do not apply where they would operate so as to effectuate a fraud.

6. Subject to the provisions of section five, a trust is created when the author of the trust indicates with reasonable certainty by any words or acts (a) an intention on his part to create thereby a trust, (b) the purpose of the trust, (c) the beneficiary, and (d) the trust-property, and (unless the trust is declared by will, or the author of the trust is himself to be the trustees) transfers the trust-property to the trustee.

Creation of trust.

Illustrations.

(a.) A bequeaths certain property to B, “having the fullest confidence that he will dispose of it for the benefit of” C. This creates a trust so far as regards A and C.

(b.) A bequeaths certain property to B, “hoping he will continue it in the family.” This does not create a trust, as the beneficiary is not indicated with reasonable certainty.

(c.) A bequeaths certain property to B, requesting him to distribute it amongst such members of C's family as B should think most deserving. This does not create a trust, for the beneficiaries are not indicated with reasonable certainty.

(d.) A bequeaths certain property to B, desiring him to divide the bulk of it among C's children. This does not create a trust, for the property is not indicated with sufficient certainty.

(e.) A bequeaths a shop and stock-in-trade to B on condition that he pays A's debts and a legacy to C. This is a condition, not a trust for A's creditors and C.

Who may create trusts.

7. A trust may be created—

(a) by every person competent to contract, and,
(b) with the permission of a principal Civil Court of original jurisdiction, by or on behalf of a minor;

but subject in each case to the law for the time being in force as to the circumstances and extent in and to which the author of the trust may dispose of the trust-property.

Subject of trust.

8. The subject-matter of a trust must be property transferable to the beneficiary.

It must not be a merely beneficial interest under a subsisting trust.

Who may be beneficiary.

9. Every person capable of holding property may be a beneficiary.

A proposed beneficiary may renounce his interest under the trust by disclaimer addressed to the trustee, or by setting up with notice of the trust, a claim inconsistent therewith.

Who may be trustee.

10. Every person capable of holding property may be a trustee; but, where the trust involves the exercise of discretion, he cannot execute it unless he is competent to contract.

No one bound to accept trust.

No one is bound to accept a trust.

A trust is accepted by any words or acts of the trustee indicating with reasonable certainty such acceptance.

Acceptance of trust.

Instead of accepting a trust, the intended trustee may, within a reasonable period, disclaim it, and such disclaimer shall prevent the trust-property from vesting in him.

Disclaimer of trust.

A disclaimer by one of two or more co-trustees vests the trust property in the other or others, and makes him or them sole trustee or trustees from the date of the creation of the trust.

Illustrations.

(a.) A bequeaths certain property to B and C, his executors, as trustees for D. B and C prove A's will. This is in itself an acceptance of the trust, and B and C hold the property in trust for D.

(b.) A transfers certain property to B in trust to sell it, and to pay, out of the proceeds, A's debts. B accepts the trust, and sells the property. So far as regards B, a trust of the proceeds is created for A's creditors.

(c.) A bequeaths a lakh of rupees to B upon certain trusts, and appoints him his executor. B severs the lakh from the general assets, and appropriates it to the specific purpose. This is an acceptance of the trust.

CHAPTER III.

OF THE DUTIES AND LIABILITIES OF TRUSTEES.

11. The trustee is bound to fulfil the purpose of the trust, and to obey the directions of the author of the trust given at the time of its creation, except as modified by the consent of all the beneficiaries being competent to contract.

Trustee to execute trust.

Where the beneficiary is incompetent to contract, his consent may, for the purposes of this section, be given by a principal Civil Court of original jurisdiction.

Nothing in this section shall be deemed to require a trustee to obey any direction when to do so would be impracticable, illegal, or manifestly injurious to the beneficiaries.

Explanation.—Unless a contrary intention be expressed, the purpose of a trust for the payment of debts shall be deemed to be (a) to pay only the debts of the author of the trust existing and recoverable at the date of the instrument of trust, or, when such instrument is a will, at the date of his death, and (b), in the case of debts not bearing interest, to make such payment without interest.

Illustrations.

(a.) A, a trustee, is simply authorized to sell certain land by public auction. He cannot sell the land by private contract.

(b.) A, a trustee of certain land for X, Y, and Z, is authorized to sell the land to B for a specified sum. X, Y, and Z, being competent to contract, consent that A may sell the land to C for a less sum. A may sell the land accordingly.

(c.) A, a trustee for B and her children, is directed by the author of the trust to lend, on B's request, trust-property to B's husband, C, on the security of his bond. C becomes insolvent, and B requests A to make the loan. A may refuse to make it.

12. A trustee is bound to acquaint himself, as soon as possible, with the nature and circumstances of the trust property, to obtain, where necessary, a transfer of the trust-property to himself, and (subject to the provisions of the instrument of trust) to get in trust-moneys invested on insufficient or hazardous security.

Trustee to inform himself of state of trust property.

Illustrations.

(a.) The trust-property is a debt outstanding on personal security. The instrument of trust gives the trustee no discretionary power to leave the debt so outstanding. The trustee's duty is to recover the debt without unnecessary delay.

(b.) The trust-property is money in the hands of one of two co-trustees. No discretionary power is given by the instrument of trust. The other co-trustee must not allow the former to retain the money for a longer period than the circumstances of the case required.

13. A trustee is bound to maintain and defend all such suits, and (subject to the provisions of the instrument of trust) to take such other steps as, regard being had to the nature and amount or value of the trust-property, may be reasonably requisite for the preservation of the trust-property and the assertion or protection of the title thereto.

Trustee to protect title to trust-property.

Illustration.

The trust-property is immoveable property which has been given to the author of the trust by an unregistered instrument. Subject to the provisions of the Indian Registration Act, 1877, the trustee's duty is to cause the instrument to be registered.

14. The trustee must not, for himself or another, set-up or aid any title to the trust-property adverse to the interest of the beneficiary.

Trustee not to set up title adverse to beneficiary.

15. A trustee is bound to deal with the trust-property as carefully as a man of ordinary prudence would deal with such property if it were his own; and, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, a trustee so dealing is not responsible for the loss, destruction, or deterioration of the trust-property.

Care required from trustee.

Illustrations.

(a.) A, living in Calcutta, is a trustee for B, living in Bombay. A remits trust-funds to B by bills drawn by a person of undoubted credit in favour of the trustee as such, and payable at Bombay. The bills are dishonoured. A is not bound to make good the loss.

(b.) A, a trustee of leasehold property, directs the tenant to pay the rents on account of the trust to a banker, B, then in credit. The rents are accordingly paid to B, and A leaves the money with B only till wanted. Before the money is drawn out, B becomes insolvent. A, having had no reason to believe that B was in insolvent circumstances, is not bound to make good the loss.

(c.) A, a trustee of two debts for B, releases one, and compounds the other, in good faith, and reasonably believing that it is for B's interest to do so. A is not bound to make good any loss caused thereby to B.

(d.) A, a trustee directed to sell the trust-property by auction, sells the same, but does not advertise the sale, and otherwise fails in reasonable diligence in inviting competition. A is bound to make good the loss caused thereby to the beneficiary.

(e.) A, a trustee for B, in execution of his trust, sells the trust-property, but from want of due diligence on his part fails to receive part of the purchase-money. A is bound to make good the loss thereby caused to B.

(f.) A, a trustee for B of a policy of insurance, has funds in hand for payment of the premiums. A neglects to pay the premiums, and the policy is consequently forfeited. A is bound to make good the loss to B.

(g.) A bequeaths certain moneys to B and C as trustees, and authorizes them to continue trust-moneys upon the personal security of a certain firm in which A had himself invested them. A dies, and a change takes place in the firm. B and C must not permit the moneys to remain upon the personal security of the new firm.

(h.) A, a trustee for B, allows the trust to be executed solely by his co-trustee, C. C misapplies the trust-property. A is personally answerable for the loss resulting to B.

16. Where the trust is created for the benefit of several persons in succession, and the trust-property is of a wasting nature or a future or reversionary interest, the trustee is bound, unless an intention to the contrary may be inferred from the instrument of trust, to convert the property into property of a permanent and immediately profitable character.

Illustrations.

(a.) A bequeaths to B all his property in trust for C during his life, and on his death for D, and on D's death for E. A's property consists of three leasehold houses, and there is nothing in A's will to show that he intended the houses to be enjoyed in specie. B should sell the houses, and invest the proceeds in accordance with section twenty.

(b.) A bequeaths to B his three leasehold houses in Calcutta and all the furniture therein in trust for C during his life, and on his death for D, and on D's death for E. Here an intention that the houses and furniture should be enjoyed in specie appears clearly, and B should not sell them.

17. Where there are more beneficiaries than one, the trustee is bound to be impartial, and must not execute the trust for the advantage of one at the expense of another.

Where the trustee has a discretionary power, nothing in this section shall be deemed to authorize the Court to control the exercise reasonably and in good faith of such discretion.

Illustration.

A, a trustee for B, C, and D, is empowered to choose between several specified modes of investing the trust-property. A in good faith chooses one of these modes. The Court will not interfere, although the result of the choice may be to vary the relative rights of B, C, and D.

18. Where the trust is created for the benefit of several persons in succession, and one of them is in possession of the trust-property, if he commits, or threatens to commit, any act which is des-destructive or permanently injurious thereto, the trustee is bound to take measures to prevent such act.

19. A trustee is bound (a) to keep clear and accurate accounts of the trust-property, and (b), at all reasonable times, at the request of the beneficiary, to furnish him with full and accurate information as to the amount and state of the trust-property.

20. Where the trust-property consists of money, and cannot be applied immediately or at an early date to the purposes of the trust, the trustee is bound (subject to any direction contained in the instrument of trust) to invest the money on the following securities, and on no others:—

(a) in promissory notes, debentures, stock, or other securities of the Government of India, or of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland;

(b) in bonds, debentures, and annuities charged by the Imperial Parliament on the revenues of India;

(c) in stock or debentures of, or shares in, Railway or other Companies, the interest whereon shall have been guaranteed by the Secretary of State for India in Council;

(d) in debentures or other securities for money issued by, or on behalf of, any municipal body under the authority of any Act of a Legislature established in British India;

(e) on a first mortgage of immoveable property situate in British India: provided that the property is not a leasehold for a term of years, and that the value of the property exceeds by one-third, or, if consisting of buildings, exceeds by one-half, the mortgage-money; or

(f) on any other security expressly authorized by the instrument of trust, or by any rule which the High Court may, from time to time, prescribe in this behalf:

Provided that, where there is a person competent to contract, and entitled in possession to receive the income of the trust-property for his life, or for any greater estate, no investment on any security mentioned or referred to in clauses (d), (e) and (f), shall be made without his consent in writing.

21. Nothing in Section twenty shall apply to investments made before this Act comes into force, or shall be deemed to preclude an investment on a mortgage of immoveable property of land pledged to Government under Act XXVI of 1871.

property already pledged as security for an advance under the Land Improvement Act, 1871, or, in case the trust-money does not exceed three thousand rupees, a deposit thereof in a Government Savings Bank.

Note.—Act XXVI. of 1871 is repealed by Act XIX. of 1883.

22. Where a trustee directed to sell within a specified time extends such time, the burden of proving, as between himself and the beneficiary, that the latter is not prejudiced by the extension, lies upon the trustee, unless the extension has been authorized by a principal Civil Court of original jurisdiction.

Illustration.

A bequeaths property to B, directing him, with all convenient speed and within five years, to sell it, and apply the proceeds for the benefit of C. In the exercise of reasonable discretion, B postpones the sale for six years. The sale is not thereby rendered invalid, but C, alleging that he has been injured by the postponement, institutes a suit against B to obtain compensation. In such suit the burden of proving that C has not been injured lies on B.

23. Where the trustee commits a breach of trust, he is liable to make good the loss which the trust-property or the beneficiary has thereby sustained, unless the beneficiary has by fraud induced the trustee to commit the breach, or the beneficiary, being competent to contract, has himself, without coercion or undue influence having been brought to bear on him, concurred in the breach, or subsequently acquiesced therein, with full knowledge of the facts of the case and of his rights as against the trustee.

A trustee committing a breach of trust is not liable to pay interest except in the following cases:—

- (a) where he has actually received interest :
- (b) where the breach consists in unreasonable delay in paying trust-money to the beneficiary :
- (c) where the trustee ought to have received interest, but has not done so :
- (d) where he may be fairly presumed to have received interest.

He is liable, in case (a), to account for the interest actually received, and, in cases (b), (c), and (d), to account for simple interest at the rate of six per cent. per annum, unless the Court otherwise directs.

(c) Where the breach consists in failure to invest trust-money, and to accumulate the interest or dividends thereon, he is liable to account for compound interest (with half-yearly rests) at the same rate.

(f) Where the breach consists in the employment of trust-property or the proceeds thereof in trade or business, he is liable to account, at the option of the beneficiary, either for compound interest (with half-yearly rests) at the same rate, or for the nett profits made by such employment.

Illustrations.

(a.) A trustee improperly leaves trust-property outstanding, and it is consequently lost: he is liable to make good the property lost, but he is not liable to pay interest thereon.

(b.) A bequeaths a house to B in trust to sell it, and pay the proceeds to C. B neglects to sell the house for a great length of time, whereby the house is deteriorated, and its market-price falls. B is answerable to C for the loss.

(c.) A trustee is guilty of unreasonable delay in investing trust-money in accordance with section twenty, or in paying it to the beneficiary. The trustee is liable to pay interest thereon for the period of the delay.

(d.) The duty of the trustee is to invest trust-money in any of the securities mentioned in section twenty, clause (a), (b), (c), or (d). Instead of so doing, he retains the money in his hands. He is liable, at the option of the beneficiary, to be charged either with the amount of the principal money and interest, or with the amount of such securities as he might have purchased with the trust-money when the investment should have been made and the intermediate dividends and interest thereon.

(e.) The instrument of trust directs the trustee to invest trust-money either in any of such securities or on mortgage of immoveable property. The trustee does neither. He is liable for the principal money and interest.

(f.) The instrument of trust directs the trustee to invest trust-money in any of such securities, and to accumulate the dividends thereon. The trustee disregards the direction. He is liable, at the option of the beneficiary, to be charged either with the amount of the principal money and compound interest, or with the amount of such securities as he might have purchased with the trust-money when the investment should have been made, together with the amount of the accumulation which would have arisen from a proper investment of the intermediate dividends.

(g.) Trust-property is invested in one of the securities mentioned in section twenty, clause (a), (b), or (d). The trustee sell, such security for some purpose not authorized by the terms of the instrument of trust. He is liable, at the option of the beneficiary, either to replace the security with the intermediate dividends and interest thereon, or to account for the proceeds of the sale with interest thereon.

(h.) The trust-property consists of land. The trustee sells the land to a purchaser for a consideration without notice of the trust. The trustee is liable, at the option of the beneficiary, to purchase other land of equal value to be settled upon the like trust, or to be charged with the proceeds of the sale with interest.

24. A trustee, who is liable for a loss occasioned by a breach of trust in respect of one portion of the trust-property, cannot set-off against his liability a gain which has accrued to another portion of the trust-property through another and distinct breach of trust.

25. Where a trustee succeeds another, he is not, as such, liable for the acts or defaults of his predecessor.

26. Subject to the provisions of sections thirteen and fifteen, one trustee is not, as such, liable for a breach of trust committed by his cotrustee:

Provided that, in the absence of an express declaration to the contrary in the instrument of trust, a trustee is so liable—

(a) where he has delivered trust-property to his co-trustee without seeing to its proper application:

(b) where he allows his co-trustee to receive trust-property, and fails to make due inquiry as to the co-trustee's dealings therewith, or allows him to retain it longer than the circumstances of the case reasonably require:

(c) where he becomes aware of a breach of trust committed or intended by his co-trustee, and either actively conceals it, or does not, within a reasonable time, take proper steps to protect the beneficiary's interest.

A co-trustee, who joints in signing a receipt for trust-property, and proves that he has not received the same, is not answerable, by reason of such signature only, for loss or misapplication of the property by his co-trustee.

Illustration.

A bequeaths certain property to B and C, and directs them to sell it and invest the proceeds for the benefit of D. B and C accordingly sell the property, and the purchase-money is received by B and retained in his hands. C pays no attention to the matter for two years, and then calls on B to make the investment. B is unable to do so, becomes insolvent, and the purchase-money is lost. C may be compelled to make good the amount.

27. Where co-trustees jointly commit a breach of trust, or where one of them by his neglect enables the other to commit a breach of trust, each is liable to the beneficiary for the whole of the loss occasioned by such breach.

But, as between the trustees themselves, if one be less guilty than another, and has had to refund the loss, the former may compel the latter, or his legal representative, to the extent of the assets he had received, to make good such loss; and, if all be equally guilty, any one or more of the trustees who has had to refund the loss may compel the others to contribute.

Nothing in this section shall be deemed to authorize a trustee who has been guilty of fraud to institute a suit to compel contribution.

28. When any beneficiary's interest becomes vested in another person, and the trustee, not having notice of the vesting, pays or delivers trust-property to the person who would have been entitled thereto in the absence of such vesting, the trustee is not liable for the property so paid or delivered.

29. When the beneficiary's interest is forfeited or awarded by legal adjudication to Government, the trustee is bound to hold the trust-property to the extent of such interest for the benefit of such person in such manner as the Government may direct in this behalf.

30. Subject to the provisions of the instrument of trust and of sections twenty-three and twenty-six, trustees shall be respectively chargeable only for such moneys, stocks, funds, and securities as they respectively actually receive, and shall not be answerable the one for the other of them, nor for any banker, broker, or other person in whose hands any trust-property may be placed, nor for the insufficiency or deficiency of any stocks, funds or securities, nor otherwise for involuntary losses.

CHAPTER IV.

OF THE RIGHTS AND POWERS OF TRUSTEES.

31. A trustee is entitled to have in his possession the instrument of trust and all the documents of title (if any) relating solely to the trust-property.

32. Every trustee may reimburse himself, or pay or discharge out of the trust-property, all expenses properly incurred in or about the execution of the trust, or the realization, preservation, or benefit of the trust-property, or the protection or support of the beneficiary.

If he pays such expenses out of his own pocket, he has a first charge upon the trust-property for such expenses and interest thereon ; but such charge (unless the expenses have been incurred with the sanction of a principal Civil Court of original jurisdiction) shall be enforced only by prohibiting any disposition of the trust-property without previous payment of such expenses and interest.

If the trust-property fail, the trustee is entitled to recover from the beneficiary personally on whose behalf he acted, and at whose request, expressed or implied, he made the payment, the amount of such expenses.

Where a trustee has, by mistake, made an over-payment to the beneficiary, he may reimburse the trust-property out of the beneficiary's interest. If such interest fail, the trustee is entitled to recover from the beneficiary personally the amount of such over-payment.

33. A person other than a trustee who has gained an advantage from a breach of trust must indemnify the trustee to the extent of the amount actually received by such person under the breach ; and, where he is a beneficiary, the trustee has a charge on his interest for such amount.

Nothing in this sections shall be deemed to entitle a trustee to be indemnified who has, in committing the breach of trust, been guilty of fraud.

34. Any trustee may, without instituting a suit, apply by petition to a principal Civil Court of original jurisdiction for its opinion, advice, or direction on any present questions respecting the management or administration of the trust-property, other than questions of detail, difficulty, or importance not proper in the opinion of the Court for summary disposal.

A copy of such petition shall be served upon, and the hearing thereof may be attended by, such of the persons interested in the application as the Court thinks fit.

The trustee stating in good faith the facts in such petition, and acting upon the opinion, advice, or direction given by the Court, shall be deemed, so far as regards his own responsibility, to have discharged his duties as such trustee in the subject-matter of the application.

The costs of every application under this section shall be in the discretion of the Court to which it is made.

35. When the duties of a trustee, as such, are completed, he is entitled to have the accounts of his administration of the trust-property examined and settled; and, where nothing is due to the beneficiary under the trust, to an acknowledgment in writing to that effect.

36. In addition to the powers expressly conferred by this Act and by the instrument of trust, and subject to the restrictions (if any) contained in such instrument, and to the provisions of section seventeen, a trustee may do all acts which are reasonable and proper for the realization, protection, or benefit of the trust-property, and for the protection or support of a beneficiary who is not competent to contract.

Every trustee in the actual possession or receipt of the rents and profits of land as defined in the Land Improvement Act, 1871,* shall, for the purposes of that Act, be deemed to be a landlord in possession.

Except with the permission of a principal Civil Court of original jurisdiction, no trustee shall lease trust-property for a term exceeding twenty-one years from the date of executing the lease, nor without reserving the best yearly rent that can be reasonably obtained.

37. Where the trustee is empowered to sell any trust-property, he may sell the same subject to prior charges or not, and either together or in lots, by public auction or private contract, and either at one time or at several times, unless the instrument of trust otherwise directs.

38. The trustee making any such sale may insert such reasonable stipulations either as to title or evidence of title, or otherwise, in any condition of sale or contract for sale, as he thinks fit; and may also buy in the property, or any part thereof, at any sale by auction, and rescind or vary any contract for sale, and re-sell the property so brought in, or as to which the contract is so recinded, without being responsible to the beneficiary for any loss occasioned thereby.

Where a trustee is directed to sell trust-property or to

(a) A bequeaths property to B, directing him to sell it with all convenient speed, and pay the proceeds to C. This does not render an immediate sale imperative.

(b) A bequeaths property to B, directing him to sell it at such time and in such manner as he shall think fit, and invest the proceeds for the benefit of C. This does not authorize B, as between him and C, to postpone the sale to an indefinite period.

39. For the purpose of completing any such sale, the Power to convey. trustee shall have power to convey or otherwise dispose of the property sold in such manner as may be necessary.

40. A trustee may, at his discretion, call in any trust-

Provided that, where there is a person competent to contract, and entitled at the time to receive the income of the trust-property for his life, or for any greater estate, no such change of investment shall be made without his consent in writing.

41. Where any property is held by a trustee in trust for Power to apply property of minors, &c., for their maintenance, &c. a minor, such trustee may, at his discretion, pay to the guardians (if any) of such minor, or otherwise apply for or towards his maintenance or education or advancement in life, or the reasonable expenses of his religious worship, marriage, or funeral, the whole or any part of the income to which he may be entitled in respect of such property ; and such trustee shall accumulate all the residue of such income by way of compound interest, by investing the same and the resulting income thereof from time to time in any of the securities mentioned or referred to in section twenty, for the benefit of the person who shall ultimately become entitled to the property from which such accumulations have arisen : Provided that such trustee may, at any time, if he thinks fit, apply the whole or any part of such accumulations as if the same were part of the income arising in the then current year.

Where the income of the trust-property is insufficient for the minor's maintenance or education or advancement in life, or the reasonable expenses of his religious worship, marriage, or funeral, the trustee may, with the permission of a principal Civil Court of original jurisdiction, but not otherwise, apply the whole or any part of such property for or towards such maintenance, education, advancement, or expenses.

Nothing in this section shall be deemed to affect the provision of any local law for the time being in force relating to the persons and property of minors.

42. Any trustees or trustee may give a receipt in writing for any money, securities, or other moveable property payable, transferable, or deliverable to them or him by reason, or in the exercise, of any trust or power; and, in the absence of fraud, such receipt shall discharge the person paying, transferring, or delivering the same therefrom, and from seeing to the application thereof, or being accountable for any loss or misapplication thereof.

Power to give receipts.

43. Two or more trustees acting together may, if and as they think fit—

Power to compound, &c.

(a) accept any composition or any security for any debt or for any property claimed;

(b) allow any time for payment of any debt;

(c) compromise, compound, abandon, submit to arbitration, or otherwise settle any debt, account, claim, or thing whatever relating to the trust; and,

(d) for any of those purposes, enter into, give, execute, and do such agreements, instruments of composition or arrangement, releases, and other things as to them seem expedient, without being responsible for any loss occasioned by any act or thing so done by them in good faith.

The powers conferred by this section on two or more trustees acting together may be exercised by a sole acting trustee when by the instrument of trust (if any) a sole trustee is authorized to execute the trusts and powers thereof.

This section applies only if and as far as a contrary intention is not expressed in the instrument of trust (if any), and shall have effect subject to the terms of that instrument and to the provisions therein contained.

This section applies only to trusts created after this Act comes into force.

44. When an authority to deal with the trust-property is given to several trustees, and one of them disclaims or dies, the authority may be exercised by the continuing trustees, unless from the terms of the instrument of trust it is apparent that the authority is to be exercised by a number in excess of the number of the remaining trustees.

Power to several trustees of whom one disclaims or dies.

45. Where a decree has been made in a suit for the execution of a trust, the trustee must not exercise any of his powers, except in conformity with such decree, or with the sanction of the Court by which the decree has been made, or, where an appeal against the decree is pending, of the Appellate Court.

Suspension of trustee's powers by decree.

CHAPTER V.

OF THE DISABILITIES OF TRUSTEES.

46. A trustee who has accepted the trust cannot afterwards renounce it, except (a) with the permission of a principal Civil Court of original jurisdiction, or (b), if the beneficiary is competent to contract, with his consent, or (c) by virtue of special power in the instrument of trust.

Trustee cannot renounce after acceptance.

47. A trustee cannot delegate his office or any of his duties either to a co-trustee or to a stranger, unless (a) the instrument of trust so provides, or (b) the delegation is in the regular course of business, or (c) the delegation is necessary, or (d) the beneficiary, being competent to contract, consents to the delegation.

Trustee cannot delegate.

Explanation.—The appointment of an attorney or proxy to do an act merely ministerial, and involving no independent discretion, is not a delegation within the meaning of this section.

Illustrations.

(a.) A bequeaths certain property to B and C on certain trusts to be executed by them or the survivor of them or the assigns of such survivor. B dies. C may bequeath the trust-property to D and E upon the trusts of A's will.

(b.) A is a trustee of certain property with power to sell the same. A may employ an auctioneer to effect the sale.

.. (c.) A bequeaths to B fifty houses let at monthly rents in trust to collect the rents and pay them to C. B may employ a proper person to collect these rents.

48. When there are more trustees than one, all must join in the execution of the trust, except where the instrument of trust otherwise provides.

Co-trustees cannot act singly.

49. Where a discretionary power conferred on a trustee is not exercised reasonably and in good faith, such power may be controlled by a principal Civil Court of original jurisdiction.

Control of discretionary power.

50. In the absence of express direction to the contrary contained in the instrument of trust or of a contract to the contrary entered into with the beneficiary or the Court at the time of accepting the trust, a trustee has no right to remuneration for his trouble, skill, and loss of time in executing the trust.

Trustee may not charge for services.

Nothing in this section applies to any Official Trustee, Administrator-General, Public Curator, or person holding a certificate of administration.

51. A trustee may not use or deal with the trust-property for his own profit or for any other purpose unconnected with the trust.

Trustee may not use trust-property for his own profit.

52. No trustee whose duty it is to sell trust-property, and no agent employed by such trustee for the purpose of the sale, may, directly or indirectly, buy the same or any interest therein, on his own account or as agent for a third person.

Trustee for sale or his agent may not buy.

53. No trustee, and no person who has recently ceased to be a trustee, may, without the permission of a principal Civil Court of original jurisdiction, buy or become mortgagee or lessee of the trust-property or any part thereof; and such permission shall not be given unless the proposed purchase, mortgage, or lease is manifestly for the advantage of the beneficiary.

Trustee may not buy beneficiary's interest without permission.

And no trustee whose duty it is to buy or to obtain a mortgage or lease of particular property for the beneficiary may buy it, or any part thereof, or obtain a mortgage or lease of it, or any part thereof, for himself.

Trustee for purchase.

54. A trustee or co-trustee whose duty it is to invest trust-money on mortgage or personal security must not invest it on a mortgage by, or on the personal security of, himself or one of his co-trustees.

Co-trustees may not lend to one of themselves.

CHAPTER VI.

OF THE RIGHTS AND LIABILITIES OF THE BENEFICIARY.

55. The beneficiary has, subject to the provisions of the instrument of trust, a right to the rents and profits of the trust-property.

Right to rents and and, where there is only one beneficiary and he is competent to contract, or where there are several beneficiaries and they are competent to contract and all of one mind, he or they may require the trustee to transfer the trust-property to him or them, or to such person as he or they may direct.

Right to transfer of possession.

When property has been transferred or bequeathed for the benefit of a married woman, so that she shall not have power to deprive herself of her beneficial interest, nothing in the second clause of this section applies to such property during her marriage.

Illustrations.

(a.) Certain Government securities are given to trustees upon trust to accumulate the interest until A attains the age of 24, and then to transfer the gross amount to him. A, on attaining majority, may, as the person exclusively interested in the trust-property, require the trustees to transfer it immediately to him.

(b.) A bequeaths Rs. 10,000 to trustees upon trust to purchase an annuity for B, who has attained his majority, and is otherwise competent to contract. B may claim the Rs. 10,000.

(c.) A transfers certain property to B, and directs him to sell or let it for the benefit of C, who is competent to contract. C may elect to take the property in its original character.

57. The beneficiary has a right, as against the trustee and all persons claiming under him with notice of the trust, to inspect and take copies of the instrument of trust, the cuments of title relating solely to the trust-property, the accounts of the trust-property, and the vouchers (if any) by which they are supported, and the cases submitted and opinions taken by the trustee for his guidance in the discharge of his duty.

58. The beneficiary, if competent to contract, may transfer his interest, but subject to the law for the time being in force as to the circumstances and extent in and to which he may dispose of such interest :

Right to transfer beneficial interest.

Provided that, when property is transferred or bequeathed for the benefit of a married woman, so that she shall not have power to deprive herself of her beneficial interest, nothing in this section shall authorize her to transfer such interest during her marriage.

59. Where no trustees are appointed, or all the trustees die, disclaim, or are discharged, or where, for any other reason, the execution of a trust by the trustee is or becomes impracticable, the beneficiary may institute a suit for the execution of the trust, and the trust shall, so far as may be possible, be executed by the Court until the appointment of a trustee or new trustee.

tion of trust.

60. The beneficiary has a right (subject to the provisions of the instrument of trust) that the trust-property shall be properly protected and held and administered by proper persons and by a proper number of such persons.

Right to proper trustees.

Explanation I.—The following are not proper persons within the meaning of this section :—

A person domiciled abroad ; an alien enemy ; a person having an interest inconsistent with that of the beneficiary ; a person in insolvent circumstances ; and, unless the personal law of the beneficiary allows otherwise, a married woman and a minor.

Explanation II.—When the administration of the trust involves the receipt and custody of money, the number of trustees should be two at least.

Illustrations.

(a.) A, one of several beneficiaries, proves that B, the trustee, has improperly disposed of part of the trust-property, or that the property is in danger from B's being in insolvent circumstances, or that he is incapacitated from acting as trustee. A may obtain a receiver of the trust-property.

(b.) A bequeaths certain jewels to B in trust for C. B dies during A's lifetime; then A dies. C is entitled to have the property conveyed to a trustee for him.

(c.) A conveys certain property to four trustees in trust for B. Three of the trustees die. B may institute a suit to have three new trustees appointed in the place of the deceased trustees.

(d.) A conveys certain property to three trustees in trust for B. All the trustees disclaim. B may institute a suit to have three trustees appointed in place of the trustees so disclaiming.

(e.) A, a trustee for B, refuses to act, or goes to reside permanently out of British India, or is declared an insolvent, or compounds with his creditors, or suffers a co-trustee to commit a breach of trust. B may institute a suit to have A removed and a new trustee appointed in his room.

61. The beneficiary has a right that his trustee shall from committing any contemplated or probable breach of trust.

Illustrations.

(a.) A contracts with B to pay him monthly Rs. 100 for the benefit of C. B writes and signs a letter declaring that he will hold in trust for C the money so to be paid. A fails to pay the money in accordance with his contract. C may compel B on a proper indemnity to allow C to sue on the contract in B's name.

(b.) A is trustee of certain land, with a power to sell the same, and pay the proceeds to B and C equally. A is about to make an improvident sale of the land. B may sue on behalf of himself and C for an injunction to restrain A from making the sale.

62. Where a trustee has wrongfully bought trust-property, the beneficiary has a right to have Wrongful purchase by trustee. the property declared subject to the trust or re-transferred by the trustee, if it remains in his hands unsold, or, if it has been bought from him by any person with notice of the trust, by such person. But in such case the beneficiary must repay the purchase-money paid by the trustee, with interest, and such other expenses (if any) as he has properly incurred in the preservation of the property; and the trustee or purchaser must (a) account for the nett profits of the property, (b) be charged with an occupation-rent, if he has been in actual possession of the property, and (c) allow the beneficiary to deduct a proportionate part of the purchase-money if the property has been deteriorated by the acts or omissions of the trustee or purchaser.

(a) impairs the rights of lessees and others who, before the institution of a suit to have the property declared subject to the trust or re-transferred, have contracted in good faith with the trustee or purchaser ; or

(b) entitles the beneficiary to have the property declared subject to the trust or re-transferred where he, being competent to contract, has himself, without coercion or undue influence having been brought to bear on him, ratified the sale to the trustee with full knowledge of the facts of the case and of his rights as against the trustee.

63. Where trust-property comes into the hands of a third person inconsistently with the trust, the beneficiary may require him to admit formally, or may institute a suit for a declaration, that the property is comprised in the trust.

Following trust-property—

(b.) A, a trustee, wrongfully purchases land in his own name, partly with his own money, partly with money subject to a trust for B. B is entitled to a charge on the land for the amount of the trust-money so mis-employed.

64. Nothing in section sixty-three entitles the beneficiary to any right in respect of property in the hands of—

tain transferees.

(a) a transferee in good faith for consideration without having notice of the trust, either when the purchase-money was paid, or when the conveyance was executed, or—

(b) a transferee for consideration from such a transferee.

A judgment-creditor of the trustee attaching and purchasing trust-property is not a transferee for consideration within the meaning of this section.

Nothing in section sixty-three applies to money, currency notes, and negotiable instruments in the hands of a bona-fide holder to whom they have passed in circulation, or shall be deemed to affect the Indian Contract Act, 1872, Section 108, or the liability of a person to whom a debt or charge is transferred.

65. Where a trustee wrongfully sells or otherwise transfers trust-property, and afterwards himself becomes the owner of the property, the property again becomes subject to the trust notwithstanding any want of notice on the part of intervening transferees in good faith for consideration.

Wrongful employment by partner-trustee of trust-property for partnership

The partners having such notice are jointly and severally liable for the breach of trust.

Illustrations.

(a.) A and B are partners. A dies, having bequeathed all his property to B in trust for Z, and appointed B his sole executor. B, instead of winding up the affairs of the partnership, retains all the assets in the business. Z may compel him, as partner, to account for so much of the profits as are derived from A's share of the capital. B is also answerable to Z for the improper employment of A's assets.

(b.) A, a trader, bequeaths his property to B in trust for C, appoints B his sole executor, and dies. B enters into partnership with X and Y in the same trade, and employs A's assets in the partnership-business. B gives an indemnity to X and Y against the claims of C. Here X and Y are jointly liable with B to C as having knowingly become parties to the breach of trust committed by B.

Liability of beneficiary joining in breach of trust.

68. Where one of several benefi-

(a) joins in committing breach of trust, or
(b) knowingly obtains any advantage therefrom, without the consent of the other beneficiaries, or

(c) becomes aware of a breach of trust committed or intended to be committed, and either actually conceals it, or does not, within a reasonable time, take proper steps to protect the interests of the other beneficiaries, or

(d) has deceived the trustee, and thereby induced him to commit a breach of trust, the other beneficiaries are entitled to have all his beneficial interest impounded as against him and all who claim under him (otherwise than as transferees for consideration without notice of the breach) until the loss caused by the breach has been compensated.

When property has been transferred or bequeathed for the benefit of a married woman, so that she shall not have power to deprive herself of her beneficial interest, nothing in this section applies to such property during her marriage.

69. Every person to whom a beneficiary transfers his Rights and liabilities of beneficiary's transferee. interest has the rights, and is subject to the liabilities, of the beneficiary in respect of such interest at the date of the transfer.

CHAPTER VII.

OF VACATING THE OFFICE OF TRUSTEE.

70. The office of a trustee is vacated by his death or by his discharge from his office.

Office how vacated,

71. A trustee may be discharged from his office only as follows:—

Discharge of trustee.

- (a) by the extinction of the trust ;
- (b) by the completion of his duties under the trust ;
- (c) by such means as may be prescribed by the instrument of trust ;
- (d) by appointment under this Act of a new trustee in his place ;
- (e) by consent of himself and the beneficiary, or, where there are more beneficiaries than one, all the beneficiaries being competent to contract, or
- (f) by the Court to which a petition for his discharge is presented under this Act.

72. Notwithstanding the provisions of section eleven, every trustee may apply by petition to a principal Civil Court of original jurisdiction to be discharged from his office ; and, if the Court finds that there is sufficient reason for such discharge, it may discharge him accordingly, and direct his costs to be paid out of the trust-property. But, where there is no such reason, the Court shall not discharge him, unless a proper person can be found to take his place.

Petition to be discharged from trust.

73. Whenever any person appointed a trustee dis-Appointment of new trustees on death, &c. claims, or any trustee, either original or substituted, dies, or is, for a continuous period of six months, absent from British India, or leaves British India for the purpose of residing abroad, or is declared an insolvent, or desires to be discharged from the trust, or refuses or becomes, in the opinion of a principal Civil Court of original jurisdiction, unfit or personally incapable to act in the trust, or accepts an inconsistent trust, a new trustee may be appointed in his place by—

(a) the person nominated for that purpose by the instrument of trust (if any), or

(b) if there be no such person, or no such person-able and willing to act, the author of the trust, if he be alive and competent to contract, or the surviving or continuing trustees or trustee for the time being, or legal representative of the last surviving and continuing trustee, or (with the consent of the Court) the retiring trustees, if they all retire simultaneously, or (with the like consent) the last retiring trustee.

Every such appointment shall be by writing under the hand of the person making it.

On an appointment of a new trustee the number of trustees may be increased.

The Official Trustee may, with his consent, and by the order of the Court, be appointed under this section, in any case in which only one trustee is to be appointed, and such trustee is to be the sole trustee.

The provisions of this section relative to a trustee who is dead include the case of a person nominated trustee in a will but dying before the testator, and those relative to a continuing trustee include a refusing or retiring trustee if willing to act in the execution of the power.

74. Whenever any such vacancy or disqualification occurs, and it is found impracticable to ap-
Appointment by Court. point a new trustee under section seventy-three, the beneficiary may, without instituting a suit, apply by petition to a principal Civil Court of original jurisdiction for the appointment of a trustee or a new trustee, and the Court may appoint a trustee or a new trustee accordingly.

In appointing new trustees, the Court shall have regard Rule for selecting new trustees. (a) to the wishes of the author of the trust as expressed in or to be inferred from the instrument of trust ; (b) to the wishes of the person, (if any) empowered to appoint new trustees ; (c) to the question whether the appointment will promote or impede the execution of the trust ; and (d) where there are more beneficiaries than one, to the interests of all such beneficiaries.

75. Whenever any new trustee is appointed under section seventy-three or section seventy-four, all the trust-property for the time being vested in the surviving or continuing trustees or trustee, or in the legal representative of any trustee, shall become vested in such new trustee, either solely or jointly with the surviving or continuing trustees or trustee as the case may require.

Every new trustee so appointed, and every trustee appointed by a Court either before or after the passing of this Act, shall have the same powers, authorities, and discretions, and shall in all respects act, as if he had been originally nominated a trustee by the author of the trust.

76. On the death or discharge of one of several co-trustees, the trust survives, and the trust-property passes to the others, unless the instrument of trust expressly declares otherwise.

CHAPTER VIII.

OF THE EXTINCTION OF TRUSTS.

77. A trust is extinguished—
 (a) when its purpose is completely fulfilled ; or
 (b) when its purpose becomes unlawful ; or
 (c) when the fulfilment of its purpose becomes impossible by destruction of the trust-property or otherwise ; or
 (d) when the trust, being revocable, is expressly revoked.

78. A trust created by will may be revoked at the pleasure of the testator.

A trust otherwise created can be revoked only—

(a) where all the beneficiaries are competent to contract—by their consent ;

(b) where the trust has been declared by a non-testamentary instrument or by word of mouth—in exercise of a power of revocation expressly reserved to the author of the trust ; or

(c) where the trust is for the payment of the debts of the author of the trust, and has not been communicated to the creditors—at the pleasure of the author of the trust.

Illustration.

A conveys property to B in trust to sell the same, and pay, out of the proceeds, the claims of A's creditors. A reserves no power of revocation. If no communication has been made to the creditors, A may revoke the trust. But if the creditors, are parties to the arrangement, the trust cannot be revoked without their consent.

79. No trust can be revoked by the author of the trust so as to defeat or prejudice what the trustees may have duly done in execution of the trust.

Revocation not to defeat what trustees have duly done.

CHAPTER IX.

OF CERTAIN OBLIGATIONS IN THE NATURE OF TRUSTS.

80. An obligation in the nature of a trust is created in the following cases.

Where obligation in nature of trust is created.

81. Where the owner of property transfers or bequeaths it, and it cannot be inferred, consistently with the attendant circumstances, that he intended to dispose of the beneficial interest therein, the transferee or legatee must hold such property for the benefit of the owner or his legal representative.

Where it does not appear that transferor intended to dispose of beneficial interest.

Illustrations.

(a.) A conveys land to B without consideration, and declares no trust of any part. It cannot, consistently with the circumstances under which the transfer is made, be inferred that A intended to transfer the beneficial interest in the land. B holds the land for the benefit of A.

(b.) A conveys to B two fields, Y and Z, and declares a trust of Y, but says nothing about Z. It cannot, consistently with the circumstances under which the transfer is made, be inferred that A intended to transfer the beneficial interest in Z. B holds Z for the benefit of A.

(c.) A transfers certain stock belonging to him into the joint names of himself and B. It cannot, consistently with the circumstances under which the transfer is made, be inferred that A intended to transfer the beneficial interest in the stock during his life. A and B hold the stock for the benefit of A during his life.

(d.) A makes a gift of certain land to his wife B. She takes the beneficial interest in the land free from any trust in favour of A, for it may be inferred from the circumstances that the gift was for B's benefit.

82. Where property is transferred to one person for a consideration paid or provided by another person, and it appears that such other person did not intend to pay or provide such consideration for the benefit of the transferee, the transferee must hold the property for the benefit of the person paying or providing the consideration.

Nothing in this section shall be deemed to affect the Code of Civil Procedure, section 317, or Act No. XI of 1859 (to improve the law relating to sales of land for arrears of revenue in the Lower Provinces under the Bengal Presidency), section 36.

83. Where a trust is incapable of being executed, or where the trust is completely executed without exhausting the trust-property, the trustee, in the absence of a direction to the contrary, must hold the trust-property, or so much thereof as is unexhausted, for the benefit of the author of the trust or his legal representative.

Trust incapable of execution, or executed without exhausting trust-property.

Illustrations.

(a.) A conveys certain land to B—

“upon trust,” and no trust is declared; or

“upon trust to be thereafter declared,” and no such declaration is ever made; or upon trusts that are too vague to be executed; or upon trusts that become incapable of taking effect; or “in trust for C,” and C renounces his interest under the trust.

In each of these cases B holds the land for the benefit of A.

(b.) A transfers Rs. 10,000 in the four per cents. to B in trust to pay the interest annually accruing due to C for her life. A dies. Then C dies. B holds the fund for the benefit of A's legal representative.

(c.) A conveys land to B upon trust to sell it, and apply one moiety of the proceeds for certain charitable purposes, and the other for the maintenance of the worship of an idol. B sells the land, but the charitable purposes wholly fail, and the maintenance of the worship does not exhaust the second moiety of the proceeds. B holds the first moiety and the part unapplied of the second moiety for the benefit of A or his legal representative.

(d.) A bequeaths Rs. 10,000 to B, to be laid out in buying land to be conveyed for purposes which either wholly or partially fail to take effect. B holds for the benefit of A's legal representative the undisposed of interest in the money or land if purchased.

84. Where the owner of property transfers it to another for an illegal purpose, and such purpose is not carried into execution, or the transferor is not as guilty as the transferee, or the effect of permitting the transferee to retain the property might be to defeat the provisions of any law, the transferee must hold the property for the benefit of the transferor.

Transfer for illegal purpose.

85. Where a testator bequeaths certain property upon trust, and the purpose of the trust appears on the face of the will to be unlawful, or during the testator's lifetime the legatee agrees with him to apply the property for an unlawful purpose, the legatee must hold the property for the benefit of the testator's legal representative.

Bequest for illegal purpose.
Where property is bequeathed, and the revocation of the bequest is prevented by coercion, the legatee must hold the property for the benefit of the testator's legal representative.

86. Where property is transferred in pursuance of a contract which is liable to rescission or induced by fraud or mistake, the transferee must, on receiving notice to that effect, hold the property for the benefit of the transferor subject to re-payment by the latter of the consideration actually paid.

87. Where a debtor becomes the executor or other legal representative of his creditor, he must hold the debt for the benefit of the persons interested therein.

88. Where a trustee, executor, partner, agent, director of a company, legal adviser, or other person bound in a fiduciary character to protect the interests of another person by availing himself of his character, gains for himself any pecuniary advantage, or where any person so bound enters into any dealings under circumstances in which his own interests are, or may be, adverse to those of such other person, and thereby gains for himself a pecuniary advantage, he must hold for the benefit of such other person the advantage so gained.

Illustrations.

(a.) A, an executor, buys at an undervalue from B, a legatee, his claim under the will. B is ignorant of the value of the bequest. A must hold for the benefit of B the difference between the price and value.

(b.) A, a trustee, uses the trust property for the purpose of his own business. A holds for the benefit of his beneficiary the profits arising for such user.

(c.) A, a trustee, retires from his trust in consideration of his successor paying him a sum of money. A holds such money for the benefit of his beneficiary.

(d.) A, a partner, buys land in his own name with funds belonging to the partnership. A holds such land for the benefit of the partnership.

(e.) A, a partner, employed on behalf of himself and his co-partners in negotiating the terms of a lease, clandestinely stipulates with the lessor for payment to himself of a lakh of rupees. A holds the lakh for the benefit of the partnership.

(f.) A and B are partners. A dies. B, instead of winding up the affairs of the partnership, retains all the assets in the business. B must account to A's legal representative for the profits arising from A's share of the capital.

(g.) A, an agent employed to obtain a lease for B, obtains the lease for himself. A holds the lease for the benefit of B.

(h.) A, a guardian, buys up for himself incumbrances on his ward B's estate at an undervalue. A holds for the benefit of B the incumbrances so bought, and can only charge him with what he has actually paid.

89. Where, by the exercise of undue influence, any advantage is gained in derogation of the interests of another, the person gaining such advantage without consideration, or with notice that such influence has been exercised, must hold the advantage for the benefit of the person whose interests have been so prejudiced.

90. Where a tenant for life, co-owner, mortgagee, or other qualified owner of any property, by availing himself of his position as such, gains an advantage in derogation of the rights of the other persons interested in the property, or where any such owner, as representing all persons interested in such property, gains any advantage, he must hold, for the benefit of all persons so interested, the advantage so gained, but subject to repayment by such persons of their due share of the expenses properly incurred, and to an indemnity by the same persons against liabilities properly contracted, in gaining such advantage.

Illustrations.

(a.) A, the tenant for life of leasehold property, renews the lease in his own name and for his own benefit. A holds the renewed lease for the benefit of all those interested in the old lease.

(b.) A village belongs to a Hindu family. A, one of its members, pays nazrana to Government, and thereby procures his name to be entered as the inamdar of the village. A holds the village for the benefit of himself and the other members.

(c.) A mortgages land to B, who enters into possession. B allows the Government revenue to fall into arrear with a view to the land being put up for sale and his becoming himself the purchaser of it. The land is accordingly sold to B. Subject to the repayment of the amount due on the mortgage and of his expenses properly incurred as mortgagee, B holds the land for the benefit of A.

91. Where a person acquires property with notice that another person has entered into an existing contract affecting that property, of which specific performance could be enforced, the former must hold the property for the benefit of the latter to the extent necessary to give effect to the contract.

92. Where a person contracts to buy property to be held on trust for certain beneficiaries, and buys the property accordingly, he must hold the property for their benefit to the extent necessary to give effect to the contract.

93 Where creditors compound the debts due to them, and one of such creditors, by a secret arrangement with the debtor, gains an undue advantage over his co-creditors, he must hold for the benefit of such creditors the advantage so gained.

94. In any case not coming within the scope of any of the preceding sections, where there is no trust, but the person having possession of property has not the whole beneficial interest therein, he must hold the property for the benefit of the persons having such interest, or the residue thereof (as the case may be), to the extent necessary to satisfy their just demands.

Illustrations.

(a.) A, an executor, distributes the assets of his testator B to the legatees without having paid the whole of B's debts. The legatees hold for the benefit of B's creditors, to the extent necessary to satisfy their just demands, the assets so distributed.

(b.) A by mistake assumes the character of a trustee for B, and under colour of the trust receives certain moneys. B may compel him to account for such moneys.

(c.) A makes a gift of a lakh of rupees to B, reserving to himself, with B's assent, power to revoke at pleasure the gift as to Rs. 10,000. The gift is void as to Rs. 10,000, and B holds that sum for the benefit of A.

95. The person holding property in accordance with any of the preceding sections of this chapter must, so far as may be, perform the same duties, and is subject, so far as may be, to the same liabilities and disabilities, as if he were a trustee of the property for the person for whose benefit he holds it:

Provided that (a), where he rightfully cultivates the property, or employs it in trade or business, he is entitled to rea-

Where a firm of attorneys dissolved partnership after the death of a client, there being at that time papers and documents belonging to the client in their hands, and a debt due in respect of costs from the client to them—Held that the dissolution of partnership operated as a discharge of the firm, and that the attorneys were not entitled to retain the papers and documents until their costs were paid, but were bound to hand them over to the administrator of the client. Sec. 171 of the Contract Act does not give an attorney an absolute lien. Sec. 1 provides that nothing in the Act contained shall affect any usage or custom of trade, and, as no part of the English law is inconsistent with sec. 171, cases arising in this country must be governed by the English authorities. According to those authorities, while the relation of attorney and client exists, the client may either continue to employ the attorney or change him. When he claims to do the latter, the attorney being willing to act, he cannot ask the attorney to give up papers in his possession without first satisfying the lien. The attorney has his option : he may, if he chooses, either go on acting for his client, or cease to act ; if he adopt the latter course, he must give up the papers. On the death of the client his representative stands in exactly the same position with respect to the attorney as the client did.—I. L. R., 6 Cal. 1.

2. In this Act the following words and expressions are used in the following senses, unless a contrary intention appears from the context.

Interpretation-clause.

—When one person signifies to another his willingness to do or to abstain from doing anything, with a view to obtaining the assent of that other to such act or abstinence, he is said to make a proposal :

“Proposal.”

(b.)—When the person to whom the proposal is made signifies his assent thereto, the proposal is said to be accepted. A proposal, when accepted,* becomes a promise :

“Promise.”

(c.)—The person making the proposal is called the ‘promisor,’ and the person accepting the proposal is called the ‘promisee.’

“Promisor” and “Promisee.”

(d.)—When, at the desire of the promisor, the promisee or any other person has done or abstained from doing, or does or abstains from doing, or promises to do or to abstain from doing, something, such act or abstinence or promise is called a consideration for the promise :

“Consideration.”

(e.)—Every promise and every set of promises, forming the consideration for each other, is an agreement.

“Agreement.”

* But see sec. 4, ill. b. infra.

- Promises which form the consideration or part of the consideration for each other are called reciprocal promises :
- “ Reciprocal promises.”
- (g.)—An agreement not enforceable by law is said to be void :
- “ Void agreement.”
- (h.)—An agreement enforceable by law is a contract :
- “ Contract.”
- (i.)—An agreement which is enforceable by law at the option of one or more of the parties thereto, but not at the option of the other or others, is a voidable contract :
- “ Voidable contract.”
- (j.)—A contract which ceases to be enforceable by law becomes void when it ceases to be enforceable.
- “ Void contract.”

Notes.

The interpolation of the name of a witness in a document which need not be attested is not a material alteration that would render the document void. Suffell v. Bank of England, 9 Q. B. D., 555, explained ; Sitaram Krishna v. Dayi Davaji, I. L. R., 7 B., 416, dissented from.—I. L. R., 12 Cal. 313.

L granted an estate to C, and directed her to make an annual payment to L's brothers. C, by agreement of even date made with L's brothers, promised to carry out L's directions. Held by Innes, J., following Dutton v. Poole (2 Lev. 210, 1 Ventr. 318, affirmed in error in the Exchr. Ch. T. Rayn 302), that the agreement was enforceable against C by L's brothers. Held by Kindersley, J., that the grant by L and the promise by C to the brothers of L being one transaction, there was a sufficient consideration for the promise within the meaning of the Indian Contract Act, sec. 2.—4 Madr. 137.

The administratrix of an estate having agreed to pay S his share of the estate if S would give a promissory note for a portion of a barred debt claimed by A from her, S executed a promissory note in favor of A, gave it to the administratrix, and received his share of the assets. Held that there was consideration for the promissory note within the meaning of sec. 2, cl. d of the Contract Act, 1872, and that A could recover upon it.—6 Madr. 351.

A material alteration made after execution does not vitiate a deed, if it be made with the consent of all the parties.—10 Bom. 487.

While certain hundis were running, the acceptor gave the holder, the drawer having become bankrupt, a mortgage of certain immoveable property as security for the payment of the hundis in the event of their dishonour when they became due. Held, in a suit on the mortgage-deed, the hundis having been dishonoured, that there was no consideration, within the meaning of that term in Act IX of 1872, for the agreement of mortgage, and the same was void under sec. 25 of that Act.—1 Al. 309.

M had for many years lived with G as his concubine. In consideration of such part cohabitation, G, by an agreement in writing dated the 28th March, 1869, and duly registered, settled an annuity on M, charging a portion of his real estate with the payment of such annuity. Held in a suit by M against G's heir, his married wife, to enforce the agreement, that consideration for the agreement was not under the law then in force moral, nor was the agreement, under the same law, void for want of consideration. Held also that, before M could recover from the defendant on the agreement, it was necessary to show that the defendant had received funds available to meet the claim from the profits of the estate charged with the payment of the annuity or other property of G.—1 Al. 478.

The plaintiff sued to establish an agreement in writing, by which the defendants promised to pay him a commission on articles sold through their agency in a bazar in which they occupied shops, in consideration of the plaintiff having expended money in the construction of such bazar. Such money had not been expended by the plaintiff at the request of the defendants, nor had it been expended by him for them voluntarily, but it had been expended by him voluntarily for third parties. Held that such expenditure was not any consideration for the agreement within the meaning of sec. 2 (d) of Act IX of 1872, and the agreement did not fall within cl. 2, sec. 25 of that Act, and was void for want of consideration.—3 Al. 221.

Past cohabitation would not be an immoral consideration, if consideration it can properly be called, for a promise to pay a woman an allowance. Such a promise, however, is to be regarded as an undertaking by the promisor to compensate the promisee for past services voluntarily rendered to him, for which no consideration, as defined in the Contract Act, would be necessary.—3 Al. 787.

A person, while under arrest in execution of a decree which had been made against him by a Court having no jurisdiction to make it, gave the holder of such decree a bond for the amount of such decree, plus a small sum paid for him for the stamping and preparation of such bond, in order that he might be released from such arrest. Held that such bond was given under duress, and that it was executed without consideration, the small sum paid by the holder of such decree for preparing and stamping the bond not being in any legitimate sense of the phrase "consideration" for such bond, and therefore such bond was void.—4 Al. 352.

The consideration for a mortgage consisted partly of the amount of two decrees held by the mortgagee against the mortgagor. The mortgagee having sued to enforce the mortgage, the mortgagor pleaded failure of consideration as a bar to the enforcement of the mortgage. This plea was based on the allegation that the mortgagee had not certified the adjustment of the decrees as provided by section 258 of the Civil Procedure Code, and they were still in force under the terms of that section. Per Duthoit, J.—That the failure of the mortgagee to certify the adjustment of the decrees did not constitute a failure of consideration, because he did not covenant to certify such adjustment, and it was not, in fact, necessary for him to do so; because he could not seek execution of the decrees on the ground that, though unsatisfied, they were still in force under section 258 without becoming liable to penalties; and because if the mortgagor considered the entering up of the adjustment of the decrees to be imperative, he had his remedy by application to the Court in the terms of sec. 258. Per Mahmood J.—That the adjustment of a decree out of court, if never certified to the Court, is under section 258, ineffectual only so far as the execution of the decree is concerned; that there is nothing in the Contract Act to make such an adjustment invalid as the consideration for an agreement; that an agreement founded on such consideration may be enforced without defeating the objects of section 258; and that consequently there was, in respect of the amount of the decrees, valid consideration for the mortgage. Gunamani Dasi v. Pran Kishori Dasi, Meer Mahomed Kazem Jowharry v. Khetoo Bibee, Gani Khan v. Poonjo Behary Sein, Davkata v. Ganesh, Shashtri, Shadi v. Ganga Sahai and Sita Ram v. Mahipal followed. Patan- kar v. Devji and Pundurang Ramchandra Chowghule v. Narayan dissented from.—7 Al. 124.

CHAPTER I.

OF THE COMMUNICATION, ACCEPTANCE, AND REVOCATION OF PROPOSALS.

3. The communication of proposals, the acceptance of proposals, and the revocation of proposals and acceptances, respectively, are deemed to be made by any act or omission of the party proposing, accepting, or revoking, by which he intends to communicate such proposal, acceptance, or revocation, or which has the effect of communicating it.

Note.

A letter of acceptance to a proposer, not correctly addressed could not, although posted, be said to have been “put in a course of transmission” to him, within the meaning of sec. 4 of the Contract Act (IX of 1872). Townsend’s Case referred to.—I. L. R., 9 Al. 366.

4. The communication of a proposal is complete when it comes to the knowledge of the person to whom it is made.

The communication of an acceptance is complete, as against the proposer, when it is put in a course of transmission to him, so as to be out of the power of the acceptor;

as against the acceptor, when it comes to the knowledge of the proposer.

The communication of a revocation is complete, as against the person who makes it, when it is put into a course of transmission to the person to whom it is made, so as to be out of the power of the person who makes it;

as against the person to whom it is made, when it comes to his knowledge.

Illustrations.

(a.) A proposes, by letter, to sell a house to B at a certain price.

The communication of the proposal is complete when B receives the letter.

(b.) B accepts A’s proposal by a letter sent by post.

The communication of the acceptance is complete, as against A when the letter is posted;

as against B when the letter is received by A.

(c.) A revokes his proposal by telegram.

The revocation is complete as against A when the telegram is despatched. It is complete as against B when B receives it.

B revokes his acceptance by telegram. B's revocation is complete as against B when the telegram is despatched, and as against A when it reaches him.

Notes.

A letter containing a request to borrow a certain sum of money, promising that the same should be repaid with interest on a certain day, is not liable to stamp duty. It is not a promissory note, but a mere proposal under section 4 of the Indian Contract Act IX. of 1872.—I. L. R., 13 Bom. 669.

See I. L. R., 9 Al. 366, noted under sec. 3.

5. A proposal may be revoked at any time before the communication of its acceptance is complete as against the proposer, but not afterwards.

Revocation of proposals and acceptances.

An acceptance may be revoked at any time before the communication of the acceptance is complete as against the acceptor, but not afterwards.

Illustration.

A proposes, by a letter sent by post, to sell his house to B.

B accepts the proposal by a letter sent by post.

A may revoke his proposal at any time before or at the moment when B posts his letter of acceptance, but not afterwards.

B may revoke his acceptance at any time before or at the moment when the letter communicating it reaches A, but not afterwards.

Revocation how made.

6. A proposal is revoked—

(1) by the communication of notice of revocation by the proposer to the other party ;

(2) by the lapse of the time prescribed in such proposal for its acceptance, or, if no time is so prescribed, by the lapse of a reasonable time without communication of the acceptance ;

(3) by the failure of the acceptor to fulfil a condition precedent to acceptance ; or

(4) by the death or insanity of the proposer, if the fact of his death or insanity comes to the knowledge of the acceptor before acceptance.

Acceptance must be absolute.

7. In order to convert a proposal into a promise, the acceptance must—

(1) be absolute and unqualified ;

(2) be expressed in some usual and reasonable manner, unless the proposal prescribes the manner in which it is to be accepted. If the proposal prescribes a manner in which it is to be accepted, and the acceptance is not made in such manner, the proposer may, within a reasonable time after the acceptance is communicated to him, insist that his proposal shall be accepted in the prescribed manner, and not otherwise; but, if he fails to do so, he accepts the acceptance.

8. Performance of the conditions of a proposal, or the acceptance of any consideration for a reciprocal promise which may be offered with a proposal, is an acceptance of the proposal.

Acceptance by performing conditions or receiving consideration.

9. In so far as the proposal or acceptance of any promise is made in words, the promise is said to be express. In so far as such proposal or acceptance is made otherwise than in words, the promise is said to be implied.

Promises, express and implied.

CHAPTER II.

OF CONTRACTS, VOIDABLE CONTRACTS, AND VOID AGREEMENTS.

10. All agreements are contracts* if they are made by the free consent of parties competent to contract, for a lawful consideration,† and with a lawful object, and are not hereby expressly declared to be void.

What agreements are contracts.

Nothing herein contained shall affect any law in force in British India, and not hereby expressly repealed, by which any contract is required to be made in writing or in the presence of witnesses, or any law relating to the registration of documents.‡

Notes.

According to Hindu law, arrears of interest more than sufficient to double the debt are not recoverable, and the law upon this point was not affected by the Act (XXVIII of 1855) for the repeal of the Usury Laws, not by sec. 10 of the Contract Act. Semble.—The rule of Hindu law in question has not properly anything to do with the legality or illegality of any contract, but is rather a rule of limitation.—I. L. R., 5 Cal. 867.

A contract entered into with a minor is merely voidable at the option of the minor; and there is nothing to prevent him suing thereon, supposing the contract to be otherwise valid.—11 Cal. 522.

A money-bond taken by a minor is good in law, and may be sued on.—13 Bom. 50

* See sec. 2, cl. h, supra.

‡ See Now Act III. of 1877.

The defendants in Bombay charters a ship from the plaintiffs which was described in the charter-party as of the measurement of about 2,700—2,800 tons nett register. The ship had never been in Bombay and was wholly unknown to the defendants. Evidence was given that in the negotiations for the charter-party the plaintiffs stated to the defendants that the ship was certainly not more than 2,800 tonnage register. She, however, turned out to be of the registered tonnage of 3,045 tons, and the defendants refused to accept her in fulfilment of the charter-party. Held, that the defendants were entitled to treat the contract as void by reason of the erroneous statement of the plaintiffs with regard to the size of the ship.—14 Bom. 241.

11. Every person is competent to contract who is of the age of majority according to the law to which he is subject,* and who is of sound mind and is not disqualified from contracting by any law to which he is subject.

Who are competent to contract.

Notes.

On a reasonable construction of the whole of Reg. X of 1793, a ward of Court, duly constituted as such, is not thereby absolutely incapacitated from contracting, but the power of the ward to contract is taken away so far as regards all property which, under the provisions of the law, comes under the charge and control of the Court of Wards. The view taken by the Courts of the Regulation and Acts concerned with the Court of Wards in Bengal is, that although the possession of a revenue-paying property is a condition precedent to the jurisdiction of the Court of Wards attaching, yet when once that jurisdiction has attached, all the property of the ward comes under the control and management of the Court.—I. L. R., 8 Cal. 620.

See I. L. R., 13 Bom. 50 and 11 Cal. 522, noted under sec. 10.

12. A person is said to be of sound mind for the purpose of making a contract if, at the time when he makes it, he is capable of understanding it, and of forming a rational judgment as to its effect upon his interests.

What is a sound mind for the purposes of contracting.

A person who is usually of unsound mind, but occasionally of sound mind, may make a contract when he is of sound mind.

A person who is usually of sound mind, but occasionally of unsound mind, may not make a contract when he is of unsound mind.†

Illustrations.

(a.) A patient in a lunatic asylum, who is at intervals of sound mind, may contract during those intervals.

(b.) A sane man, who is delirious from fever, or who is so drunk that he cannot understand the terms of a contract, or form a rational judgment as to its effect on his interests, cannot contract whilst such delirium or drunkenness lasts.

* See Act IX. of 1875. For exception to this rule in the case of emigrants, See Act I. of 1882, sec. 11 and Act XXI, of 1883, sec. 39.

13. Two or more persons are said to consent when they agree upon the same thing in the same sense.

“Consent” defined.

Notes.

On the 3rd March, 1881, N drew a bill in English at Cawnpore in favour of F on a Calcutta firm, and gave it to F's agent, who did not understand English. F's agent kept the bill till the 10th March 1881 without ascertaining its nature. On that date the Calcutta firm on which the bill was drawn became insolvent. F subsequently sued N for the money he had paid for the bill, on the ground that his agent had asked N for a bill drawn on himself, and not one drawn on the Calcutta firm. N asserted in defence to the suit that F's agent had not asked for a bill drawn on himself, but merely for a bill on Calcutta. Held that assuming that the sale of the bill was void by reason of both parties being under a mistake as to the bill, yet F could not recover the amount of the bill from N, because his agent had been guilty of gross negligence in taking the bill and keeping it so long without ascertaining its nature and applying for redress.—I.L.R., 4 Al. 334.

See I. L. R., 3 Bom. 242, noted under sec. 18; 14 Bom. 241, noted under sec. 10.

14. Consent is said to be free when it is not caused by—

“Free consent” defined.

- (1) coercion, as defined in section fifteen, or
- (2) undue influence, as defined in section sixteen, or
- (3) fraud, as defined in section seventeen, or
- (4) misrepresentation, as defined in section eighteen, or
- (5) mistake, subject to the provisions of sections twenty, twenty-one, and twenty-two.

Consent is said to be so caused when it would not have been given but for the existence of such coercion, undue influence, fraud, misrepresentation, or mistake.

Note.—See I. L. R., 14 Bom. 241, noted under sec. 10.

15. “Coercion” is the committing, or threatening to commit, any act forbidden by the Indian Penal Code, or the unlawful detaining, or threatening to detain, any property, to the prejudice of any person whatever, with the intention of causing any person to enter into an agreement.

“Coercion” defined.

Explanation.—It is immaterial whether the Indian Penal Code is or is not in force in the place where the coercion is employed.

Illustration.

A, on board an English ship on the high seas, causes B to enter into an agreement by an act amounting to criminal intimidation under the Indian Penal Code.

A afterwards sues B for breach of contract at Calcutta.

A has employed coercion, although his act is not an offence by the law of England, and although section 506 of the Indian Penal Code was not in force at the time when or place where the act was done.

Notes.

In execution of a decree the plaintiff purchased certain property. Subsequently the defendant, in execution of another decree against the former owner of the property, proceeded to execute his decree against the same property. The plaintiff thereupon preferred a claim, which was disallowed, as he had not then obtained, and consequently could not produce, the sale certificate. In order to prevent the sale he then paid the amount of the defendant's decree into Court, and subsequently instituted a suit against the defendant to recover the amount so paid into Court to prevent the sale. The defendant contended that the amount was paid voluntarily and could not be recovered back. Held, following Dooli Chand v. Ram Kishen Sing, L. R., 8 I. A., 93; S. C., I. L. R., 7 Cal. 648, that it was not a voluntary payment, and that the plaintiff was entitled to a decree. Fatima Khatoon Chowdrain v. Mahomed Jan Chowdhry, 12 Moore's I. A., 65; S. C., 10 W. R., P. C., 29, referred to. Asibun v. Ram Proshad Das, 1 Shome, 25, doubted.—I. L. R., 15 Cal. 656.

The minor widow of a deceased Hindu of the Komati or Vaisya caste (who had authorized her to adopt a son) corporeally accepted a boy as in adoption from his natural father who (semble) belonged to a different gotram from her deceased husband. There were no formal declarations of giving and taking the child, and datta homam was not performed. At the time when the child was handed over to the widow her husband's corpse was still in the house, and the relatives of the child and other members of the caste obstructed the removal of the corpse until the child had been accepted as above and the widow had executed a deed of adoption:—Held, that there was no valid adoption by the widow. Per cur.—We cannot say that obstructing the removal of a corpse by the deceased's widow or her guardian, unless she made an adoption and signed a document is not an unlawful act or not an act such as is defined by sec. 15 or 16 of the Indian Contract Act. Dicta in Mahasheya Shosinath Ghose v. Srimati Krishna Soondari Dasi (1) as to incidents of a formal adoption discussed. Observations on the necessity of datta homam in a ceremonial adoption among members of a twice-born class, and on an adoption taking place during the pollution of the adoptive parent.—13 Madr. 214.

16. “Undue influence” is said to be employed in the following cases:—

(1.)—When a person in whom confidence is reposed by another, or who holds a real or apparent authority over that other, makes use of such confidence or authority for the purpose of obtaining an advantage over that other, which, but for such confidence or authority, he could not have obtained:

(2.)—When a person, whose mind is enfeebled by old age, illness, or mental or bodily distress, is so treated as to make him consent to that to which, but for such treatment, he would not have consented, although such treatment may not amount to coercion.

Notes.

In a transaction between two persons where one is so situated as to be under the control and influence of the other, the Courts in this country have to see that such other does not unduly and unfairly exercise that influence and control over such person for his own advantage or benefit, or for the advantage or benefit of some religious object in which he is interested, and will call upon him to give clear and cogent proof that the transaction complained of was such a one as the law would support and recognise. Where a fiduciary or quasi-fiduciary relation had existed courts of equity have invariably placed the burden of sustaining the transaction upon the party benefited by it, requiring him to show that it was of an unobjectionable character and one which it ought not to disturb. The exercise of this beneficial jurisdiction is not confined to cases only between guardian and ward, attorney and client, father and son, but the relief thus granted stands upon a general principle, applying to all the variety of relations in which dominion may be exercised by one person over another. The plaintiff, who on the death of the widow of his brother became entitled to the estate of the deceased, found himself resisted in his claim by wealthy relatives. He was a man without means. The defendant took him to his house, kept him there, found him all the money for the purpose of carrying on his litigation with his relatives, in which the plaintiff succeeded. While the litigation for mutation of names in respect of the property was pending in the Revenue Court, and while plaintiff was residing with the defendant, he executed a sale-deed in favor of defendant's brother for the nominal consideration of Rs. 9,500, or half the property he claimed; and again, shortly after the mutation case had terminated in his favor, he executed a deed of endowment of the remaining half in favor of a temple founded by the ancestor of the defendant, and in which the defendant was interested, and the result was that plaintiff was left as poor as he was when he first came into the defendant's hands. Plaintiff sued for cancellation of the deed of endowment, on the ground that the same had been obtained from him by the exercise of undue influence and by means of fraud, and obtained a decree. On appeal by the defendant it was held that, looking at all the facts, such a relation between plaintiff and defendant in the course of the year 1885 had been established as to cast upon the latter the obligation of satisfying the Court that the transaction, which was given effect to by the deed of endowment, was an honest bona fide transaction and one that ought to be upheld.—I. L. R., 10 Al. 535.

See I. L. R., 13 Madr. 214, noted under sec. 15.

17. “Fraud” means and includes any of the following acts committed by a party to a contract,* or with his connivance, or by his agent,† with intent to deceive another party thereto or his agent, or to induce him to enter into the contract :*—

(1.)—The suggestion, as a fact, of that which is not true, by one who does not believe it to be true;

(2.)—The active concealment of a fact by one having knowledge or belief of the fact;

* Read ‘agreement.’

† Compare sec. 238, infra.

(3.)—A promise made without any intention of performing it;

(4.)—Any other act fitted to deceive;

(5.)—Any such act or omission as the law specially declares to be fraudulent.

Explanation.—Mere silence as to facts likely to affect the willingness of a person to enter into a contract,* is not fraud, unless the circumstances of the case are such that, regard being had to them, it is the duty of the person keeping silence to speak,† or unless his silence is, in itself, equivalent to speech.

Illustrations.

(a.) A sells, by auction, to B, a horse which A knows to be unsound. A says nothing to B about the horse's unsoundness. This is not fraud in A.

(b.) B is A's daughter, and has just come of age. Here, the relation between the parties would make it A's duty to tell B if the horse is unsound.

(c.) B says to A, "If you do not deny it, I shall assume that the horse is sound." A says nothing. Here A's silence is equivalent to speech.

(d.) A and B, being traders, enter upon a contract.* A has private information of a change in prices which would affect B's willingness to proceed with the contract.* A is not bound to inform B.

Notes.

In a suit brought to recover Rs. 815, principal and interest due according to the terms of a registered mortgage bond, it was found that the plaintiff had fraudulently altered the terms of the bond prior to registration (1) by inserting a condition, making the whole sum payable upon default of payment of any instalment, and (2) by doubling the rate of interest. The defendant admitted in his written statement that he had received a certain portion of the consideration for the bond from the plaintiff. At the trial the plaintiff claimed to amend the plaint and recover the first instalment according to the terms of the bond as executed by defendant:—Held, by the Full Bench (Kernan, Offg. C. J., Muttusami Ayyar, Hutchins, Parker and Handley JJ.) that the suit must be dismissed. Per Kernan and Muttusami Ayyar, JJ.—The decision in Ramasamy Son's case is in conformity with the law of England. Per Kernan, Hutchins, Parker and Handley, JJ.—The rule in Master v. Miller is in consonance with equity and good conscience and applicable to the mufassal. Per Muttusami Ayyar, J.—That rule is more penal than equitable, but having been adopted by the courts since 1866 must be followed.—[L. R., 9 Madr. 399.]

If a vendor has been guilty of fraud within the meaning of sec. 17 of the Indian Contract Act by actively concealing a fact which it was material for the purchaser to know, and the purchaser was induced thereby to purchase, the fact that the purchaser by exercise of ordinary diligence might have ascertained the truth affords no answer to a suit to recover the purchase money. Such a case does not fall within the exception to sec. 19 of the Contract Act.—11 Madr. 419.

"Misrepresentation" defined.

18. "Misrepresentation" means and includes—

* Read 'agreement.'

† See sec. 143, infra.

(1) the positive assertion, in a manner not warranted by the information of the person making it, of that which is not true, though he believes it to be true;

(2) any breach of duty which, without an intent to deceive, gains an advantage to the person committing it, or any one claiming under him, by misleading another to his prejudice, or to the prejudice of any one claiming under him;

(3) causing, however innocently, a party to an agreement, to make a mistake as to the substance of the thing which is the subject of the agreement.

Notes.

J having represented to C that there were good roads, metalled to within six or seven miles of the place where he wanted C to forward a certain engine and boiler, and a fair kucha road the remainder, C relying on his statement, agreed to forward the same to the place of destination for a certain sum, part of which C received on different occasions, and duly forwarded to the place the engine, but, on passage across an iron suspension bridge on the road being refused to the boiler by the officer in charge of the bridge on account of its weight, C threw up the contract. J, having conveyed the boiler across the nala spanned by the bridge, and finally, to the place of destination, sued to recover from C the money expended by him in so doing, alleging breach of contract. It was held that the suit was rightly dismissed on the ground that the agreement was voidable by C under the provisions of sec. 19 of Act IX of 1872. It was also held that the plaintiff could not recover in suit any portion of the moneys advanced to the defendant.—4 H. C. R., (N.-W. P.) 350.

The firm of Nicol and Co. having suspended payment, a general meeting of creditors was convened, at which it was unanimously resolved that the business of the firm should be wound up by voluntary liquidation under the supervision of a committee; and that the winding up should be conducted by two trustees under the supervision and control of the said committee. At a subsequent meeting of the creditors the above resolutions were confirmed, and it was further resolved that a composition-deed should be prepared in pursuance of the terms of the above resolutions. The adoption of this last resolution was strongly pressed upon the meeting by the Solicitor for the insolvent firm on the ground that the mode of procedure therein proposed was proposed solely in the interests of the creditors. Entirely repudiated the idea that the members of the firm were to obtain any benefit by the proposed measure. No mention was made at either of the meetings of any release to be given to the parties. The plaintiffs were creditors of Nicol & Co., and R, S, and B, were their respective agents in Bombay. R, S, and B, attended the said meetings on the plaintiffs' behalf, and were appointed members of the committee of supervision and control. A few days after the last mentioned meeting, M, one of the partners of the insolvent firm, called upon R, who at the time was deeply engaged in pressing and important business. M produced a deed which had been prepared by the solicitors of the firm, and which contained a clause by which the creditors, in consideration of the assignment of the estate to trustees, released and discharged the members of the firm from all claims. M was aware of the existence of the release in the deed. He asked R, to execute the deed, stating that it was the "trust deed." R requested M to leave the document, saying that he would go over it, and return it in the course of the day. M then earnestly pressed him to execute the document at once, stating that it was of the utmost importance that no time should be lost, as the native creditors were coming to his office, and that it was necessary that all the members of the committee of supervision should sign first. R objected to sign the document without reading it, and M thereupon led him to suppose that the deed only carried out what was agreed to at the creditors' meeting. Upon the faith of that assurance, R executed the deed on behalf of the first plaintiffs in the belief that it was nothing more than an assignment to trustees for the benefit of creditors. Subsequently, on the same day, M took the deed to S, and asked him to sign. S was also engaged in pressing business, and asked M to leave the deed for perusal; but M gave the same reason for not doing so that he had given to R, and further stated that R had signed, and that he (M) hoped that S would also sign. S glanced at the deed, and being assured by M that it was in order, thereupon on the faith of that assurance, and believing that the deed was nothing more than an assignment of the estate to the trustees, executed the deed on behalf of the second plaintiffs without reading it. M on the same day took the deed, with the signature of R and S attached thereto, to B, who was also engaged in pressing business, and asked him to sign it. After some conversation, B said to M: "The deed, then, is merely an assignment of the firm's effect for the creditors," and M replied in the affirmative. B then on behalf of the third plaintiffs, executed the deed without reading it, believing it to be merely an assignment of the estate to the trustees. On the 15th October, R and B heard that the deed contained a release by the creditors to the debtors, and on the 16th October S was also for the first time informed of it. On the 16th October, R and S wrote a letter to M repudiating their signatures, and refusing to be bound by the deed; and on the 26th October, B caused a similar letter to be written to M's solicitor. The plaintiffs sued to have the signatures of their said agents and managers severally cancelled, and to have it declared that the deed was not binding on the plaintiffs. Held that, having regard to what passed at the meetings of creditors, the deed, so far as it operated as a release, was a different deed from that which R, S and B either intended to execute, or thought they were executing when they affixed their signatures, and that, not having read the deed, but having trusted to M to inform them as to its contents, their signatures could not be held to be a consent to its contents, and that, therefore, so far as the deed operated as a release, their signatures were null. Held also that, under the special circumstances of the case, it became the duty of M to communicate to R, S, and B the existence of the release, and that, not having done so, he committed a breach of duty, such as is contemplated by clause 2 of sec. 18 of the Contract Act (IX of 1872). Held, also that, under the circumstances, R, S, and B had not the means of discovering the truth with ordinary diligence, and that the exception to section 19 of the Contract Act was not applicable.—I. L. R., 3 Bom. 242.

On the 9th October, 1878, the National Bank purchased from the N company a bill of exchange for 4,000 dollars, equivalent to Rs. 8,680, drawn by the N company upon the firm of N K & Co., of Hongkong. The bill was in the following form: "Sixty days after sight of this first of Exchange (second the third of same tenor and date not being paid) pay to the order of the National Bank of India the sum of dollars four thousand only (value received), and place the same to account of Nursey Kessowji, Ghe-labhoy Pudumsey, Directors. Nursey Kessowji, Secretary, Treasurer, and Agent, The Nursey Spinning and Weaving Company, Limited." The bill was duly accepted and presented for payment, but was dishonored. On the 6th January 1879, the Bank gave notice of dishonor, and demanded payment from the Company as drawers of the bill. On the 18th January 1879, the N Company was ordered to be wound up, and the Bank sent in a claim against the Company as drawers of the bill, and subsequently sent in an alternative claim for Rs. 8,680, being the "amount paid by the bank to and received by the Company." Held, on the authority of In re The New Fleming Spinning and Weaving, Limited (I. L. R., 4 Bom. 275), that having regard to the form of the bill, the N Company could not be made liable as drawers, but held also that the bank was entitled to recover the amount of the bill from the N company as money received to the use of the bank, on the ground that the directors of the N Company, while acting within their authority, had sold to the bank on behalf of the Company, as a bill, upon which the Company was liable, one upon which the Company was not liable, and had, therefore, been guilty of misrepresentation within meaning of secs. 18 and 19 of the Indian Contract Act (IX of 1872).—5 Bom. 92.

See I. L. R., 4 Cal. 801, noted under sec. 19; 14 Bom. 241, noted under sec. 10.

19. When consent to an agreement is caused by coercion, undue influence, fraud, or misrepresentation, the agreement is a contract voidable at the option of the party whose consent was so caused.

A party to a contract, whose consent was caused by fraud or misrepresentation, may, if he thinks fit, insist that the contract shall be performed, and that he shall be put in the position in which he would have been if the representations made had been true.

Exception.—If such consent was caused by misrepresentation or by silence, fraudulent within the meaning of section seventeen, the contract, nevertheless, is not voidable, if the party whose consent was so caused had the means of discovering the truth with ordinary diligence.

Explanation.—A fraud or misrepresentation which did not cause the consent to a contract of the party on whom such fraud was practised, or to whom such misrepresentation was made, does not render a contract voidable.

Illustrations.

(a.) A, intending to deceive B, falsely represents that five hundred maunds of indigo are made annually at A's factory, and thereby induces B to buy the factory. The contract is voidable at the option of B.

(b.) A, by a misrepresentation, leads B erroneously to believe that five hundred maunds of indigo are made annually at A's factory. B examines the accounts of the factory, which show that only four hundred maunds of indigo have been made. After this B buys the factory. The contract is not voidable on account of A's misrepresentation.

(c.) A fraudulently informs B that A's estate is free from incumbrance. B thereupon buys the estate. The estate is subject to a mortgage. B may either avoid the contract, or may insist on its being carried out and the mortgage-debt redeemed.*

(d.) B, having discovered a vein of ore on the estate of A, adopts means to conceal, and does conceal, the existence of the ore from A. Through A's ignorance B is enabled to buy the estate at an under-value. The contract is voidable at the option of A.

(e.) A is entitled to succeed to an estate at the death of B; B dies: C, having received intelligence of B's death, prevents the intelligence reaching A, and thus induces A to sell him his interest in the estate. The sale is voidable at the option of A.

Notes.

A contracted with B to sell him 975 maunds of rice, the whole contents of a certain golah at Kalyagunge (near which place B resided), at a certain rate. B paid to A certain earnest-money, and agreed to remove the whole of the rice, after weighing, on or before a certain date. B transferred his contract to C, who, through his servant, took delivery from A of 130 maunds, paying to A Rs. 1,000; but subsequently refused to take delivery of the residue, as he alleged it to be of inferior quality to that contracted for. The golah was accidentally burnt, and the residue of the rice destroyed. In a suit by A to recover from B the balance of the purchase-money (after deducting the payments made) under the contract: Held that the sale was complete, and the ownerships, with the risk of loss in the rice sold, passed to B under secs. 78 and 86 of the Contract Act, because the Contract was for "ascertained goods" for which B had paid earnest-money and taken part delivery; and that it was not open to B to rescind the sale on alleging and proving a breach of warranty on the part of A, unless he could bring the case within the provisions of sec. 19; but that he was precluded from so doing, because he might have discovered the inferiority of the quality of the rice by using "ordinary diligence."—I. L. R., 4 Cal. 801.

Agreement void where both parties are under mistake as to matter of fact.

20. Where both the parties to an agreement are under a mistake as to a matter of fact essential to the agreement, the agreement is void.

Explanation.—An erroneous opinion as to the value of the thing which forms the subject-matter of the agreement is not to be deemed a mistake as to a matter of fact.

Illustrations.

(a.) A agrees to sell to B a specific cargo of goods supposed to be on its way from England to Bombay. It turns out that, before the day of the bargain, the ship conveying the cargo had been cast away, and the goods lost. Neither party was aware of these facts. The agreement is void.

(b.) A agrees to buy from B a certain horse. It turns out that the horse was dead at the time of the bargain, though neither party was aware of the fact. The agreement is void.

* Read 'paid off' or 'discharged.'

(c.) A, being entitled to an estate for the life of B, agrees to sell it to C. B was dead at the time of the agreement, but both parties were ignorant of the fact. The agreement is void.

Notes.

The plaintiff, a minor, was, as daughter and one of the heirs of A, entitled to 7-24ths of his estate. The value of A's estate was uncertain, and depended on whether or not A had been a partner in business with M, and whether or not a sum of Rs. 30,000 had been paid by M to A in satisfaction of all claims which A had against M in respect of the estate of K, a deceased brother of A and former partner in the same business. M having, on A's death, possessed himself of all the estate of A, the plaintiff brought a suit against M, in which a decree was made ordering an account to be taken of the estate of A which had come into the hands of M. Pending such account, M died, leaving a will, by which he appointed the son of A and another his executors, and the suit was revived against them. In their application for probate they stated that the value of M's estate, so far as they had been able to ascertain and were aware, was Rs. 4,41,000. Shortly after probate was granted, negotiations were entered into between the executor and the advisers of the plaintiff for a compromise, and a petition was, with the concurrence of the executors, presented by the plaintiff to the Court, asking for its sanction to the terms agreed upon by the parties, which were, that the plaintiff should receive Rs. 20,000 in full of all demands, and Rs. 5,000 for her costs of suit. This petition took, as the value of M's estate, the amount stated by the executors in their application for probate, and stated that the value of A's estate, in case the above mentioned payment by M was proved, would be Rs. 30,000, and in case it was not proved, then a moiety of the estate of M; and that, considering the difficulties the plaintiff had to meet in proving her case, and with a view to put an end to further trouble, litigation, and expense, the above terms had been agreed to on her behalf. These terms of compromise were sanctioned by the Court on the 11th September, 1876. Shortly afterwards, further property was discovered belonging to the estate of M. The plaintiff brought a suit against the executors to set aside the compromise, alleging that the terms had been accepted by her on the faith of the representation made by the executors in their application for probate, and charging them with wilful and fraudulent concealment. There was evidence to show that some of the property subsequently discovered was such that the defendants as executors ought to have known, even if they did not know of its existence at the time of the compromise. Held that, even though the executors had no such knowledge, and there was no actual fraud, yet there was such culpable ignorance and neglect of duty on their part as to amount to such fraud, and to carry with it the consequence of knowledge, and as the compromise had in consequence been entered into by the parties and sanctioned by the Court under a misapprehension of material fact, the plaintiff was entitled to have the compromise set aside, and the parties restored to their rights in the former suit at the time it was effected. Per PONTIFEX, J.—In cases where the sanction of the Court is required, as where there is an infant concerned, each party is bound to see that the materials on which the sanction of the Court is asked for are unimpeachable. Per PONTIFEX, J.—Quære.—Whether in this suit, if the questions were found to arise, it would be necessary for the Court to consider whether it would be for the benefit of the minor that the compromise should be set aside? Per GARTH, C. J.—Semhle.—Even if it only appeared that the compromise had been entered into and sanctioned under an entire mistake of the parties and of the Court with regard to the subject-matter of the agreement, it ought to be set aside under sec. 20 of the Contract Act. Per GARTH, C. J.—In a substantive suit by a minor to set aside a compromise made with the sanction of the Court obtained by fraud or mistake, it is not in the province of the Court to inquire whether it would or would not be for the benefit of the minor that the compromise should be set aside; though it might be otherwise on an application for review to the Court which granted the sanction.—I. L. R., 6 Cal. 687.

21. A contract is not voidable because it was caused by a mistake as to any law in force in British India; but a mistake as to a law not in force in British India has the same effect as a mistake of fact.

Illustrations.

A and B make a contract grounded on the erroneous belief that a particular debt is barred by the Indian Law of Limitation. The contract is not voidable.

Notes.

By an agreement in writing, defendants, trustees of a temple, in consideration of an advance of money which they represented was required to pay off debts incurred for the benefit of the temple, granted to plaintiff a lease of the right to manage the temple lands, and plaintiff promised that he would repay himself out of the profits to be derived from the lands and that neither the defendants nor their family property should be made liable for the debt. In a suit by plaintiff against a tenant of the temple lands, this lease was held to be void for illegality. Defendants subsequently resumed management and plaintiff sued them to recover the money advanced by him. It was found that the agreement was entered into by both parties under a mistake as to the validity of the lease:—Held that, assuming sec. 65 of the Contract Act was not intended to vary the rule, that a mistake of law is no ground for relieving a party from his own contract, plaintiff was nevertheless entitled to recover on the ground that the agreement which provided for repayment was collateral and had failed. An agreement that an obligation which is contracted shall be discharged in some particular mode is collateral to the primary contract which created the obligation, though the two agreements may be mixed up in one contract.—I. L. R., 9 Madr. 441.

In 1848, B and R mortgaged a piece of land to V. It was to be redeemed in eight years, or else to become the absolute property of the mortgagee. It was not redeemed; and in 1859, B., in whose name the land was entered in the Government records, executed a razinama in favour of V, and V passed a kabulayat accepting the land. B and R then became V's tenants, and were, as such, successfully sued by him for rent in 1863. In 1872, V sold the land to N, who again sold it to the defendant. The plaintiff, an purchaser from the original mortgagors (B and R) of their alleged equity of redemption, filed the present suit to redeem the property. Held, that as the razinama given by B contained no reservation, and as it was accompanied by a transfer of possession, it had the effect of a conveyance of all the mortgagor's rights to the mortgagee. It operated to extinguish the equity of redemption, notwithstanding any misconception or ignorance, on B's part, of his rights as mortgagor. Under the Indian Contract Act (IX of 1872, sec. 21), error of law does not vitiate a contract, much less will it annul a conveyance after the lapse of many years, unless there has been some fraud or mis-representation and an absence of negligence.—11 Bom. 174.

Contract caused by mistake of one party as to matter of fact.

22. A contract is not voidable merely because it was caused by one of the parties to it being under a mistake as to a matter of fact.

Notes.

On the 21st of January, 1883, the plaintiff contracted to purchase from the defendant the right to receive dividend on 50 shares of the Empress Mill at Rs. 37 per share, the plaintiff being under an impression that the dividend was to be declared on some subsequent day. The plaintiff deposited Rs. 100 with the defendant as part payment of the purchase-money. Subsequently it was ascertained that the dividend had been already declared on 17th January, 1883 (i. e., four days before the contract) at Rs. 25. The plaintiff thereupon sued the defendant to have the contract declared cancelled, and sought to recover the deposit of Rs. 100, with interest. The Judge of the Court of Small Causes at Broach, being of opinion that the contract was in its nature a sutta or wagering contract, they rejected the plaintiff's claim. The plaintiff applied to the High Court, under its extraordinary jurisdiction, to set aside the lower Court's decision:—Held, that, in the first instance, the plaint, as framed, not disclosing any cause of action, ought to have been returned for amendment. It should either have alleged a mistake common to both parties to the contract, or should have contained an allegation of fraud, on the defendant's part, inducing the plaintiff to enter into the agreement. The mere circumstance, that the contract was "caused by one of the parties to it being under a mistake as to a matter of fact," would not under section 22, have made the contract voidable:—Held, also, that, if the contract was really a wager, the deposit could not be recovered under section 65 of the Contract Act, as its nature must from the first have been known to the parties. To an agreement, so known to be void, section 65 does not apply. If the contract was, in the intention of both parties, a wager, the suit would be barred by section 1 of Bombay Act III of 1865, which though it formed a part of Act XXI of 1848, which is repealed by the Contract Act, is not, being a special Act, applicable to the Bombay Presidency, itself repealed. It must be read with section 30 of the Contract Act:—Held, also, that to constitute a wager the transaction between the parties must "wholly depend on the risk in contemplation," and "neither party must look to anything but the payment of money on the determination of an uncertainty." But if one of the parties has "the event in his own hands," the transaction is not a wager. If the plaintiff's real contention was that defendant was aware of a declaration of dividends, at Rs. 25 per share, and, by keeping plaintiff in ignorance of the fact, induced him to enter a wagering agreement for payment of differences at a contract rate of Rs. 37 per share, then to a suit for the recovery of the deposit made to the defendant with reference to such an agreement, Bombay Act III of 1865, has no application. Wagering contracts are not illegal. They are simply destitute of legal effect. If fraud practised on plaintiff, the maxim potior est conditio defendentis would not apply.

The High Court reversed the lower Court's decision, in order that the plaintiff might be given an opportunity to amend his plaint, so as to show that his action was one for deceit.—I. L. R., 8 Bom. 358.

What considerations and objects are lawful, and what not.

23. The consideration or object of an agreement is lawful, unless—it is forbidden by law ;* or is of such a nature that, if permitted, it would defeat the provisions of any law ; or is fraudulent ; or involves or implies injury to the person or property of another ; or the Court regards it as immoral or opposed to public policy.

In each of these cases, the consideration or object of an agreement is said to be unlawful. Every agreement, of which the object or consideration is unlawful, is void.

Illustrations.

(a.) A agrees to sell his house to B for 10,000 rupees. Here B's promise to pay the sum of 10,000 rupees is the consideration for A's promise to sell the house, and A's promise to sell the house is the consideration for B's promise to pay the 10,000 rupees. These are lawful considerations.

(b.) A promises to pay B 1,000 rupees at the end of six months, if C, who owes that sum to B, fails to pay it. B promises to grant time to C accordingly. Here, the promise of each party is the consideration for the promise of the other party, and they are lawful considerations.

(c.) A promises, for a certain sum paid to him by B, to make good to B the value of his ship if it is wrecked on a certain voyage. Here A's promise is the consideration for B's payment, and B's payment is the consideration for A's promise, and these are lawful considerations.

(d.) A promises to maintain B's child, and B promises to pay A 1,000 rupees yearly for the purpose. Here, the promise of each party is the consideration for the promise of the other party. They are lawful considerations.

(e.) A, B and C, enter into an agreement for the division among them of gains acquired, or to be acquired, by them by fraud. The agreement is void, as its object is unlawful.

(f.) A promises to obtain for B an employment in the public service, and B promises to pay 1,000 rupees to A. The agreement is void, as the consideration for it is unlawful.

(g.) A, being agent for a landed proprietor, agrees for money, without the knowledge of his principal, to obtain for B a lease of land belonging to his principal. The agreement between A and B is void, as it implies a fraud by concealment by A on his principal.

(h.) A promises B to drop a prosecution which he has instituted against B for robbery, and B promises to restore the value of the things taken. The agreement is void, as its object is unlawful.

* See secs. 26, 27, 28, 30,

(i.) A's estate is sold for arrears of revenue under the provisions of an Act of the legislature, by which the defaulter is prohibited from purchasing the estate. B, upon an understanding with A, becomes the purchaser, and agrees to convey the estate to A upon receiving from him the price which B has paid. The agreement is void, as it renders the transaction, in effect, a purchase by the defaulter, and would so defeat the object of the law.

(j.) A, who is B's mukhtar, promises to exercise his influence, as such, with B in favor of C, and C promises to pay 1,000 rupees to A. The agreement is void, because it is immoral.

(k.) A agrees to let her daughter to hire to B for concubinage. The agreement is void, because it is immoral, though the letting may not be punishable under the Indian Penal Code.

Notes.

An adoption of a son after payment of price is not recognized in the present, the kali yuga. The only adoption now recognized is that of the dattaka son, or son given. A contract to give a son in adoption, in consideration of an annual allowance to the natural parents, is void under sec. 23 of Act IX of 1872, inasmuch as the contract, if carried out, would involve an injury to the person and property of the adopted son, and would defeat the provisions of the Hindu law.—13 B. L. R., Ap. 42.

A bona fide purchase of a share in a claim about to be enforced by a suit is not void under sec. 23 of the Indian Contract Act; and a suit may, after such purchase, be properly brought by the vendee and vendors as co-plaintiffs. A and B having a claim against C for Rs. 13,099-3, but not being in circumstances themselves to institute a suit for its enforcement, sold fourteen annas or fourteen-sixteenths of their claim to D for Rs. 4000; and a suit was then instituted by A, B, and D against C. C pleaded that the sale to D was void under sec. 23 of the Indian Contract Act, and that A and B could not sue for two annas only of their entire claim. Held that the sale to D was not void; that the suit was properly framed; and that, even if the sale had been void, the suit by A and B was not liable to dismissal.—I. L. R., 5 Cal. 4.

The plaintiff sued the defendant for possession of a house and premises, which he had bought from the latter. The defence was, that the sale was made for the purpose of raising money to be given to certain third parties as a bribe to induce them to withdraw a charge of criminal breach of trust, which they had preferred against the defendant. The lower Appellate Court held that the defence was bad, on the ground that there was no evidence to show that the plaintiff was a party to, or in any way concerned in, the unlawful agreement, and gave the plaintiff a decree. Held that the decree was correct, as there was no evidence to show either that the plaintiff knew of the agreement to suppress the criminal prosecution, or that any money had been paid in pursuance of such unlawful agreement.—8 Cal. 24.

The question whether an unambiguous written contract for the sale and purchase of Government paper is a contract or agreement by way of wager must be decided on the expressed terms of the contract itself, and parol evidence is not admissible to vary or contradict those terms. Where a contract for the sale and purchase of Government paper provides for the delivery of the paper on a subsequent date, it is not necessary, in order to sustain an action against the buyer for non-acceptance on the due date, that the plaintiff should have taken the Government paper contracted for to the place of business of the defendant and then and there made an actual tender of it.—9 Cal. 791.

The defendant in consideration of Rs. 100 promised to give his minor daughter in marriage to the plaintiff; the defendant failed to fulfil his part of the promise, and the plaintiff brought a suit to recover the money paid as consideration for the promise. Held, that such a suit would lie. Jugges-hur Chuckerbutty v. Punch Cowree Chuckerbutty. 4 W. R., 154, approved. Quære.—Whether the Court could have enforced the payment of the Rs. 100 to the father of the minor as against the person engaging to marry the minor.—10 Cal. 1054.

The Bengal Excise Act of 1878 is not an Act framed solely for the protection of the revenue, but is one embracing other important objects of public policy as well. An agreement, therefore, for the sale of fermented liquors, entered into by a person who has not obtained a license under that Act, is void and cannot be recovered on.—16 Cal. 436.

Plaintiff agreed to give his daughter in marriage to defendant's nephew in consideration of a payment of Rs. 400. It was not alleged that the money was to be a dowry or settlement for the bride. Rs. 200 were paid and defendant executed a bond for the balance. The marriage took place in the asura form. The plaintiff now sued on the bond:—Held, the consideration for the bond was not unlawful.—13 Madr. 83.

An agreement to pay a tax prohibited by an Act of the Legislature would defeat the object of the Act, and was, consequently, void, and could not be enforced—Indian Contract Act IX of 1872, sec. 23.—8 Bom. 398.

M took a lease for three years of a Government ferry, and covenanted with the Magistrate, who granted the lease, not to underlet or assign the lease without leave or license of the Magistrate. M subsequently admitted B as his partner to share with him equally in the profits to be derived from the lease. Held that such partnership was not void by reason of the covenant not to underlet or assign the lease. S. A. No. 119 of 1872, decided on the 1st August, 1872, overruled.—2 Al. 411.

Where a person who had lost a bet on a horse-race requested another to pay the amount of such bet, agreeing to repay him, and the latter paid such amount: Held that the money so paid was recoverable from the person for whom it was paid, the consideration for the agreement not being unlawful within the meaning of sec. 23 of the Contract Act, 1872, and the agreement not being one by way of wager, within the meaning of sec. 30 of the same Act.—5 Al. 443.

The judgment of the Privy Council in Ram Coomar Coondoo v. Chunder Canto Mookerjee shows that while the specific English law of maintenance and champerty has not been introduced into India, and while fair agreements to supply funds to carry on litigation in consideration of having a share of the property if recovered should not be regarded as per se opposed to public policy, yet such agreements should be carefully watched, and if extortionate and unconscionable, or made not with the bona fide object of assisting, for a reasonable recompense, a claim believed to be just, but for the purpose of gambling in litigation, or of injuring or oppressing others by encouraging unrighteous suits, should be held contrary to public policy, and not enforced. For the purposes of meeting the expenses of an appeal to the High Court, the appellant, on the advice of his legal advisers, executed a bond for Rs. 25,000 in consideration of the obligee agreeing to defray such expenses. The obligor agreed to pay the Rs. 25,000 within one year from his recovering possession of the property in suit; and, at the request of the obligor's pleader, the obligee advanced Rs. 3,700, which was applied to the expenses of the appeal. The High Court dismissed the appeal; and in a deed executed by the obligor in favour of the obligee and others for the purpose of defraying the expenses of a further appeal to the Privy Council, he admitted his liability under the former bond. The Privy Council decreed his appeal, and he obtained possession of the property in suit, but declined to pay the Rs. 25,000, upon which the obligee sued upon the bond. It was found that, apart from the moneys borrowed by the obligor from time to time he was without even the means of subsistence; that he executed the bond with his eyes open and perfectly understood his position and the effect of both the instruments executed by him; that no fraud or improper pressure appeared to have been applied to him; that his legal advisers had acted honestly and to the best of their ability in his interests; that there was nothing to show that, having regard to the risks of the litigation, he could have obtained the assistance necessary for the prosecution of his appeal on better terms than those contained in the bond; that without such assistance he could not have appealed to the High Court; and that the obligee gave him such assistance upon his application. Held also that the obligee could not, under the circumstances, have considered both that the obligor's claim was a just one and reasonably likely to succeed, and that the Rs. 25,000 was a reasonable recompense in the event of success for the advance of Rs. 3,700; and the bond was therefore a gambling in litigation, which it would be contrary to public policy to enforce. The Court gave the plaintiff a decree for the Rs. 3,700 actually advanced, with simple interest at 20 per cent. per annum from the date of the bond to the date of the decree, with costs in proportion, and interest at 6 per cent. per annum on the Rs. 3,700, interest and costs, from the date of the decree until payment.—11 Al. 57.

VOID AGREEMENTS.

- 24. If any part of a single consideration for one or more objects, or any one or any part of any one of several considerations for a single object, is unlawful, the agreement is void.

Agreements void, if considerations and objects unlawful in part.

Illustration.

A promises to superintend, on behalf of B, a legal manufacture of indigo and an illegal traffic in other articles. B promises to pay to A a salary of 10,000 rupees a year. The agreement is void, the object of A's promise, and the consideration for B's promise, being in part unlawful.

Notes.

The defendant, a Mahomedan husband, executed a kabinnama in favour of his wife, by which he agreed, among other things, that he would maintain her, and make over to her whatever money he should earn; that he would never exercise any violence upon her; that he would not take her away from home; that it should not be within his power to marry or make any nika without her permission; that he would do nothing without her permission, and, if he did, she should be at liberty to divorce him, and realize from him the amount of dinmobur forthwith, and the nika would then be null and void. The plaintiff sued her husband upon this document, which was registered, to recover from him all his earnings amounting to

Rs. 565, after deducting Rs. 54, which she admitted having received from him. The lower appellate Court held, reversing the decision of the Munsif, that the agreement had been made subsequently to the marriage, and was, though registered, void for want of consideration. Held on appeal that the agreement, being registered, came within sec. 25 of the Contract Act, and was not void on the ground that there was no consideration. Although some parts of the agreement might be illegal as being contrary to public policy, and therefore void, yet those which were legal could be enforced. The Court treated the suit as one to enforce that part only of the contract which was legal, and considered the plaintiff entitled to recover a fair sum for her maintenance.—15 B. L. R., Ap. 5.

There is nothing in secs. 23 and 24 of the Indian Contract Act (IX of 1872) to support the opinion that a sale, made with the view of defeating a probable execution, is a sale with fraudulent and unlawful object, and, therefore, void within the meaning of those sections.—I. L. R., 4 Bom. 70.

F was required by the Magistrate, under the Code of Criminal Procedure, to furnish two sureties, who should be responsible for his good behaviour, each in a certain sum. S agreed to become a surety on condition that F would deposit with him the amount of the security. F made the deposit, and S became a surety. The period for which S was responsible for F's good conduct having expired without F committing any act to forfeit the security, and S refusing to return the deposit, F sued S to recover the deposit. Held that, as the consideration for the agreement defeated the object of the law, the consideration was unlawful, and F was not entitled to relief.—1 Al. 751.

See I. L. R., 8 Bom. 358, noted under sec. 22.

Agreement without consideration, void, unless—

25. An agreement made without consideration is void, unless—

(1) it is expressed in writing and registered under the law for the time being in force for the registration of documents,* and is made on account of natural love and affection between parties standing in a near relation to each other; or unless

(2) it is a promise to compensate, wholly or in part, a person who has already voluntarily done something for the promisor, or something which the promiser was legally compellable to do; or unless

(3) it is a promise, made in writing, and signed by the person to be charged therewith, or by his agent generally or specially authorized in that behalf, to pay wholly or in part a debt of which the creditor might have enforced payment but for the law for the limitation of suits.†

* See now Act III. of 1877, The word "documents" has been substituted for the word "assurances" by Act XII. of 1891.

† See now Act XV. of 1877.

In any of these cases, such an agreement is a contract.

Explanation 1.—Nothing in this section shall affect the validity, as between the donor and donee, of any gift actually made.

Explanation 2.—An agreement to which the consent of the promisor is freely given is not void merely because the consideration is inadequate; but the inadequacy of the consideration may be taken into account by the Court in determining the question whether the consent of the promisor was freely given.

Illustrations.

(a.) A promises, for no consideration, to give to B Rs. 1,000. This is a void agreement.

(b.) A, for natural love and affection, promises to give his son, B, Rs. 1,000. A puts his promise to B into writing, and registers it. This is a contract.

(c.) A finds B's purse, and gives it to him. B promises to give A Rs. 50. This is a contract.

(d.) A supports B's infant son. B promises to pay A's expenses in so doing. This is a contract.

(e.) A owes B Rs. 1,000, but the debt is barred by the Limitation Act. A signs a written promise to pay B Rs. 500 on account of the debt. This is a contract.

(f.) A agrees to sell a horse worth Rs. 1,000 for Rs. 10. A's consent to the agreement was freely given. The agreement is a contract, notwithstanding the inadequacy of the consideration.

(g.) A agrees to sell a horse worth Rs. 1,000 for Rs. 10. A denies that his consent to the agreement was freely given. The inadequacy of the consideration is a fact which the Court should take into account in considering whether or not A's consent was freely given.

Notes.

A obtained a decree in 1858 against B, but did not apply for execution till 1864, when B, although objecting that the decree was barred, presented to the Court, under arrangement with A, a petition acknowledging a certain sum to be due, and executed a Kistibandi agreeing to pay the debt by monthly instalments. B paid several instalments, but did not do so on one occasion, until execution was taken out against her. On her death shortly afterwards, execution was taken out against her representatives. The representatives objected that the decree was barred, and that the Kistibandi could not be substituted for the decree. The objection was, an appeal to the High Court, allowed. A then brought a suit on the Kistibandi. Held that, at the time the Kistibandi was entered into, the decree was, under the limitation law then in force, capable of being executed, and that there was, therefore, valid consideration for the Kistibandi. Held, also that, even had there been no valid consideration for the Kistibandi yet the principle laid down in sec. 25, clause 3 of Act IX of 1872, and which prevailed before the passing of that Act, would have saved the Kistibandi from becoming void for want of consideration.—I. L. R., 4 Cal. 500.

The plaintiff, a member of an undivided Hindu family, having, by a registered document, renounced all right to the family-property in favour of the remaining coparceners, who were to manage the estate in future, pay all debts, and maintain the plaintiff in the family, sued to recover his share of the family-property : Held that the plaintiff was still a coparcener, and was not estopped by the document from bringing the suit.—6 Madr. 71.

The “promise” referred to in sec. 20 of Act IX of 1872 is a promise introduced by way of exception in a suit founded on the original cause of action, and not a promise constituting a new contract, and extinguishing the original cause of action. Accordingly a suit is not barred which is brought on a bond executed, in consideration of a barred debt, after the expiration of the period prescribed for its recovery.—1 Bom. 590.

Act IX of 1871, sec. 20, cl. a, does not prevent a plaintiff from maintaining a substantive action on a promissory note passed to secure the amount due on an old note which was barred by limitation at the time of the making of the new, the plaintiff’s right to bring such action being recognized by the latter enactment.—2 Bom. 230.

A Khata, or account stated, bearing a stamp of one anna, but containing no promise in writing, held to be a mere acknowledgment sufficiently stamped, and not a contract within the meaning of sec. 25 cl. 3 Act IX of 1872.—8 Bom. 194.

The Gujarati words “bkai-deva,” which are of common use in balancing accounts, import no more than the English words “balance due,” from which an unwritten contract may be inferred, but which do not of themselves amount to a promise to pay within the sense of Act IX of 1872, sec. 25, cl. 3.—8 Bom. 405.

Where the defendant, after his debt had become barred by limitation, wrote as follows to his creditor in reply to a demand for payment:—“I bear the matter in mind, and will do my utmost to repay this money as soon as I possibly can.” Held, that this promise by the defendant was only a conditional promise, viz., to pay when he was able; and the plaintiff having failed to prove the defendant’s ability to pay, the promise did not operate, and the plaintiff could not recover.—11 Bom. 580.

By a written instrument, duly registered, T agreed, in consideration of the recognition by his two brothers of his rights in the joint and undivided property of the three brothers, not to sell, transfer, mortgage his share except to them, and should he desire to dispose of it, to them for a certain sum. In breach of this agreement he gave a usufructuary mortgage of his share to L. Held in a suit by L to enforce the mortgage, that the agreement was valid, and that the mortgage was bad against T’s brothers.—1 Al. 618.

The holder of a decree for money, dated the 22nd June, 1868, applied for execution on the 23rd February, 1869. In September, 1869, before the decree had been executed, the judgment-debtor, admitting that a certain amount was due under the decree, agreed to pay such amount by instalments; and that, if default were made, the decree should be executed for the whole amount thereof. Default having been made early in 1873, the decree-holder applied at once for execution of the decree. On the 5th May, 1873, a petition, signed by the judgment-debtor, was preferred on his behalf to the Court executing the decree, such petition being in effect as follows: “Execution-case for Rs. 6,839-15-3; in this case the decree-holder has filed an application for execution of his decree in consequence of a default in payment of instalments; the fact is that the petitioner has failed to pay the instalments simply owing to illness, otherwise he has no objection to the decree-holder's demand ; in future he will not fail to pay instalments ; he has written a letter to plaintiff asking him to pardon his breach of promise, and to agree to realize the decree-money by the instalments formerly fixed, and to stay execution of the decree for the present ; the decree-holder has granted this request ; the petitioner, therefore, presents this petition, and prays that monthly instalments of Rs. 150 may be fixed, and execution of the decree be postponed for the present ; in case of default being made in payment of two instalments in succession, the decree-holder will be at liberty to realize the balance of the decree-money with interest at twelve per cent. per annum." At the time such petition was preferred, execution of the decree was barred by limitation. Held that a " debt " within the meaning of sec. 25 (3) of Act IX of 1872 includes a judgment-debt, and such petition was a promise to pay a debt barred by limitation within the meaning of that law, and a suit founded on such petition to recover the balance of the money due under the decree was maintainable.—3 Al. 781.

26. Every agreement in restraint restraint of the marriage of any person, other than a minor,* is void.

27. Every agreement by which any one is restrained in restraint of from exercising a lawful profession, trade, or business of any kind, is to that extent void.

Exception 1.—One who sells the good-will of a business Saving of agreement not may agree with the buyer to refrain to carry on business of from carrying on a similar business, which good-will is sold ; within specified local limits, so long as the buyer, or any person deriving title to the good-will from him, carries on a like business therein, provided that such limits appear to the Court reasonable, regard being had to the nature of the business.

Exception 2.—Partners may, upon or in anticipation of of agreement between a dissolution of the partnership, agree partners prior to dissolution ; that some or all of them will not carry on a business similar to that of the partnership within such local limits as are referred to in the last preceding exception.

Exception 3.—Partners may agree that some one or all or during continuance of of them will not carry on any business partnership. other than that of the partnership, during the continuance of the partnership.

* During his or her minority, as to which see Act IX of 1875.

Notes.

The effect of Act XXVI of 1864 is that suits in the Small Cause Court are to be decided according to the law or equity administered in the High Court; by the Charter of 1862 that law or equity was to be "the law or equity which would have been applied by the Supreme Court;" and by the Charter of 1865 that "which would have been applied by the High Court," under the Charter of 1862. The Statute 21 Geo. III., c. 70, which applied to the Supreme Court, and gave to Hindus the right to have matters of contract decided by their own laws, became, if its provisions apply to the High Court, part of the law of that Court, not by virtue of the Statute itself, but by virtue of the Charter, which was subject to alteration by the Governor-General in Council; and having ceased to have any operation as an Act, it was unnecessary to repeal it expressly by the Contract Act (IX of 1872). That Act is applicable to Hindus residing in Calcutta; therefore, where the plaintiff, a Hindu, agreed with the defendants, also Hindus, that he would cease to carry on his business in a certain locality in Calcutta, in consideration of receiving from them a specified sum, it was held in a suit to enforce the contract that such an agreement was void under sec. 27 of the Contract Act. The words "not inconsistent with the provisions of this Act" in sec. 1 of the Contract Act apply to "any usage or custom of trade" or "any incident of any contract."—14 B. L. R., 76.

The plaintiffs, on the 4th August, 1881, entered into a contract with the defendant for the sale to the latter of a quantity of goods of a certain description, "to be delivered up to the 31st December, 1881." The plaintiffs stipulated that they would make no sales of goods of the same description to others before 1st December, 1881; and the contract contained an arbitration-clause to the effect that, "if the buyers object to accept all or any of the goods offered to them by the sellers in fulfilment of the contract on the ground of any variance, difference from the sample or muster, inferiority in weight or quality or colour, or damage or defect, or any other ground whatsoever," such objections should, in case of disagreement, be referred to two arbitrators, one to be named by the sellers, and the other by the buyers. Such arbitrators to decide "whether the buyers' objections were valid, and, if so, what allowance on the whole contract price will be a reasonably adequate compensation to the buyers for such variance, difference, inferiority, damage or defeat, if any, and such decision shall be final and binding on both parties." If either buyers or sellers failed "to name an arbitrator within two days after being requested by the other to do so, the decision of the arbitrators named by the buyers or sellers, as the case may be, shall be final and binding on both parties." The goods arrived in Calcutta between the 4th & 24th November, 1881. On the 15th August, the plaintiffs entered into other contracts with other buyers for the sale of the same description of goods at a lower price than that at which they had sold to the defendant; these contracts were on the terms that the goods were not to arrive in Calcutta until after the 31st December, 1881. The defendant refused to accept the goods on the ground that the plaintiffs had committed a breach of the contract by entering into other agreements for sale of the same description of goods before the 1st December, and refused to pay the difference between the contract price and the market value which the plaintiffs demanded from him. The plaintiffs thereupon appointed an arbitrator, who (the defendant declining to appoint an arbitrator) proceeded to act in the matter, and, finding that the plaintiffs had not committed a breach of the contract, made an award in their favour for Rs. 850, the difference in price of the goods at the contract and market values. The plaintiffs sued to recover the amount due to them under the award, or in the alternative for Rs. 850 as damages for non-acceptance of the goods. Held that the defendant was not estopped by the award from setting up the breach of the stipulation not to sell other goods of the same description before the 1st December, 1881, as a defence to the suit. Per GARTH, C. J.—The question whether the plaintiffs, by making the other contract, had committed a breach of the stipulation, was not properly a subject of reference to the arbitrator under the arbitration-clause. The general words in that clause, “or any other grounds whatsoever,” mean any other grounds of a like character, and do not include a pure question of law. Held also that the stipulation itself amounted to a condition precedent to the defendant’s obligation to accept the goods. Held, further, a stipulation in a contract prohibiting any sales of goods to others during a particular period, of a similar description to those bought under the contract, is not a stipulation in restraint of trade under sec. 27 of Act IX of 1872.—I. L. R., 8 Cal. 809.

A contract under which a person is partially restrained from competing, after the term of his engagement is over, with his former employer, is bad under section 27 of the Contract Act. Quære as to the effect of an agreement of service by which a person binds himself, during the term of his agreement, not, directly or indirectly, to compete with his employer.—11 Cal. 545.

A Contract under which goods were purchased at a certain rate for the Cuttack market, containing a stipulation that, if the goods went to Madras, a higher rate should be paid for them, is not one in restraint of trade; and where the purchasers sold the goods to a person in Calcutta, who in turn resold to another, who took them to Madras: Held that the original purchasers were, under the terms of the contract, liable to pay at the enhanced rate.—17 Cal. 320.

Sec. 27 of the Contract Act does away with the distinction observed in the English cases between partial and total restraint of trade, and makes all contracts falling within its terms void unless they fall within its exceptions. The section was intended to prevent a partial as well as a total restraint of trade. A and B, two ghat serangs, entered into a contract with X and five others who carried on the business of dubashes at Chittagong for the purpose of carrying on their respective businesses in unanimity and not injuring one another’s trade. The contract, which was to last for three years, provided, inter alia, that A and B were to act as ghat serangs only and do no service to ships in any other capacity; that X and the other dubashes were to give A five vessels, secured by them, every year for him to act as ghat serang to; and that A was only to act as ghat serang to the said five ships, and, with the exception of ships for which he had previously acted as ghat serang, he should not act as ghat serang or do any other services for ships belonging to any one else. The contract also contained provisions as to the apportionment of the five ships so to be given to A amongst the various dubashes, and amongst such, an agreement by X to give A the third ship he should secure. It also contained a provision for the payment of Rs. 1,000 as damages by any one breaking the contract to the person who should suffer by the breach. In a suit by A against X alleging a breach of the contract by the latter in not giving him the third ship as agreed, and claiming Rs. 1,000 by way of damages, X pleaded that the contract was void under sec. 27 of the Contract Act as being in restraint of trade. Held, that the contention was sound and that the suit must be dismissed. The consideration for the promise by X to give the ship to

A was the agreement by A not to carry on any other business than that of a ghat serang, and that only in respect of his old ships and the five agreed to be so furnished to him by the dubashes. The effect of this agreement was absolutely to restrain. A from carrying on the business of a dubash and to create a partial restraint on his power to carry on the business of a ghat serang, and whether or not (even had the latter stipulation not been illegal), the contract would have been void under the provisions of sec. 24 of the Act, by reason of part of the consideration being the undertaking by A absolutely to refrain from carrying on the business of a dubash, it was void for both reasons under the provisions of sec. 27, and A was not entitled to recover any damages under it.—19 Cal. 765.

D and E, being in England, entered into a written agreement with A, B, and C, the partners of a firm carrying on trade in Madras, to go to Madras, and there enter into the service of the firm; the service to last for five years or to be determined at any time by certain notice being given; and covenanted that on the expiry of the five years, or sooner determination of the service, they would not carry on, within 800 miles from Madras, any business carried on by the firm; and also covenanted that on such expiry, or sooner determination, they would, whenever requested by the firm so to do, return to England. In pursuance of the agreement, D and E went to Madras, and entered into the service of the firm. After it had continued for about $2\frac{1}{2}$ years, the service was determined by notice from the firm. D and E then, in violation of their said covenants, refused to return to England, though requested to do so by the firm, and proceeded to set up and carry on, on their own account, business of the same kind as that carried on by the firm. Held, in a suit by the firm against D and E for damages for breaches of the said covenants, and for a perpetual injunction restraining D and E from carrying on in Madras, or within 800 miles from Madras, any business carried on by the firm, that treating the covenant in restraint of trade as one entered into in England, it could not, even if valid by the law of England, be enforced in India, inasmuch as its object was to contravene the law of India—(sec. 27 of Act IX of 1872.) Held further that that covenant would have been void by the law of England, because the limit of the restriction was unreasonable; and, as no narrower limit had been mentioned in the agreement, this was not a case where the covenant could have been enforced within a narrower and reasonable limit. Held also that the covenant to return to England, except so far as it operated improperly in restraint of trade, was a covenant, the breach of which did not in any way cause damage to the firm, and, therefore, such breach did not entitle them to any damages. The agreement was first executed in England by D and E and by A, the senior partner in the firm, and stamped with the stamp required by English law for agreements executed in England, and it was subsequently executed in India by B and C, the other two partners, but not stamped with an Indian stamp. Held that the agreement was liable to Indian stamp duty, and was not admissible in evidence, unless and until the proper stamp duty and penalty under Act XVIII of 1869 were paid.—1 Madr. 134.

One having a license for the manufacture of salt entered into a contract with a firm of merchants, whereby it was provided that he should not manufacture salt in excess of the quantity which the firm at the commencement of each manufacturing season should require him to manufacture; and that all salt manufactured by him should be sold to the firm for a fixed price. The agreement was to be in force for a period of five years. In a suit by the merchants for an injunction restraining the licensee from selling his salt to others :—Held, that whether or not the first of these clauses was invalid under sec. 27 of the Contract Act, it was separable from the second clause which was not bad as being in restraint of trade.—13 Madr. 472.

28. Every agreement, by which any party thereto is restricted absolutely from enforcing his rights under or in respect of any contract by the usual legal proceedings in the ordinary tribunals, or which limits the time within which he may thus enforce his rights, is void to that extent.

Exception 1.—This section shall not render illegal a contract, by which two or more persons agree that any dispute which may arise between them in respect of any subject or class of subjects shall be referred to arbitration, and that only the amount awarded in such arbitration shall be recoverable in respect of the dispute so referred.*

Exception 2.—Nor shall this section render illegal any contract in writing, by which two or more persons agree to refer to arbitration any question between them which has already arisen, or affect any provision of any law in force for the time being as to references to arbitration.

Notes.

A contract entered into between the plaintiffs and the defendants contained a clause, that “in case of any dispute, the same to be decided by two competent London brokers—one to be appointed by the buyers’ and the other by the sellers’ agents; such brokers’ decision to be final,” but did not provide that no action should be brought till such decision was pronounced. Matter of dispute arising, the defendants refused to appoint an arbitrator. In a suit for damages for breach of the contract: Held that the contract was not one of the nature referred to in sec. 28, Act IX of 1872. That section only refers to contracts which wholly or partially prohibit the parties absolutely from having recourse to a Court of Law. The first exception in that section applies only to a class of contracts where the parties have agreed that no action shall be brought, until some question of amount has first been decided by the arbitrators. Semble.—A suit will not lie to enforce an agreement to refer to arbitration, even in the case referred to in the first exception to sec. 28 of Act IX of 1872.—I. L. R., 1 Cal. 466.

A contract entered into by the plaintiffs with the defendants contained a clause providing, in case of any dispute, for a reference to two arbitrators in England, one to be appointed by each of the contracting parties whose decision in the matter was to be final. The contract contained no provision for making the submission to arbitration a rule of Court, so that 9 & 10 Will. III. C. 15, and 3 & 4 Will. IV. C. 42, sec. 39, did not apply. Matter of dispute arising, the defendants refused to appoint an arbitrator, and an award was made by arbitrators appointed by the plaintiffs. Previous to the making of the awards, the plaintiffs, under the provisions of the Common Law Procedure Act, 1854, had the submission to arbitration made a rule of the Court of Common Pleas. In a suit in which the plaintiff's claim was for damages awarded by the arbitrators and incurred by the plaintiffs in respect of the breach of the contract. Held that the award was invalid. The making the submission a rule of Court has not the effect of depriving a party of his right to revoke, at any time before the award, the authority of arbitrators whom he has appointed: still less could it have any effect to prevent him from declining to appoint an arbitrator. Held also, that the contract was not within the scope of sec. 28, Act IX of 1872. To make an agreement conform to excep. 1 of that section, the jurisdiction of the Courts must be excluded in all respects except the matter which is the result of the arbitrator's award. Agreements which exclude the jurisdiction of the Courts until an award is made, as in Scott v. Avery (2 Jur. N. S. 815; S. C., 5 H. L. C. 811) are within that exception, and are not illegal. Quære.—Whether it was intended by that exception authorize the Court to entertain a suit for specific performance of an agreement to refer to arbitration? Sec. 28, Act IX of 1872, does not forbid an action for damages for the breach of such an agreement.—1 Cal. 42.

Where in consideration of A giving B time to satisfy a decree against him held by A, B agreed not to appeal against the decree and did appeal, held that the agreement was not prohibited by sec. 28 of Act IX of 1872, and that the Appellate Court was bound by the rules of justice, equity, and good conscience to give effect to it, and to refuse to allow B to proceed with the appeal which he had instituted in contravention of it.—1 Al. 267.

29. Agreements, the meaning of which is not certain, or capable of being made certain, are void for uncertainty.

Illustrations.

(a.) A agrees to sell to B 'a hundred tons of oil.' There is nothing whatever to show what kind of oil was intended. The agreement is void for uncertainty.

(b.) A agrees to sell to B one hundred tons of oil of a specified description known as an article of commerce. There is no uncertainty here to make the agreement void.

(c.) A, who is a dealer in cocoanut-oil only, agrees to sell to B 'one hundred tons of oil.' The nature of A's trade affords an indication of the meaning of the words, and A has entered into a contract for the sale of one hundred tons of cocoanut-oil.

(d.) A agrees to sell to B 'all the grain in my granary at Ramnagar.' There is no uncertainty here to make the agreement void.

(e.) A agrees to sell to B 'one thousand maunds of rice at a price to be fixed by C.' As the price is capable of being made certain, there is no uncertainty here to make the agreement void.

(f.) A agrees to sell to B 'my white horse for rupees five hundred or rupees one thousand.' There is nothing to show which of the two prices was to be given. The agreement is void.

Notes.

Where certain persons, describing themselves as resident of J, give a bond for the payment of money in which, as collateral security, they charge "their property" with such payment, they do not thereby create a charge on their immoveable property situated in J. Martin v. Parsram (H. C. R., N.-W. P., 1867, 124) distinguished.—I. L. R., 1 Al. 275.

A deed of simple mortgage described the mortgaged property as "our zamindari property" (zamindari apni), and gave no further specification, or description. It was proved that at the date of the mortgage the mortgagors had a definite and ascertained fractional share in two zamindaris. Held that the words "our zamindari property" were sufficiently certain, or at any rate were capable of being made certain by the proof of the mortgagors being, at the date of the mortgage-deed, the owners of a specific zamindari interest; and that the mortgage was therefore not void for uncertainty. Kanhia Lal v. Muhammad Husain Khan, Bishen Dayal v. Udit Narain, Ramsidh Pande v. Balgobind, Rae Manik Chand v. Behari Lal, Deojit v. Pitambar, Tailby v. The Official Receiver, and *Tadman v. 30. Agreements by way of wager are void, and no suit shall be brought for recovering anything alleged to be won on any wager, or entrusted to any person to abide the result of any game or other uncertain event on which any wager is made.

This section shall not be deemed to render unlawful a subscription or contribution, or agreement to subscribe or contribute, made or entered into for or toward any plate, prize, or sum of money, of the value or amount of five hundred rupees or upwards, to be awarded to the winner or winners of any horse-race.*

Nothing in this section shall be deemed to legalize any transaction connected with horse-racing, to which the provisions of section 294A of the Indian Penal Code apply.

Section 294A of the Indian Penal Code not affected.

CHAPTER III.

OF CONTINGENT CONTRACTS.

31. A 'contingent contract' is a contract to do or not to do something, if some event, collateral to such contract, does or does not happen.

"Contingent contract" defined.

Illustration.

A contracts to pay B Rs. 10,000 if B's house is burnt. This is a contingent contract.

32. Contingent contracts to do or not to do anything if an uncertain future event happens cannot be enforced by law unless and until that event has happened.

Enforcement of contracts contingent on an event happening.

If the event becomes impossible, such contracts become void.

Illustrations.

(a) A makes a contract with B to buy B's horse if A survives C. This contract cannot be enforced by law unless and until C dies in A's lifetime.

(b.) A makes a contract with B to sell a horse to B at a specified price, if C, to whom the horse has been offered, refuses to buy him. The contract cannot be enforced by law unless and until C refuses to buy the horse.

(c.) A contracts to pay B a sum of money when B marries C. C dies without being married to B. The contract becomes void.

33. Contingent contracts to do or not to do anything, if an uncertain future event does not happen, can be enforced when the happening of that event becomes impossible and not before.

Enforcement of contracts contingent on an event not happening.

Illustration.

A agrees to pay B a sum of money if a certain ship does not return. The ship is sunk. The contract can be enforced when the ship sinks.

34. If the future event on which a contract is contingent is the way in which a person will act at an unspecified time, the event shall be considered to become impossible when such person does anything which renders it impossible that he should so act within any definite time, or otherwise than under further contingencies.

event on which contract is contingent to be deemed impossible, if it is the future conduct of a living person.

Illustration.

A agrees to pay B a sum of money if B marries C.

C marries D. The marriage of B to C must now be considered impossible, although it is possible that D may die, and that C may afterwards marry B.

35. Contingent contracts to do or not to do anything,

When contracts become void, which are contingent on happening of specified event within fixed time.

if a specified uncertain event happens within a fixed time, become void, if, at the expiration of the time fixed, such event has not happened, or if, before the time fixed, such event becomes impossible.

specified uncertain event does not happen within a fixed time, may be enforced by law when the time fixed has expired, and such event has not happened, or, before the time fixed has expired, if it becomes certain that such event will not happen.

Illustrations.

(a.) A promises to pay B a sum of money if a certain ship returns within a year. The contract may be enforced if the ship returns within the year, and becomes void if the ship is burnt within the year.

(b.) A promises to pay B a sum of money if a certain ship does not return within a year. The contract may be enforced if the ship does not return within the year, or is burnt within the year.

36. Contingent agreements to do or not to do anything, Agreements contingent on impossible events void.

if an impossible event happens, are void, whether the impossibility of the event is known or not to the parties to the agreement at the time when it is made.

Illustrations.

(a.) A agrees to pay B 1,000 rupees if two straight lines should enclose a space. The agreement is void.

(b.) A agrees to pay B 1,000 rupees if B will marry A's daughter C. C was dead at the time of the agreement. The agreement is void.

offer to perform, their respective promises, unless such performance is dispensed with or excused under the provisions of this Act, or of any other law.

Promises bind the representatives of the promisors in case of the death of such promisors before performance,* unless a contrary intention appears from the contract.

* This probably means "to the extent of the assets received by them as such, and not duly applied." See Madho Doss v. Radha Mal, 9 Punjab Record, 213.

Illustrations.

(a.) A promises to deliver goods to B on a certain day on payment of Rs. 1,000. A dies before that day. A's representatives are bound to deliver the goods to B, and B is bound to pay the Rs. 1,000 to A's representatives.

(b.) A promises to paint a picture for B by a certain day at a certain price. A dies before the day. The contract cannot be enforced either by A's representatives or by B.

Notes.

To a contract between the plaintiffs and the defendant, for the purchase by the defendant of a cargo of salt, the plaintiffs, after the contract had been signed by the defendant, added in the margin: "Ten days' demurrage will be allowed at Rs. 250 per diem." Held that the addition of the words in the margin did not amount to an alteration within the rule of English law: the alteration must be either something which appears to be attested by the signature, or something which alters the character of the instrument.—I. L. R., 3 Cal. 220.

38. Where a promisor has made an offer of performance to the promisee, and the offer has not been accepted, the promisor is not responsible for non-performance, nor does he thereby lose his rights under the contract.

Every such offer must fulfil the following conditions:—

1. It must be unconditional.

2. It must be made at a proper time and place, and under such circumstances that the person to whom it is made may have a reasonable opportunity of ascertaining that the person by whom it is made is able and willing there and then to do the whole of what he is bound by his promise to do.

3. If the offer is an offer to deliver anything to the promisee, the promisee must have a reasonable opportunity of seeing that the thing offered is the thing which the promisor is bound by his promise to deliver.

An offer to one of several joint promisees has the same legal consequences as an offer to all of them.

Illustration.

A contracts to deliver to B at his warehouse, on the 1st March 1873, 100 bales of cotton of a particular quality. In order to make an offer of performance with the effect stated in this section, A must bring the cotton to B's warehouse, on the appointed day, under such circumstances that B may have a reasonable opportunity of satisfying himself that the thing offered is cotton of the quality contracted for, and that there are 100 bales.

Notes.

The defendant agreed to purchase from the plaintiffs one hundred full-pressed bales "fully good fair Kishli cotton" at Rs. 208-8 per candy, to be delivered from March 15th to April 1st. On March 21st, the plaintiffs sent the defendant a letter, reminding him of the contract, and requesting him to take delivery. On receipt of this letter the defendant put the matter into deliver, nor did the letter refer to any particular bales. At 11-30 o'clock A. M., on March 30th, the plaintiffs sent the defendants a letter enclosing a sampling order directed to an empyoe of Messrs. H and S, on whose premises the bales referred to in the order were lying. V, on behalf of the defendant, got samples taken of the cotton, and examined them, but without reference on that day to any standard. He then, however, conceived doubts as to the quality of the cotton, and expressed his doubts to the plaintiff in the evening of that day. On 31st March, the plaintiffs sent the defendant a delivery-order enclosed in a letter from their solicitors, calling on the defendant to attend with his surveyor at 1 P. M., on the day to survey the cotton, as otherwise an ex-parte survey would be held. This letter reached the defendant at 11-30 o'clock A. M., and was given by him to V at noon of the same day. V applied to M to attend as surveyor, but M was unable to do so. The plaintiffs had an ex-parte survey held by Messrs. C and B at 1 P. M., and they pronounced the cotton, samples of which were submitted to them, to be "fully good fair Kishli cotton." While this survey was going on, the defendant was on the Cotton Green, but declined to attend, saying that V and his surveyor were coming. Shortly afterwards V did come, and subsequently wrote a letter to plaintiffs in the defendant's name, stating that the cotton was not of the description contracted to be sold by them, and asking for a survey. This letter reached the plaintiffs at 2-19 o'clock P. M. After this there was a discussion between plaintiffs and defendant and V. On that afternoon (the 31st March), the plaintiffs' solicitors sent a letter to the defendant, stating the result of the survey, and requiring him to take delivery. This was answered by a letter of next day (April 1st) from the defendant's solicitors denying that the cotton was of proper quality or that proper notice of the survey had been given, alleging that the defendant had that morning attended with his surveyor and asked leave to survey the cotton which had been refused, and stating that the contract must be treated as cancelled. The cotton was sold by auction on April 5th. The plaintiffs brought this suit to recover Rs. 1,631-1-11 as damages for non-acceptance of the cotton. The defendants contended that there had been no reasonable time allowed by the plaintiffs for the examination of the cotton, and that a joint survey should have been held. Held that a joint survey was not necessary under the terms of sec. 38 of the Indian Contract Act (IX of 1872), and that the defendant, having had a period of twenty-four hours for inspection, had a reasonable opportunity of seeing whether the cotton offered by the plaintiffs was such cotton as the plaintiffs were bound by their contract to deliver. A purchaser of goods is not entitled to continue inspecting and examining the goods offered by the vendor until the expiration of the period for delivery. A reasonable opportunity for such inspection and examination is all that he is entitled to.—I. L. R., 6 Bom. 692.

39. When a party to a contract has refused to perform,

Effect of refusal of party to perform promise wholly.

or disabled himself from performing, his promise in its entirety, the promisee may put an end to the contract,* unless he has signified, by words or conduct, his acquiescence in its continuance.

* And see sec. 75, infra.

Illustrations.

(a.) A, a singer, enters into a contract with B, the manager of a theatre, to sing at his theatre two nights in every week during the next two months, and B engages to pay her 100 rupees for each night's performance. On the sixth night A wilfully absents herself from the theatre. B is at liberty to put an end to the contract.

(b.) A, a singer, enters into a contract with B, the manager of a theatre, to sing at his theatre two nights in every week during the next two months, and B engages to pay her at the rate of 100 rupees for each night. On the sixth night A wilfully absents herself. With the assent of B, A sings on the seventh night. B has signified his acquiescence in the continuance of the contract, and cannot now put an end to it, but is entitled to compensation, for the damage sustained by him through A's failure to sing on the sixth night.

Notes.

Sec. 39 of the Contract Act only enacts what was the law in England and in India before the Act was passed—namely, that where a party to a contract refuses altogether to perform, or is disabled from performing, his part of it, the other party has a right to rescind. In a suit for damages for the non-delivery of linseed upon a contract, the terms of which as to payment were cash on delivery, part delivery had been made by the defendants, and a sum of Rs. 1,000 had been paid on account by the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs then made a claim against the defendants for excess refraction, and the defendants thereupon refused to deliver the remainder of the linseed unless the plaintiffs paid the full amount owing for the portion that had been delivered. The plaintiffs declined to accept these terms, and the defendants then cancelled the contract. Held that there was not such a refusal on the part of the plaintiffs to perform their part of the contract as to entitle the defendants to rescind under sec. 39 of the Contract Act. Held by GARTH, C. J.—that sec. 51 of the Act was not applicable, inasmuch as it did not appear that the plaintiffs were unwilling to pay for the deliveries which the defendants refused to make, and that time was not of the essence of the contract so as to bring the case within the provision of sec. 55 of the Act. Held by MARKBY, J.—That sec. 51 would have applied if the defendants, when they came to make delivery, had insisted upon the contract being strictly performed and upon payment being made on delivery, and that, if the defendants had so insisted, time might have been of the essence of the contract within the meaning of sec. 55.—I. L. R., 4 Cal. 252.

BY WHOM CONTRACTS MUST BE PERFORMED.

40. If it appears from the nature of the case that it was the intention of the parties to any contract that any promise contained in it should be performed by the promisor himself, such promise must be performed by the promisor. In other cases, the promisor or his representatives may employ a competent person to perform it.

Person by whom promise is to be performed.

Illustrations.

(a.) A promises to pay B a sum of money. A may perform this promise, either by personally paying the money to B, or by causing it to be paid to by another ; and, if A dies before the time appointed for payment, his representatives must perform the promise, or employ some proper person to do so.

(b.) A promises to paint a picture for B. A must perform this promise personally.

Effect of accepting performance from third person.

41. When a promisee accepts performance of the promise from a third person, he cannot afterwards enforce it against the promisor.

42. When two or more persons have made a joint promise, then (unless a contrary intention appears by the contract) all such persons, during their joint lives, and, after the death of any of them, his representative jointly with the survivor or survivors, and, after the death of the last survivor, the representatives of all jointly, must fulfil the promise.

Devolution of joint liabilities.

43. When two or more persons make a joint promise, the promisee may, in the absence of express agreement to the contrary, compel any one "or more"* of such joint promisors to perform the whole of the promise.

Any one of joint promisors may be compelled to perform.

Each of two or more joint promisors may compel every other joint promisor to contribute equally with himself to the performance of the promise, unless a contrary intention appears from the contract.

Each promisor may compel contribution.

If any one of two or more joint promisors makes default in such contribution, the remaining joint promisors must bear the loss arising from such default in equal shares.

Sharing of loss by default in contribution.

Explanation.—Nothing in this section shall prevent a surety from recovering from his principal, payments made by the surety on behalf of the principal, or entitle the principal to recover anything from the surety on account of payments made by the principal.

(b.) A, B, and C, jointly promise to pay D the sum of 3,000 rupees, C is compelled to pay the whole. A is insolvent, but his assets are sufficient to pay one-half of his debts. C is entitled to receive 500 rupees from A's estate, and 1,250 rupees from B.

* The words "or more" have been inserted by Act XII. of 1891.

(c.) A, B, and C, are under a joint promise to pay D 3,000 rupees. C is unable to pay anything, and A is compelled to pay the whole. A is entitled to receive 1,500 rupees from B.

(d.) A, B, and C, are under a joint promise to pay D 3,000 rupees, A and B being only sureties for C. C fails to pay. A and B are compelled to pay the whole sum. They are entitled to recover it from C.

Notes.

In a suit for damages against A and others for breach of a covenant not to open a ferry at a particular place, a decree was obtained against all the defendants. The amount of this decree was levied by execution from A alone, who thereupon brought a suit for contribution against his co-defendants in the former suit. Both the lower Courts dismissed the suit on the ground that the plaintiff and the defendants had been joint wrong-doers, and that no suit for contribution would lie as between them. On second appeal to the High Court:—Held, that the rule of law relied on by the Courts below had no application to the circumstances of the present case, and that the plaintiff was entitled to maintain his action.—I. L. R., 13 Cal. 300.

A suit in which a decree has been obtained against one of several joint makers of a promissory note is a bar to a subsequent suit against the others. The effect of sec. 43 of the Contract Act is not to create a joint and several liability in such a case. That section merely prohibits the defendant in such a suit pleading in abatement, and thus places the liability arising from the breach of a joint contract and the liability arising from a tort on the same footing. The rule laid down in the case of King v. Hoare (13 M. and W., 494, 505) and Brinsmead v. Harrison (L. R., 7 c. p. 547) is one of principle, not merely of procedure.—3 Cal. 353.

In a suit brought upon a contract made by a firm, the plaintiff may select as defendants those partners of the firm against whom he wishes to proceed, allowing his right of suit against those whom he does not make defendants to be barred.—6 Bom. 700.

44. Where two or more persons have made a joint promise, a release of one of such joint promisors by the promisee does not discharge the other joint promisor or joint promisors; neither does it free the joint promisor so released from responsibility to the other joint promisor or joint promisors.*

Note.

In a suit for damages against a partnership's firm, the plaintiffs compromised the suit with one of the partners upon the terms contained in the following receipt: "Received from A the sum of Rs. 9,500 in full discharge of all claims upon him as an individual and as a partner in the late firm of B. S. and Co., and we hereby under-take to immediately withdraw the suit against him and others." Held that, although, according to English law, the receipt operated as a discharge to all the remaining defendants, yet that sec. 44 of the Contract Act applies to liabilities arising out of the breach of a contract, as well as to the performance of contracts, and that A alone was released.—I. L. R., 4 Cal. 336.

45. When a person has made a promise to two or more persons jointly, then, unless a contrary intention appears from the contract, the right to claim performance rests, as between him and them, with them during their joint lives, and, after the death of any of them, with the representative of such deceased person jointly with the survivor or survivors, and, after the death of the last survivor, with the representatives of all jointly.*

Devolution of joint rights.

A, in consideration of 5,000 rupees lent to him by B and C, promises B and C jointly to repay them that sum with interest on a day specified. B dies. The right to claim performance rests with B's representatives jointly with C during C's life, and, after the death of C, with the representatives of B and C jointly.

Note.

In a suit by surviving partners for the recovery of a partnership debt which became due during the life of a deceased partner, the representatives of such deceased partner, having regard to sec. 45 of the Contract Act (IX of 1872), are necessary parties; and the provisions of sec. 4 of the Succession Certificate Act (VII of 1889) must be complied with in order that the suit may be properly constituted. Quære whether in the case of a family partnership under the Mitacshara law a question might arise as to the applicability of sec. 45 of the Contract Act and sec. 4 of the Succession Certificate Act (VII of 1889). Gobind Prasad v. Chandar Sekhar, I. L. R. 9 Al. 486, dissented from.—I. L. R., 18 Cal. 86.

TIME AND PLACE FOR PERFORMANCE.

46. Where, by the contract, a promisor is to perform his promise without application by the promisee, and no time for performance is specified, the engagement must be performed within a reasonable time.

Time for performance of promise where no time is specified and no application to be made.

Explanation.—The question, 'What is a reasonable time?' is, in each particular case, a question of fact.

47. When a promise is to be performed on a certain day, and the promisor has undertaken to perform it without application by the promisee, the promisor may perform it at any time during the usual hours of business on such day and at the place at which the promise ought to be performed.

Time and place for performance of promise where time is specified and no application to be made.

A promises to deliver goods at B's warehouse on the 1st January. On that day A brings the goods to B's warehouse, but after the usual hour for closing it, and they are not received. A has not performed his promise.

* But see, as to Government Securities, Act XIII. of 1886, sec. 5.

48. When a promise is to be performed on a certain day, and the promisor has not undertaken to perform it without application by the promisee, it is the duty of the promisee to apply for performance at a proper place and within the usual hours of business.

Application for performance to be at proper time and place.

Explanation.—The question, ‘What is a proper time and place?’ is, in each particular case, a question of fact.

49. When a promise is to be performed without application by the promisee, and no place is fixed for the performance of it, it is the duty of the promisor to apply to the promisee to appoint a reasonable place for the performance of the promise, and to perform it at such place.

Place for performance of engagement where no application to be made and no place fixed.

Illustration.

A undertakes to deliver a thousand maunds of jute to B on a fixed day. A must apply to B to appoint a reasonable place for the purpose of receiving it, and must deliver it to him at such place.

Performance in manner or at time prescribed or sanctioned by promisee.

The performance of any promise may be made in any manner, or at any time which the promisee prescribes or sanctions.

(a.) B owes A 2,000 rupees. A desires B to pay the amount to A’s account with C, a banker. B, who also banks with C, orders the amount to be transferred from his account to A’s credit, and this is done by C. Afterwards, and before A knows of the transfer, C fails. There has been a good payment by B.

(b.) A and B are mutually indebted. A and B settle an account by setting off one item against another, and B pays A the balance found to be due from him upon such settlement. This amounts to a payment by A and B, respectively, of the sum which they owed to each other.

(d.) A desires B, who owes him Rs. 100, to send him a note for Rs. 100 by post. The debt is discharged as soon as B puts into the post a letter containing the note duly addressed to A.

PERFORMANCE OF RECIPROCAL PROMISES.

51. When a contract consists of reciprocal promises to be simultaneously performed, no promisor need perform his promise unless the promisee is ready and willing to perform his reciprocal promise.

Promisor not bound to perform, unless reciprocal promisee ready and willing to perform.

(b.) A and B contract that A shall deliver goods to B at a price to be paid by instalments, the first instalment to be paid on delivery.

A need not deliver, unless B is ready and willing to pay the first instalment on delivery.

B need not pay the first instalment, unless A is ready and willing to deliver the goods on payment of the first instalment.

Note.—See I. L. R., 4 Cal. 252, noted under sec. 39.

52. Where the order in which reciprocal promises are to be performed is expressly fixed by the contract, they shall be performed in that order; and where the order is not expressly fixed by the contract, they shall be performed in that order which the nature of the transaction requires.

Illustrations.

(a.) A and B contract that A shall build a house for B at a fixed price. A's promise to build the house must be performed before B's promise to pay for it.

(b.) A and B contract that A shall make over his stock-in-trade to B at a fixed price, and B promises to give security for the payment of the money. A's promise need not be performed until the security is given, for the nature of the transaction requires that A should have security before he delivers up his stock.

53. When a contract contains reciprocal promises, and one party to the contract prevents the other from performing his promise, the contract becomes voidable at the option of the party so prevented; and he is entitled to compensation* from the other party for any loss which he may sustain in consequence of the non-performance of the contract.

Illustration.

A and B contract that B shall execute certain work for A for a thousand rupees. B is ready and willing to execute the work accordingly, but A prevents him from doing so. The contract is voidable at the option of B; and, if he elects to rescind it, he is entitled to recover from A compensation for any loss which he has incurred by its non-performance.

Note.

B sued the obligees to enforce a bond hypothecating immoveable property, to the discharge of which he had agreed by means of a sale of the property. The contract of sale was never carried into effect, although the vendors were ready and willing to put him in possession of the property, as B failed to pay the price which he covenanted to pay. It was held that B was not at liberty to enforce the bond.—7 H. C. R., (N.-W. P.) 152.

54. When a contract consists of reciprocal promises, such that one of them cannot be performed, or that its performance cannot be claimed till the other has been performed, and the promisor of the promise last mentioned fails to perform it, such promisor cannot claim the performance of the reciprocal promise, and must make compensation to the other party to the contract for any loss which such other party may sustain by the non-performance of the contract.

(a.) A hires B's ship to take in and convey, from Calcutta to the Mauritius, a cargo to be provided by A, B receiving a certain freight for its conveyance. A does not provide any cargo for the ship. A cannot claim the performance of B's promise, and must make compensation to B for the loss which B sustains by the non-performance of the contract.

(b.) A contracts with B to execute certain builder's work for a fixed price, B supplying the scaffolding and timber necessary for the work. B refuses to furnish any scaffolding or timber, and the work cannot be executed. A need not execute the work, and B is bound to make compensation to A for any loss caused to him by the non-performance of the contract.

(c.) A contracts with B to deliver to him, at a specified price, certain merchandise on board a ship which cannot arrive for a month, and B engages to pay for the merchandise within a week from the date of the contract. B does not pay within the week. A's promise to deliver need not be performed, and B must make compensation.

(d.) A promises B to sell him one hundred bales of merchandise, to be delivered next day, and B promises A to pay for them within a month. A does not deliver according to his promise. B's promise to pay need not be performed, and A must make compensation.

55. When a party to a contract promises to do a certain thing at or before a specified time, or certain things at or before specified times, and fails to do any such thing at or before the specified time, the contract, or so much of it as has not been performed, becomes voidable, at the option of the promisee, if the intention of the parties was that time should be of the essence of the contract.

If it was not the intention of the parties that time should be of the essence of the contract, the contract does not become voidable by the failure to do such thing at or before the specified time; but the promisee is entitled to compensation from the promisor for any loss occasioned to him by such failure.

If, in case of a contract, voidable on account of the promisor's failure to perform his promise at the time agreed, the promisee accepts performance of such promise at any time other than that agreed, the promisee cannot claim compensation for any loss occasioned by the non-performance of the promise at the time agreed, unless at the time of such acceptance he gives notice to the promisor of his intention to do so.*

Effect of acceptance of performance at time other than that agreed upon.

Notes.

In a contract for the sale of ascertained goods, terms cash on delivery, to be given and taken it ten or eleven days, the vendee obtained an extension of the time for the performance of the contract, agreeing to pay godown-rent and interest. He took delivery of, and paid for, some of the goods, and subsequently obtained a further extension of time. A small balance remained in the vendor's hands, after giving the vendee credit for the goods taken delivery of, godown-rent, and interest. After the expiration of the further time, the vendee tendered the price of the remaining goods, and demanded delivery, when the vendors stated that they had rescinded the contract. In an action for damages for non-delivery: Held that time was of the essence of the contract, and that, under sec. 55 of the Contract Act, the vendors were entitled to rescind.—I. L. R., 6 Cal. 64.

See I. L. R., 4 Cal. 252, noted under sec. 39.

Agreement to do impossible act void.

56. An agreement to do an act impossible in itself is void.

A contract to do an act which, after the contract is made, becomes impossible, or, by reason of some event which the promisor could not prevent, unlawful, becomes void when the act becomes impossible or unlawful.†

Contract to do impossible act or one which afterwards becomes impossible or illegal when void.

Where one person has promised to do something which he knew, or, with reasonable diligence, might have known, and which the promisee did not know, to be impossible or unlawful, such promisor must make compensation to such promisee for any loss which such promisee sustains through the non-performance of the promise.

(c.) A contracts to marry B, being already married to C, and being forbidden by the law to which he is subject to practise polygamy. A must make compensation to B for the loss caused to her by the non-performance of his promise.

(d.) A contracts to take in cargo for B at a foreign port. A's Government afterwards declares war against the country in which the port is situated. The contract becomes void when war is declared.

(e.) A contracts to act at a theatre for six months in consideration of a sum paid in advance by B. On several occasions A is too ill to act. The contract to act on those occasions becomes void.

Notes.

A contract was entered into between the plaintiff and the defendant, by which the plaintiff agreed to cultivate indigo for the defendant, for a specified number of years in certain specified lands situated in different villages, with respect to portion of which lands the plaintiff was a subtenant only. Subsequently, during the continuance of the contract, the plaintiff lost possession of those lands, through his immediate landlord having failed to pay the rent, and having been in consequence ejected therefrom by the owner. In a suit by him, under the above circumstances, to have so much of the contract as related to those lands cancelled, on the ground that it had become impossible of performance through no neglect on his part;—Held, that such a case came within the provisions of cl. 2, sec. 56 of Act (X of 1872 (Contract Act), and that the mere fact that the plaintiff could have paid up the debt due by his immediate landlord, and so retained possession of the land, was not sufficient to constitute such an omission or neglect on his part as take it out of the provisions of that section. Held also that ch. IV of Act I of 1877 (Specific Relief Act) did not apply to such a case, but that the plaintiff was entitled to the relief he sought under sec. 40 of that Act, inasmuch as the contract was evidence of different obligations, viz., to cultivate indigo in different villages.—I. L. R., 7 Cal. 474.

Money having been advanced, a contract was made to secure repayment of it by a usufructuary mortgage, with possession to be given to the lender, of land, which however had then already been attached under a decree, and had been taken under the Collector's management under sec. 326 of the Code of Civil Procedure. To perform the contract by delivery of possession of the land having thus become impossible, it was held that the lender of the money was entitled to compensation, the damages being the amount of the advance, together with interest from the date when, had performance been possible, the land should have been made over to him.—17 Cal. 432.

By a contract made with the plaintiffs the defendants agreed to carry from Bombay to Jeddah, in their steamer "Mobile," 500 pilgrims who were about to arrive in Bombay from Singapore in the plaintiffs' ship the "Stura." The defendants were to be paid at the rate of Rs. 26 per head, and the ship "Mobile" was to receive the pilgrims on the 3rd May, 1888. The "Stura" arrived in Bombay on the 1st May with about 600 pilgrims on board, and on the 2nd May the plaintiffs gave notice to the defendants that 500 of them were ready to go on board the "Mobile" on the next day, in accordance with the contract. The defendants refused to receive the pilgrims on board the "Mobile," on the ground that they had come to Bombay in the "Stura," and that during the voyage of that ship to Bombay there had been an outbreak of small-pox on board; that the 500 pilgrims had been in close contract with those who had been suffering from the disease, and that on the 3rd May fresh cases were occurring among the pilgrims brought from Singapore. They pleaded that under these circumstances they were not bound to ship and carry the 500 pilgrims, contending (1) that it was an implied term in the contract that the 500 pilgrims should be free from small-pox or other dangerous disease, and (2) that the performance of the contract had under the circumstances become unlawful (sec. 269 of the Penal Code and sec. 56 of the Contract Act). Held that the defendants were bound to carry out the contract. In the absence of proof, that a term providing that the pilgrims should be free from small-pox was to be implied by the usage of the pilgrim-carrying trade, there could be no reason for implying it. The possibility that some of the 500 pilgrims might have the germs of the disease in them owing to their exposure to infection, might make carrying them more expensive and onerous, but it was a contingency which from the very nature of the trade must have been known to the defendants, and if they wished to provide against it they should have done so by express terms. Held, also, that the performance of the contract had not become unlawful. The risk of disease was not greater than would necessarily be incurred in every crowded emigrant ship. But, even if special precautions were desirable under the circumstances, it was for the defendants, who had entered into an absolute agreement, to have taken them.—14 Bom. 147.

57. Where persons reciprocally promise, firstly, to do certain things which are legal, and, secondly, under specified circumstances, to do certain other things which are illegal, the first set of promises is a contract; but the second is a void agreement.

Where there are promises to do things legal and also other things illegal, the former are a contract, the latter a void agreement.

Illustration.

A and B agree that A shall sell B a house for 10,000 rupees, but that, if B uses it as a gambling house, he shall pay A 50,000 rupees for it.

The first set of reciprocal promises, namely, to sell the house, and to pay 10,000 rupees for it, is a contract.

The second set is for an unlawful object, namely, that B may use the house as a gambling house, and is a void agreement.

Note.—See B. L. R., Ap. 5, noted under sec. 24.

58. In the case of an alternative promise, one branch of which is legal, and the other illegal, the legal branch alone can be enforced.

In alternative promise, one branch being illegal, legal branch alone enforceable.

This is a valid contract to deliver rice, and a void agreement as to the opium.

APPROPRIATION OF PAYMENTS.

be applied to the discharge of some particular debt, the payment, if accepted, must be applied accordingly.

(a.) A owes B, among other debts, 1,000 rupees upon a promissory note, which falls due on the 1st June. He owes B no other debt of that amount. On the 1st June A pays to B 1,000 rupees. The payment is to be applied to the discharge of the promissory note.

(b.) A owes B, among other debts, the sum of 567 rupees. B writes to A, and demands payment of this sum. A sends to B 567 rupees. This payment is to be applied to the discharge of the debt of which B had demanded payment.

Where the debtor has omitted to intimate, and there are no other circumstances indicating to which debt the payment is to be applied, the creditor may apply it at his discretion to any lawful debt actually due and payable to him from the debtor, whether its recovery is or is not barred by the law in force for the time being as to the limitation of suits.

Application of payment where debt to be discharged is not indicated.

Notes.

In consideration of an advance of Rs. 118, the defendants executed in favour of the plaintiff mortgage bond, dated 3rd November 1879, by which it was stipulated that the amount should be repaid "in kind by delivery of half the amount of the rubid crops of every description produced at the first class rates; and in case the same is not paid in kind, it will be paid principal with interest from the date of execution at one anna per cent. per mensem in cash in the month of Baisakh 1287 F. S. (April 1880)." The defendants admitted execution of the bond, and pleaded payments in grain to the amount of Rs. 136, which they failed to prove. It was found that the plaintiff had received payments in grain to the extent of Rs. 71, more than half of which, however, he claimed to be entitled to appropriate to the payment of other antecedent debts which were due to him by the defendants. It was not stated at the time of payment towards which debt the payments were to be applied; but all the payments were admittedly made in kind:—Held, that the plaintiff was not entitled to appropriate the payments to the antecedent debts, inasmuch as, within the meaning of sec. 60 of the Contract Act, there were "other circumstances" indicating that the payments were made in liquidation of the amount of the bond:—Held, also, that increased rate of interest being made payable from the date of the bond, and not only from the breach of the contract, must be taken to be in the nature of a penalty and only to be taken into consideration as a basis upon which damages for the breach of contract were to be estimated. The principle on this subject laid down in the case of Mackintosh v. Crow. I. L. R., 9 Cal. 689, approved of.—I. L. R., 12 Cal. 164.

CONTRACTS WHICH NEED NOT BE PERFORMED.

Contracts changed, rescinded, or altered need not be performed.

62. If the parties to a contract agree to substitute a new contract for it, or to rescind or alter it, the original contract need not be performed.

Illustrations.

(a.) A owes money to B under a contract. It is agreed between A, B, and C that B shall thenceforth accept C as his debtor instead of A. The old debt of A to B is at an end, and a new debt from C to B has been contracted.

(b.) A owes B 10,000 rupees. A enters into an arrangement with B, and gives B a mortgage of his (A's) estate for 5,000 rupees in place of the debt of 10,000 rupees. This is a new Contract, and extinguishes the old.

(c.) A owes B 1,000 rupees under a contract. B owes C 1,000 rupees. B orders A to credit C with 1,000 rupees in his books, but C does not assent to the arrangement. B still owes C 1,000 rupees, and no new contract has been entered into.

Notes.

The mere fact of one party alleging that a new contract has been substituted for an old one does not of itself put an end to the old contract, even as against the party so alleging, unless the allegation is proved to be true.—I. L. R., 8 Cal. 926.

Held, where a promissory note made payable simply to the payee without the addition of the words order or bearer, and, therefore, not negotiable was assigned to a third person, that the assignee could sue upon such note, a chose in action being, by the law of India, assignable, and that the assignee could sue in the courts of India in his own name.—1 Al. 732.

The plaintiff sued to recover the sum of Rs. 1,173 due on a bond. It was found as a fact that after the due date of the bond an arrangement was come to between the plaintiff and the defendant by which the plaintiff agreed to accept in satisfaction of what was due to him at the time of the arrangement Rs. 400 in cash and a fresh bond for Rs. 701, payable by instalments; and it was further found that the plaintiff never intended or agreed to accept the naked promise of the defendant to pay the Rs. 400 and to give the bond for Rs. 701. The defendant did not pay the Rs. 400 or give the bond, but pleaded that there had been a novation of the original contract by reason of the subsequent agreement, and that the suit being based on the original contract could not be maintained, and he relied on the provisions of secs. 62 and 63 of the Contract Act in support of his contention. Held, that neither section had any bearing on the case, and that upon the breach by the defendant of the terms which he had made, and upon the non-performance by him of the satisfaction which he had promised to give, the parties were relegated to their rights and liabilities under the original contract, and that consequently the plaintiff was entitled to the relief he claimed. Held, further, that sec. 62 of the Contract Act is merely a legislative expression of the common law, and the provisions thereof do not apply to a case where there has been a breach of the original contract before the subsequent agreement is come to.—15 Cal. 319.

(d.) A owes B, under a contract, a sum of money, the amount of which has not been ascertained. A, without ascertaining the amount, gives to B, and B, in satisfaction thereof, accepts the sum of 2,000 rupees. This is a discharge of the whole debt, whatever may be its amount.

(e.) A owes B 2,000 rupees, and is also indebted to other creditors. A makes an arrangement with his creditors, including B, to pay them a composition‡ of eight annas in the rupee upon their respective demands. Payment to B of 1,000 rupees is a discharge of B's demand.

Notes.

A hypothecation bond provided for payment of interest on the principal sum at the rate of 9 per cent., and contained a further provision, that on default being made in payment of interest accruing due, interest should be paid from the date of the bond at the rate of 15 per cent. Default was made when the first and second payments of interest became due. After the second payment had become due, the creditor accepted payment on account of interest of a sum a little more than the arrears calculated at 9 per cent. In a suit by the creditor:—Held, (1) that the plaintiff had not waived any right under the bond by accepting the payment on account of interest: (2) that the provision for enhanced interest calculated from the date of the bond on default, was of the nature of a penalty under sec. 74 of the Contract Act: (3) that the plaintiff was entitled to interest on decree amount from date of decree to date of payment at 6 per cent. Balkishen Das v. Run Bahadur Singh (I. L. R., 10 Cal., 305) discussed and distinguished; Baij Nath Singh v. Shah Ali Hosain (I. L. R., 14 Cal., 248) dissented from.—I. L. R., 12 Madr. 161.

On the sixth night, A wilfully absents herself from the theatre, and B, in consequence, rescinds the contract. B must pay A for the five nights on which she had sung.

(d.) A contracts to sing for B at a concert for 1,000 rupees which are paid in advance. A is too ill to sing. A is not bound to make compensation to B for the loss of the profits which B would have made if A had been able to sing, but must refund to B the 1,000 rupees paid in advance.

Where two Numbudri females—a mother and daughter (plaintiff)—executed a document in favour of defendant, a male relative (nephew of the former), which purported to divest the plaintiff and her mother of the entire property of the Illom of which they were the sole proprietors, and to vest it in the defendant in consideration of his promise to marry and raise up heirs to the Illom to which the plaintiff and her mother belonged, and to maintain the plaintiff and her mother till death, and it was proved that plaintiff was well aware of what she was doing, and had subsequently clearly recognized the defendant as absolute proprietor of the property, and was contended with his having assumed the position pointed out in the documents :—Held, that the transaction was valid and could not be called into question on the suggestion that plaintiff was placed at a disadvantage and was not fully cognizant of the irrevocable nature of the deed, and that the rule laid down by the Privy Council in Ashgar Ali v. Delroos Banoo Begam (1. L. R., 3 Cal. 324) and in Takoorden Tewarry v. N. Syed Ali (L. R., 1 IA. 392) had been complied with, and that defendant had discharged the burden of proof upon him. Held further by INNES, J.—That the document aimed at defeating the right of escheat of the Government, and the transaction was against public policy with reference to the decision in Cavali Venkatanarayanappa's case [Collector of Musulipattam v. Cavali Vencatanaryanappah] (8 M.I.A. 500), but that the plaintiff, being in pari delicto with the defendant, could not recover the property. Held by KIN- DERSLEY, J.—That no claim was made by the crown, it was not necessary to decide as to rights which may or may not be claimed by the crown, and that if plaintiff and her mother were not, as apparently they were not, in the position of ordinary Hindu widows, there was nothing opposed to public policy in their disposing of the property, as being the last owners, and competent to dispose of it absolutely.—I. L. R., 3 Madr. 215.

K, on the one part, and his creditors, including C, on the other part, agreed in writing to refer to arbitration the differences between them regarding the payment of his debts by K. The award compounded K's debts, and assigned his property to his creditors, and directed that K should dispose of such property for their benefit, and that, if he misappropriated any of the property, he should be personally liable for the loss sustained by the creditors on account of such misappropriation. C signed the award amongst other creditors, but the award was not signed by all the creditors. C received a dividend under the award. Held, in a suit by C against K to recover a debt which had been compounded under the award, in which suit C alleged that several creditors had not signed the award, that some of them had sued K and recovered debts in spite of the award; that K had misappropriated some of the property; and that, if the plaintiff did not sue, there would be no assets left to satisfy his debt, that such suit was not maintainable.—2 Al. 173.

CHAPTER V.

OF CERTAIN RELATIONS RESEMBLING THOSE CREATED BY CONTRACT.

68. If a person, incapable of entering into a contract, or any one whom he is legally bound to support, is supplied by another person with necessaries suited to his condition in life, the person who has furnished such supplies is entitled to be reimbursed from the property of such incapable person.

the promisee is entitled to compensation from the promisor for any loss occasioned to him by such failure.

If, in case of a contract, voidable on account of the promisor's failure to perform his promise at the time agreed, the promisee accepts performance of such promise at any time other than that agreed, the promisee cannot claim compensation for any loss occasioned by the non-performance of the promise at the time agreed, unless at the time of such acceptance he gives notice to the promisor of his intention to do so.*

Effect of acceptance of performance at time other than that agreed upon.

Notes.

In a contract for the sale of ascertained goods, terms cash on delivery, to be given and taken it ten or eleven days, the vendee obtained an extension of the time for the performance of the contract, agreeing to pay godown-rent and interest. He took delivery of, and paid for, some of the goods, and subsequently obtained a further extension of time. A small balance remained in the vendor's hands, after giving the vendee credit for the goods taken delivery of, godown-rent, and interest. After the expiration of the further time, the vendee tendered the price of the remaining goods, and demanded delivery, when the vendors stated that they had rescinded the contract. In an action for damages for non-delivery: Held that time was of the essence of the contract, and that, under sec. 55 of the Contract Act, the vendors were entitled to rescind.—I. L. R., 6 Cal. 64.

See I. L. R., 4 Cal. 252, noted under sec. 39.

Agreement to do impossible act void.

56. An agreement to do an act impossible in itself is void.

A contract to do an act which, after the contract is made, becomes impossible, or, by reason of some event which the promisor could not prevent, unlawful, becomes void when the act becomes impossible or unlawful.†

Contract to do impossible act or one which afterwards becomes impossible or illegal when void.

Where one person has promised to do something which he knew, or, with reasonable diligence, might have known, and which the promisee did not know, to be impossible or unlawful, such promisor must make compensation to such promisee for any loss which such promisee sustains through the non-performance of the promise.

(c.) A contracts to marry B, being already married to C, and being forbidden by the law to which he is subject to practise polygamy. A must make compensation to B for the loss caused to her by the non-performance of his promise.

(d.) A contracts to take in cargo for B at a foreign port. A's Government afterwards declares war against the country in which the port is situated. The contract becomes void when war is declared.

(e.) A contracts to act at a theatre for six months in consideration of a sum paid in advance by B. On several occasions A is too ill to act. The contract to act on those occasions becomes void.

Notes.

A contract was entered into between the plaintiff and the defendant, by which the plaintiff agreed to cultivate indigo for the defendant, for a specified number of years in certain specified lands situated in different villages, with respect to portion of which lands the plaintiff was a subtenant only. Subsequently, during the continuance of the contract, the plaintiff lost possession of those lands, through his immediate landlord having failed to pay the rent, and having been in consequence ejected therefrom by the owner. In a suit by him, under the above circumstances, to have so much of the contract as related to those lands cancelled, on the ground that it had become impossible of performance through no neglect on his part;—Held, that such a case came within the provisions of cl. 2, sec. 56 of Act IX of 1872 (Contract Act), and that the mere fact that the plaintiff could have paid up the debt due by his immediate landlord, and so retained possession of the land, was not sufficient to constitute such an omission or neglect on his part as take it out of the provisions of that section. Held also that ch. IV of Act I of 1877 (Specific Relief Act) did not apply to such a case, but that the plaintiff was entitled to the relief he sought under sec. 40 of that Act, inasmuch as the contract was evidence of different obligations, viz., to cultivate indigo in different villages.—I. L. R., 7 Cal. 474.

Money having been advanced, a contract was made to secure repayment of it by a usufructuary mortgage, with possession to be given to the lender, of land, which however had then already been attached under a decree, and had been taken under the Collector's management under sec. 326 of the Code of Civil Procedure. To perform the contract by delivery of possession of the land having thus become impossible, it was held that the lender of the money was entitled to compensation, the damages being the amount of the advance, together with interest from the date when, had performance been possible, the land should have been made over to him.—17 Cal. 432.

By a contract made with the plaintiffs the defendants agreed to carry from Bombay to Jeddah, in their steamer "Mobile," 500 pilgrims who were about to arrive in Bombay from Singapore in the plaintiffs' ship the "Stura." The defendants were to be paid at the rate of Rs. 26 per head, and the ship "Mobile" was to receive the pilgrims on the 3rd May, 1888. The "Stura" arrived in Bombay on the 1st May with about 600 pilgrims on board, and on the 2nd May the plaintiffs gave notice to the defendants that 500 of them were ready to go on board the "Mobile" on the next day, in accordance with the contract. The defendants refused to receive the pilgrims on board the "Mobile," on the ground that they had come to Bombay in the "Stura," and that during the voyage of that ship to Bombay there had been an outbreak of small-pox on board; that the 500 pilgrims had been in close contract with those who had been suffering from the disease, and that on the 3rd May fresh cases were occurring among the pilgrims brought from Singapore. They pleaded that under these circumstances they were not bound to ship and carry the 500 pilgrims, contending (1) that it was an implied term in the contract that the 500 pilgrims should be free from small-pox or other dangerous disease, and (2) that the performance of the contract had under the circumstances become unlawful (sec. 269 of the Penal Code and sec. 56 of the Contract Act). Held that the defendants were bound to carry out the contract. In the absence of proof, that a term providing that the pilgrims should be free from small-pox was to be implied by the usage of the pilgrim-carrying trade, there could be no reason for implying it. The possibility that some of the 500 pilgrims might have the germs of the disease in them owing to their exposure to infection, might make carrying them more expensive and onerous, but it was a contingency which from the very nature of the trade must have been known to the defendants, and if they wished to provide against it they should have done so by express terms. Held, also, that the performance of the contract had not become unlawful. The risk of disease was not greater than would necessarily be incurred in every crowded emigrant ship. But, even if special precautions were desirable under the circumstances, it was for the defendants, who had entered into an absolute agreement, to have taken them.—14 Bom. 147.

57. Where persons reciprocally promise, firstly, to do certain things which are legal, and, secondly, under specified circumstances, to do certain other things which are illegal, the first set of promises is a contract; but the second is a void agreement.

Where there are promises to do things legal and also other things illegal, the former are a contract, the latter a void agreement.

Illustration.

A and B agree that A shall sell B a house for 10,000 rupees, but that, if B uses it as a gambling house, he shall pay A 50,000 rupees for it.

The first set of reciprocal promises, namely, to sell the house, and to pay 10,000 rupees for it, is a contract.

The second set is for an unlawful object, namely, that B may use the house as a gambling house, and is a void agreement.

Note.—See B. L. R., Ap. 5, noted under sec. 24.

58. In the case of an alternative promise, one branch of which is legal, and the other illegal, the legal branch alone can be enforced.

In alternative promise, one branch being illegal, legal branch alone enforceable.

(b.) A owes B, among other debts, the sum of 567 rupees. B writes to A, and demands payment of this sum. A sends to B 567 rupees. This payment is to be applied to the discharge of the debt of which B had demanded payment.

60. Where the debtor has omitted to intimate, and there are no other circumstances indicating to which debt the payment is to be applied, the creditor may apply it at his discretion to any lawful debt actually due and payable to him from the debtor, whether its recovery is or is not barred by the law in force for the time being as to the limitation of suits.

Notes.

In consideration of an advance of Rs. 118, the defendants executed in favour of the plaintiff mortgage bond, dated 3rd November 1879, by which it was stipulated that the amount should be repaid "in kind by delivery of half the amount of the rubid crops of every description produced at the first class rates; and in case the same is not paid in kind, it will be paid principal with interest from the date of execution at one anna per cent. per mensem in cash in the month of Baisakh 1287 F. S. (April 1880)." The defendants admitted execution of the bond, and pleaded payments in grain to the amount of Rs. 136, which they failed to prove. It was found that the plaintiff had received payments in grain to the extent of Rs. 71, more than half of which, however, he claimed to be entitled to appropriate to the payment of other antecedent debts which were due to him by the defendants. It was not stated at the time of payment towards which debt the payments were to be applied; but all the payments were admittedly made in kind:—Held, that the plaintiff was not entitled to appropriate the payments to the antecedent debts, inasmuch as, within the meaning of sec. 60 of the Contract Act, there were "other circumstances" indicating that the payments were made in liquidation of the amount of the bond:—Held, also, that increased rate of interest being made payable from the date of the bond, and not only from the breach of the contract, must be taken to be in the nature of a penalty and only to be taken into consideration as a basis upon which damages for the breach of contract were to be estimated. The principle on this subject laid down in the case of Mackintosh v. Crow. I. L. R., 9 Cal. 689, approved of.—I. L. R., 12 Cal. 164.

CONTRACTS WHICH NEED NOT BE PERFORMED.

62. If the parties to a contract agree to substitute a new contract for it, or to rescind or alter it, the original contract need not be performed.

Contracts changed, rescinded, or altered need not be performed.

Illustrations.

(a.) A owes money to B under a contract. It is agreed between A, B, and C that B shall thenceforth accept C as his debtor instead of A. The old debt of A to B is at an end, and a new debt from C to B has been contracted.

(b.) A owes B 10,000 rupees. A enters into an arrangement with B, and gives B a mortgage of his (A's) estate for 5,000 rupees in place of the debt of 10,000 rupees. This is a new Contract, and extinguishes the old.

(c.) A owes B 1,000 rupees under a contract. B owes C 1,000 rupees. B orders A to credit C with 1,000 rupees in his books, but C does not assent to the arrangement. B still owes C 1,000 rupees, and no new contract has been entered into.

Notes.

The mere fact of one party alleging that a new contract has been substituted for an old one does not of itself put an end to the old contract, even as against the party so alleging, unless the allegation is proved to be true.—I. L. R., 8 Cal. 926.

Held, where a promissory note made payable simply to the payee without the addition of the words order or bearer, and, therefore, not negotiable was assigned to a third person, that the assignee could sue upon such note, a chose in action being, by the law of India, assignable, and that the assignee could sue in the courts of India in his own name.—1 Al. 732.

The plaintiff sued to recover the sum of Rs. 1,173 due on a bond. It was found as a fact that after the due date of the bond an arrangement was come to between the plaintiff and the defendant by which the plaintiff agreed to accept in satisfaction of what was due to him at the time of the arrangement Rs. 400 in cash and a fresh bond for Rs. 701, payable by instalments; and it was further found that the plaintiff never intended or agreed to accept the naked promise of the defendant to pay the Rs. 400 and to give the bond for Rs. 701. The defendant did not pay the Rs. 400 or give the bond, but pleaded that there had been a novation of the original contract by reason of the subsequent agreement, and that the suit being based on the original contract could not be maintained, and he relied on the provisions of secs. 62 and 63 of the Contract Act in support of his contention. Held, that neither section had any bearing on the case, and that upon the breach by the defendant of the terms which he had made, and upon the non-performance by him of the satisfaction which he had promised to give, the parties were relegated to their rights and liabilities under the original contract, and that consequently the plaintiff was entitled to the relief he claimed. Held, further, that sec. 62 of the Contract Act is merely a legislative expression of the common law, and the provisions thereof do not apply to a case where there has been a breach of the original contract before the subsequent agreement is come to.—15 Cal. 319.

(b.) A owes B 5,000 rupees. A pays to B, and B accepts, in satisfaction of the whole debt, 2,000 rupees paid at the time and place at which the 5,000 rupees were payable. The whole debt is discharged.

(d.) A owes B, under a contract, a sum of money, the amount of which has not been ascertained. A, without ascertaining the amount, gives to B, and B, in satisfaction thereof, accepts the sum of 2,000 rupees. This is a discharge of the whole debt, whatever may be its amount.

(e.) A owes B 2,000 rupees, and is also indebted to other creditors. A makes an arrangement with his creditors, including B, to pay them a composition‡ of eight annas in the rupee upon their respective demands. Payment to B of 1,000 rupees is a discharge of B's demand.

Notes.

A hypothecation bond provided for payment of interest on the principal sum at the rate of 9 per cent., and contained a further provision, that on default being made in payment of interest accruing due, interest should be paid from the date of the bond at the rate of 15 per cent. Default was made when the first and second payments of interest became due. After the second payment had become due, the creditor accepted payment on account of interest of a sum a little more than the arrears calculated at 9 per cent. In a suit by the creditor:—Held, (1) that the plaintiff had not waived any right under the bond by accepting the payment on account of interest: (2) that the provision for enhanced interest calculated from the date of the bond on default, was of the nature of a penalty under sec. 74 of the Contract Act: (3) that the plaintiff was entitled to interest on decree amount from date of decree to date of payment at 6 per cent. Balkishen Das v. Run Bahadur Singh (I. L. R., 10 Cal., 305) discussed and distinguished; Baij Nath Singh v. Shah Ali Hosain (I. L. R., 14 Cal., 248) dissented from.—I. L. R., 12 Madr. 161.

(c.) A, a singer, contracts with B, the manager of a theatre, to sing at his theatre for two nights in every week during the next two months, and B engages to pay her a hundred rupees for each night's performance. On the sixth night, A wilfully absents herself from the theatre, and B, in consequence, rescinds the contract. B must pay A for the five nights on which she had sung.

(d.) A contracts to sing for B at a concert for 1,000 rupees which are paid in advance. A is too ill to sing. A is not bound to make compensation to B for the loss of the profits which B would have made if A had been able to sing, but must refund to B the 1,000 rupees paid in advance.

Where two Numbudri females—a mother and daughter (plaintiff)—executed a document in favour of defendant, a male relative (nephew of the former), which purported to divest the plaintiff and her mother of the entire property of the Illom of which they were the sole proprietors, and to vest it in the defendant in consideration of his promise to marry and raise up heirs to the Illom to which the plaintiff and her mother belonged, and to maintain the plaintiff and her mother till death, and it was proved that plaintiff was well aware of what she was doing, and had subsequently clearly recognized the defendant as absolute proprietor of the property, and was contended with his having assumed the position pointed out in the documents:—Held, that the transaction was valid and could not be called into question on the suggestion that plaintiff was placed at a disadvantage and was not fully cognizant of the irrevocable nature of the deed, and that the rule laid down by the Privy Council in Ashgar Ali v. Delroos Banoo Begam (1. L. R., 3 Cal. 324) and in Takoorden Tewarry v. N. Syed Ali (L. R., 1 IA. 392) had been complied with, and that defendant had discharged the burden of proof upon him. Held further by INNES, J.—That the document aimed at defeating the right of escheat of the Government, and the transaction was against public policy with reference to the decision in Cavali Venkatanarayanappa's case [Collector of Musulipattam v. Cavali Vencatanaryanappah] (8 M.I.A. 500), but that the plaintiff, being in pari delicto with the defendant, could not recover the property. Held by KINDERSLEY, J.—That no claim was made by the crown, it was not necessary to decide as to rights which may or may not be claimed by the crown, and that if plaintiff and her mother were not, as apparently they were not, in the position of ordinary Hindu widows, there was nothing opposed to public policy in their disposing of the property, as being the last owners, and competent to dispose of it absolutely.—I. L. R., 3 Madr. 215.

C signed the award amongst other creditors, but the award was not signed by all the creditors. C received a dividend under the award. Held, in a suit by C against K to recover a debt which had been compounded under the award, in which suit C alleged that several creditors had not signed the award, that some of them had sued K and recovered debts in spite of the award; that K had misappropriated some of the property; and that, if the plaintiff did not sue, there would be no assets left to satisfy his debt, that such suit was not maintainable.—2 Al. 173.

Held on appeal, per MARKBY, J., that the plaintiffs were not entitled to put aside the sale as invalid, and treat the case as one for damages for breach of contract. Under the circumstances they were not entitled to even nominal damages. The mere shipment on board the Grecian did not pass the property in the coal to the defendant under sec. 77 of Act IX of 1872. Per PONTIFEX, J.—Whether, by virtue of the contract and the subsequent appropriation and shipment, the property in the coal passed or did not pass to the defendant within the meaning of sec. 84 or sec. 83 of Act IX of 1872, even if the sale were invalid, the plaintiffs were not entitled, considering their conduct in dealing with the coal, and the concealment of their interest in the purchase, and in the absence of satisfactory evidence of what ultimately became of the coal, to recover any damages?—15 B. L. R., 276.

A suit to recover arrears of rent upon a registered contract is governed by art. 116, Sch. II, Act XV of 1877. Compensation is used in the same sense in that article as in the Contract Act, sec. 73.—3 Madr. 76.

In January 1883 W. & Co. of Madras contracted to deliver to P. & Co. of Madras certain goods of a certain quality, subject to survey before shipment, at a certain price “f. o. b. Cocanada, delivery in April and May; terms, full advance and local exchange $\frac{3}{4}$ per cent, payable at Madras.” This contract was contained in bought and sold notes. It was further agreed that the goods were to be delivered on board any ship P. & Co. might direct at the port of Cocanada. P. & Co. paid the full amount of the purchase money in January. On the 31st March P. & Co. wrote to W. & Co. requesting that the goods might be marked in a certain way. On the 18th May W. & Co. wrote to P. & Co., enclosing a letter from W. & Co. to S. N. & Co. of Cocanada requesting S. N. & Co. to hold the goods (which were said to have been purchased to W. & Co. from S. N. & Co. and to be in godown) at the disposal of P. & Co. In the letter to P. & Co. from W. & Co. the goods were also said to be in godown at that date. On the same day P. & Co. wrote to S. N. & Co. enclosing a delivery order for the goods (which P. & Co. stated they believed to be in godown), requesting that they might be marked in a particular way. On the 25th May S. N. & Co. wrote to P. and Co. informing them that they held the goods at P. and Co.’s disposal. On the 28th May P. & Co. received this letter. On the 31st May P. & Co. chartered a ship to take on board the said goods and other goods brought by P. & Co. from S. N. & Co. and others, and wrote to S. N. & Co. informing them that the ship would arrive about the 12th June. On the 5th June P. & Co. wrote to S. N. & Co. acknowledging receipt of a letter which stated that only a portion of the goods to be shipped was ready. On the 9th June P. and Co. received a letter from S. N. & Co. stating that all the goods were ready. On the 17th June the ship arrived at Cocanada. On the 21st June S. N. and Co. stopped payment and ceased to carry on business. No goods were delivered according to the contract. S. N. & Co. never had the goods to deliver between 18th May and 17th June. In a suit by P. & Co. to recover from W. and Co. the price paid and damages for breach of contract to deliver the goods, it was contended for W. and Co. I.—That the transfer of the delivery order of the 18th May amounted to a delivery of the goods:—Held, that as S. N. and Co. had neither had possession of the goods to be delivered nor had appropriated any goods to the contract, the delivery order was inoperative. II.—That the acceptance of the delivery order by P. and Co. amounted to an agreement that S. N. and Co. should deliver to P. & Co. the goods when ready, and that the liability of S. N. and Co. was substituted for that of W. and Co.:—Held, that such an agreement could not be inferred. III.—that as S. N. & Co. by accepting the delivery order were estopped from denying that they had possession of the goods as against P. & Co., S. N. & Co. were discharged as against W. & Co., and therefore P. & Co. had no remedy against W. & Co.:—Held, (1) that S. N. and Co. were not discharged as against W. and Co., as S. N. and Co.'s representations were false; (2) that even if S. N. and Co. were discharged, this could not affect P. & Co. IV.—That as P. & Co. had not supplied a ship in May, they had failed to perform their part of the contract and could not recover:—Held, distinguishing Bowes v. Shand L. R., 2 App. Ca., 455) and Renter v. Sala (L. R., 4 C. P. D., 239), that the presence of the ship in May was not a condition precedent to P. & Co. recovering V.—That W. and Co. had rescinded the contract on the 29th June by refusing to deliver, and therefore P. and Co. were only entitled to recover the price paid:—Held, that W. and Co. were not entitled to rescind the contract:—Held, also that P. & Co. having paid in advance, were entitled to a reasonable time after the 29th June prepare to purchase other goods, and were entitled to the difference between the contract price and the market price on the 1st of July as damages for the breach to deliver.—8 Madr. 38.

In 1881 A Hindu executed a sale-deed of a house in the Mufassal. The deed contained no covenant for title. The purchaser having been ejected from a portion of the house under a decree, of which the vendor was aware at the time of the sale, sued the vendor for damages. The Munsif decreed damages on the ground that the vendor had fraudulently concealed the existence of the mortgage. On appeal the district Judge reversed this decree, holding that, as the purchaser had not insisted on a covenant for title, he must be held to have accepted all risks: Held, that, if there had been fraudulent concealment as alleged, the purchaser was entitled to damages.—9 Madr. 89.

On 6th March 1883 V promised to sell 5,000 bags of gingelly seed at Rs. 7 As. 11 a bag to S. Two-thirds of the price was paid in advance. V agreed to deliver the 5,000 bags at the end of April and to give S, notice as instalments of 1,000 bags were ready for delivery within the stipulated time, and S promised to pay V the balance of the contract price on each instalment when ready for delivery. There was neither delivery nor payment in terms of the contract, 3,000 bags were delivered by V, but S did not pay the balance of the price due, and 2,000 bags were never delivered. On 7th May V declined to deliver these bags, on the ground that S had not paid the balance of the contract price for the 3,000 bags delivered when ready for delivery, and subsequently, repaid to S the balance due to him of the money advanced. In a suit by S against V for damages for non-delivery of 2,000 bags:—Held that V was not excused from performance of his promise by the failure of S to pay the balance due for the bags delivered, and that S was entitled to recover the difference between the market and the contract price on the day the contract was broken by V.—9 Madr. 359.

In a deed of mortgage, dated in July, 1870, the mortgagors covenanted, among other things, as follows:—“That, having repaid the principal amount in the course of three years we shall take back this bond, and we shall continue to pay annually interest on the said amount at the rate of Re 1-2 per cent. per mensem; that, should we in any year fail to pay the amount of interest, it shall, at the close of the year, be consolidated with the principal amount, and we shall pay compound interest at Re. 1-2 per cent. per mensem.....that, in the event of non-payment of the principal and interest on the expiration of the appointed time, the “mortgagee” shall be at liberty to recover from us the whole amount due to him with interest by means of a law suit":—Held that the terms of the bond amounted to a covenant to pay interest at the stipulated rate after the period of three years, so long as the principal remained due; that, the bond containing an express covenant for the payment of interest at that rate, the interest was not affected by the considerations of the reasonableness or otherwise of the rate; and that the mortgagee was therefore entitled to interest up to the date of the decree at the rate of Re. 1-2 per mensem. Baldeo Panday v. Gokal Rai referred to.—7 Al. 333.

74. When a contract has been broken, if a sum is named in the contract as the amount to be paid in case of such breach, the party complaining of the breach is entitled, whether or not actual damage or loss is proved to have been caused thereby, to receive from the party who has broken the contract reasonable compensation not exceeding the amount so named.

Exception.—When any person enters into any bail-bond, recognizance, or other instrument of the same nature, or, under the provisions of any law or under the orders of the Government of India or of any Local Government, gives any bond for the performance of any public duty or act in which the public are interested, he shall be liable, upon breach of the condition of any such instrument, to pay the whole sum mentioned therein.

Explanation.—A person who enters into a contract with Government does not necessarily thereby undertake any public duty, or promise to do an act in which the public are interested.

(a.) A contracts with B to pay B Rs. 1,000 if he fails to pay B Rs. 500 on a given day. A fails to pay B Rs. 500 on that day. B is entitled to recover from A such compensation, not exceeding Rs. 1,000, as the Court considers reasonable.

(b.) A contracts with B that, if A practises as a Surgeon within Calcutta, he will pay B Rs. 5,000. A practises as a Surgeon in Calcutta. B is entitled to such compensation, not exceeding Rs. 5,000, as the Court considers reasonable.

(c.) A gives a recognizance binding him in a penalty of Rs. 500 to appear in Court on a certain day. He forfeits his recognizance. He is liable to pay the whole penalty.

Notes.

The defendant one D, on the 6th April, 1875, gave to the plaintiff, a money-lender, a promissory note, by which they jointly and severally promised to pay the plaintiff on the 6th September Rs. 400 "for value received in cash in hand paid on signing and delivering this bond; should we neglect or fail to pay this amount on due date, then only shall it carry interest from and on due date of payment at the defaulting rate of 10 per cent. per mensem." At the date of the note, the defendant and D were in the plaintiff's debt in respect of other promissory notes, and a sum of Rs. 100 was deducted from the amount of the note of the 6th April, in respect of one of these which was given up, and in respect of interest on three others. A further sum of Rs. 125 was deducted as interest in advance for the five months previous to the due date of the note, and the balance (Rs. 175) was paid by cheque to D. D died before the note became due. In a suit brought to recover Rs. 400 principal, and Rs. 400 interest, on the promissory note, on default being made in payment: Held that this was not a case in which a certain sum was agreed to be paid on a breach of contract, and, therefore, sec. 74 of the Contract Act did not apply. The stipulation to pay interest at the "defaulting rate" was not in the nature of a penalty. Held also that, looking at the nature of the transaction, the note contained a false statement of the consideration, which amounted only to Rs. 275; and there being nothing to show that the defendant understood the real nature of the transaction, the rate of interest being exorbitant, and the consideration inadequate, the transaction was not one which ought to be enforced by a Court of Equity.—2 Cal. 202.

A loan to a purdanashin woman from her own mukthear at an exorbitant rate of interest, the security being ample, may be a hard and unconscionable bargain on which the Contract for such rate of interest, will not be enforced. Benyon v. Cook, L. R., 10 Ch. Ap., 389, referred to and followed.—12 Cal. 225.

The stipulation in a bond was in these terms:—"I cannot pay Rs. 1,000 now, so I will pay it within two months and 15 days; if I do not pay it within that period, I will pay the amount with interest from the date of the bond at the rate of two annas per rupee per month":—Held, that the stipulation was one for the payment of interest within the meaning of sec. 2, Act XXV of 1855, and did not fall under sec. 74 of the Contract Act. Mackintosh v. Crow, I. L. R., 9 Cal., 689, approved; Balkishen Das v. Run Bahadur Singh, I. L. R., 10 Cal., 305, considered.—13 Cal. 200.

In a suit on a bond, wherein it was stipulated that the loan was to be repaid on a certain date and to bear interest at the rate of 2 per cent. per mensem, but that if the loan were not repaid on the date named the principal was to bear interest at the rate of 4 per cent. per mensem from the date of the loan: Held, on the authority of the decision in Balkishen Das v. Run Bahadur Singh, I. L. R., 10 Cal. 305, that the stipulation as to the payment of interest at the higher rate was not in the nature of a penalty, and that the plaintiff was entitled to a decree for the amount due on the bond with interest at the increased rate from the date of the bond, and that, whether the interest at the increased rate, in case of non-payment on the date fixed in the contract, was payable from the commencement of the loan or from the date of fixed for the repayment of the loan, sec. 74 of the Contract Act was not applicable. Mackintosh v. Crow, I. L. R., 9 Cal. 689, upon this point dissented from. The decision in the case of Balkishen Das v. Run Bahadur Singh, I. L. R., 10 Cal. 305, overrules the decision in the case of Muthura Persad Singh v. Luggun Kooer, I. L. R., 9 Cal. 615, and all similar cases cited in Mackintosh v. Crow, which held that the stipulation for the payment of a higher rate of interest in the event of the non-payment of the debt on the date fixed in the contract, from the commencement of the loan, is in the nature of a penalty.—14 Cal. 248.

Held by the FULL BENCH (BANERJEE, J., dissenting as to part)—A provision in a bond to the effect that the principal should be repaid with interest on the due date, and that on failure thereof interest should be paid at an increased rate from the date of the bond up to the date of realization, amounts to a provision for a penalty, and sec. 74 of the Contract Act applies to the money claimed at the increased rate of interest from the date of the bond until realization. Mackintosh v. Crow, Nanjappa v. Nanjappa, and Sajaji Panhaji v. Maruti, approved. Baij Nath Singh v. Shah Ali Hosain overruled so far as it dissents from Mackintosh v. Crow. Balkishen Das v. Run Bahadur Singh distinguished. Banerjee, J.—The decision in Mackintosh v. Crow, which regards the interest at the increased rate as a penalty, is correct as to the claim of interest up to the stipulated day of re-payment, and Baij Nath Singh v. Shah Ali Hosain was wrongly decided as to this point. Sec. 74 of the Contract Act applies only to that part of the claim for interest which is in respect of the period from the date of the bond to the due date, and has no application to the claim for interest for the period from the due date to the date of realization. This view is in accordance with the decision in Mackintosh v. Crow.—19 Cal. 392.

V lent Rs. 1,500 to C and the members of his family under a bond by which it was agreed that C's family should demise certain land on kanom to V and receive a further sum. It was also stipulated in the bond that C and the members of his family should pay interest at 6 per cent. upon Rs. 1,500 until the execution of the kanom deed, and interest at 24 per cent. from the date of the loan in the event of their not making the demise. The demise was not made. Held that the stipulation for the enhanced rate of interest did not create an independent obligation, and that the proper course was to determine what would be a sufficient compensation for the breach of contract. C tendered what he considered sufficient compensation to V before suit, and claimed exemption from payment of interest and costs. Held that as C had not tendered the amount stipulated for in the bond, V was justified in coming to the Court to obtain a decision as to the rate of compensation which should be paid, and was entitled to his costs.—3 Madr. 224.

A promise to pay interest, if the principal sum is not repaid within fifteen days, at the rate of one anna per rupee per diem from the date of the promise (intended to secure prompt payment) cannot be enforced, but interest-rate may be allowed. Per INNES J.—Quære: Whether sec. 74 of the Indian Contract Act is applicable to such a case?—6 Madr. 167.

An agreement to pay the principal of a debt by instalments with interest, and on default of payment of each instalment to pay an enhanced rate of interest thereon from the date of default of payment, is not an agreement which should be relieved against. Dictum of Wilson J., in Mackintosh v. Crow (I. L. R., 9 Cal. 689) approved.—9 Madr. 276.

A mortgagor agreed that if any instalment of interest accruing due on the mortgage was not paid, he should pay compound interest and discharge the principal in one year, and further that if the principal was not so discharged he should pay interest at an enhanced rate:—Held that the mortgagee could enforce the agreement.—10 Madr. 203.

Where a mortgage-deed provided for repayment of the debt in four instalments with interest at 6 per cent. and in default of payment of any instalment on the due date, for interest at 12 per cent. from the date of the bond:—Held, following Balkishen Das v. Run Bahadur Singh (I. L. R., 10 Cal., 305) that the stipulation being reasonable, the plaintiff was entitled on default to recover the higher rate of interest from the date of the bond.—11 Madr. 294.

A mortgage-bond provided that interest for the loan should be paid at Rs. 2 per month, and that if the loan were not paid off by a certain day, then future interest from the date of default should be paid at Rs. 3 per month. Held, that the higher rate of interest was not a penalty, and might be enforced.—I. L. R., 14 Bom. 200.

A mortgage-bond provided for repayment of the loan on a certain date with interest at the rate of $8\frac{1}{4}$ per cent. In default of payment on the due date, interest was to be paid at the rate of 37 per cent. to be calculated from the commencement of the loan. Held, that the higher rate of interest was a penalty, and not to be enforced.—14 Bom. 274.

Under sec. 74 of the Contract Act, 1872, the Courts are not bound, even in cases where the parties to a contract have, in anticipation of a breach, expressly determined by agreement what shall be the sum payable as damages for the breach, to award such sum for a breach, but may award for the same "reasonable compensation" not exceeding such sum. As a general principle, compensation must be commensurate with the injury sustained. Acting upon this principle, when the injury consists of a breach of contract, the Court would assess damages with a view of restoring to the injured party such advantage as he might reasonably be expected to have derived from the contract, had the breach not occurred. Held, therefore, where the parties to a contract to deliver a certain quantity of raw indigo on a certain day agreed that a certain sum should be paid as compensation in case such indigo was not delivered as agreed, that the method of assessing damages in case of a breach of the contract would be to ascertain the quantity of indigo which could have been pressed out of the stipulated amount of indigo plant, to ascertain the price at which the indigo might have been fairly sold in the market during the season to which the contract related, and to deduct from such price the ordinary charges of producing and selling the quantity of indigo in question; and that more than the amount so ascertained ought not equitably to be awarded, such amount being "reasonable compensation" for a breach of the contract—5 Al. 238.

The obligor of a bond promised to pay the amount on demand with interest at the rate of Rs. 6-4-0 per cent. per mensem, to pay the interest every six months, and, if he made default in the payment of the interest for any six months, to pay interest on such interest at such rate. Held, in a suit on the bond, default in the payment of interest as agreed having occurred, that as the obligor expressly undertook to pay such high rate of interest, and there was no question of penalty, that is to say, of a liability to damages for breach of the terms of a contract in the sense of sec. 74 of the Contract Act, the contract rate of interest stipulated to be paid could not be interfered with.—6 Al. 63.

The obligor of a bond for the payment of money agreed therein in respect of interest as follows :—"I will pay the money with interest at one rupee one anna per cent. per mensem on demand : as regards interest, I agree that I will pay the interest of the amount every six months which may be found due under the accounts : in the event of non payment every six months I will pay the interest at the rate of one rupee eight annas per mensem from the date of the execution of the bond." Held by STUART, C. J., that the stipulation to pay the higher rate of interest in case of non-payment of interest at the lower rate was a stipulation in the nature of a penalty, and should be so treated in the accounts to be taken. Bichook Nath Pandey v. Ram Lochan Singh referred to : Kharag Singh v. Bhola Nath observed on. Held by TYRRELL, J., that the non-payment of interest at the lower rate was not a breach of the contract, the contract being that the obligor might adopt either of the scales of payment, and therefore the stipulation in question was not in the nature of a penalty. Mackintosh v. Hunt followed : Kharag Singh v. Bhola Nath distinguished.—6 Al. 179.

The lender of money, for the use of which interest is to be paid, may, at the time of making the loan, protect himself against breach of the borrower's contract to pay the interest when due, either by a stipulation that in case of such breach, he shall be entitled to recover compound interest, or by a stipulation that, in such a case, the rate of interest shall be increased. But a condition that, upon failure by the borrower to pay the interest when due, both compound interest and an increased rate shall be payable, amounts to a penalty, inasmuch as the two stipulations together cannot be regarded as a fair agreement with reference to the loss sustained by the lender.

In a bond dated in February, 1877, for a sum of money payable in June, 1882, it was provided that interest should be paid at the rate of Rs. 9 per cent. per annum on the Puranmashi of every Jaith, and that, if the interest were not duly paid, the rate should be increased to Rs. 15 per cent. per annum, and compound interest should be payable. There was no provision for payment of interest from the time when the principal became due. In December, 1884, the obligee brought a suit on the bond against the obligor, claiming interest from the date of the bond to the date of the institution of the suit at Rs. 15 per annum, and compound interest for the same period at the same:—Held, that the stipulations contained in the bond must be regarded as penal, and it was therefore the Court's duty to limit the penalty to what was the real amount of damage sustained by the plaintiff in consequence of the defendant's breach of the contract to pay the interest at the due date:—Held that, for this purpose, the proper course was to reduce the interest to Rs. 9 per cent. per annum, reckoned at compound interest, with yearly rests, to the due date of the bond; and that, inasmuch as the plaintiff was to blame for not having enforced his remedy at an earlier date, he should only recover simple interest at Rs. 9 per cent. from the due date of payment, upon the entire sum which was due when the bond became due, i. e., the principal added to the compound interest calculated at Rs. 9 per cent.

The same obligee held another bond executed by the same obligors in June, 1879, for a sum of money payable in June, 1882, with interest at Rs. 9 per cent. per annum. There was a provision in the bond that if the principal and interest were not paid on the due date, the obligee should be entitled to recover the principal with interest at the rate of Rs. 24 per cent. per annum from the date of the bond. In December, 1884, the obligee brought a suit on the bond against the obligor claiming interest on the principal amount from its date to the date of the institution of the suit at the rate of Rs. 24 per cent. per annum:—Held that the increased rate of interest might fairly be considered as representing the damages sustained by the lender by reason of the borrower's failure to pay interest at the specified time, and should therefore be paid down to the due date of the bond; and that, as the plaintiff failed to enforce payment for a long time, the interest, from the due date, might fairly revert to the old rate of Rs. 9 per cent. per annum, and the amount should be calculated from that date, on that basis, on the whole amount of principal and interest then due on the bond.—8 Al. 185.

See I. L. R., 3 Cal. 379, noted under sec. 78; 12 Madr. 161, noted under sec. 63; 10 Al. 29, noted under sec. 256 of the Indian Succession Act. (No. 10 of 1865).

(a.) A, a singer, contracts with B, the manager of a theatre, to sing at his theatre for two nights in every week during the next two months, and B engages to pay her 100 rupees for each night's performance. On the sixth night, A wilfully absents herself from the theatre, and B, in consequence, rescinds the contract. B is entitled to claim compensation for the damage which he has sustained through the non-fulfilment of the contract.

CHAPTER VII.

SALE OF GOODS.

When property in goods sold passes.

76. In this chapter, the word 'goods' means and includes every kind of moveable property.

'Goods' defined.

Note.—See I. L. R., 3 Cal. 379, noted under sec. 78.

77. "Sale" is the exchange of property for a price. It involves the transfer of the ownership of the thing sold from the seller to the buyer.

"Sale" defined.

Note.—See 15 B. L. R., 276, noted under sec. 73.

78. Sale is effected by offer and acceptance of ascertained goods for a price, or of a price for ascertained goods, together with payment of the price or delivery of the goods; or with tender, part-payment, earnest, or part-delivery; or with an agreement, express or implied, that the payment or delivery, or both, shall be postponed.

Sale how effected.

Where there is a contract for the sale of ascertained goods, the property in the goods sold passes to the buyer when the whole or part of the price, or when the earnest, is paid, or when the whole or part of the goods is delivered.

If the parties agree, expressly or by implication, that the payment or delivery, or both, shall be postponed, the property passes as soon as the proposal for sale is accepted.

(a.) B offers to buy A's horse for 500 Rupees. A accepts B's offer, and delivers the horse to B. The horse becomes B's property on delivery.

(b.) A sends goods to B, with the request that he will buy them at a stated price if he approves of them, or return them if he does not approve of them. B retains the goods, and informs A that he approves of them. The goods become B's when B retains them.

(c.) B offers A, for his horse, 1,000 rupees, the horse to be delivered to B on a stated day, and the price to be paid on another stated day. A accepts the offer. The horse becomes B's as soon as the proposal is accepted.

(d.) B offers A, for his horse, 1,000 rupees on a month's credit. A accepts the offer. The horse becomes B's as soon as the offer is accepted.

(e.) B, on the first January, offers to A, for a quantity of rice, 2,000 rupees, to be paid on the first March following, the rice not to be taken away till paid for. A accepts the offer. The rice becomes B's as soon as the offer is accepted.

Notes.

A Government currency note was stolen from A, and cashed by B in good faith for C. On the conviction of C for theft, the Magistrate ordered the note to be given to B. A appealed to the Sessions Judge, who was of opinion that he was not competent to interfere as a Court of appeal under sec. 419 of the Criminal Procedure Code; but submitted the case for the orders of the High Court. Held that the case could be disposed of by the Judge under sec. 419 of the Criminal Procedure Code, and that the words "Court of Appeal" in that section are not necessarily limited to a Court before which an appeal is pending. Held, further, that the provisions of sec. 76, of the Contract Act did not apply, as the change of a currency note for money is not a contract of sale, and that, as the note came honestly into the hands of B, the order of the Magistrate was right.—I. L. R., 3 Cal. 379.

B. K. agreed to buy from M. R. five bales of chrome orange twist, "or any part thereof that may be in a merchantable condition, ex 'City of Cambridge' or other vessel or vessels," with specific marks and numbers, each bale containing 500 lbs. at so much per lb. to be paid for on or before delivery. B. K. took delivery of and paid for only one bale, but rejected the others. M. R. brought a suit for the price of the four bales rejected. Held, that the property in the goods did not pass to the defendant by the terms of the contract, nor was the delivery that was taken by him of the one bale a delivery of "part of the goods" within the meaning of secs. 78 and 92 of the Contract Act; the suit, therefore, did not lie. Held, also, that the question whether the defendant was entitled to refuse the goods, in other words whether the goods were according to the contract or not, was one that was unnecessary for the purposes of the present suit; but it would have been otherwise if the suit were one for damages on the ground of the defendant's refusal to accept the goods. A purchaser's right to reject goods by reason of their not answering the description in the Contract may be independent of the question whether the property in the goods has passed to him or not.—I. L. R., 15 Cal. 1.

money from time to time on account of the price. The ownership of the barge does not pass to B until it is finished.

80. Where, by a contract for the sale of goods, the seller is to do anything to them for the purpose of putting them into a state in which the buyer is to take them, the sale is not complete until such thing has been done.

(a.) A, a ship-builder, contracts to sell to B, for a stated price, a vessel which is lying in A's yard; the vessel to be rigged and fitted for a voyage, and the price to be paid on delivery. Under the contract, the property in the vessel does not pass to B until the vessel has been rigged, fitted up, and delivered.

81. Where anything remains to be done to the goods by the seller for the purpose of ascertaining the amount of the price, the sale is not complete until this has been done.

Completion of sale of goods, when seller has to do anything thereto in order to ascertain price.

(a.) A, the owner of a stack of bark, contracts to sell it to B, weigh and deliver it, at 100 rupees per ton. B agrees to take and pay for it on a certain day. Part is weighed and delivered to B; the ownership of the residue is not transferred to B until it has been weighed pursuant to the contract.

(b.) A contracts to sell a heap of clay to B at a certain price per ton. B is, by the contract, to load the clay in his own carts, and to weigh each load at a certain weighing machine, which his carts must pass on their way from A's grounds to B's place of deposit. Here, nothing more remains to be done by the seller; the sale is complete, and the ownership of the heap of clay is transferred at once.

82. Where the goods are not ascertained at the time of making the contract of sale, it is necessary to the completion of the sale that the goods shall be ascertained.*

A agrees to sell to B 20 tons of oil in A's cisterns. A's cisterns contain more than 20 tons of oil. No portion of the oil has become the property of B.

83. A, having a quantity of sugar in bulk more than sufficient to fill 20 hogsheads, contracts to sell B 20 hogsheads of it. After the contract, A fills 20 hogsheads with the sugar, and gives notice to B that the hogsheads are ready, and requires him to take them away. B says he will take them as soon as he can. By this appropriation by A, and assent by B, the sugar becomes the property of B.

84. Where the goods are not ascertained at the time of making the contract of sale, and, by the terms of the contract, the seller is to do an act with reference to the goods which cannot be done until they are appropriated to the buyer, the seller has a right to select any goods answering to the contract, and, by his doing so, the goods are ascertained.

Ascertainment of goods by seller's selection.

B agrees with A to purchase of him, at a stated price, to be paid on a fixed day, 50 maunds of rice out of a larger quantity in A's granary. It is agreed that B shall send sacks for the rice, and that A shall put the rice into them. B does so, and A puts 50 maunds of rice into the sacks. The goods have been ascertained.

(a.) A contracts to sell to B, for a stated price, all the indigo which shall be produced at A's factory during the ensuing year. A, when the indigo has been manufactured, gives B an acknowledgment that he holds the indigo at his disposal. The ownership of the indigo vests in B from the date of the acknowledgment.

(b.) A, for a stated price, contracts that B may take and sell any crops that shall be grown on A's land in succession to the crops then standing. Under this contract, B, with the assent of A, takes possession of some crops grown in succession to the crops standing at the time of the contract. The ownership of the crops, when taken possession of, vests in B.

(c.) A, for a stated price, contracts that B may take and sell any crops that shall be grown on his land in succession to the crops then standing. Under this contract, B applies to A for possession of some crops grown in succession to the crops which were standing at the time of the contract. A refuses to give possession. The ownership of the crops has not passed to B, though A may commit a breach of contract in refusing to give possession.

88. A contract for the sale of goods to be delivered at a future day is binding, though the goods are not in the possession of the seller at the time of making the contract, and though, at that time, he has no reasonable expectation of acquiring them otherwise than by purchase.

Contract to sell and deliver, at a future day, goods not in seller's possession at date of contract.

Illustration.

A contracts, on the first January, to sell B 50 shares in the East Indian Railway Company, to be delivered and paid for on the first March of the same year. A, at the time of making the contract, is not in possession of any shares. The contract is valid.

89. Where the price of goods sold is not fixed by the contract of sale, the buyer is bound to pay the seller such a price as the Court considers reasonable.

Determination of price not fixed by contract.

Illustration.

B, living in Patna, orders of A, a coach-builder at Calcutta, a carriage of a particular description. Nothing is said by either as to the price. The order having been executed, and the price being in dispute between the buyer and the seller, the Court must decide what price it considers reasonable.

DELIVERY.

90. Delivery of goods sold may be made by doing anything which has the effect of putting them in the possession of the buyer, or of any person authorized to hold them on his behalf.

Delivery how made.

Illustrations.

(a.) A sells to B a horse, and causes or permits it to be removed from A's stables to B's. The removal to B's stable is a delivery.

(b.) B, in England, orders 100 bales of cotton from A, a merchant of Bombay, and sends his own ship to Bombay for the cotton. The putting the cotton on board the ship is a delivery to B.

(c.) A sells to B certain specific goods which are locked up in a godown. A gives B the key of the godown in order that he may get the goods. This is a delivery.

(d.) A sells to B five specific casks of oil. The oil is in the warehouse of A. B sells the five casks to C. A receives warehouse-rent for them from C. This amounts to a delivery of the oil to C, as it shows an assent on the part of A to hold the goods as warehouseman of C.

(e.) A sells to B 50 maunds of rice in the possession of C, a warehouseman. A gives B an order to C to transfer the rice to B, and C assents to such order, and transfers the rice in his books to B. This is a delivery.

(f.) A agrees to sell B five tons of oil, at 1,000 rupees per ton, to be paid for at the time of delivery. A gives to C, a wharfinger, at whose wharf he had twenty tons of the oil, an order to transfer five of them into the name of B. C makes the transfer in his books, and gives A's clerk a notice of the transfer for B. A's clerk takes the transfer notice to B, and offers to give it to him on payment of the price of the oil. B refuses to pay. There has been no delivery to B, as B never assented to make C his agent to hold for him the five tons selected by A.

91. A delivery to a wharfinger or carrier of the goods

Effect of delivery to wharfinger or carrier. sold has the same effect as a delivery to the buyer, but does not render the buyer liable for the price of goods which do not reach him, unless the delivery is so made as to enable him to hold the wharfinger or carrier responsible for the safe custody or delivery of the goods.

Illustration.

B, at Agra, orders of A, who lives at Calcutta, three casks of oil to be sent to him by railway. A takes three casks of oil directed to B to the railway station, and leaves them there without conforming to the rules which must be complied with in order to render the Railway Company responsible for their safety. The goods do not reach B. There has not been a sufficient delivery to charge B in a suit for the price.

92. A delivery of part of goods, in progress of the deli-

Effect of part-delivery. very of the whole, has the same effect, for the purpose of passing the property in such goods, as a delivery of the whole ; but a delivery of part of the goods, with an intention of severing it from the whole, does not operate as a delivery of the remainder.

Illustrations.

(a.) A ship arrives in a harbour laden with a cargo consigned to A, the buyer of the cargo. The captain begins to discharge it, and delivers over part of the goods to A in progress of the delivery of the whole. This is a delivery of the cargo to A for the purpose of passing the property in the cargo.

(b.) A sells to B a stack of fire-wood, to be paid for by B on delivery.

After the sale, B applies for and obtains from A leave to take away some of the fire-wood. This has not the legal effect of delivery of the whole.

(c.) A sells 50 maunds of rice to B. The rice remains in A's warehouse. After the sale, B sells to C 10 maunds of the rice, and A, at B's desire, sends the 10 maunds to C. This has not the legal effect of a delivery of the whole.

Note.

It was agreed between the Bank of Bengal at Calcutta and C and Co., who carried on business there, that the Branch of the Bank at Cawnpur should discount bills to a certain extent drawn by C, who carried on business at Cawnpur, on C and Co. against goods to be consigned by rail to C and Co., and that the railway receipts for such consignments should be forwarded to C and Co. through the Cawnpur Branch of the Bank. C accordingly drew a bill on C and Co. payable twenty-one days after date, which the Cawnpur Branch of the Bank discounted, receiving the railway receipt for certain goods consigned to C and Co. C and Co. having accepted this bill, the Bank handed over the railway receipt to them. In a suit by the Bank against C on the bill, the latter set up as a defence that the bill had been discounted by the Bank on the oral understanding that the railway receipt was not to be transferred to C and Co. until they had paid the amount of the bill, and that the Bank had, by the breach of this condition, determined the defendant's liability. Held by STRAIGHT, J. (SPANKIE, J. dissenting), that evidence of such oral understanding was not admissible even under proviso 3 of sec. 92 of Act 1 of 1872.—I. L. R., 2 Al. 598.

Seller not bound to deliver until buyer applies for delivery.

93. In the absence of any special promise the seller of goods is not bound to deliver them until the buyer applies for delivery.*

Note.

On the 25th December, 1886, the defendant contracted to deliver to the plaintiff on the 26th May, 1887, one hundred bales of cotton at Rs. 196 per candy. On the 28th February, 1887, the plaintiff assigned this contract to one Khorsi Khetsi, and a few days afterwards, viz., 7th March, 1887, he became insolvent. In his schedule there was no mention of this contract, or its assignment, or of the receipt of any consideration for the assignment. Khorsi Khetsi, as the beneficial assignee of the contract, subsequently called on the defendant to give delivery of the goods, and offered payment of the price; but the defendant, who was then aware of the plaintiff's insolvency, refused, on the ground that Khorsi Khetsi was not a bona fide assignee of the contract for value; that the assignment was a sham, and was not intended to pass the beneficial interest in the contract. A suit was then brought against the defendant by Khorsi Khetsi claiming damages for breach of the contract. This suit was dismissed, on the ground that the assignment of the contract was fraudulent. The plaintiff knew of the dismissal of Khorsi Khetsi's suit in 1887, but had never himself made any demand on the defendant for the performance of the contract. On the 6th November, 1889, the plaintiff's petition in insolvency was dismissed for non-prosecution, and on the 18th November, 1889, Khorsi Khetsi re-assigned the contract to the plaintiff. The plaintiff now sued the defendant to recover damages for breach of the contract. He contended that his assignment to Khorsi Khetsi, though in fraud of the Official Assignee and the creditors of the insolvency, was not in fraud of the defendant, and that by the dismissal of his petition the parties, as to their rights and liabilities under the contract, had been relegated to the position which they occupied prior to the plaintiff's insolvency. Held, that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover damages from the defendant. There had been no demand for delivery by the plaintiff, or on his account, as required by sec. 93 of the Contract Act IX of 1872. Khorsi Khetsi had asked for delivery as beneficial owner, but the property had not passed to him by the assignment; and although the defendant would be bound to recognize an assignee who could establish his title of full ownership in the contract, he was under no obligation to recognize Khorsi Khetsi when, as a fact, the beneficial interest in the contract still remained in the plaintiff, with whom the defendant had originally contracted. In England, where there has been an assignment by deed, the assigned property passes by force of the deed, and it cannot be impeached at law by the assignor or by third parties other than creditors, on the ground of its not being a real transaction: but where the assignment is not by deed, the true nature of it as a sham may be proved. In India it is in all cases open to third parties to show that such was the case.—I. L. R., 15 Bom. 1.

 ment. But if the buyer becomes insolvent before delivery of the goods, or if the time appointed for payment arrives before the delivery of the goods, the seller may retain the goods for the price.

Explanation.—A person is insolvent who has ceased to pay his debts in the usual course of business,
 'Insolvency' defined. or who is incapable of paying them.

STOPPAGE IN TRANSIT.

99. A seller who has parted with the possession of the goods, and has not received the whole price, may, if the buyer becomes insolvent, stop the goods while they are in transit to the buyer.

Power of seller to stop in transit.

100. Goods are to be deemed in transit while they are in the possession of the carrier, or lodged at any place in the course of transmission to the buyer, and are not yet come into the possession of the buyer or any person on his behalf, otherwise than as being in possession of the carrier, or as being so lodged.

When goods are to be deemed in transit.

(a.) B, living at Madras, orders goods of A, at Patna, and directs that they shall be sent to Madras. The goods are sent to Calcutta, and there delivered to C, a wharfinger, to be forwarded to Madras. The goods, while they are in the possession of C, are in transit.

(b.) B, at Delhi, orders goods of A at Calcutta. A consigns and forwards the goods to B at Delhi. On arrival there, they are taken to the warehouse of B, and left there. B refuses to receive them, and immediately afterwards stops payment. The goods are in transit.

(c.) B, who lives at Puna, orders goods of A at Bombay. A sends them to Puna by C, a carrier appointed by B. The goods arrive at Puna, and are placed by C, at B's request, in C's warehouse for B. The goods are no longer in transit.

(d.) B, a merchant of London, orders 100 bales of cotton of A, a merchant at Bombay. B sends his own ship to Bombay for the cotton. The transit is at an end when the cotton is delivered on board the ship.

(e.) B, a merchant of London, orders 100 bales of cotton of A, a merchant at Bombay. B sends his own ship to Bombay for the cotton. A delivers the cotton on board the ship, and takes bills of lading from the master, making the cotton deliverable to A's order or assigns. The cotton arrives at London, but, before coming into B's possession, B becomes insolvent. The cotton has not been paid for. A may stop the cotton.

101. The seller's right of stoppage does not, except in the cases hereinafter mentioned, cease on the buyer's re-selling the goods while in transit, and receiving the price, but continues until the goods have been delivered to the second buyer, or to some person on his behalf.

102. The right of stoppage ceases if the buyer, having obtained a bill of lading or other document showing title to the goods,* assigns it, while the goods are in transit, to a second buyer, who is acting in good faith, and who gives valuable consideration for them.

Illustrations.

(a.) A sells and consigns certain goods to B, and sends him the bill of lading. A being still unpaid, B becomes insolvent, and, while the goods are in transit, assigns the bill of lading for cash to C, who is not aware of his insolvency. A cannot stop the goods in transit.

(b.) A sells and consigns certain goods to B. A being still unpaid, B becomes insolvent, and, while the goods are still in transit, assigns the bill of lading for cash to C, who knows that B is insolvent. The assignment not being in good faith, A may still stop the goods in transit.

103. Where a bill of lading or other instrument of title to any goods is assigned by the buyer of such goods by way of pledge, to secure an advance made specifically upon it, in good faith, the seller cannot, except on payment or tender to the pledgee of the advance so made, stop the goods in transit.

B assigns the bill of lading for these goods to C, to secure a specific advance of 5,000 rupees made to him upon the bill of lading by C. B becomes insolvent, being indebted to C to the amount of 9,000 rupees. A is not entitled to stop the goods except on payment or tender to C of 5,000 rupees.

(b.) A sells and consigns goods to B of the value of 12,000 rupees. B assigns the bill of lading for these goods to C, to secure the sum of 5,000 rupees due from him to C upon a general balance of account. B becomes insolvent. A is entitled to stop the goods in transit without payment or tender to C of the 5,000 rupees.

Note.

The firm of China Devakaran carried on business in Bombay. A, the agent of the firm, bought from the first defendant, Hanmandas, at Bijapur, a quantity of wheat which at A's request was on the 28th and 29th May, 1889, consigned by Hanmandas to the firm of China Devakaran at Bombay, on the understanding that the consignees were not to have the wheat until they had paid the hundis drawn in respect of it. The wheat was sent to Bombay on the 28th and 29th May, 1889, in three consignments, viz., of 56, 104 and 181 bags respectively, and two hundis for Rs. 1,000 and Rs. 1,500 respectively payable at sight were drawn by A in Bijapur on the firm of China Devakaran in Bombay, and were given by him to the first defendant, Hanmandas, who thereupon handed to A the three railway receipts for the three consignments which had been despatched by the first defendant's agent at Bijapur railway station. The hundis were sent by the first defendant Hanmandas to his agent in Bombay for collection. The hundi for Rs. 1,000 arrived in Bombay on the 31st May, and was paid on the 1st June. The hundi for Rs. 1,500 arrived in Bombay on the 1st June, and was dishonoured on the 2nd June by the firm of China Devakaran, which afterwards stopped payment and became insolvent. The railway receipts given by the first defendant to A at Bijapur were in the following form:—

“Received from Hanmandas Ramkison the undermentioned goods, 181 bags of wheat.

“This receipt must be produced by the consignee, or the goods will not be delivered; if he does not himself attend, he must endorse a request for delivery to the person to whom he wishes it made. If the consignment, or this railway receipt, is sold one or more times, the endorsement must be a distinct order to deliver to a certain person or firm, and this order must be on a one-anna stamp. If more than one order appear on the face hereof, each order must bear a stamp.

“I (we) hereby certify that I (we) am (are) aware that the Southern Mahratta Railway has received the abovementioned goods subject to the conditions noted on the back, and that I (we) agree that it should receive them subject to these conditions.

On obtaining these railway receipts, A sent them at once to the firm of China Devakaran in Bombay, and on the 31st May, 1889, they were endorsed by China Kanji, a member of the firm, to the second defendant, Virji Hansraj, to secure an advance of Rs. 2,000. The endorsement was as follows:—“Signature of China Devakaran. I have sold the delivery, as per this receipt, to Virji Hansraj. The handwriting of China Kanji.” Two consignments (viz., 56 bags and 104 bags) and part of the third (viz. 73 bags out of 181) had arrived in Bombay by the 2nd June, in bags bearing China Devakaran's marks. On that day the second defendant, Virji Hansraj, applied to the Railway Company for delivery, and paid full freight on all three consignments. He was allowed to remove the 56 bags and the 104 bags. After having done this he loaded his carts with the 73 bags, which had then arrived, out of the consignment of 181 bags without any objection on the part of the Railway Company, but he was not allowed to take them out of the station yard, and the 73 bags were consequently unloaded, and together with the balance of the consignment of 181 bags, which subsequently arrived, were retained by the Railway Company. The given by the Company's servants for the detention was the receipt of a telegram sent by the first defendant, Hanmandas, from Bijapur, on hearing of the dishonour of the hundi for Rs. 1,500, directing that the 181 bags should not be delivered. At the trial the Judge found that this telegram had probably been received before all of the 73 bags had been loaded into the carts.

Held—(1) That there was no such delivery of the 181 bags to China Devakaran's agent at Bijapur as to deprive the first defendant Hanmandas of his right of stoppage in transitu. (2) That there was such a delivery of the 73 bags at the railway station to the second defendant, Virji Hansraj, as to determine the first defendant's right of stoppage in transitu. It was to be assumed that the first defendant's telegram did not arrive in time to prevent the bags being placed, with the consent of the Railway Company, on the second defendant's carts, for it was not until the carts had been loaded that the Company's servants interfered to prevent their leaving the station yard. Before that time the freight for the 73 bags had been paid by the second defendant, and the railway receipt had been given up to the Company duly signed by the second defendant's servant. Everything had been done on the part of the Company to divest themselves of their lien as carriers; for the mere fact that the carts were still standing in the goods compound of the railway station after the bags had been placed on them could not affect the question, there being no suggestion that the matter as between the Company and the second defendant had not been completely settled. (3) That the railway receipts were not instruments of title within the meaning of sec. 103 of the Indian Contract Act (IX of 1872), and that by endorsing and handing them over, the firm of China Devakaran did not assign them to the second defendant within the meaning of the said section.—I. L. R., 14 Bom. 57.

104. The seller may effect stoppage in transit, either by taking actual possession of the goods, or by giving notice of his claim to the carrier or other depository in whose possession they are.

Stoppage how effected.

105. Such notice may be given, either to the person who has the immediate possession of the goods, or to the principal whose servant has possession. In the latter case, the notice must be given at such a time, and under such circumstances, that the principal, by the exercise of reasonable diligence, may communicate it to his servant in time to prevent a delivery to the buyer.

Notice of seller's claim.

106. Stoppage in transit entitles the seller to hold the goods stopped until the price of the whole of the goods sold is paid.

A sells to B 100 bales of cotton; 60 bales having come into B's possession and 40 being still in transit. B becomes insolvent, and A, being still unpaid, stops the 40 bales in transit. A is entitled to hold the 40 bales until the price of the 100 bales is paid.

RE-SALE.

107. Where the buyer of goods fails to perform his part of the contract, either by not taking the goods sold to him, or by not paying for them, the seller, having a lien on the goods, or having stopped them in transit, may, after giving notice to the buyer of his intention to do so, re-sell them after the lapse of a reasonable time, and the buyer must bear any loss, but is not entitled to any profit, which may occur on such re-sale.

Note.—See 15 B. L. R., 276, noted under sec. 73.

TITLE.

108. No seller can give to the buyer of goods a better title to those goods than he has himself, except in the following cases :—

Exception 1.—When any person is, by the consent of the owner, in possession of any goods, or of any bill of lading, dock-warrant, warehouse-keeper's certificate, wharfinger's certificate, or warrant or order for delivery, or other document showing title to goods, he may transfer the ownership of the goods, of which he is so in possession, or to which such documents relate, to any other person, and give such person a good title thereto, notwithstanding any instructions of the owner to the contrary : Provided that the buyer acts in good faith, and under circumstances which are not such as to raise a reasonable presumption that the person in possession of the goods or documents has no right to sell the goods.

Exception 2.—If one of several joint-owners of goods has the sole possession of them by the permission of the co-owners, the ownership of the goods is transferred to any person who buys them of such joint-owner in good faith, and under circumstances which are not such as to raise a reasonable presumption that the person in possession of the goods has no right to sell them.

Exception 3.—When a person has obtained possession of goods under a contract voidable at the option of the other party thereto, the ownership of the goods is transferred to a third person, who, before the contract is rescinded, buys them in good faith of the person in possession ; unless the circumstances which render the contract voidable amounted to an offence committed by the person in possession or those whom he represents.

In this case the original seller is entitled to compensation from the original purchaser for any loss which the seller may have sustained by being prevented from rescinding the contract.

(a.) A buys from B, in good faith, a cow which B had stolen from C. The property in the cow is not transferred to A.

(b.) A, a merchant, entrusts B, his agent, with a bill of lading relating to certain goods, and instructs B not to sell the goods for less than a certain price, and not to give credit to D. B sells the goods to D for less than that price, and gives D three months' credit. The property in the goods passes to D.

(c.) A sells to B goods of which he has the bill of lading, but the bill of lading is made out for delivery of the goods to C, and it has not been endorsed by C. The property is not transferred to B.

(d.) A, B, and C, are joint Hindu brothers, who own certain cattle in common. A is left by B and C in possession of a cow, which he sells to D. D purchases bona fide. The property in the cow is transferred to D.

(e.) A, by a misrepresentation not amounting to cheating, induces B to sell and deliver to him a horse. A sells the horse to C before B has rescinded the contract. The property in the horse is transferred to C; and B is entitled to compensation from A for any loss which B has sustained by being prevented from rescinding the contract.

(f.) A compels B by wrongful intimidation, or induces him by cheating or forgery, to sell him a horse, and, before B rescinds the contract, sells the horse to C. The property is not transferred to C.

Notes.

The plaintiff let to D a piano on hire on the following terms: "At Rs. 30 per month; if duly paid for and kept three years, shall then become the property of hirer." These terms were embodied in a voucher which was signed by D. The monthly hire was not regularly paid, and the plaintiffs sued for and obtained a decree for a portion of the hire up to May 1873. Subsequently, in that month, D sold the piano to the defendant, who obtained delivery of it in June. In a suit by the plaintiff in trover for conversion of the piano, the Judge found that the defendant acted in good faith. Held that the possession acquired by D was not possession by consent of the owner within the meaning of sec. 108 of Act IX of 1872, excep. 1, and that he did not, by sale to the defendant, transfer the ownership in the piano to him. Excep. 1 of sec. 108 does not apply where there is only a qualified possession, such as a hirer of goods has, or where the possession is for a specific purpose.—12 B. L. R., 42.

The plaintiff was a broker in cotton and also traded in cotton on his own account. On the 27th January, 1883, he contracted with the defendants to sell to them 100 candies of cotton, at Rs. 200 per candy, deliverable from the 15th to the 25th April following. On the 30th January, 1883, in his capacity as broker, he effected a contract for the sale of the same 100 candies of cotton by the defendants to L and Co. at Rs. 202 per candy. L and Co. sold the cotton to D, and D again sold it back to the defendants at Rs. 191 per candy. The defendants then sold it to H, by whom it was sold to K, and K finally sold it to B and Co. at Rs. 191 per candy. B and Co. obtained possession of the cotton from the plaintiff on or about the 24th April on payment of Rs. 191 per candy, for which they had contracted to buy it from K. The delivery order for the cotton had been sent on the 20th April by the plaintiff to the defendants, who immediately, on receiving it, wrote to the plaintiff as follows:—"We beg to as pro forma for survey on 100 bales M.—G. Broach cotton tendered by you to us to-day. As we are handing over the delivery order to a third party please secure payment for the cotton direct, and before parting with the cotton, if necessary." The delivery order was then endorsed by the defendants to their vendees (L & Co.,) who in turn endorsed it to D, by whom it was endorsed to the defendants. By subsequent endorsements it came ultimately to B and Co., who, as above mentioned, got delivery of the cotton from the plaintiff on payment of Rs 191 per candy. The plaintiff, who had sold to the defendants at Rs. 200 per candy, and who received from B and Co. only Rs. 191 per candy, sued the defendants in the Small Cause Court for the difference. The defendants contended that after the receipt of the letter written by them to the plaintiff, he was bound not to deliver the cotton to L and Co., or to any subsequent endorsee of the delivery order, until he had obtained payment of the full price (Rs. 200 per candy) which the defendants had agreed to pay him for it; that the delivery to B and Co. was not a delivery authorized by the defendants; that the payment made by B and Co. to the plaintiff was not a payment made by or on behalf of the defendants; that the plaintiff's cause of action, if any, against the defendants was for the full price of the cotton; and that as that exceeded Rs. 2,000, the Small Cause Court had no jurisdiction. Held that the defendants' letter to the plaintiff was ineffectual to control or alter the course of the delivery order, and that the plaintiff was bound to deliver the cotton to B and Co. on payment, by them, of the price of Rs. 191 per candy. The defendants, having repurchased the cotton after it had passed through several hands, sold it for Rs. 191 per candy to H, from whom it ultimately passed to B and Co. The plaintiff's lien, therefore, as regarded H and his sub-vendees, was confined to the price at the above rate, and B and Co. were entitled to the goods as against the defendants on payment of that price. The defendants' letter, therefore, of the 20th April, 1883—however the plaintiff might have been bound to act on it as regarded L and Co., to whom the cotton was sold at Rs. 202 per candy, and the other sub-vendees prior to the re-purchase by the defendants—could only, as regards subsequent purchasers, prevent delivery to them before payment of the price at which the defendants had resold the goods, vis., Rs. 191 per candy. That price was actually paid to the plaintiff before he did deliver the goods, and credit was given to the defendants in the account. By the English common law a delivery order is regarded as a mere token of authority to deliver; and before the wharfinger has attorned, it does not, independently of statute or custom enable the purchaser to confer a title upon a vendee or a sub-vendee free from the vendor's lien for the price. The Indian Contract Act (IX of 1872) gives no larger effect, except by section 108, to a delivery order than it had by English common law, and under that Act (sec. 90, ill. (c), and secs. 95 and 98) the giving of a delivery order by a vendor to a vendee does not of itself give the vendee such a possession of the goods as to defeat the vendor's lien. The exception to this rule contained in exception (1) to section 108, which provides that a seller may give to a buyer a better title than he had himself where he is, by consent of the owner, in possession of the goods or documents relating thereto, cannot be held to apply to cases where the possession is entirely beyond the control of the owner.—I. L. R., 8 Bom. 501.

The general rule laid down by section 108 of the Contract Act, that no seller can give to a buyer a better title than he has himself, is qualified by Exception 1 to that section. But the possession contemplated by that exception does not extend to every case of detention of chattels with the owner's consent. The exception has particular relation to the cases of persons allowed by owners to have the indicia of property, or possession under such circumstances as may naturally induce others to regard them as owners, and constituting some degree of negligence or defect of precaution imputable to the true owners. Where, however, the detention of a chattel is allowed for a particular limited purpose, there is not a possession such as is required by the exception. In the case of a gratuitous bailment of a chattel, the possession remains constructively with the owner. S left with C buffalo and a calf, to be taken care of during his absence from home. C sold the animals to M. S sued to recover them. Held, that the bailment by S to C was a gratuitous one, or else a mere custody by C for S; that S was, therefore, at the time of sale in constructive possession of the animals, and C could not transfer to M an ownership that he had not himself.—11 Bom. 704.

WARRANTY.

109. If the buyer, or any person claiming under him, is, by reason of the invalidity of the seller's title, deprived of the thing sold, the seller is responsible to the buyer, or the person claiming under him, for loss caused thereby, unless a contrary intention appears by the contract.

Establishment of implied warranty of goodness or quality.

110. An implied warranty of goodness or quality may be established by the custom of any particular trade.

Warranty of soundness implied on sale of provisions.

111. On the sale of provisions, there is an implied warranty that they are sound.

112. On the sale of goods by sample, there is an implied warranty that the bulk is equal in quality to the sample.*

Warranty of bulk implied on sale of goods by sample.

113. Where goods are sold as being of a certain denomination, there is an implied warranty that they are such goods as are commercially known by that denomination, although the buyer may have bought them by sample, or after inspection of the bulk.

Warranty implied where goods are sold as being of a certain denomination.

Explanation.—But if the contract specifically states that the goods, though sold as of a certain denomination, are not warranted to be of that denomination, there is no implied warranty.

* See sec. 118, infra.

(a.) A, at Calcutta, sells to B twelve bags of "waste silk," then on its way from Murshedabad to Calcutta. There is an implied warranty by A that the silk shall be such as is known in the market under the denomination of "waste silk."

(b.) A buys, by sample, and after having inspected the bulk, 100 bales of "Fair Bengal" Cotton. The cotton proves not to be such as is known in the market as "Fair Bengal." There is a breach of warranty.

114. Where goods have been ordered for a specified purpose, for which goods of the denomination mentioned in the order are usually sold, there is an implied warranty by the seller that the goods supplied are fit for that purpose.*

Warranty where goods ordered for a specified purpose.

B writes to A, the owner of a patent invention for cleaning cotton—"Send me your patent cotton-cleaning machine to clean the cotton at my factory." A sends the machine according to order. There is an implied warranty by A that it is the article known as A's patent cotton-cleaning machine, but none that it is fit for the particular purpose of cleaning the cotton at B's factory.

116. In the absence of fraud and of any express warranty of quality, the seller of an article which answers the description under which it was sold is not responsible for a latent defect in it.

when not responsible for latent defects.

A sells to B a horse. It turns out that the horse had, at the time of the sale, a defect of which A was unaware. A is not responsible for this.

Notes.

Under five contracts for the sale of good Burma cutch, to be delivered to a Calcutta firm, in Calcutta, by the vendors, who knew that it was bought for the export market, delivery and acceptance followed upon a searching examination of the cutch by the purchasers. The latter having sent advices of this purchase to a New York firm, with which they were in partnership, parcels of cutch were sold to different buyers in America, to whom under such "forward" contracts, the cutch was shipped in separate shipments by the Calcutta firm. On the arrival of the cutch, objection was taken to its quality by the American buyers, who refused to take delivery. The Calcutta firm, thereupon, sued the vendors under the five contracts above mentioned.

* See sec. 118, infra.

The burden of proof being upon the plaintiffs, who had accepted the catch after full examination in Calcutta, to prove the breach of contract by the vendors by cogent evidence sufficient to rebut the presumption of due performance that arose from such acceptance, held, that this presumption was not rebutted in the absence of evidence as to the treatment of the catch on its re-shipment by the plaintiffs, on the voyage from India to America, and at the port of arrival.—I. L. R., 13 Cal. 237.

117. Where a specific article, sold with a warranty, has been delivered and accepted, and the warranty is broken, the sale is not thereby rendered voidable; but the buyer is entitled to compensation from the seller for loss caused by the breach of warranty.

Buyer's right on breach of warranty.

A sells and delivers to B a horse warranted sound. The horse proves to have been unsound at the time of sale. The sale is not thereby rendered voidable, but B is entitled to compensation from A for loss caused by the unsoundness.

118. Where there has been a contract, with a warranty, for the sale of goods which, at the time of the contract, were not ascertained or not in existence, and the warranty is broken, the buyer may accept the goods or refuse to accept the goods when tendered, or keep the goods for a time reasonably sufficient for examining and trying them, and then refuse to accept them; provided that, during such time, he exercises no other act of ownership over them than is necessary for the purpose of examination and trial.

In any case the buyer is entitled to compensation from the seller for any loss caused by the breach of warranty; but if he accepts the goods, and intends to claim compensation, he must give notice of his intention to do so within a reasonable time after discovering the breach of the warranty.

(a.) A agrees to sell and, without application on B's part, deliver to B 200 bales of unascertained cotton by sample. Cotton not in accordance with sample is delivered to B. B may return it if he has not kept it longer than a reasonable time for the purpose of examination.

(b.) B agrees to buy of A twenty-five sacks of flour by sample. The flour is delivered to B, who pays the price. B, upon examination, finds it not equal to sample; B afterwards uses two sacks, and sells one. He cannot now rescind the contract and recover the price, but he is entitled to compensation from A for any loss caused by the breach of warranty.

(c.) B makes two pairs of shoes for A by A's order. When the shoes are delivered, they do not fit A. A keeps both pairs for a day. He wears one pair for a short time in the house, and takes a long walk out of doors in the other pair. He may refuse to accept the first pair, but not the second. But he may recover compensation for any loss sustained by the defect of the second pair.

MISCELLANEOUS.

119. When the seller sends to the buyer goods not ordered with goods ordered, the buyer may refuse to accept any of the goods so sent, if there is risk or trouble in separating the goods ordered from the goods not ordered.

120. If a buyer wrongfully refuses to accept the goods sold to him, this amounts to a breach of the contract of sale.

Effect of wrongful refusal to accept.

121. When goods sold have been delivered to the buyer, the seller is not entitled to rescind the contract, on the buyer's failing to pay the price at the time fixed, unless it was stipulated by the contract that he should be so entitled.

CHAPTER VIII.

OF INDEMNITY AND GUARANTEE.

124. A contract by which one party promises to save the other from loss caused to him by the conduct of the promisor himself, or by the conduct of any other person, is called a 'contract of indemnity.'

Contract of "indemnity" defined.

Notes.

The Thakor of Limdi possesses several talukdari villages in the Ahmedabad District, for which he pays a lump jama to Government. One of these villages was Akru. Disputes arose between the Thakor and the grassias of Akru as to the ownership of the village. The Thakor filed a suit against the grassias, which was ultimately compromised, and a consent decree was passed in 1883, providing (inter alia) that the Thakor should assign to the grassias a moiety of the village, that the grassias should hold the same free from all liability to pay the jama, and that the Thakor should alone be responsible for all Government demands. In accordance with this decree a moiety of the village was made over to the grassias. The Collector demanded jamabandi for this moiety. The Thakor intervened, and objected to the demand, on the ground that he paid a lump jama for the whole of his taluka, including the moiety of the village assigned to the grassias. Government, however, passed a resolution, declaring that half of the village belonged to the grassias; that from them the Government had a right to levy the jama; that the Thakor might, if he chose, pay the same on behalf of the grassias; and that if it was not paid, it would be recovered by attachment and sale of the grassias half share. The Thakor thereupon paid the jama on behalf of the grassias for two years, and then filed a suit against Government to recover back the payments he had made, and for a declaration that Government had no right to levy any assessment on any portion of the village beyond the lump jama fixed for his taluka. This suit was dismissed on the preliminary ground that the Thakor had no cause of action against Government, in respect of any of the reliefs sought, the Court being of opinion that the payments he had made to Government on account of the grassias were voluntary, and that he had no interest whatever in the grassias half share of the village. Held, reversing the decision of the lower Court, that the suit would lie. Under the consent-decree the Thakor stood in the relation of an insurer to the grassias from all exactions of Government dues. The payments of jama he made on account of the grassias were, therefore, not voluntary, but made under protest, and, as such, were recoverable by suit.—I. L. R., 14 Bom. 299.

One B proposed to take a lease of zamindari property from M for the period of eight years at a rental of Rs. 3,900 per annum. M declined to grant the lease until the payment of rent during the term of eight years was guaranteed by one S, the father of the plaintiff. S on his part required a guarantee or indemnity against any rent which might not be paid by B, and which he might under his proposed guarantee become liable to pay. The defendant's father, G, accordingly gave a guarantee to S in the following terms: "And for your satisfaction, I write that if any money remains due from B on account of the lease for any year or harvest, and if you have to pay the same on account of the suretyship, I am responsible to you to pay that amount to you. Rest assured." S then gave his guarantee to M, and he granted the lease to B. G died on 22nd May, 1880. B failed to pay the rent due for the year 1883. M having died, his representatives sued S on his guarantee and recovered from him the rent due and certain costs and expenses. S then died, and the plaintiff, as his representative, brought this action against defendant, the legal representative of G, to recover the amount of the decree and costs which S had to pay. The Court of first instance decreed the whole claim with costs to be recovered from the estate of G, and this decree was confirmed in appeal by the District Judge. On second appeal it was contended that under sec. 131 of the Indian Contract Act, the death of G was a complete answer to the claim. Held, that assuming that the case was that of a continuing guarantee within the meaning of sec. 131 of the Indian Contract Act, still, having regard to the object for which the two guarantees were given, it must be concluded that the parties intended in the one case that the lessor should be guaranteed for all rent which might become due during the currency of the lease, and that S should be guaranteed for any of that rent which by reason of his contract of guarantee he should be made to pay, and consequently, even if it were a continuing guarantee, the liability of G was not determined on his death. Held further, that neither G, if he were alive, nor on his death the defendant, as his representative, can be made liable for costs and expenses which S had incurred in defending the previous suit against him for rent brought by the lessor, there being no evidence to show that S acted as a prudent man would have done in defending the action against him or was authorized by defendant to defend the suit. Lloyds v. Harper was referred to.—10 Al. 531.

Rights and liabilities of indemnity holder when sued.

125. The promisee in a contract of indemnity, acting within the scope of his authority, is entitled to recover from the promisor—

(1) all damages which he may be compelled to pay in any suit in respect of any matter to which the promise to indemnify applies;

(2) all costs which he may be compelled to pay in any such suit if, in bringing or defending it, he did not contravene the orders of the promisor, and acted as it would have been prudent for him to act in the absence of any contract of indemnity, or if the promisor authorized him to bring or defend the suit;

(3) all sums which he may have paid under the terms of any compromise of any such suit, if the compromise was not contrary to the orders of the promisor, and was one which it would have been prudent for the promisee to make in the absence of any contract of indemnity, or if the promisor authorized him to compromise the suit.

Note.—See I. L. R., 10 Al. 531, noted under sec. 124.

126. A 'contract of guarantee' is a contract to perform the promise, or discharge the liability, of a third person in case of his default. The person who gives the guarantee is called the 'surety'; the person in respect of whose default the guarantee is given is called the 'principal debtor';

'Contract of guarantee,'

and the person to whom the guarantee is given is called the 'creditor.' A guarantee may be either oral or written.

Note.

Upon the construction of an agreement guaranteeing an employer against loss by the misconduct of a person employed as agent of the guarantor:—Held, that the loss to be recoverable in a suit against guarantor, must be shown to have arisen from misconduct on the part of the agent in connection with the business of the agency, and to be within the scope of the agreement. The khezanchi of a District Treasury guaranteed the Government against loss arising from the misconduct of the stamp darogah, appointed at his agent. The latter became a party to frauds by putting off upon the public forged stamps, in addition to the genuine ones issued from the treasury, into which, however, all the proceeds of sales were paid. The darogah, on whose indent the stamps were issued, made the proceeds appear to correspond in his accounts with the value of the stamps issued to him; but, under cover of the above payment, he misappropriated certain genuine stamps:—Held, that although the guarantor might not be responsible in respect of the forgery of the stamps, yet he was responsible on his agreement by reason of the misappropriation of the genuine stamps, and the false accounts rendered; and that losses, which in the first instance were caused by the forgery, were brought within the scope of the agreement by the fact of such misappropriation and false accounting.—I. L. R., 12 Cal. 143.

127. Anything done, or any promise made, for the benefit of the principal debtor, may be a sufficient consideration to the surety for giving the guarantee.

(a.) B requests A to sell and deliver to him goods on credit. A agrees to do so, provided C will guarantee the payment of the price of the goods. C promises to guarantee the payment in consideration of A's promise to deliver the goods. This is a sufficient consideration for C's promise.

(b.) A sells and delivers goods to B. C afterwards requests A to forbear to sue B for the debt for a year, and promises that, if he does so, C will pay for them, in default of payment by B. A agrees to forbear as requested. This is a sufficient consideration for C's promise.

(c.) A sells and delivers goods to B. C afterwards, without consideration, agrees to pay for them in default of B. The agreement is void.

Note.

Where N advanced money to K on a bond hypothecating K's property and mentioning M as surety for any balance that might remain due after realisation of K's property, M being no party to K's bond, but having signed a separate surety-bond two days subsequent to the advance of the money: Held that the subsequent surety-bond was void for want of consideration under sec. 127 of the Indian Contract Act (IX of 1872). Per STUART, C. A guarantees to B the payment of a bill of exchange by C, the acceptor. The bill is dishonoured by C. A is liable, not only for the amount of the bill, but also for any interest and charges which may have become due on it.

129. A guarantee which extends to a series of transactions is called a 'continuing guarantee.'

Illustrations.

(a.) A, in consideration that B will employ C in collecting the rents of B's zemindari, promises B to be responsible, to the amount of 5,000 rupees, for the due collection and payment by C of those rents. This is a continuing guarantee.

(b.) A guarantees payment to B, a tea-dealer, to the amount of £100, for any tea he may from time to time supply to C. B supplies C with tea to above the value of £100, and C pays B for it. Afterwards B supplies C with tea to the value of £200. C fails to pay. The guarantee given by A was a continuing guarantee, and he is accordingly liable to B to the extent of £100.

(c.) A guarantees payment to B of the price of five sacks of flour, to be delivered by B to C, and to be paid for in a month. B delivers five sacks to C. C pays for them. Afterwards B delivers four sacks to C, which C does not pay for. The guarantee given by A was not a continuing guarantee, and accordingly he is not liable for the price of the four sacks.

130. A continuing guarantee may at any time be revoked by the surety, as to future transactions, by notice to the creditor.

Revocation of continuing

Illustrations.

(a.) A, in consideration of B's discounting, at A's request, bills of exchange for C, guarantees to B, for twelve months, the due payment of all such bills to the extent of 5,000 rupees. B discounts bills for C to the extent of 2,000 rupees. Afterwards, at the end of three months, A revokes the guarantee. This revocation discharges A from all liability to B for any subsequent discount. But A is liable to B for the 2,000 rupees, on default of C.

(b.) A guarantees to B, to the extent of 10,000 rupees, that C shall pay all the bills that B shall draw upon him. B draws upon C. C accepts the bill. A gives notice of revocation. C dishonours the bill at maturity. A is liable upon his guarantee.

131. The death of the surety operates, in the absence of any contract to the contrary, as a revocation of a continuing guarantee, so far as regards future transactions.

In a suit brought to recover money from the estate of a deceased Hindu in the hands of his son on a surety bond executed by the father:—Held, that the estate of the son was liable according to the principles of Hindu Law, and that the question was not affected by the provisions of the Contract Act.—I. L. R., 11 Madr. 373.

132. Where two persons contract with a third person to undertake a certain liability, and also contract with each other that one of them shall be liable only on the default of the other, the third person not being a party to such contract, the liability of each of such two persons to the third person under the first contract is not affected by the existence of the second contract, although such third person may have been aware of its existence.

Liability of two persons primarily liable, not affected by a private arrangement between them as to suretyship.

Illustration.

A and B make a joint and several promissory note to C. A makes it, in fact, as surety for B, and C knows this at the time when the note is made. The fact that A, to the knowledge of C, made the note as surety for B, is no answer to a suit by C, against A, upon the note.

Note.

In the years 1870 and 1873, A drew certain bills of exchange upon B, which were accepted by B for the accommodation of A, and endorsed by A to the Bank of Bengal. In May 1876, A, by letter, agreed to execute a mortgage of a certain portion of his property, consisting of a share in a Privy Council decree, to B, and in the meantime to hold such property at the disposal of B, his successors and assigns. In the month of June, 1876, A became unable to meet his liabilities, and in the month of August following executed a conveyance of all his property to the Official Trustee upon trust for the benefit of A's creditors. The Bank assented to and executed this deed after it had been assented to and executed by some of the other creditors. The deed did not contain any composition with or release by the creditors, nor any covenant on their part not to sue A. In a suit by the Bank against B as acceptor of the bills: Held that B was not precluded by the provisions of sec. 132 of the Contract Act and sec. 92 of the Evidence Act from pleading that he was an accommodation acceptor only; but held that the letter of May 1876 constituted a good equitable mortgage, and that B was not there-after entitled, as against the Bank, to the equitable rights of an accommodation acceptor. Held further that the trust-deed did not impair the "eventual remedy" of B, and that therefore he was not discharged from his suretyship under the provisions of sec. 139 of the Contract Act.—I. L. R., 3 Cal. 174.

133. Any variance made, without the surety's consent, in the terms of the contract between the principal and the creditor, discharges the surety as to transactions subsequent to the variance.

Discharge of surety by variance in terms of contract.

(a.) A becomes surety to C for B's conduct as a manager in C's Bank. Afterwards, B and C contract, without A's consent, that B's salary shall be raised, and that he shall become liable for one-fourth of the losses on overdrafts. B allows a customer to overdraw, and the bank loses a sum of money. A is discharged from his suretyship by the variance made without his consent, and is not liable to make good this loss.

(b.) A guarantees C against the misconduct of B in an office to which B is appointed by C, and of which the duties are defined by an act of the legislature. By a subsequent Act, the nature of the office is materially altered. Afterwards, B misconducts himself. A is discharged by the change from future liability under his guarantee, though the misconduct of B is in respect of a duty not affected by the later Act.

(c.) C agrees to appoint B as his clerk to sell goods at a yearly salary, upon A's becoming surety to C for B's duly accounting for monies received by him as such clerk. Afterwards, without A's knowledge or consent, C and B agree that B should be paid by a commission on the goods sold by him, and not by a fixed salary. A is not liable for subsequent misconduct of B.

(d.) A gives to C a continuing guarantee to the extent of 3,000 rupees for any oil supplied by C to B on credit. Afterwards B becomes embarrassed, and, without the knowledge of A, B and C contract that C shall continue to supply B with oil for ready money, and that the payments shall be applied to the then existing debts between B and C. A is not liable on his guarantee for any goods supplied after this new arrangement.

(e.) C contracts to lend B 5,000 rupees on the first March. A guarantees repayment. C pays the 5,000 rupees to B on the first January. A is discharged from his liability, as the Contract has been varied, inasmuch as C might sue B for the money before the first of March.

Notes.

Where a plaintiff sued a principal and a surety for arrears of rent, and it appeared that the principal was dead at the time the suit was instituted, and where the representative of the principal was not made a party till after the right to recover the arrears as against him was barred by limitation:—Held, that the surety was still liable, the suit as against him having been instituted within the period allowed. Hajarimal v. Krishanarav, I. L. R., Bom., 647, cited and approved.—I. L. R., 12 Cal. 330.

A kabuliyat, whereby a lessee agrees, without the consent of the person guaranteeing the payment of the rent agreed to be paid under a former kabuliyat, that he will pay rent at a higher rate than that agreed to be paid in such former kabuliyat, amounts to a variance of the terms of the contract of guarantee, and discharges the lessee's surety in respect of arrears of rent accruing subsequent to such variance.—3 Al. 9.

(b.) A contracts with B to grow a crop of indigo on A's land and to deliver it to B at a fixed rate, and C guarantees A's performance of this contract. B diverts a stream of water which is necessary for the irrigation of A's land, and thereby prevents him from raising the indigo. C is no longer liable on his guarantee.

(c.) A contracts with B for a fixed price to build a house for B within a stipulated time, B supplying the necessary timber. C guarantees A's performance of the contract. B omits to supply the timber. C is discharged from his suretyship.

Notes.

In a suit against the principal debtor and the surety, the omission of the creditor to effect service of summons on the principal debtor does not discharge the surety from his liability, under section 134 of the Contract Act IX of 1872.—I. L. R., 14 Bom. 267.

A decree-holder, in execution-proceedings, agreed to accept payment of the decretal amount by the judgment-debtors in annual instalments. He also accepted from certain other persons a surety-bond in the following terms:—"In case of default of paying the instalments, the whole decretal money, with costs and interest at 8 annas per cent., shall be executed after one month; and for the satisfaction of the decree holder we, the executants stand as sureties of the judgment debtors." The judgment-debtors paid five instalments and then made default. The decree-holder, omitted to apply for execution and the decree became time barred. He then sued the sureties to recover the amount of the decree:—Held that the terms of the bond requiring the creditor to execute his decree within one month were peremptory, and imported much more than the usual agreement under such circumstances, that the decree-holder might execute his decree if he pleased, on a default; that the legal consequence of his omission to execute the decree being the discharge of the principal debtors, the sureties would, under sec. 134 of the Contract Act, stand discharged likewise; that his action was much more serious than "mere forbearance" in favour of his debtors, in the sense of sec. 137; that he had done an act inconsistent with the equities of the sureties and omitted to do an act which his duty to them (under the agreement) required, whereby their eventual remedy against the principal debtors was impaired (sec. 139); that he had deprived the sureties of the benefit of the security constituted by the decree; that they were therefore discharged to the extent of the value of that security (sec. 141); and that the suit must consequently be dismissed.—8 Al. 259.

The omission of a creditor to sue his principal debtor within the period of limitation discharges the surety under sec. 134. of the Contract Act (IX of 1872), even though the non-suing within such period arose from the creditor's forbearance. Section 137 of the Contract Act does not limit the effect of sec. 134. Its object is to explain and prevent misconception as the meaning of sec. 135. It applies only to a forbearance during the time that the creditor can be said to be forbearing to exercise a right which is still in existence. Hajarimal v. Krishanarav and Krishto Kishori Chowdhraim

v. Radha Romun Munshi, dissented from. Hazari v. Chunni Lal, referred to.—11 Al. 310.

135. A contract between the creditor and the principal debtor, by which the creditor makes a composition with, or promises to give time to, or not to sue, the principal debtor, discharges the surety, unless the surety assents to such contract.

Discharge of surety when creditor compounds with, gives time to, or agrees not to sue, principal debtor.

Notes.

The drawer of hundis paid advance interest to the holder to obtain time, which he did obtain for payment after due date. Held that the liability of an accommodation acceptor of the hundis depended on whether he knew of, and consented to, this arrangement. Held on the merits that he knew of, and consented to, advanced interest being taken.—I. L. R., 6 Cal. 241.

B owes to C a debt guaranteed by A. The debt becomes payable. C does not sue B for a year after the debt has become payable. A is not discharged from his suretyship.

Note.

A surety's liability to pay the debt is not removed by reason of the creditor's omission to sue the principal.—I. L. R., 7 Bom. 146.

See I. L. R., 8 Al. 259 and 11 Al. 310, noted under sec. 134.

Release of one co-surety does not discharge others.

* See sec. 44, supra.

139. If the creditor does any act which is inconsistent with the rights of the surety, or omits to do any act which his duty to the surety requires him to do, and the eventual remedy of the surety himself against the principal debtor is thereby impaired, the surety is discharged.

Discharge of surety by creditor's act or omission impairing surety's eventual remedy.

(b.) C lends money to B on the security of a joint and several promissory note made in C's favour by B, and by A, as surety for B, together with a bill of sale of B's furniture, which gives power to C to sell the furniture, and apply the proceeds in discharge of the note. Subsequently C sells the furniture, but, owing to his misconduct and wilful negligence, only a small price is realized. A is discharged from liability on the note.

(c.) A puts M as apprentice to B, and gives a guarantee to B for M's fidelity. B promises on his part that he will, at least once a month, see M make up the cash. B omits to see this done as promised, and M embezzles. A is not liable to B on his guarantee.

141. A surety is entitled to the benefit of every security which the creditor has against the principal debtor at the time when the contract of suretyship is entered into, whether the surety knows of the existence of such security or not; and if the creditor loses, or, without the consent of the surety, parts with such security, the surety is discharged to the extent of the value of the security.‡

Notes.

In August, 1889, one Khimji Jairam was indebted to the Bank of Bengal (the defendants) in the sum of Rs. 3,15,000. The Bank pressed for security or payment, and on the 5th September, 1889, Khimji Jairam executed, in favour of the Bank, two mortgages of certain immoveable properties the value of which was estimated to be Rs. 1,35,000. The mortgages, though stamped to secure this amount only, were drawn to cover the whole liability of Khimji Jairam to the Bank, and recited that he had become largely indebted to the Bank on certain bills, &c., and had agreed to give security in respect of such indebtedness as was thereafter expressed, and they contained covenants by Khimji Jairam to pay to the Bank all sums of money then due, or thereafter to become due, by him in respect of such bills, &c. Besides the said two mortgages, the Bank obtained other securities for a further sum of Rs. 55,000, making the total sum secured Rs. 1,90,000, and leaving a balance of Rs. 1,25,000 unsecured. Under these circumstances the Bank refused to renew certain bills of Khimji Jairam's which fell due on the 9th September, 1889, unless further security were given, and accordingly the plaintiff became surety for Khimji Jairam for the sum of Rs. 1,25,000. This sum he was subsequently obliged to pay, and he then brought this suit claiming to share in the proceeds of the mortgages held as security by the Bank. He contended that these mortgages were given as security for the whole debt (viz. Rs. 3,15,000); that of this debt he, as surety, had paid a part, viz. Rs. 1,25,000, to the Bank; and that he was, therefore, to that extent entitled to stand in the place of the Bank and to receive a share of the proceeds of the said securities proportioned to the sum which he had paid. Held, that the plaintiff was not entitled to the benefit of the securities held by the Bank until the whole of the debt due to the Bank by Khimji Jairam was paid. A surety who has paid the debt which he has guaranteed, has a right to the securities held by the creditor, because as between the principal debtor and surety the principal is under an obligation to indemnify the surety. The equity between the creditor and the surety is that the creditor shall not do anything to deprive the surety of that right. But the creditor's right to hold his securities until his whole debt is paid is paramount to the surety's claim upon such securities, which only arises when the creditor's claim against such securities has been satisfied.—I. L. R., 15 Bom. 48.

Notes.

M was declared the highest bidder at a sale of an abkari farm for three years, and his bid was accepted subject to his furnishing the security required by the conditions of sale. Having failed to furnish security, the farm was re-sold at a loss of Rs. 4,875, and M became indebted to Government in that amount. On the re-sale, M was again declared purchaser, and being unable to furnish the necessary security, N was accepted as his surety for the due fulfilment of the conditions of the lease to be performed by M. N did not inquire, and was not informed by the Collector, as to the debt due by M, when he executed the surety-bond. Held, in a suit to enforce this bond (which was executed before the Indian Contract Act, 1872, came into force) against N, that N was not discharged by reason of the fact that the indebtedness of M was not disclosed to him by the Collector.—I. L. R., 6 Madr. 406.

Guarantee obtained by concealment, invalid.

C gives his guarantee for B's duly accounting. A does not acquaint C with B's previous conduct. B afterwards makes default. The guarantee is invalid.

(b.) A guarantees to C payment for iron to be supplied by him to B to the amount of 2,000 tons. B and C have privately agreed that B should pay five rupees per ton beyond the market price, such excess to be applied in liquidation of an old debt. This agreement is concealed from A. A is not liable as a surety.

Note.

In August, 1881, the defendants became sureties to the Bank of Bengal for the due discharge by one Bhau Krishnarav of the duties and liabilities of the office of khajanchi of the Bank in Bombay. Chau Krishnarav was the second clerk in the Bank, and it was arranged between him and the Agent that he should still continue to fill that office. He did so after his appointment as khajanchi, and he received the same salary as before in respect of it. In 1889, defalcations, for which as khajanchi he was responsible, were discovered to the extent of Rs. 1,42,142. The Bank obtained a decree against him for the total amount, and they sued the defendants as securities. The defendants pleaded that they were not liable, inasmuch as the Bank had appointed Bhau Krishnarav to perform the duties of second clerk, in addition to those of khajanchi, without their knowledge and consent, and they contended that such appointment amounted to a subsequent variation of the contract, which discharged them, under sec. 143 of the Contract Act (IX of 1872), as to transactions subsequent to the variance. The Court was of opinion that inasmuch as the evidence showed that Bhau Krishnarav was second clerk at the time of his appointment as khajanchi and continued afterwards to fill that office by arrangement between him and the Agent of the Bank, the question was not whether there had been a subsequent variation of the contract, but whether, as the surety-bond was silent as to this part of the arrangement between the Bank and Bhau Krishnarav and it was made (as the defendants alleged) without their knowledge and consent, they were discharged from liability on the ground that a material circumstance had been concealed from them. Held, that the defendants were not discharged from liability. The expression "keeping silence" in sec. 143 of the Contract Act clearly implies intentional concealment as distinguished from mere not-disclosure. The withholding must be fraudulent, as necessarily is the case when a material circumstance is intentionally concealed. In this case there was not the slightest reason to suppose that there had been any intentional concealment by the Bank of the fact that Bhau Krishnarav was to continue to fill the office of second-clerk, or that, if the defendants had been informed of it, it would have in the least degree affected their readiness to make themselves liable for his faithful discharge of the duties of khajanchi. The evidence showed that the duties of the two offices were perfectly distinct, and, therefore, even if Bhau Krishnarav had been re-appointed to the office of second clerk after his appointment to the office of khajanchi, (as it was contended for the defendants was the proper way of regarding what occurred), there would have been no material alteration in the duties of khajanchi which would have relieved the defendants from their obligation as sureties, but merely the addition of a new office which would not affect the sureties' liability, unless indeed the surety-bond contained an agreement that the principal should not undertake any other business. It was also contended for the defendants that they were discharged from liability, inasmuch as in the year 1883 the names on certain bills discounted with the Bank were found to be forged. The Bank then made a claim upon Krishnarav in respect thereof, and he repudiated his liability. The defendants contended, on the authority of Phillips v. Foxall (L. R., 7 Q. B., 666), that it was the duty of the Bank to have informed them of this occurrence at that time. Held, (distinguishing Phillips v. Foxall), that it could not have been assumed that Krishnarav was infallible in detecting forgeries and the guarantee given by the defendants was not, therefore, founded on that assumption, and, therefore, fair dealing could not require that the Bank should at once have informed the sureties as soon as Krishnarav had proved to be fallible.—I. L. R., 15 Bom. 585.

(b.) C lends B a sum of money, and A, at the request of B, accepts a bill of exchange drawn by B upon A, to secure the amount. C, the holder of the bill, demands payment of it from A, and, on A's refusal to pay, sues him upon the bill. A, not having reasonable grounds for so doing, defends the suit, and has to pay the amount of the bill and costs. CHAPTER IX.

OF BAILMENT.

148. A 'bailment' is the delivery of goods by one person to another for some purpose, upon a contract that they shall, when the purpose is accomplished, be returned or otherwise disposed of according to the directions of the person delivering them. The person delivering the goods is called the 'bailor.' The person to whom they are delivered is called the 'bailee.'

Explanation.—If a person already in possession of the goods of another contracts to hold them as a bailee, he thereby becomes the bailee, and the owner becomes the bailor of such goods, although they may not have been delivered by way of bailment.

149. The delivery to the bailee may be made by doing anything which has the effect of putting the goods in the possession of the intended bailee or of any person authorized to hold them on his behalf.

150. The bailor is bound to disclose to the bailee faults in the goods bailed, of which the bailor is aware, and which materially interfere with the use of them, or expose the bailee to extraordinary risks; and if he does not make such disclosure, he is responsible for damage arising to the bailee directly from such faults.

If the goods are bailed for hire, the bailor is responsible for such damage, whether he was or was not aware of the existence of such faults in the goods bailed.

Illustrations.

(a.) A lends a horse, which he knows to be vicious, to B. He does not disclose the fact that the horse is vicious. The horse runs away. B is thrown and injured. A is responsible to B for damage sustained.

(b.) A hires a carriage of B. The carriage is unsafe, though B is not aware of it, and A is injured. B is responsible to A for the injury.

Note.

The question of the burden of proof in cases of accidental injury to goods bailed depends upon the particular circumstances of each case. In some cases, from the nature of the accident, it lies upon the bailee to account for its occurrence, and thus to show that it has not been caused by his negligence. In such cases it is for him to give a prima facie explanation in order to shift the burden of proof to the person who seeks to make him liable. If he gives an explanation which is uncontradicted by reasonable evidence of negligence, and is not prima facie improbable, the Court is bound in law to find in his favour, and the mere happening of the accident is not sufficient proof of negligence. S hired a horse from W, and while it was in his custody it died from rupture of the diaphragm, which was proved to have been caused by over-exertion on a full stomach. In a suit by W against S to recover the value of the horse, the defendant gave evidence to the effect that the horse became restive and plunged about, that he might then have touched it with his riding-cane, that it shortly afterwards again became excited, bolted for two miles, and at last fell down and died. This evidence was not contradicted on any point, nor was any other evidence offered as to how the horse came to run away. There was evidence that the horse was a quiet one, that, for some time previously, it had done hardly any work, that it was fed immediately before it was let out for hire, and that rupture of the diaphragm was a likely result of the horse running away while its stomach was distended with food. The Court of first instance held that the defendant was bound to prove that he had taken such care of the horse as a man of ordinary prudence would under similar circumstances have taken of his own property, that he must have used his whip freely, or done something else which caused the horse to bolt, and that in so doing he had acted without reasonable care, and had thus caused the animal's death. The Court accordingly decreed the claim. Held by EDGE, C.J., that if the burden of proof was originally upon the defendant, it was shifted by the explanation which he gave and which was neither contradicted nor prima facie improbable; and that the decree of the lower Court, being unsupported by any proof, and based on speculation and assumption, was one which that Court had no jurisdiction to pass, and should consequently be set aside in revision under sec. 622 of the Civil Procedure Code. Per BRODHURST, J., that as the decree was not only unsupported by proof, but opposed to the evidence on the record, the lower Court had "acted in the exercise of its jurisdiction illegally," within the meaning of sec. 622.—I. L. R., 9 Al. 398.

151. In all cases of bailment the bailee is bound to take Care to be taken by as much care of the goods bailed to him bailee. as a man of ordinary prudence would, under similar circumstances, take of his own goods of the same bulk, quality, and value as the goods bailed.*

Notes.

In a suit for damages for loss of passenger's luggage by the wreck of a ship belonging to a foreign company, it appeared that the plaintiff had received a ticket in the French language, which, on its face, stated that it ought to be signed by the passenger, and that it was issued subject to certain conditions on the back. These conditions, among other things, stated that the company would not be responsible for loss or damage arising from accidents or risks of the sea; that the ticket was delivered subject to the conditions that certain articles of a specified nature should be made the subject of a special declaration, in default of which the company would not be liable; that the company would not be answerable for unregistered luggage; and that luggage might be insured at any of the company's offices.

* As to railway contracts, see Act IV. of 1879, sec. 10.

It was not stated where registration of luggage might be effected. The ticket was not signed by the plaintiff. The plaintiff alleged that he did not understand the French language, and that the conditions had not been explained to him by any person. Held that the company being a foreign company were not common carriers; that the plaintiff was bound by the clauses and conditions on the back of the passage-ticket; that none of the conditions had the effect of relieving the company from the consequences of their own negligence; that, in order to establish a defence, upon the ground that the plaintiff's luggage was not registered, it was necessary for the defendants to prove not only that the plaintiff was bound by the conditions, but also that they were ready and willing to register the plaintiff's luggage, and that the plaintiff did not in fact register it; that, as the contract was made in Calcutta, the defendants were bound by the provisions of sec. 151 of the Indian Contract Act.—I. L. R., 6 Cal. 227.

The plaintiff despatched certain goods by the E. I. Railway Co. for carriage to A, and signed a special contract, in conformity with the form approved by the Governor-General in Council under sec. 10 of Act IV of 1879, holding the company "harmless and free from all responsibility in regard to any loss destruction or deterioration of, or damage to, the said consignment from any cause whatever before, during, and after transit over the said Railway or other Railway lines working in connection therewith." The goods were short delivered and the plaintiff brought a suit to recover their value. Held.—Per GARTH, C.J., Prinsep, J., and Wilson, J.—That the Railway Company could not be held liable to account to the consignee for any loss from any cause whatever during the whole time that the goods were under their charge, inasmuch as the plaintiff had entered into a special contract to hold them harmless in accordance with sec. 10 of Act IV of 1879. Held.—Per O'KINEALY, J., that it was doubtful whether secs. 151 and 161 of the Contract Act applied to carriers by rail; but even assuming that these sections did not apply, the Railway Company would be in the position of carriers before the passing of the Carriers Act, and were entitled to protect themselves from liability by special contract.—10 Cal. 210.

See I. L. R., 9 Al. 398, noted under sec. 150; 3 Bom. 109, noted under sec. 152.

152. The bailee, in the absence of any special contract, is not responsible for the loss, destruction, or deterioration of the thing bailed, if he has taken the amount of care of it described in section 151.

Bailee when not liable for loss, ect., of thing bailed.

Note.

The English Common-law rule, under which common carriers are held liable as insurers of goods against all risks, except the act of God or the king's enemies, is not now in force in India. In cases not met by the special provisions of the Act relating to railways and carriers, the liability of carriers for loss or damage to goods entrusted to them is prescribed by secs. 151 and 152 of the Indian Contract Act (IX of 1872). The plaintiff's goods were being carried in a train of the defendants from Nandgaon to Egatpuri. During the journey the train was plundered by robbers, and the plaintiff's goods were stolen. Held that the defendants were entitled to the benefit of sec. 152 of the Indian Contract Act, and should be permitted to give evidence that the robbers of the plaintiff's goods were not the servants or agents of the defendants, and that the defendants (by their servants and agents) took as much care of their goods as a man of ordinary prudence would, under similar circumstances, take of his own goods of the same bulk, quality, and value as the goods in question.—I. L. R., 3 Bom. 109.

See I. L. R., 9 Al. 398, noted under sec. 150.

153. A contract of bailment is voidable at the option of the bailor, if the bailee does any act with regard to the goods bailed, inconsistent with the conditions of the bailment.

Termination of bailment by bailee's act inconsistent with conditions.

Illustration.

A lets to B, for hire, a horse for his own riding. B drives the horse in his carriage. This is, at the option of A, a termination of the bailment.

154. If the bailee makes any use of the goods bailed, which is not according to the conditions of the bailment, he is liable to make compensation to the bailor for any damage arising to the goods from or during such use of them.

Liability of bailee making unauthorized use of goods bailed.

Illustrations.

(a.) A lends a horse to B for his own riding only. B allows C, a member of his family, to ride the horse. C rides with care, but the horse accidentally falls, and is injured. B is liable to make compensation to A for the injury done to the horse.

(b.) A hires a horse in Calcutta from B expressly to march to Benares. A rides with due care, but marches to Katak instead. The horse accidentally falls, and is injured. A is liable to make compensation to B for the injury to the horse.

155. If the bailee, with the consent of the bailor, mixes the goods of the bailor with his own goods, the bailor and the bailee shall have an interest, in proportion to their respective shares, in the mixture thus produced.

Effect of mixture, with bailor's consent, of his goods with goods of bailee.

156. If the bailee, without the consent of the bailor, mixes the goods of the bailor with his own goods, and the goods can be separated or divided, the property in the goods remain in the parties respectively; but the bailee is bound to bear the expense of separation or division, and any damage arising from the mixture.

Effect of mixture, without bailor's consent, when the goods can be separated.

Illustration.

A bails 100 bales of cotton marked with a particular mark to B. B, without A's consent, mixes the 100 bales with other bales of his own, bearing a different mark. A is entitled to have his 100 bales returned, and B is bound to bear all the expense incurred in the separation of the bales, and any other incidental damage.

157. If the bailee, without the consent of the bailor, mixes the goods of the bailor with his own goods, in such a manner that it is impossible to separate the goods bailed from the other goods, and deliver them back, the bailor is entitled to be compensated by the bailee for the loss of the goods.

Effect of mixture, without bailor's consent, when the goods cannot be separated.

Illustration.

A bails a barrel of Cape flour, worth Rs. 45, to B. B, without A's consent, mixes the flour with country flour of his own, worth only Rs. 25 a barrel. B must compensate A for the loss of his flour.

158. Where, by the conditions of the bailment, the goods are to be kept or to be carried, or to have work done upon them by the bailee for the bailor, and the bailee is to receive no remuneration, the bailor shall re-pay to the bailee the necessary expenses incurred by him for the purpose of the bailment.

Re-payment, by bailor, of necessary expenses.

159. The lender of a thing for use may at any time require its return, if the loan was gratuitous, even though he lent it for a specified time or purpose. But if, on the faith of such loan made for a specified time or purpose, the borrower has acted in such a manner that the return of the thing lent before the time agreed upon would cause him loss exceeding the benefit actually derived by him from the loan, the lender must, if he compels the return, indemnify the borrower for the amount in which the loss so occasioned exceeds the benefit so derived.*

Restoration of goods bailed gratuitously.

It is the duty of the bailee to return, or deliver according to the bailor's directions, the goods bailed without demand, as soon as the time for which they were bailed has expired, or the purpose for which they were bailed has been accomplished.†

Return of goods bailed on expiration of time or accomplishment of purpose.

161. If, by the fault of the bailee, the goods are not returned, delivered, or tendered at the proper time, he is responsible to the bailor for any loss, destruction, or deterioration of the goods from that time.‡

Bailee's responsibility when goods are not duly delivered or tendered.

‡ As to railway contracts, see Act IX. of 1890.

Termination of gratuitous bailment by death.

162. A gratuitous bailment is terminated by the death either of the bailor or of the bailee.

163. In the absence of any contract to the contrary, the bailee is bound to deliver to the bailor, or according to his directions, any increase or profit which may have accrued from the goods bailed.

Bailor entitled to increase or profit from goods bailed.

Illustration.

A leaves a cow in the custody of B to be taken care of. The cow has a calf. B is bound to deliver the calf as well as the cow to A.

164. The bailor is responsible to the bailee for any loss which the bailee may sustain by reason that the bailor was not entitled to make the bailment, or to receive back the goods, or to give directions respecting them.

Bailor's responsibility to bailee.

165. If several joint owners of goods bail them, the bailee may deliver them back to, or according to the directions of, one joint owner without the consent of all, in the absence of any agreement to the contrary.

Bailment by several joint owners.

166. If the bailor has no title to the goods, and the bailee, in good faith, delivers them back to, or according to the directions of, the bailor, the bailee is not responsible to the owner in respect of such delivery.*

Bailee not responsible on re-delivery to bailor without title.

167. If a person, other than the bailor, claims goods bailed, he may apply to the Court to stop the delivery of the goods to the bailor, and to decide the title to the goods.

Right of third person claiming goods bailed.

168. The finder of goods has no right to sue the owner for compensation for trouble and expense voluntarily incurred by him to preserve the goods and to find out the owner; but he may retain the goods against the owner until he receives such compensation; and where the owner has offered a specific reward for the return of goods lost, the finder may sue for such reward, and may retain the goods until he receives it.†

Right to finder of goods.

May sue for specific reward offered.

* See Act I. of 1872, sec. 117.

† See Story, Bailments, § 121a.

169. When a thing, which is commonly the subject of sale, is lost, if the owner cannot, with reasonable diligence, be found, or if he refuses, upon demand, to pay the lawful charges of the finder, the finder may sell it—

(1) when the thing is in danger of perishing or of losing the greater part of its value; or,

(2) when the lawful charges of the finder in respect of the thing found amount to two-thirds of its value.*

170. Where the bailee has, in accordance with the purpose of the bailment, rendered any service involving the exercise of labour or skill in respect of the goods bailed, he has, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, a right to retain such goods until he receives due remuneration for the services he has rendered in respect of them.

Illustrations.

(a.) A delivers a rough diamond to B, a jeweller, to be cut and polished, which is accordingly done. B is entitled to retain the stone till he is paid for the services he has rendered.

(b.) A gives cloth to B, a tailor, to make into a coat. B promises A to deliver the coat as soon as it is finished, and to give A three months' credit for the price. B is not entitled to retain the coat until he is paid.

Notes.

S delivered J an organ to repair, J promising to repair it for Rs. 100. J subsequently refused to repair it for that sum, and claimed to be entitled to retain the organ until he received certain remuneration for the work done. Held, that as where there is an express contract, it must be performed in its entirety or nothing can be claimed under it, and there is only room for a quantum meruit claim where no express contract has been made, J was not entitled to retain the organ until he was paid.—I. L. R., 6 Al. 138.

See I. L. R., 8 Cal. 312, noted under sec. 171.

171. Bankers, factors, wharfingers, attorneys, of a High Court, and policy-brokers, may, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, retain, as a security for a general balance of account, any goods bailed to them; but no other persons have a right to retain, as a security for such balance, goods bailed to them, unless there is an express contract to that effect.†

Notes.

Where a person does work under an entire contract with reference to goods delivered at different times such as to establish a lien, he is entitled to

* New York Civil C. de. § 943.

† As to the lien of an agent, see sec. 221, infra. As to the lien of Railway Administrations, see Act IX. of 1890.

that lien on all goods dealt with under that contract. Chase v. West more (5 M. & S. 180) followed. The fact that a manufacturer has a wharf upon which he receives goods brought to him by customers does not entitle him to claim a lien as a wharfinger upon such goods.—I. L. R., 8 Cal. 312.

Messrs. E. L. & Co. were the secretaries and treasurers of the above company, which went into liquidation. Messrs. E. L. & Co. claimed to be creditors of the company for Rs. 1,12,000 in respect of advances made to, and expenses incurred and disbursements made on behalf of, the company from time to time and in the conduct of its business. Rupees one lakh of this amount was in respect of sums lent to the company and guaranteed by the claimants. The remainder consisted of money expended in the working of the company's business. Messrs. E. L. & Co. claimed to be in possession generally of all the property of the company, and to be entitled to a lien on such property in respect of the above claim of Rs. 1,12,000. Other creditors disputed the possession and the right to the lien claimed. Held, that, even assuming Messrs. E. L. & Co. to be in possession of the property of the company as alleged, they had not the lien that they claimed. A lien is either general or particular. The claimants had not a general lien, because they were neither "bankers, factors, wharfingers, attorneys, or policy-brokers," to whom a general lien is limited by sec. 171 of the Contract Act. Nor had they any particular lien: not under sec. 217 of the Contract Act, because that section was inapplicable, having to do only with a lien on a sum of money of the principal in the hands of the agent: nor under sec. 221 of the Contract Act, because the sums advanced and expended were not, as required by that section, "disbursements and services in respect of" the property on which the lien was claimed, but were loans made on behalf of the company generally and for the purposes of the whole concern.—I. L. R., 13 Bom. 314.

BAILMENTS OF PLEDGES.

172. The bailment of goods as security for payment of 'Pledge,' 'pawnor,' and a debt or performance of a promise is 'pawnee,' defined. called 'pledge.' The bailor is in this case called the pawner. The bailee is called the "pawnee."

The pawnee may retain the goods pledged, not only for payment of the debt, or the performance of the promise, but for the interest of the debt, and all necessary expenses incurred by him in respect of the possession or for the preservation of the goods pledged.

174. The pawnee shall not, in the absence of a contract to that effect, retain the goods pledged for any debt or promise other than the debt or promise for which they are pledged; but such contract, in the absence of anything to the contrary, shall be presumed in regard to subsequent advances made by the pawnee.

Pawnee not to retain for debt or promise other than that for which goods pledged.

Presumption in case of subsequent advances.

175. The pawnee is entitled to receive from the pawnor extraordinary expenses incurred by him for the preservation of the goods pledged.
Pawnee's right as to extraordinary expenses incurred.

— If the pawnor makes default in payment of the debt, or performance, at the stipulated time, of the promise, in respect of which the goods were pledged, the pawnee may bring a suit* against the pawnor upon the debt or promise, and retain the goods pledged as a collateral security; or he may sell the thing pledged, on giving the pawnor reasonable notice of the sale.
Pawnee's right where pawnor makes default.

If the proceeds of such sale are less than the amount due in respect of the debt or promise, the pawnor is still liable to pay the balance. If the proceeds of the sale are greater than the amount so due, the pawnee shall pay over the surplus to the pawnor.

177. If a time is stipulated for the payment of the debt, or performance of the promise, for which the pledge is made, and the pawnor makes default in payment of the debt or performance of the promise at the stipulated time, he may redeem the goods pledged at any subsequent time before the actual sale of them;† but he must, in that case, pay, in addition, any expenses which have arisen from his default.
Defaulting pawnor's right to redeem.

178. A person who is in possession of any goods, or of any bill of lading, dock-warrant, warehouse-keeper's certificate, wharfinger's certificate, or warrant or order for delivery, or any other document of title to goods, may make a valid pledge of such goods, or documents: Provided that the pawnee acts in good faith, and under circumstances which are not such as to raise a reasonable presumption that the pawnor is acting improperly:
Pledge by possessor of goods or of documentary title to goods.

Provided also that such goods or documents have not been obtained from their lawful owner, or from any person in lawful custody of them, by means of an offence or fraud.‡

chase it if he did not return within ten days, obtained from the plaintiff a quantity of jewellery, depositing as security Rs. 2,000 with the plaintiff. G, having thus obtained the jewellery, took it to K at his residence, which was out of the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court, and pledged the jewellery to K for Rs. 6,000. In a suit brought against G and K to recover the jewellery or its value, G did not appear, and K alone defended the suit. Held that, it being, with reference to sec. 178 of the Contract Act, an essential element in the plaintiff's case that the jewellery had been obtained from the plaintiff by fraud in Calcutta, part of the cause of action against K arose in Calcutta, so as to enable the Court, leave having been obtained under cl. 12 of the chapter, to entertain the suit against him. Held also that the plaintiff was entitled to recover the jewellery from K under sec. 178 of the Contract Act, G having obtained it from the plaintiff by an offence or fraud within the meaning of that section.—I. L. R., 3 Cal. 264.

A servant, entrusted by his mistress with the custody of goods, pawned them during her absence. The mistress sued in trover for the goods. Held that the custody of the servant was not "possession" within the meaning of sec. 178 of the Contract Act, and that, if he was to be regarded as having taken the goods into his possession for the purpose of pawning them, the case came within the second proviso to that section, and that accordingly the action would lie.—4 Cal. 497.

179. Where a person pledges goods in which he has only a limited interest, the pledge is valid to the extent of that interest.

SUITS BY BAILEES OR BAILORS AGAINST WRONG-DOERS.

180. If a third person wrongfully deprives the bailee of the use or possession of the goods bailed, or does them any injury, the bailee is entitled to use such remedies as the owner might have used in the like case if no bailment had been made; and either the bailor or the bailee may bring a suit against a third person for such deprivation or injury.

181. Whatever is obtained by way of relief or compensation in any such suit shall, as between the bailor and the bailee, be dealt with according to their respective interests.

CHAPTER X.

AGENCY.

Appointment and Authority of Agents.

'Agent' and 'principal' defined.

182. An 'agent' is a person employed to do any act for another,* or to represent another in dealings with third persons. The person for whom such act is done, or who is so represented, is called the 'principal.'

Note.—See I. L. R., 3 Cal. 30, noted under sec. 185.

183. Any person who is of the age of majority according to the law to which he is subject, and who is of sound mind, may employ an agent.*

Who may employ agent.

184. As between the principal and third persons, any person may become an agent; but no person who is not of the age of majority and of sound mind can become an agent, so as to be responsible to his principal according to the provisions in that behalf herein contained.

Consideration not necessary.

185. No consideration is necessary to create an agency.

Agent's authority may be expressed or implied.

186. The authority of an agent may be expressed or implied.†

187. An authority is said to be express when it is given by words spoken or written. An authority is said to be implied when it is to be inferred from the circumstances of the case; and things spoken or written, or the ordinary course of dealing, may be accounted circumstances of the case.

Definitions of express and implied authority.

Illustration.

A owns a shop in Serampur, living himself in Calcutta, and visiting the shop occasionally. The shop is managed by B, and he is in the habit of ordering goods from C in the name of A for the purposes of the shop, and of paying for them out of A's funds with A's knowledge. B has an authority to order goods from C in the name of A for the purposes of the shop.

An agent, having an authority to do an act, has authority to do any lawful thing which

* Cf. sec. 11, supra.

† But see Act III. of 1877, sec. 33; Act XIV. of 1882, sec. 39

An agent having an authority to carry on a business has authority to do every lawful thing necessary for the purpose, or usually done in the course of conducting such business.

Illustrations.

(a.) A is employed by B, residing in London, to recover at Bombay a debt due to B. A may adopt any legal process necessary for the purpose of recovering the debt, and may give a valid discharge for the same.

(b.) A constitutes B his agent to carry on his business of a ship-builder. B may purchase timber and other materials, and hire workmen, for the purpose of carrying on the business.

189. An agent has authority, in an emergency, to do all such acts for the purpose of protecting his principal from loss as would be done by a person of ordinary prudence in his own case under similar circumstances.*

Agent's authority in an emergency.

(a.) An agent for sale may have goods repaired if it be necessary.

(b.) A consigns provisions to B at Calcutta, with directions to send them immediately to C at Katak. B may sell the provisions at Calcutta, if they will not bear the journey to Katak without spoiling.

SUB-AGENTS.

190. An agent cannot lawfully employ another to perform acts which he has expressly or impliedly undertaken to perform personally, unless by the ordinary custom of trade a sub-agent may, or, from the nature of the agency, a sub-agent must, be employed.

When agent cannot dele-

191. A 'sub-agent' is a person employed by, and acting under the control of, the original agent in the business of

192. Where a sub-agent is properly appointed, the principal is, so far as regards third persons, represented by the sub-agent, and is bound by, and responsible for, his acts, as if he were an agent originally appointed by the principal.

Representation of principal by sub-agent properly appointed.

Agent's responsibility for

The agent is responsible to the principal for the acts of the sub-agent.

The sub-agent is responsible for his acts to the agent, but not to the principal, except in cases of fraud or wilful wrong.

Sub-agent's responsibility.

* But see sec. 214, infra.

193. Where an agent, without having authority to do so, has appointed a person to act as a sub-agent, the agent stands towards such person in the relation of a principal to an agent, and is responsible for his acts both to the principal and to third persons; the principal is not represented by or responsible for the acts of the person so employed,* nor is that person responsible to the principal.

Agent's responsibility for sub-agent appointed without authority.

194. Where an agent, holding an express or implied authority to name another person to act for the principal in the business of the agency, has named another person accordingly, such person is not a sub-agent, but an agent, of the principal for such part of the business of the agency as is entrusted to him.

Relation between principal and person duly appointed by agent to act in business of agency.

Illustrations.

(a.) A directs B, his solicitor, to sell his estate by auction, and to employ an auctioneer for the purpose. B names C, an auctioneer, to conduct the sale. C is not a sub-agent, but is A's agent for the conduct of the sale.

(b.) A authorizes B, a merchant in Calcutta, to recover the moneys due to A from C & Co. B instructs D, a solicitor, to take legal proceedings against C & Co. for the recovery of the money. D is not a sub-agent, but is solicitor for A.

195. In selecting such agent for his principal, an agent is bound to exercise the same amount of discretion as a man of ordinary prudence would exercise in his own case; and, if he does this, he is not responsible to the principal for the acts or negligence of the agent so selected.

Agent's duty in naming such person.

Illustrations.

(a.) A instructs B, a merchant, to buy a ship for him. B employs a ship-surveyor of good reputation to choose a ship for A. The surveyor makes the choice negligently, and the ship turns out to be unseaworthy, and is lost. B is not, but the surveyor is, responsible to A.

(b.) A consigns goods to B, a merchant, for sale. B, in due course, employs an auctioneer in good credit to sell the goods of A, and allows the auctioneer to receive the proceeds of the sale. The auctioneer afterwards becomes insolvent without having accounted for the proceeds. B is not responsible to A for the proceeds.

RATIFICATION.

of person as to acts done for him without authority.
Effect of ratification.

may elect to ratify or to disown such act. If he ratify them, the same effects will follow as if they had been performed by his authority.

197. Ratification may be expressed or may be implied in the conduct of the person on whose behalf the acts are done.

Ratification may be expressed or implied.

Illustrations.

(a.) A, without authority, buys goods for B. Afterwards B sells them to C on his own account. B's conduct implies a ratification of the purchase made for him by A.

(b.) A, 'without B's authority, lends B's money to C. Afterwards B accepts interest on the money from C. B's conduct implies a ratification of the loan.

198. No valid ratification can be made by a person whose knowledge of the facts of the case is materially defective.

Knowledge requisite to valid ratification.

Effect of ratifying unauthorized act forming part of a transaction.

199. A person ratifying any unauthorized act done on his behalf ratifies the whole of the transaction which such act formed a part.

200. An act done by one person on behalf of another without such other person's authority, which, if done with authority, have the effect of subjecting a third person to damages, or of terminating any right or interest of a third person, cannot, by ratification, be made to have such effect.

Ratification of unauthorized act cannot injure third person.

Illustrations.

(a.) A, not being authorized thereto by B, demands, on behalf of B, the delivery of a chattel, the property of B, from C, who is in possession of it. This demand cannot be ratified by B, so as to make C liable for damages for his refusal to deliver.

(b.) A holds a lease from B, terminable on three months' notice. C, an unauthorized person, gives notice of termination to A. The notice cannot be ratified by B, so as to be binding on A.

REVOCATION OF AUTHORITY.

201. An agency is terminated by the principal revoking his authority; or by the agent renouncing the business of the agency; or by the business of the agency being completed; or by either the principal or agent dying or becoming of unsound mind; or by the principal being adjudicated an insolvent under the provisions of any Act for the time being in force for the relief of insolvent debtors.

Termination of agency.

202. Where the agent has himself an interest in the property which forms the subject-matter of the agency, the agency cannot, in the absence of an express contract, be terminated to the prejudice of such interest.

Termination of agency where agent has an interest in subject-matter.

Illustrations.

(a.) A gives authority to B to sell A's land, and to pay himself, out of the proceeds, the debts due to him from A. A cannot revoke this authority, nor can it be terminated by his insanity or death.

(b.) A consigns 1,000 bales of cotton to B, who has made advances to him on such cotton, and desires B to sell the cotton, and to repay himself out of the price the amount of his own advances. A cannot revoke this authority, nor is it terminated by his insanity or death.

Note.—See I. L. R., 5 Bom. 253, noted under sec. 205.

203. The principal may, save as is otherwise provided by the last proceeding section, revoke the authority given to his agent at any time before the authority has been exercised so as to bind the principal.

When principal may revoke agent's authority.

Note.—See I. L. R., 5 Bom. 253, noted under sec. 205.

204. The principal cannot revoke the authority given to his agent after the authority has been partly exercised, so far as regards such acts and obligations as arise from acts already done in the agency.

Revocation where authority has been partly exercised.

Illustrations.

(a.) A, authorizes B to buy 1,000 bales of cotton on account of A, and to pay for it out of A's monies remaining in B's hands. B buys 1,000 bales of cotton in his own name, so as to make himself personally liable for the price. A cannot revoke B's authority so far as regards payment for the cotton.

(b.) A authorizes B to buy 1,000 bales of cotton on account of A, and to pay for it out of A's monies remaining in B's hands. B buys 1,000 bales of cotton in A's name, and so as not to render himself personally liable for the price. A can revoke B's authority to pay for the cotton.

205. Where there is an express or implied contract that the agency should be continued for any period of time, the principal must make compensation* to the agent, or the agent to the principal, as the case may be, for any previous revocation or renunciation of the agency without sufficient cause.

Compensation for revocation by principal, or renunciation by agent.

defendant, give him authority to collect the rents of his share in an inam village, and promised to pay him an annual salary out of the rents. Held that as between the parties and during their life-time the appointment was valid and binding, whether or not any valuable consideration passed,—the mere acceptance of the office by the plaintiff being a sufficient consideration for the appointment. But, independently of the terms of the agreement, and whether or not the agency had been created for valuable, consideration the defendant had, under the general provisions of sec. 203 of the Indian Contract Act (IX of 1872), a right to revoke the authority, as the mere arrangement that the plaintiff's salary should be paid out of the rents could not be regarded as giving to the plaintiff an interest in the property, the subject-matter of the agency, within the meaning of sec. 202. If the defendant had revoked the agency improperly, the remedy lay, under ordinary circumstances, in a suit by the plaintiff for damages for breach of contract. Where, however, the plaintiff chose to sue for specific performance, and demanded arrears of salary; Held that, without a valuable consideration for the defendant's promise, the agreement passed by him to the plaintiff would be nudum pactum, and the plaintiff would not be entitled to recover, except for work and services actually rendered.—I. L. R., 5 Bom. 253.

206. Reasonable notice must be given of such revocation of revocation or tion or renunciation; otherwise the damage thereby resulting to the principal or the agent, as the case may be, must be made good to the one by the other.

Revocation and renunciation may be expressed or implied.

207. Revocation and renunciation may be expressed or may be implied in the conduct of the principal or agent respectively.

Illustration.

A empowers B to let A's house. Afterwards A lets it himself. This is an implied revocation of B's authority.

208. The termination of the authority of an agent does not, so far as regards the agent, take effect before it becomes known to him, or, so far as regards third persons, before it becomes known to them.

When termination of agent's authority takes effect as to agent and as to third persons.

Illustrations.

(a.) A directs B to sell goods for him, and agrees to give B five per cent. commission on the price fetched by the goods. A afterwards, by letter, revokes B's authority. B, after the letter is sent, but before he receives it, sells the goods for 100 rupees. The sale is binding on A, and B is entitled to five rupees as his commission.

(b.) A, at Madras, by letter, directs B to sell for him some cotton lying in a warehouse in Bombay, and afterwards, by letter, revokes his authority to sell, and directs B to send the cotton to Madras. B, after receiving the second letter, enters into a contract with C, who knows of the first letter, but not of the second, for the sale to him of the cotton. C pays B the money, with which B absconds. C's payment is good as against A.

(c.) A directs B, his agent, to pay certain money to C. A dies, and D takes out probate to his will. B, after A's death, but before hearing of it, pays the money to C. The payment is good as against D, the executor.

209. When an agency is terminated by the principal dying or becoming of unsound mind, the agent is bound to take, on behalf of the representatives of his late principal, all reasonable steps for the protection and preservation of the interests entrusted to him.

Agent's duty on termination of agency by principal's death or insanity.

210. The termination of the authority of an agent causes the termination, (subject to the rules herein contained regarding the termination of an agent's authority) of the authority of all sub-agents appointed by him.

Termination of sub-agent's authority.

AGENT'S DUTY TO PRINCIPAL.

211. An agent is bound to conduct the business of his principal according to the directions given by the principal,* or, in the absence of any such directions, according to the custom which prevails in doing business of the same kind at the place where the agent conducts such business. When the agent acts otherwise, if any loss be sustained, he must make it good to his principal, and, if any profit accrues, he must account for it.

duty in conduct of principal's business.

Illustrations.

(a) A, an agent engaged in carrying on for B a business, in which it is the custom to invest from time to time, at interest, the moneys which may be in hand, omits to make such investment. A must make good to B the interest usually obtained by such investments.

(b.) B, a broker, in whose business it is not the custom to sell on credit, sells goods of A on credit to C, whose credit at the time was very high. C, before payment, becomes insolvent. B must make good the loss to A.

212. An agent is bound to conduct the business of the agency with as much skill as is generally possessed by persons engaged in similar business, unless the principal has notice of his want of skill. The agent is always bound to act with reasonable diligence, and to use such skill as he possesses; and to make compensation to his principal in respect of the direct consequences of his own neglect, want of skill, or misconduct, but not in respect of loss or damage which are indirectly or remotely caused by such neglect, want of skill, or misconduct.

Illustrations.

(a.) A, a merchant in Calcutta, has an agent, B, in London, to whom a sum of money is paid on A's account, with orders to remit. B retains the money for a considerable time. A, in consequence of not receiving the money, becomes insolvent. B is liable for the money and interest from the day on which it ought to have been paid, according to the usual rate, and for any further direct loss—as, e. g., by variation of rate of exchange—but not further.

(b.) A, an agent for the sale of goods, having authority to sell on credit, sells to B on credit, without making the proper and usual enquiries as to the solvency of B. B, at the time of such sale, is insolvent. A must make compensation to his principal in respect of any loss thereby sustained.

(c.) A, an insurance-broker employed by B to effect an insurance on a ship, omits to see that the usual clauses are inserted in the policy. The ship is afterwards lost. In consequence of the omission of the clauses nothing can be recovered from the underwriters. A is bound to make good the loss to B.

(d.) A, a merchant in England, directs B, his agent at Bombay, who accepts the agency, to send him 100 bales of cotton by a certain ship. B, having it in his power to send the cotton, omits to do so. The ship arrives safely in England. Soon after her arrival the price of cotton rises. B is bound to make good to A the profit which he might have made by the 100 bales of cotton at the time the ship arrived, but not any profit he might have made by the subsequent rise.

Agent's accounts.

213. An agent is bound to render proper accounts to his principal on demand.

214. It is the duty of an agent, in cases of difficulty, to use all reasonable diligence in communicating with his principal, and in seeking to obtain his instructions.*

Agent's duty to communicate with principal.

215. If an agent deals on his own account in the business of the agency, without first obtaining the consent of his principal, and acquainting him with all material circumstances which have come to his own knowledge on the subject, the principal may repudiate the transaction, if the case shows either that any material fact has been dishonestly concealed from him by the agent, or that the dealings of the agent have been disadvantageous to him.

Right of principal when agent deals on his own account in business of agency without principal's consent.

Illustrations.

(a.) A directs B to sell A's estate. B buys the estate for himself in the name of C. A, on discovering that B has bought the estate for himself, may repudiate the sale, if he can show that B has dishonestly concealed any material fact, or that the sale has been disadvantageous to him.

(b.) A directs B to sell A's estate. B, on looking over the estate before selling it, finds a mine on the estate which is unknown to A. B informs A that he wishes to buy the estate for himself, but conceals the discovery of the mine. A allows B to buy, in ignorance of the existence of the mine. A, on discovering that B knew of the mine at the time he bought the estate, may either repudiate or adopt the sale at his option.

216. If an agent, without the knowledge of his principal, deals in the business of the agency on his own account instead of on account of his principal, the principal is entitled to claim from the agent any benefit which may have resulted to him from the transaction.

Principal's right to benefit gained by agent dealing on his own account in business of agency.

Illustration.

A directs B, his agent, to buy a certain house for him. B tells A it cannot be bought, and buys the house for himself. A may, on discovering that B has bought the house, compel him to sell it to A at the price he gave for it.

217. An agent may retain,* out of any sums received on account of the principal in the business of the agency, all moneys due to himself in respect of advances made or expenses properly incurred by him in conducting such business, and also such remuneration as may be payable to him for acting as agent.

Agent's right of retainer out of sums received on principal's account.

Note.—See I. L. R., 13 Bom. 314, noted under sec. 171.

218. Subject to such deductions, the agent is bound to pay to his principal all sums received on his account.

Agent's duty to pay sums received for principal.

219. In the absence of any special contract, payment for the performance of any act is not due to the agent until the completion of such act; but an agent may detain moneys received by him on account of goods sold, although the whole of the goods consigned to him for sale may not have been sold, or although the sale may not be actually complete.

When agent's remuneration becomes due.

220. An agent, who is guilty of misconduct in the business of the agency,† is not entitled to any remuneration in respect of that part of the business which he has misconducted.

(a.) A employs B to recover 1,00,000 rupees from C, and to lay it out on good security. B recovers the 1,00,000 rupees, and lays out 90,000 rupees on good security, but lays out 10,000 rupees on security which he ought to have known to be bad, whereby A loses 2,000 rupees. B is entitled to remuneration for recovering the 1,00,000 rupees and for investing the 90,000 rupees. He is not entitled to any remuneration for investing the 10,000 rupees, and he must make good the 2,000 rupees to B.

(b.) A employs B to recover 1,000 rupees from C. Through B's misconduct the money is not recovered. B is entitled to no remuneration for his services, and must make good the loss.

221. In the absence of any contract to the contrary, an agent is entitled to retain goods, papers, and other property, whether moveable or immoveable, of the principal received by him, until the amount due to himself for commission, disbursements, and services in respect of the same, has been paid or accounted for to him.*

Such a contract shall be presumed to exist in the following cases :—

- (1.) Where the contract is made by an agent for the sale or purchase of goods for a merchant resident abroad :
- (2.) Where the agent does not disclose the name of his principal :
- (3.) Where the principal, though disclosed, cannot be sued.

Notes.

The defendants let a steam-ship to the plaintiff for a certain term, and signed a charter-party "by and on behalf of the owners of the steam-ship A." The charter-party was a time-charter, to commence on arrival at Calcutta, and to terminate at one of certain ports; the steamer in the interim to ply to and from any port the charterers pleased: It was agreed that the steamer should be provided "with a proper and sufficient crew of seamen, engineers, stokers, firemen, and other necessary persons for working cargo with all dispatch;" and that in taking and discharging cargo, "the master and his crew with his boats shall be aiding and assisting to the utmost of their power;" and that "the owners or agents of the said steam-ship shall be held responsible to the said charterers for any incapacity, want of skill, insobriety, or negligence on the part of master, officers, engineers, stokers, firemen, or crew of the said steam-ship." The names of the principals were not disclosed in the charter-party, but were verbally disclosed before the charter-party was signed. In an action against the agents for damages for refusing to supply stevedores and other persons, in addition to the crew, when loading and discharging cargo, held that the presumption created by the second clause of sec. 230 of the Contract Act is merely a prima facie one, and may be rebutted, and that the contract was not personally binding on the agents, because the prima facie presumption of an intention to contract personally was rebutted by the language of the contract itself. Held also that the terms of the charter-party showed that the crew only were to assist in loading and discharging cargo; and that the plaintiffs were not entitled to call on those responsible for the steamer to load and discharge cargo by stevedores instead of by the crew. Reading the second part of sec. 230 of the Contract Act with sec. 92 of the Evidence Act: Semble.—That if, on the face of a written contract, an agent appears to be personally liable, he cannot escape liability by evidence of any disclosure of his principal's name apart from the contract.—I.L.R., 5 Cal. 71.

The plaintiffs by charter-party contracted to let the steam-ship Oakdale to the defendants upon certain terms. The first clause of the charter-party stated that the plaintiffs "agreed as agents for owners of the said steam-ship," and subsequent clauses provided that the owners should bind themselves to receive the cargo on board, and that the master on behalf of the owners should have a lien on the cargo for freight, &c. The charter-party was signed by the plaintiffs and defendants in their own names. The plaintiffs sued the defendants for breach of the charter-party in refusing to load the said steam-ship. Held that the plaintiffs had contracted as agents, and were, therefore, not entitled to sue. If a contract made by a person who is an agent is worded so as, when taken as a whole, to convey to the other contracting party the notion that the agent is contracting in that character, he cannot sue or be sued on the contract. Where one contracting party knows that the other is contracting as an agent for a third person whose name he also knows, the presumption laid down in clause 2 of sec. 230 of the Indian Contract Act (IX of 1872) does not arise, although at the time of making the contract the agent does not disclose the name of his principal. The essential point is the knowledge, and actual knowledge is equivalent to disclosure, the whole object of which would be to convey such knowledge.—5 Bom. 584.

See I. L. R., 6 Bom. 326, noted under sec. 234.

231. If an agent makes a contract with a person who neither knows, nor has reason to suspect, that he is an agent, his principal may require the performance of the contract; but the other contracting party has, as against the principal, the same rights as he would have had as against the agent if the agent had been principal.

Rights of parties to a contract made by agent not disclosed.

If the principal discloses himself before the contract is completed, the other contracting party may refuse to fulfil the contract, if he can show that, if he had known who was the principal in the contract, or if he had known that the agent was not a principal, he would not have entered into the contract.

Note.

The defendant, who resided in Dholera, employed the firm of S K as his agents in Bombay. A running account was kept, in which the defendant was debited with the price of goods purchased on his account by S. K, and was credited with the price of goods sold by S K on his account, and with the amount of the remittances which he made from time to time. In fulfilment of orders received from the defendant on 16th March, 1879, S K, on the 23rd March, 1879, bought from the plaintiff 20,000 cocoanuts (out of a cargo of 42,000 then lately arrived at Bombay); on the 24th March, 1879, 10,160 cocoanuts (out of a cargo of 23,000); and on the 27th March, 26,626 cocoanuts (out of a cargo of 71,250). By each of these three contracts it was agreed that the purchase-money should be paid on delivery. At the time of making these contracts the plaintiff did not know, nor had he any reason to suspect, that S K was an agent and not principal in the transactions. On the 27th and 28th March, 1879, the 30,160 cocoanuts (the subject-matter of the first two contracts) were transhipped into the vessel "Lakhmiprasad," and on the 29th March, 1879, the 26,626 cocoanuts (the subject-matter of the third contract) were transhipped into the vessel "Lalsari" for conveyance to Dholera. The "Lalsari" sailed from Bombay on the 31st March, and on her arrival at Dholera the defendant obtained possession of the 3rd lot of 26,626 cocoanuts which had been shipped on board. On the 1st April S K received from the defendant remittances sufficient to pay for all the cocoanuts, and to leave a balance of Rs. 1,727 to the credit of the defendant in his account with S K. These remittances were made by the defendant in good faith, and were received by S K at a time when the plaintiff gave credit to S K, and did not know of any one else to be charged with the price of the cocoanuts. On the 2nd April the firm of S K stopped payment, and on the 23rd April, 1871, the plaintiff, in consequence of the failure of S K and the non-payment of the price of the cocoanuts, transhipped the 30,160 cocoanuts (the subject of the first two contracts) from the "Lakhmiprasad" into the "Ramprasad." These cocoanuts, were subsequently sold, and the proceeds of the sale deposited in the Bank of Bombay to abide the result of this suit. On the 4th April the plaintiff discovered that the defendant was the principal in the cocoanut transaction, and brought this suit against him to recover the price of the three lots of cocoanuts. The defendant denied that S K had authority to pledge his (defendant's) credit in making purchases, and contended that, having in good faith paid his agent S K for the cocoanuts prior to the institution of the suit, he (the defendant) was not liable to the plaintiff. Held that the plaintiff was entitled to recover. The rule of English law, which makes the liability of an undisclosed principal subject to the qualification that he has not bona fide paid the agent, or that the state of accounts has not been altered, is not adopted in the Indian Contract Act. Sec. 232 is to be read as a qualification of the first portion of para. 1 of sec. 231, which gives a principal a general right to enforce a contract entered into by his agent. Sec. 232 qualifies that general right by making it subject to the rights and obligations subsisting between the agent and the other contracting party. The second clause of para. 1 of sec. 231 gives a party contracting with an agent the same rights against the principal only as he would have had against the agent; and sec. 234 adds a further qualification to his rights as against the principal. Sec. 232 of the Indian Contract Act adopts the qualification imposed by English law upon the right of the principal to enforce a contract, viz., that he must take the contract subject to all the equities, in the same way as if the agent were the real principal; but it does not impose upon the right of the other contracting party the qualification laid down by the cases of Thompson v. Davenport (Smith's L. R., 7th edn., 364) and Armstrong v. Stokes (L. R., 7 Q. B. 598), namely, that the principal has not paid the agent, or that the state of the account between the principal and agent has not been altered to the prejudice of the principal. The only qualification to the right of the other contracting party against the principal is that imposed by sec. 234, namely, that he has not induced the principal to act upon the belief that the agent only will be held liable. A transhipment-permit issued under sec. 128 of the Indian Sea Customs Act (VIII of 1878) does not, like a bill of lading, represent the goods mentioned in it, or give any lien upon or control over them.—I. L. R., 4 Bom. 447.

232. Where one man makes a contract with another, neither knowing nor having reasonable ground to suspect that the other is an agent, the principal, if he requires the performance of the contract, can only obtain such performance subject to the rights and obligations subsisting between the agent and the other party to the contract.

Illustration.

I. L. R., 4 Bom. 447, noted under sec. 231.

233. In cases where the agent is personally liable, a person dealing with him may hold either him or his principal, or both of them, liable.

Right of person dealing with agent personally liable.

Illustration.

A enters into a contract with B to sell him 100 bales of cotton, and afterwards discovers that B was acting as agent for C. A may sue either B or C, or both, for the price of the cotton.

Notes.

The obligee under a hypothecation bond brought a suit thereon against one who, upon the face of the instrument, contracted as obligor, but whom when the suit was instituted, the plaintiff knew to have acted as agent in the transaction for a third person. Having obtained a decree he satisfied it in part by attachment of a sum of money, and next caused the hypothecated property to be sold, and purchased it himself. Upon attempting to obtain possession, he was successfully resisted by the principal debtor under the hypothecation bond, on the ground that the latter was the real owner of the property, and that the decree-holder had derived no title thereto from his judgment-debtor. He then sued the principal debtor to recover the balance remaining due upon the bond, after giving credit for the amount recovered by attachment in the suit against the agent. Held that the plaintiff having elected to hold the agent responsible upon the contract, and having obtained judgment and decree against him and written up full satisfaction of the decree, could not afterwards maintain a suit against the principal in respect of the same subject-matter. Priestly v. Fernie referred to.—I. L. R., 9 Al. 681.

See I. L. R., 6 Bom. 326, noted under sec. 234.

234. When a person who has made a contract with an agent induces the agent to act upon the belief that the principal only will be held liable, or induces the principal to act upon the belief that the agent only will be held liable, he cannot afterwards hold liable the agent or principal respectively.

Consequence of inducing or principal to act on belief that principal or will be held exclusively.

Note.

By the Memorandum and Articles of Association of the New Fleming Spinning and Weaving Company, N K was appointed secretary, treasurer, and agent of the company with power to raise or borrow from time to time, in the name or otherwise on behalf of the company, such sums of money as he might think expedient by bonds, debentures, or promissory notes, or in such other manner as he might deem best ; and for the purpose of securing the repayment of any money so borrowed to make any arrangement which he might deem expedient by conveying or assigning away property of the company to trustees or otherwise. N K was also secretary, treasurer, and agent of four other mill-companies in Bombay. On the 31st October, 1878, the directors passed the following resolution: " That the unallotted shares be filled up in the name of Nursey Kessowji, Esquire, secretary, treasurer, and agent, who is empowered to mortgage them at a fair rate of interest to enable him to obtain funds for the use of the company." On the 11th November, 1878, P advanced a sum of Rs. 1,00,500 upon the terms contained in a Guzerati writing of that date, and signed by N K. In this document N K acknowledged the receipt of the money for which 335 shares in the New Fleming Spinning and Weaving Company were duly handed over as security, and he agreed to repay it within three months. The last clause in the agreement stated that it was "duly agreed to and approved by him (N K) and his heirs and representatives." As an additional security, P, when advancing the loan, obtained from K N (father of N K) a guarantee in the following terms: "To Thuker Parmanundass Jivandass. Written by Sha Kessowji Naik. To wit: This day Sha Nursey Kessowji has received from you Rs. 1,00,500, namely, one lakh and five hundred, having deposited, by way of security, 335 (namely, three hundred and thirty-five) 'shares' of 'The New Fleming Spinning and Weaving Company, Limited.' If your said money cannot be paid with interest by the expiration of the time, and you should sustain any kind of loss in (respect of) that, I am duly to pay the same. As to that I am not to raise any obstacle or objection. In case it should be necessary, I am to fill up and duly deliver to you an "indemnity-bond" on stamped paper through your Vakeel (Solicitor). This writing is duly agreed to and approved by me and my heirs and representatives. Bombay, the 11th of November in the English year 1878." On the evening of the day on which the loan was made, viz., 11th November, 1878, but without the knowledge of K N, it was agreed between N, K, and P, that the time for the repayment of the loan should be extended to six months. In December, 1878, N K became insolvent, and on 28th December, 1878, a petition was presented in the High Court to wind up the New Fleming Spinning and Weaving Company. On the 30th December, P, through his solicitors, wrote a letter to the company, stating that N K had obtained a loan from him of Rs. 1,00,500 on behalf of the company, and inquiring whether the fact appeared in the company's books. To this letter he received a reply signed by "K N, director," stating that the loan appeared in the books in P's name. On the 17th January, 1879, an order was made for the winding-up of the New Fleming Spinning and Weaving Company, and on the 4th February, 1879, P gave notice to the official liquidators of the company of his claim against the company for the money advanced by him on the 11th November, 1878. In March, 1879, he filed a suit against K N to enforce his guarantee, but was unsuccessful, the Court holding that, by extending the period of the loan to six months, the agreement of the 11th November, 1878, had been materially varied without K N's knowledge, and that K N was consequently discharged. On the 24th April, 1879, P filed his affidavit in support of his claim against the company. The company resisted the claim. Held (1) that the directors had power, under the Memorandum and Articles of Association, to authorize N K to borrow money on behalf of the company, and that they had done so, and with that object had entrusted him with the unallotted shares. (2) That when P advanced the loan to N K, he was led to believe that N K was obtaining it on behalf of the four mill-companies of which he was secretary, treasurer, and agent, but that P was not aware and was not informed for which of the said companies the loan was obtained, and that the money was, in fact, advanced to N, as to an agent acting on behalf of an undisclosed principal. (3) That P, when he discovered that the money was obtained for the New Fleming Spinning and Weaving Company, was entitled to claim against the company and to rank as creditor of the company the amount advanced to N K with interest from the date of the loan, viz., 11th November, 1878, to the date of the presentation of the petition to the company.—I. L. R., 6 Bom. 326.

235. A person untruly* representing himself to be the authorized agent of another, and thereby inducing a third person to deal with him as such agent, is liable, if his alleged employer does not ratify his acts, to make compensation to the other in respect of any loss or damage which he has incurred by so dealing.

236. A person with whom a contract has been entered into in the character of agent is not entitled to require the performance of it, if he was in reality acting, not as agent, but on his own account.

237. When an agent has, without authority, done acts or incurred obligations to third persons on behalf of his principal, the principal is bound by such acts or obligations if he has, by his words or conduct, induced such third persons to believe that such acts and obligations were within the scope of the agent's authority.

(b.) A entrusts B with negotiable instruments endorsed in blank. B sells them to C in violation of private orders from A. The sale is good.

238. Misrepresentations made, or frauds committed, by agents acting in the course of their business for their principals, have the same effect on agreements made by such agents as if such misrepresentations or frauds had been made or committed by the principals;† but misrepresentations made, or frauds committed, by agents in matters which do not fall within their authority do not affect their principals.

(a.) A, being B's agent for the sale of goods, induces C to buy them by a misrepresentation which he was not authorized by B to make. The contract is voidable, as between B and C, at the option of C.

(b.) A, the Captain of B's ship, signs bills of lading without having received on board the goods mentioned therein. The bills of lading are void as between B and the pretended consignor.

CHAPTER XI. OF PARTNERSHIP.

239. 'Partnership' is the relation which subsists between persons who have agreed to combine their property, labour, or skill in some business, and to share the profits thereof between them.*

'Partnership' defined.

'Firm' defined.

Persons who have entered into partnership with one another are called collectively a 'firm.'

Illustrations.

(a.) A and B buy 100 bales of cotton, which they agree to sell for their joint account. A and B are partners in respect of such cotton.

(b.) A and B buy 100 bales of cotton, agreeing to share it between them. A and B are not partners.

(c.) A agrees with B, a goldsmith, to buy and furnish gold to B, to be worked up by him and sold, and that they shall share in the resulting profits or loss. A and B are partners.

(d.) A and B agree to work together as carpenters, but that A shall receive all profits and shall pay wages to B. A and B are not partners.

(e.) A and B are joint owners of a ship. This circumstance does not make them partners.

240. A loan to a person engaged or about to engage in any trade or undertaking, upon a contract with such person that the lender shall receive interest at a rate varying with the profits, or that he shall receive a share of the profits, does not, of itself, constitute the lender a partner, or render him responsible as such.

Lender not a partner by advancing money for share of profits.

241. In the absence of any contract to the contrary, property left by a retiring partner, or the representative of a deceased partner to be used in the business, is to be considered a loan within the meaning of the last preceding section.

Property left in business by retiring partner, or deceased partner's representative.

242. No contract for the remuneration of a servant or agent of any person, engaged in any trade or undertaking, by a share of the profits of such trade or undertaking, shall, of itself, render such servant or agent responsible as a partner therein, nor give him the rights of a partner.

Servant or agent remunerated by share of profits, not partner.

* This would apply to members of joint-stock companies: but the law applicable to them is saved by sec. 206, infra.

243. No person, being a widow or child of a deceased partner of a trader, and receiving, by way of annuity, a proportion of the profits made by such trader in his business, shall, by reason only of such receipt, be deemed to be a partner of such trader, or be subject to any liabilities incurred by him.

Widow or child of deceased partner receiving annuity out of profits, not a partner.

244. No person receiving, by way of annuity or otherwise, a portion of the profits of any business, in consideration of the sale by him of the good-will of such business, shall, by reason only of such receipt, be deemed to be a partner of the person carrying on such business, or be subject to his liabilities.*

Person receiving portion of profits for sale of good-will, not a partner.

245. A person who has, by words spoken or written, or by his conduct, led another to believe that he is a partner in a particular firm, is responsible to him as a partner in such firm.

Responsibility of person leading another to believe him a partner.

246. Any one consenting to allow himself to be represented as a partner is liable, as such, to third persons who, on the faith thereof, give credit to the partnership.†

Any person permitting himself to be represented as a partner.

247. A person, who is under the age of majority according to the law to which he is subject,‡ may be admitted to the benefits of partnership, but cannot be made personally liable for any obligation of the firm; but the share of such minor in the property of the firm is liable for the obligations of the firm.

Minor partner not personally liable, but his share is.

248. A person who has been admitted to the benefits of partnership under the age of majority ‡ becomes, on attaining that age, liable for all obligations incurred by the partnership since he was so admitted, unless he gives public notice, within a reasonable time, of his repudiation of the partnership.

Liability of minor partner on attaining majority.

249. Every partner is liable for all debts and obligations incurred while he is a partner in the usual course of business by or on behalf of the partnership; but a person who is admitted as a partner into an existing firm does not thereby become liable to the creditors of such firm for anything done before he became a partner.

Partner's liability for debts of partnership.

Notes.

The firm of Sowerby and Co., the partners of which were W. Sowerby and Framji Edulji, took a contract from Government on 12th November 1877 to construct a barrel-house at the Gunpowder Manufactory at Kirkee, and on the 28th November 1877 the plaintiff agreed to advance monies "up to Rs. 15,000" for the purpose of enabling the firm to carry out the contract. Under the agreement the plaintiff was to receive all sums to become due from the Government on the contractor's bills and to pay the balance to the firm after repaying himself all advances with interest. On the same day the firm executed a power of attorney to the plaintiff, authorizing him to receive from the Government Engineer all such sums to become due to the firm under the contract, which power of attorney was deposited by plaintiff in the office of the Executive Engineer at Poona. In March or April 1878 Sowerby left for England, up to which time Rupees 34,900 had been advanced by the plaintiff and a balance of Rs. 14,9425-10 still remained due to him after giving credit for the sums received on the bills passed by the Executive Engineer. On 24th July 1878 the plaintiff entered into a fresh agreement with Framji Edulji, similar to the former one, to make further advances to the firm up to Rs. 16,000 in addition to Rs. 15,000 on the same terms as those mentioned in the previous agreement, and by means of these advances the contract was completed at the end of 1879. In 1878 the defendant obtained a decree against Sowerby and attached the right, title, and interest of Sowerby in a sum of Rs. 5,034-11-9 in the hands of the Executive Engineer, which was then due to the firm on the contract. The plaintiff, who alleged that Rs. 13,700-1-11 were due to him from the firm, applied to have the attachment removed which application was refused on the 30th September 1879 and the sum attached was paid to the defendant. The plaintiff sued the defendant to recover from him Rs. 5,034-11-9 :—Held, that although the plaintiff might be a member of an undivided Hindu family, still as the contract was entered into with the plaintiff in his individual capacity and as there was nothing on the face of the contract to show that the plaintiff was acting on behalf of the family, the plaintiff was entitled to sue alone :—Held also, that the first agreement of 28th November 1877, coupled with the execution of the power of attorney to him of the same date, amounted to an assignment to the plaintiff of the sums to become due to Sowerby and Co., on the bills passed by the Executive Engineer :—Held also, that the second agreement although made by one member only of the firm of Sowerby and Co., with the plaintiff, was under the circumstances both necessary to the carrying out of the partnership business and in accordance with the ordinary practice of such partnerships as that of Sowerby and Co., and was therefore binding on the firm, and that the two agreements accompanied by the power of attorney operated as an assignment of all the monies to become due on the contractor's bills as a security for the plaintiff's advances with interest, and that the plaintiff was therefore entitled to recover the sum claimed from the defendant.—I. L. R., 9 Bom. 311.

In a suit for money lent, brought by the father of a joint Hindu family who carried on jointly an ancestral money-lending business, the plaintiff stated in examination, that he had ceased to take an active part in the management of the affairs of the firm, and that the control of its business was in the hands of his sons, whom he described as "maliks." Held that, under the circumstances, the plaintiff could not maintain the suit in his individual capacity, and without joining his sons as plaintiffs with him, his sons being his partners in the ancestral business, and he not being the managing member or proprietor.--8 Al. 264.

250. Every partner is liable to make compensation to third persons in respect of loss or damage arising from the neglect or fraud of any partner in the management of the business of the firm.

Partner's liability to third person for neglect or fraud of co-partner.

251. Each partner, who does any act necessary for, or usually done in, carrying on the business of such a partnership as that of which he is a member, binds his co-partners to the same extent as if he were their agent duly appointed for that purpose.

Partner's power to bind co-partners.

Exception.—If it has been agreed between the partners that any restriction shall be placed upon the power of any one of them, no act done in contravention of such agreement shall bind the firm with respect to persons having notice of such agreement.

Illustrations.

(a.) A and B trade in partnership, A residing in England, and B in India. A draws a bill of exchange in the name of the firm. B has no notice of the bill, nor is he at all interested in the transaction. The firm is liable on the bill, provided the holder did not know of the circumstances under which the bill was drawn.

(b.) A, being one of a firm of solicitors and attorneys, draws a bill of exchange in the name of the firm without authority. The other partners are not liable on the bill.

(c.) A and B carry on business in partnership as bankers. A sum of money is received by A on behalf of the firm. A does not inform B of such receipt, and afterwards A appropriates the money to his own use. The partnership is liable to make good the money.

(d.) A and B are partners. A, with the intention of cheating B, goes to a shop and purchases articles on behalf of the firm, such as might be used in the ordinary course of the partnership business, and converts them to his own separate use, there being no collusion between him and the seller. The firm is liable for the price of the goods.

252. Where partners have by contract regulated and defined, as between themselves, their rights and obligations, such contract can be annulled or altered only by consent of all* of them, which consent must either be expressed or be implied from a uniform course of dealing.

Annulment of contract defining partners' rights and obligations.

* Cf. sec. 253, cl. 5, infra.

Illustration.

A, B and C, intending to enter into partnership, execute written articles of agreement, by which it is stipulated that the nett profits arising from the partnership-business shall be equally divided between them. Afterwards they carry on the partnership business for many years, A receiving one-half of the nett profits, and the other half being divided equally between B and C. All parties know of and acquiesce in this arrangement. This course of dealing supersedes the provision in the articles as to the division of profits.

Rules determining partners mutual relations, where no contract to contrary.

253. In the absence of any contract to the contrary, the relations of partners to each other are determined by the following rules:—

(1.) All partners are joint owners of all property originally brought into the partnership-stock, or bought with money belonging to the partnership, or acquired for purposes of the partnership business. All such property is called partnership-property. The share of each partner in the partnership property is the value of his original contribution, increased or diminished by his share of profit or loss :

(2.) All partners are entitled to share equally in the profits of the partnership-business, and must contribute equally towards the losses sustained by the partnership :

(3.) Each partner has a right to take part in the management of the partnership-business :

(4.) Each partner is bound to attend diligently to the business of the partnership, and is not entitled to any remuneration for acting in such business :

(5.) When differences arise as to ordinary matters connected with the partnership-business, the decision shall be according to the opinion of the majority of the partners ; but no change in the nature of the business of the partnership can be made, except with the consent of all the partners : *

(6.) No person can introduce a new partner into a firm without the consent of all the partners :

(7.) If, from any cause whatsoever, any member of a partnership ceases to be so, the partnership is dissolved as between all the other members :

(8.) Unless the partnership has been entered into for a fixed term, any partner may retire from it at any time :

(9.) Where a partnership has been entered into for a fixed term, no partner can, during such term, retire, except with the consent of all the partners, nor can he be expelled

* See sec. 252, supra.

by his partners for any cause whatever, except by order of Court:

(10.) Partnerships, whether entered into for a fixed term or not, are dissolved by the death of any partner.

254. At the suit of a partner the Court may dissolve the partnership in the following cases:—

(1) When a partner becomes of unsound mind:

(2) When a partner, other than the partner suing, has been adjudicated an insolvent under any law relating to insolvent debtors:

(3) When a partner, other than the partner suing, has done any act by which the whole interest of such partner is legally transferred to a third person:

(4) When any partner becomes incapable of performing his part of the partnership contract:

(5) When a partner, other than the partner suing, is guilty of gross misconduct in the affairs of the partnership or towards his partners:

(6) When the business of the partnership can only be carried on at a loss.

Note.—See I. L. R., 5 Bom. 56, noted under section 265.

Dissolution of partnership by prohibition of business.

255. A partnership is in all cases dissolved by its business being prohibited by law.

256. If a partnership, entered into for a fixed term, be continued after such term has expired, the rights and obligations of the partners will, in the absence of any agreement to the contrary, remain the same as they were at the expiration of the term, so far as such rights and obligations can be applied to a partnership dissolvable at the will of any partner.

257. Partners are bound to carry on the business of the partnership for the greatest common advantage, to be just and faithful to each other, and to render true accounts and full information of all things affecting the partnership to any partner or his legal representatives.

Account to firm of benefit derived from transaction affecting partnership.

258. A partner must account to the firm for any benefit derived from a transaction affecting the partnership.

Illustrations.

(a.) A, B, and, C are partners in trade. C, without the knowledge of A and B, obtains for his own sole benefit a lease of the house in which the partnership-business is carried on. A and B are entitled to participate, if they please, in the benefit of the lease.

(b.) A, B, and C, carry on business together in partnership as merchants trading between Bombay and London. D, a merchant in London, to whom they make their consignments, secretly allows C a share of the commission which he receives upon such consignments, in consideration of C's using his influence to obtain the consignments for him. C is liable to account to the firm for the money so received by him.

259. If a partner, without the knowledge and consent of the other partners, carries on any business competing or interfering with that of the firm, he must account to the firm for all profits made in such business, and must make compensation to the firm for any loss occasioned thereby.

260. A continuing guarantee, given either to a firm or to a third person, in respect of the transactions of a firm, is, in the absence of agreement to the contrary, revoked as to future transactions by any change in the constitution of the firm to which, or in respect of the transactions of which, such guarantee was given.*

261. The estate of a partner who has died is not, in the absence of an express agreement, liable in respect of any obligation incurred by the firm

262. Where there are joint debts due from the partnership and also separate debts due from any partner, the partnership-property must be applied in the first instance in payment of the debts of the firm; and if there is any surplus, then the share of each partner must be applied in payment of his separate debts, or paid to him. The separate property of any partner must be applied first in the payment of his separate debts, and the surplus (if any) in the payment of the debts of the firm.

263. After a dissolution of partnership, the rights and obligations of the partners continue in all things necessary for winding-up the business of the partnership.

264. Persons dealing with a firm will not be affected by a dissolution of which no public notice has been given, unless they themselves had notice of such dissolution.

Notice of dissolution.

Notes.

Sec. 264 of the Contract Act is not intended to be an exhaustive exposition on the question of notice of a dissolution of partnership. The mode of notification of dissolution required in the case of old customers, who are known to the firm as having dealt with it, is an express or specific notice by circular or otherwise. But in the case of the general public the most effectual public notice which can reasonably be given is requisite.—I. L. R. 8 Cal. 681 overruled.—I. L. R., 8 Cal. 678.

A, B and C traded together in partnership as B, C and Co., A being a sleeping partner. After the partnership was dissolved, B and C continued to trade together under the same name and incurred debts to the plaintiff, who sued to recover the amounts from A, B and C. The plaintiffs had not dealt with the old partnership nor received notice of its dissolution, and it was not alleged that they knew of A's previous connection with it:—Held that the suits did not lie against A.—9 Madr. 492.

265.* Where a partner is entitled to claim a dissolution of partnership, or where a partnership has terminated, the Court may, in the absence of any contract to the contrary, wind up the business of the partnership, provide for the payment of its debts, and distribute the surplus according to the shares of the partners respectively.

Winding-up by Court on dissolution or after termination.

Notes.

Sec. 265 of the Contract Act, while it enables a partner, after the termination of a partnership, to apply to the District Court to wind up the business, does not take away the ordinary right of suit in any Civil Court having jurisdiction to have the accounts of the partnership taken.—I. L. R., 6 Cal. 521.

The Court of a Subordinate Judge is inferior to the Court of a District Judge within the meaning of sec. 11 of the Civil Courts' Act. The word 'may' in sec. 265 of the Contract Act has a somewhat similar force to the words 'it shall be lawful' in a Statute which merely makes that legal and possible which there would otherwise be no right or authority to do. And the words 'may apply' in the section create a new jurisdiction, which must be exercised strictly in accordance with the Statute which creates it,—that is to say, the jurisdiction created by the section must be exercised exclusively by a Court not inferior to the Court of a District Judge, within the local limit of whose jurisdiction the place or principal place of business of the firm which it is sought to wind up is situated. It was the intention of the Legislature, in enacting sec. 265 of the Contract Act, to create a new jurisdiction to be exercised exclusively by the Court of the District Judge; and in the absence of a contract to the contrary, the members of a partnership, or their representatives cannot obtain the relief mentioned in the section except by resorting to that Court. The presumption that the existing jurisdiction of a Court is not intended to be taken away unless express words have been used for that purpose, usually applies only to the jurisdiction of the superior Courts. Unless the jurisdiction of a superior Court is expressly and clearly taken away, such jurisdiction will be presumed to continue.—7 Cal. 157.

* This section has been substituted by Act IV. for 1886 sec. 1, for the one originally enacted.

The fact that several persons are co-owners of a ship does not make them partners, and it is not necessary that a suit by one co-owner against the managing owner or ship's husband, for his share of the profits made by the ship before she has been sold, should be brought in the Court of the District Judge under sec. 265 of the Contract Act, but such suit may be brought in the Court of the lowest grade competent to try it.—8 Cal. 1011.

A suit to wind up a partnership and to distribute the profits is not cognizable by a Court subordinate to a District Court by virtue of sec. 265 of the Indian Contract Act.—5 Madr. 256.

A suit to compel the defendant to account for and pay over a share of a sum realised on a joint speculation or to provide for the plaintiff's share out of another fund realised under the joint orders of the parties is not affected by the provisions of sec. 265 of the Indian Contract Act.—7 Madr. 246.

A previous dissolution of partnership is necessary in order to give jurisdiction to the District Court under sec. 265 of the Indian Contract Act. Accordingly, where a suit was instituted in the District Court of Ahmedabad by some members of a partnership (which, however, was not dissolved at the date of the suit) for the winding up of the business of a ginning factory, and for distributing among the share-holders any surplus that might remain, after providing for the payment of its debts under sec. 265 of Act IX of 1872, and the Assistant Judge, to whom it was referred for trial by the District Judge, directed the dissolution of the partnership and the winding up of its business, the High Court on appeal reversed the decree of the Assistant Judge, and returned the plaint to the plaintiffs for its presentation to the proper Court. Quære—Whether the District Judge had power, under the Bombay Civil Courts' Act (XIV of 1869), to refer to the Assistant Judge a case falling under sec. 265 of Act IX of 1872.—5 Bom. 65.

The stamp-duty payable on an appeal from an order made by a District Judge on an application under sec. 265 of the Indian Contract Act (IX of 1872) should be an ad valorem fee, as in a suit for accounts, under sec. 7, cl. iv. (f) of the Court Fees' Act (VII of 1870).—6 Bom. 143.

The stamp-duty payable on an application to the District Court under sec. 265 of the Indian Contract Act (IX of 1872) for an account and winding up of partnership should be an ad-valorem fee under sec. 7, cl. iv. (f) of the Court Fees' Act (VII of 1870).—7 Bom. 125.

An application for the winding up, by the Court, of the business of a firm after the termination of partnership, under sec. 265 of the Indian Contract Act (IX of 1872), whatever it be called, is essentially a plaint, and must be paid for in fees at the same rate as any other plaint for an account extending to a like amount of valuation.—7 Bom. 535.

Where in a suit a cause of action appears which in itself is cognizable by an inferior Court, such a Court is not justified in rejecting the suit, merely because it is one in which the District Court might have jurisdiction under sec. 265 of the Contract Act.—8 Bom. 272.

A suit for winding up an expired partnership can be brought in the District Court under sec. 265 of the Contract Act (IX of 1872) and sec.

213 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882). But the jurisdiction of ordinary Courts is not annulled by the special jurisdiction assigned to the District Court by sec. 265 of the Contract Act. Any one having a cause of action arising out of partnership transactions may sue the person liable in the ordinary Court. The jurisdiction of such Court, however, does not extend to the case of a winding up of an expired partnership. This jurisdiction is given to the District Court by sec. 265 of the Contract Act, and when, along with a new mode of relief, particular jurisdiction is constituted to administer it, the Court specified and no other, is to be understood as vested with authority.—8 Bom. 272

Where an application under sec. 265 of the Contract Act is presented to the District Court, that Court should determine whether it is (1) a mere case of administration, or (2) of administration sought as a cloak for strictly litigious claim, or (3) of administration plus claims involving litigation of the ordinary means. In the second case it may properly decline a function that properly belongs to an ordinary Court. In the last case it may either assume the administration of the estate of the firm, or decline to do so, according to circumstances subject to appeal, and in the former case it may either itself deal with all questions arising between the expartners, or if these be of such a kind as to form separable subjects of adjudication, it can direct the party in each case interested to proceed on the particular alleged cause of action in the Court having ordinary jurisdiction, and itself use the result as an element of its administration.—8 Bom. 272.

Section 265 of the Indian Contract Act (IX of 1872) assumes that there has been a partnership, and enables the District Court to wind it up, but does not deprive the ordinary Courts of their jurisdiction in cases seriously contested as to the existence of partnership. Such contests ought to be decided as in ordinary cases.—8 Bom. 494.

Vunmalidass Jiva, Jagjivan Hemji and Shamji Jadowji, being large shareholders in The Great Eastern Spinning and Weaving Mills, Limited, entered into an agreement in October, 1873, to cause the said company to be wound up and to form a new company to take over its assets and liabilities, and to cause themselves to be appointed agents of the new company under the firm of Vunmalidass, Jagjivan, Shamji and Company, and under that name to act as agents of the new company—subject to the terms of the agreement. The agreement provided that the firm of Vunmalidass, Jagjivan, Shamji and Company should take the agency of the new company for a period of thirty years; that of the profits to be derived by the said firm out of the agency Vunmalidass, should receive 39 cents, Jagjivan 31 cents, and Shamji 30 cents; that, in case of a vacancy in the firm of Vunmalidass, Jagjivan, Shamji and Company caused by the death or retirement of any of the partners, the nominee of the dying or retiring partner should be admitted into partnership, and should receive the share of such partner, and should exercise all his authority. In pursuance of this agreement The Great Eastern Spinning and Weaving Mills, Limited, was wound up, and a new company, called "The New Great Eastern Spinning and Weaving Company, Limited," was formed and registered. Both the memorandum and articles of association of the said new company contained clauses providing that the firm of Vunmalidass, Jagjivan, Shamji and Company, or whatever member or members that firm for the time consist of, should be agents of the company so long as the said firm should carry on business in Bombay, or until they should resign. The firm of Vunmalidass, Jagjivan, Shamji and Company having been constituted under the said agreement, became the agents of the said company, and continued to act as such down to the date of the present suit. No other business was done by the firm, and the three partners divided the profits realized by the firm out of the agency business in the shares specified in the agreement as above mentioned. Vunmalidass died in 1874, leaving a will whereby, in exercise of the right vested in him by the agreement, he nominated and appointed his wife Kessar as his successor in the firm, and she accordingly became and was recognized as a partner therein. In August, 1875, she assigned her interest in the firm to Hormasji Nowroji Sakalatwalla, and he thereupon became a partner, and received 39 cents of the profits. In November, 1876, Jagjivan assigned his interest in the firm (31 cents) to Hormasji Nowroji Sakalatwalla and Shamji Jadowji of which 21 cents became the property of Hormasji Nowroji Sakalatwalla and 10 cents the property of Shamji Jadowji, the firm henceforth consisting only of these two partners of whom the former received, in all, 60 cents of the profits and the latter 40 cents. In November, 1882, Hormasji Nowroji Sakalatwalla died, leaving a will whereby he appointed his wife, the plaintiff Bachubai, his executrix, and left all his property to her for life, and after her death to his son. The will did not refer to the firm, or nominate any successor in the partnership.

In the present suit Bachubai as executrix claimed to be entitled to 60 cents or shares in the firm of Vunmalidass, Jagjivan, Shamji and Company up to the date of the testator's death, and to a like share in the profits earned subsequently to his death, or to be earned by the firm so long as it continued to carry on the said agency business of the company. The defendant admitted the right of the plaintiff to the share claimed in the profits earned prior to the testator's death, but resisted her claim to any portion of the subsequent profits:—Held (1) on the authority of Beamish v. Beamish that the testator's will did not operate as an exercise of the power of nominating a successor in the firm so as to make the plaintiff a partner.

That, having regard to the nature of the duties of the firm as agents and to the language of the agreement constituting the firm, coupled with the fact that there was no capital employed in the business, it must have been intended that, in default of nomination of a successor by a retiring or deceased partner, the agency should be carried on by the continuing or surviving partners in the name of the firm, and that the interest of the testator in the firm upon his death therefore survived to the defendant:—Held, also, that, although the plaintiff was entitled to an account up to the date of the testator's death, she was not entitled to a share of the good-will as an asset of the firm. The good-will of a firm is attached to the name, and in the present case, by the partnership agreement itself, the name was to be used by the surviving partners or partner for their own benefit. That arrangement took away all value from the good-will, if, indeed, it was consistent with its being asset at all. The testator's estate had proved insolvent; and previously to the filing of this suit an administration suit had been filed by creditors. By a decree made in that suit on the 23rd January, 1883, a receiver (Watkins) had been appointed, who was made a co-plaintiff with the executrix in the present suit. It was contended on behalf of the defendant that there was a misjoinder, the receiver being only entitled to sue for what might be due to the testator's estate up to the date of his death:—Held, that there was no misjoinder. The receiver might have sued for every thing that was due to the estate, but for greater safety the executrix was added as a plaintiff.—9 Bom. 536.

A suit for dissolution of a partnership, taking the accounts of the firm, and a declaration of the plaintiff's right to a certain share in the debts due to the firm, was, with reference to the value of the subject-matter of the suit, instituted in the Court of a Munsif. The matters in difference in the suit were eventually referred to arbitration under chap. xxxvii of the Code of Civil Procedure, and an award was given declaring the plaintiff entitled to recover a certain sum from the defendant. Judgment and a decree were given in accordance with the award. Held that the award, notwithstanding the question whether the suit was cognizable in the Munsif's Court, was entertainable.—Bhagirath v. Ram Ghulam (I. L. R., 4 Al. 283) referred to. Held also that the suit was not an application of the nature mentioned in sec. 215 of the Contract Act, 1872, but a suit of the nature mentioned in sec. 205 of the Civil Procedure Code, and was, therefore, not cognizable in the District Court, but in the Court of the Munsiff. Prosad Doss Mullick v. Russick Lall Mullick (I. L. R., 7 Cal. 157) and Ram Chunder Shaha v. Manick Chunder Banikya (I. L. R., 7 Cal. 428) dissented from.—5 Al. 500.

266. Extraordinary partnerships, such as partnerships with limited liability, incorporated partnerships, and joint-stock companies, shall be regulated by the law for the time being in force relating thereto.*

ACT No. XXVI. OF 1881.

RECEIVED THE G.-G.'S ASSENT ON THE 9TH DECEMBER 1881.

(As amended up to date.)

An Act to define and amend the law relating to Promissory Notes, Bills of Exchange, and Cheques.

WHEREAS it is expedient to define and amend the law relating to promissory notes, bills of exchange and cheques; It is hereby enacted as follows:—

Preamble.

CHAPTER I.

PRELIMINARY.

Short title.

1. This Act may be called “The Negotiable Instruments Act, 1881:”

Local extent.

Saving of usages relating to hundis, &c.

It extends to the whole of British India; but nothing herein contained affects the Indian Paper Currency Act, 1882, section twenty-five,* or affects any local usage relating to any instrument in an oriental language: Provided that such usages may be excluded by any words in the body of the instrument, which indicate an intention that the legal relations of the parties thereto shall be governed by this Act; and it shall come into force on the first day of March 1882.

Interpretation-clause.

2. [Repealed by Act XII. of 1891.]

“Banker.”

3. In this Act—

“Banker” includes also persons or a corporation or company acting as bankers; and

“Notary public.”

“Notary public” includes also any person appointed by the Governor-General in Council to perform the functions of a Notary public under this Act.

* See Act XX. of 1882, sec. 2.

CHAPTER II.

OF NOTES, BILLS, AND CHEQUES.

4. A "promissory note" is an instrument in writing (not being a bank-note or a currency-note) containing an unconditional undertaking, signed by the maker, to pay a certain sum of money only to, or to the order of, a certain person, or to the bearer of the instrument.

"Promissory note."

Illustrations.

A signs instruments in the following terms:—

(a.) "I promise to pay B or order Rupees 500."

(b.) "I acknowledge myself to be indebted to B in Rupees 1,000, to be paid on demand for value received."

(c.) "Mr. B, I O U Rupees 1,000."

(d.) "I promise to pay B Rupees 500 and all other sums which shall be due to him."

(e.) "I promise to pay B Rupees 500, first deducting thereout any money which he may owe me."

(f.) "I promise to pay B Rupees 500 seven days after my marriage with C."

(g.) "I promise to pay B Rupees 500 on D's death, provided D leaves me enough to pay that sum."

(h.) "I promise to pay B Rupees 500, and to deliver to him my black horse on 1st January next."

The instruments respectively marked (a) and (b) are promissory notes. The instruments respectively marked (c), (d), (e), (f), (g), and (h), are not promissory notes.

Notes.

The plaintiffs brought a suit on an alleged promissory note of the defendants for Rs. 2,125. The note was in Gujarati, in the form of an account, on a loose sheet of paper. After reciting that the defendant had borrowed the said sum of Rs. 2,125 on personal security, and that interest was to run thereon at a specified rate, the document continued as follows:—"The same (i. e., the sum borrowed with interest) are payable whenever dhani (the owner or lender) may demand payment thereof. The defendant contended that the note in question was in form one payable to "bearer on demand," and as such illegal and void, as being in contravention of the provisions of sec. 25 of the Paper Currency Act (XX of 1882). Held, that dhani was not in the ordinary or the commercial language of this Presidency equivalent to "bearer" in the sense that word was employed in the Paper Currency and Negotiable Instruments Acts, and that the document in question was not, therefore, a negotiable instrument, nor obnoxious to the provisions of the former Act, and there was no objection to a suit founded upon it.—I. L. R., 16 Bom. 689.

Held that the following instrument was so vague and indefinite in its terms that it could not be regarded as a promissory note. "I, J. M. C., do hereby promise to pay at Allahabad to the manager of the Agra Savings' Bank, Limited, the sum of Rs. 10 on or before the 15th day of October, 1876, and a similar sum monthly every succeeding month, for full value consideration received: dated the 9th September, 1876."—5 Al. 562.

5. A “bill of exchange” is an instrument in writing containing an unconditional order, signed by the maker, directing a certain person to pay a certain sum of money only to, or to the order of, a certain person, or to the bearer of the instrument.

“Bill of exchange.”

A promise or order to pay is not “conditional,” within the meaning of this section and section four by reason of the time for payment of the amount or any instalment thereof being expressed to be on the lapse of a certain period after the occurrence of a specified event which, according to the ordinary expectation of mankind, is certain to happen, although the time of its happening may be uncertain.

The sum payable may be “certain” within the meaning of this section and section four, although it includes future interest, or is payable at an indicated rate of exchange, or is according to the course of exchange, and although the instrument provides that, on default of payment of an instalment, the balance unpaid shall become due.

The person to whom it is clear that the direction is given, or that payment is to be made, may be a “certain person” within the meaning of this section and section four, although he is mis-named or designated by description only.

Notes.

Where a promissory note is payable by instalments, a suit to recover the whole amount on default made in payment of the first instalment cannot be brought under Act V of 1866.—I. L. R., 1 Cal. 130.

N. & Co., the Managing Agents of the Baree Tea Company, had a general banking account with the Oriental Bank Corporation, which account they were allowed to overdraw on having the overdraft properly secured. Under the Articles of Association of the Baree Tea Company, N. & Co. had power to “draw, accept, endorse, and negotiate on behalf of the Company all such cheques, promissory notes, drafts &c., as should be necessary for enabling them to carry on the business of the Company.” Purporting to act under this power N. & Co., drew a bill of exchange on the Managing Agents of the Company, which was accepted by the latter, and endorsed by N. & Co. to the Oriental Corporation, who credited the amount to N. & Co.’s general account. The account was drawn out by cheques drawn by N. & Co. personally, without reference to the Baree Tea Company, and there was no proof that the money had been applied for the purposes of the Baree Tea Company.

Held, in an action by the Oriental Bank against the Baree Tea Company, that the latter were not liable on the bills as acceptors.—9 Cal. 880.

Bill of Exchange—Suit on bill by indorsee for value against acceptor—Sale by indorsee of goods against which bill drawn—Acceptor entitled to credit for amount of proceeds of sale.—6 Bom. 1.

On the 3rd March 1881 N drew a bill in English at Cawnpore in favour of F on a Calcutta firm and gave it to F's agent, who did not understand English. F's agent kept the bill till the 10th March 1881 without ascertaining its nature. On that date the Calcutta firm on which the bill was drawn became insolvent. F subsequently sued N for the money he had paid for the bill.

Held, that assuming that the sale of the bill was void by reason of both parties being under a mistake as to the bill, yet, F could not recover the amount of the bill from N, because his agent had been guilty of gross negligence in taking the bill and keeping it so long without ascertaining its nature and applying for redress.—4 Al. 334.

6. A “cheque” is a bill of exchange drawn on a specified banker, and not expressed to be payable otherwise than on demand.

“Cheque.”

Note.

On the 29th April, 1889, the plaintiff's brother-in-law, Mahomed Ebrahim, purchased from the defendants' branch at Mauritius a bill of exchange drawn on their Bank of Bombay payable on demand to the plaintiff's order in Bombay. The bill was in the following terms:—

“The New Oriental Bank Corporation, Limited, Mauritius, 29th April, 1889.”

“On demand pay this first of exchange (second of same tenor and date being unpaid) to the order of Sallemann Hussein six hundred and forty Rupees for value received. For the New Oriental Bank Corporation, Limited.

“To

The New Oriental Bank Corporation, Limited, Bombay.”

Mahomed Ebrahim sent the bill by registered post to Bombay addressed to the plaintiff. During its transmission it was stolen. On the 18th May it was presented by some person to the defendant's Bank in Bombay bearing a forged endorsement in blank of the plaintiff, and it was paid by the Bank. The plaintiff as soon as he heard of the loss of the bill made inquiry at the Bank and was told that the bill had been paid. On being shown the endorsement, the plaintiff pronounced it to be a forgery and demanded payment of the bill, which the Bank refused. He thereupon filed this suit against the Bank as drawers of the bill.

Held—(1) That the document was an “ambiguous instrument” within the meaning of sec. 17 of the Negotiable Instruments Act (XXVI of 1881), and that the plaintiff had elected to treat it as a bill of exchange. (2) That treating the document as a bill of exchange the defendants, as drawers, were discharged by the payment to the de facto holder who presented it for payment. Where the point sought to be raised in review had not been raised or argued by either party, but was first taken by the Court itself in giving its opinion upon the case referred to it, the Court granted a review, observing as follows:—“The question arising in this case is not a question merely between two parties, but is one of great general commercial importance, and under the circumstances, and on the very special grounds I have mentioned, we think that the review ought to be granted.—I. L. R., 15 Bom. 267.

7. The maker of a bill of exchange or cheque is called the “drawer;” the person thereby directed to pay is called the “drawee.”

“Drawer.” “Drawee.”

When in the bill or in any indorsement thereon the name of any person is given in addition to the drawee to be resorted to in case of need, such person is called a “drawee in case of need.”

After the drawee of a bill has signed his assent upon the bill, or, if there are more parts thereof than one, upon one of such parts, and delivered the same, or given notice of such signing to the holder or to some person on his behalf, he is called the “acceptor.”

“When a bill of exchange has been noted or protested for non-acceptance or for better security,”* and any person accepts it supra protest for honour of the drawer or of any one of the indorsers, such person is called an “acceptor for honour.”

The person named in the instrument, to whom or to whose order the money is by the instrument directed to be paid, is called the “payee.”

8. The “holder” of a promissory note, bill of exchange, or cheque means any person entitled in his own name to the possession thereof, and to receive or recover the amount due thereon from the parties thereto.

Where the note, bill, or cheque, is lost or destroyed, its holder is the person so entitled at the time of such loss or destruction.

Notes.

K executed a promissory note on demand for Rs. 6,000 in favor of S in 1882. In 1884 S, by an agreement in writing assigned all her property, including the promissory note, to M., but did not endorse over the promissory note to M. M assigned his rights in the promissory note to a bank in payment of a debt. In a suit by M, and the bank against K and S to recover the principal and interest due under the note :—Held, that the plaintiffs could not maintain the suit.—I. L. R., 11 Madr. 290.

See I. L. R., 15 Bom. 267, noted under sec. 6.

9. “Holder in due course” means any person who for consideration became the possessor of a promissory note, bill of exchange, or cheque, if payable to bearer, or the payee or indorsee thereof, if payable to, or to the order of, a payee,

* The words quoted have been substituted by Act II. of 1885, sec. 2, for the following : “When acceptance is refused, and the bill is protested for non-acceptance.”

before the amount mentioned in it became payable, and without having sufficient cause to believe that any defect existed in the title of the person from whom he derived his title.

Note.—See I. L. R., 11 Madr. 290, noted under sec. 8.

10. “Payment in due course” means payment in accordance with the apparent tenor of the instrument in good faith and without negligence to any person in possession thereof under circumstances which do not afford a reasonable ground for believing that he is not entitled to receive payment of the amount therein mentioned.

11. A promissory note, bill of exchange, or cheque, drawn or made in British India, and made payable in, or drawn upon any person resident in, British India, shall be deemed to be an inland instrument.

12. Any such instrument, not so drawn, made, or made payable, shall be deemed to be a foreign instrument.

13. A “negotiable instrument” means a promissory note, bill of exchange, or cheque, expressed to be payable to a specified person or his order, or to the order of a specified person or to the bearer thereof, or to a specified person or the bearer thereof.

Note.

Defendant borrowed money from the Bank (plaintiffs) on the security of some Government Pro. Notes. One of the Pro. Notes sent to the Public Debt Office for enforcement was detained as being stolen Note. The Bank sued for money lent to defendant.

Plea—Plaintiffs are not entitled to payment without delivering all the securities. Held, that the defendant was not justified in refusing payment until the stolen note was given up to him.

When an instrument such as the note in question has been stolen, the person from whom it was stolen has a good title to it, not only as against the thief, but as against any person who subsequently becomes the holder unless such person can prove that the instrument had become negotiable at the time it was stolen, and that he obtained it bona fide for value without notice of the theft.—I. L. R., 5 Cal. 654.

When a promissory note, bill of exchange, or cheque, is transferred to any person, so as to constitute that person the holder thereof, the instrument is said to be negotiated.

15. When the maker or holder of a negotiable instrument signs the same otherwise than as such maker, for the purpose of negotiation, on the back or face thereof, or on a slip of paper annexed thereto, or so signs for the same purpose a stamped paper intended to be completed as a negotiable instrument, he is said to indorse the same, and is called the "indorser."

16. If the indorser signs his name only, the indorsement is said to be "in blank," and, if he adds a direction to pay the amount mentioned in the instrument to, or to the order of, a specified person, the indorsement is said to be "in full;" and the person so specified is called the "indorsee" of the instrument.

17. Where an instrument may be construed either as a promissory note or bill of exchange, the holder may, at his election, treat it as either, and the instrument shall be thence forward treated accordingly.

Note.—See I. L. R., 15 Bom. 267, noted under sec. 6.

18. If the amount undertaken or ordered to be paid is stated differently in figures and in words, the amount stated in words shall be the amount undertaken or ordered to be paid.

19. A promissory note or bill of exchange, in which no time for payment is specified, and a cheque, are payable on demand.

20. Where one person signs and delivers to another a paper stamped in accordance with the law relating to negotiable instruments then in force in British India, and either wholly blank or having written thereon an incomplete negotiable instrument, he thereby gives prima facie authority to the holder thereof to make or complete, as the case may be, upon it a negotiable instrument, for any amount specified therein, and not exceeding the amount covered by the stamp. The person so signing shall be liable upon such instrument, in the capacity in which he signed the same, to any holder in due course for such amount: Provided that no person other than a holder in due course shall recover from the person delivering the instrument anything in excess of the amount intended by him to be paid thereunder.

In a promissory note or bill of exchange the expressions “at sight” and “on presentment” mean on demand. The expression “after sight” means, in a promissory note, after presentment for sight, and, in a bill of exchange after acceptance, or noting for non-acceptance, or protest for non-acceptance.

 “After sight.”

22. The maturity of a promissory note or bill of exchange is the date at which it falls due.

“Maturity.”

Every promissory note or bill of exchange which is not expressed to be payable on demand, at sight, or on presentment, is at maturity on the third day after the day on which it is expressed to be payable.

Days of grace.

23. In calculating the date at which a promissory note or bill of exchange, made payable a stated number of months after date or after sight, or after a certain event, is at maturity, the period stated shall be held to terminate on the day of the month which corresponds with the day on which the instrument is dated or presented for acceptance or sight, or noted for non-acceptance, or protested for non-acceptance, or the event happens, or, where the instrument is a bill of exchange made payable a stated number of months after sight, and has been accepted for honour, with the day on which it was so accepted. If the month in which the period would terminate has no corresponding day, the period shall be held to terminate on the last day of such month.

Calculating maturity of bill or note payable so many months after date or sight.

(a.) A negotiable instrument, dated 29th January 1878, is made payable at one month after date. The instrument is at maturity on the third day after the 28th February 1878.

(b.) A negotiable instrument, dated 30th August, 1878, is made payable three months after date. The instrument is at maturity on the 3rd December 1878.

(c.) A promissory note or bill of exchange, dated 31st August, 1878, is made payable three months after date. The instrument is at maturity on the 3rd December 1878.

24. In calculating the date at which a promissory note or bill of exchange made payable a certain number of days after date or after sight, or after a certain event, is at maturity, the day of the date, or of present-

Calculating maturity of bill or note payable so many days after date or sight.

ment for acceptance or sight, or of protest for non-acceptance, or on which the event happens, shall be excluded.

25. When the day on which a promissory note or bill of exchange is at maturity is a public holiday, the instrument shall be deemed to be due on the next preceding business-day.

When day of maturity is a holiday.

Explanation.—The expression “public holiday” includes Sundays : New-Year’s day, Christmas day : if either of such days falls on a Sunday, the next following Monday : Good Friday ; and any other day declared by the Local Government, by notification in the official Gazette, to be a public holiday.

CHAPTER III.

PARTIES TO NOTES, BILLS, AND CHEQUES.

26. Every person capable of contracting, according to the law to which he is subject, may bind himself and be bound by the making, drawing, acceptance, indorsement, delivery, and negotiation of a promissory note, bill of exchange, or cheque.

Capacity to make, &c., promissory notes, &c.

A minor may draw, indorse, deliver, and negotiate such instruments so as to bind all parties except himself.

Nothing herein contained shall be deemed to empower a corporation to make, indorse, or accept such instruments except in cases in which, under the law for the time being in force, they are so empowered.

27. Every person capable of binding himself or of being bound, as mentioned in section twenty-six, may so bind himself or be bound by a duly authorized agent acting in his name.

Agency.

A general authority to transact business, and to receive and discharge debts, does not confer upon an agent the power of accepting or indorsing bills of exchange so as to bind his principal.

An authority to draw bills of exchange does not of itself import an authority to indorse.

28. An agent who signs his name to a promissory note, bill of exchange, or cheque, without indicating thereon that he signs as agent, or that he does not intend thereby to incur personal responsibility, is liable personally on the instrument, except to those who induced him to sign upon the belief that the principal only would be held liable.

Liability of agent signing.

29. A legal representative of a deceased person, who signs his name to a promissory note, bill of exchange, or cheque, is liable personally thereon, unless he expressly limits his liability to the extent of the assets received by him as such.

Liability of legal representative signing.

30. The drawer of a bill of exchange or cheque is bound, in case of dishonour by the drawee or acceptor thereof, to compensate the holder, provided due notice of dishonour has been given to, or received by, the drawer as hereinafter provided.

Liability of drawer.

Note.—See I. L. R., 15 Bom. 267, noted under sec. 6.

31. The drawee of a cheque having sufficient funds of the drawer in his hands properly applicable to the payment of such cheque must pay the cheque when duly required so to do, and, in default of such payment, must compensate the drawer for any loss or damage caused by such default.

Liability of drawee of cheque.

32. In the absence of a contract to the contrary, the maker of a promissory note and the acceptor before maturity of a bill of exchange are bound to pay the amount thereof at maturity according to the apparent tenor of the note or acceptance respectively, and the acceptor of a bill of exchange at or after maturity is bound to pay the amount thereof to the holder on demand.

Liability of maker of note and acceptor of bill.

In default of such payment as aforesaid, such maker or acceptor is bound to compensate any party to the note or bill for any loss or damage sustained by him and caused by such default.

Note.—See I. L. R., 15 Bom. 267, noted under sec. 6.

33. No person except the drawee of a bill of exchange, or all or some of several drawees, or a person named therein as a drawee in case of need, or an acceptor for honour, can bind himself by an acceptance.

Only drawee can be acceptor except in need or for honour.

34. Where there are several drawees of a bill of exchange who are not partners, each of them can accept it for himself, but none of them can accept it for another without his authority.

Acceptance by several drawees not partners.

35. In the absence of a contract to the contrary, whoever indorses and delivers a negotiable instrument before maturity, without, in such indorsement, expressly excluding or making conditional his own liability, is bound thereby to every subsequent holder, in case of dishonour by the drawee, acceptor, or maker, to compensate such holder for any loss or damage caused to him by such dishonour, provided due notice of dishonour has been given to, or received by, such indorser as hereinafter provided.

Liability of indorser.

Every indorser after dishonour is liable as upon an instrument payable on demand.

Notes.

A plaintiff suing on a bill of exchange the drawer, acceptor, and endorser, where the endorsement has been made before maturity and without restriction, is entitled to a decree against all three defendants; a decree containing a condition exempting the endorser from liability until the plaintiff has exhausted his remedies against the drawer and acceptor is therefore illegal.—I. L. R., 16 Cal. 804.

A cheque was indorsed in blank by a European British subject who, at that time, was under twenty years of age, and was temporarily residing, and not domiciled, in British India. It was subsequently dishonoured, and a suit was then brought by the Bank which had cashed the cheque, to recover the amount from the indorser and the drawer. The former alleged that the drawer had requested him to sign his name to the cheque, saying that it was a mere matter of form, and he would not be liable for the amount, and that the Bank would only cash the cheque when indorsed by him, and in consequence he consented to indorse it, but that he did so without any intention of incurring liability as indorser, that he received no consideration, and that his indorsement was in blank, and not in favour of the Bank, and was converted into a special indorsement without his knowledge and consent. The Court held that at the time of indorsement, the indorser was a minor under English Law, and dismissed the suit on the ground of minority:—Held that if the Court was satisfied of the fact of the defendant's minority, it should have complied with the provisions of sec. 443 of the Civil Procedure Code:—Held that, assuming the indorser to have been sui juris, the indorsement, taken in conjunction with the facts proved, established a contract by which the indorser was bound to pay the cheque.

Per Straight, Offg. C. J. and Duthoit, J.—That it was by no means clear or certain that there was any rule of international law recognising the lex loci contractus as governing the capacity of the person to contract but that assuming such a rule to be established, the specific limitation of the Indian Majority Act (IX of 1875) to "domiciled persons" necessarily excluded its application to European British subjects not domiciled in British India; that sec. 11 of the Contract Act must be interpreted as declaring that the capacity of a person in point of age to enter into a binding contract was to be determined by his own personal law, wherever such law was to be found; that this rule was not affected by the Majority Act, so far as concerned persons temporarily residing but not domiciled in British India whose contractual capacity was still left to be governed by the personal law of their personal domicile ; and that such law in the case of European British subjects, was the common law of England, which recognized twenty-one as the age of majority.

Per Oldfield, J.—That by the rule of the jus gentium as hitherto understood and recognized in England, the lex loci would govern in respect to the capacity to contract, but that in framing the Indian Majority Act which was the lex loci on the subject in India, the Legislature would appear not to have adopted that rule, but, by limiting the operation of the Act to persons domiciled in British India, to have intentionally excluded from its operation persons not domiciled there, and to have left such persons to be governed by the law of their domicile.

Per Brodhurst, J.—That Act IX of 1875 was intended by the Legislature to be applicable, and in fact was applicable, only to European British subjects domiciled in these parts of India referred to in sec. 1, and that to any other European British subject whose domicile was in England, but who was temporarily residing in any part of India above alluded to, the privileges and disabilities of minority attached until he had attained the age of twenty-one years.—I. L. R., 7 Al. 490.

36. Every prior party to a negotiable instrument is liable thereon to a holder in due course until the instrument is duly satisfied.

Liability of prior parties to holder in due course.

37. The maker of a promissory note or cheque, the drawer of a bill of exchange until acceptance, and the acceptor, are, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, respectively liable thereon as principal debtors, and the other parties thereto are liable thereon as sureties for the maker, drawer, or acceptor, as the case may be.

Maker, drawer, and acceptor principals.

Note.

Suit by the endorsee against the maker of a promissory note, dated 9th August 1886. The plaintiff was aware that the note was made by the defendant for the accommodation of the acceptor, Watson and Co., with whom the plaintiff had large dealings. On the 4th August 1887, Watson and Co. executed in favour of the plaintiff and another creditor a mortgage of certain property to secure the amount then due by Watson and Co., including the amount due to the plaintiff on the promissory note: the mortgage contained a personal covenant by Watson and Co. to pay the sums due, together with interest, on the 4th August 1888; and the mortgagees practically took over the whole business of the mortgagor and it was intended that they should work it for his benefit up to that date. The promissory note fell due in June 1887, but was not presented to the defendant for payment:—Held, that plaintiff, by accepting the mortgage, promised to give time to Watson and Co., and thus rendered it impossible for him to sue Watson and Co. had the defendant as surety called on him to do so, and that the defendant was accordingly discharged. Pogose v. Bank of Bengal, I. L. R., 3 Cal. 174, distinguished. Semble.—The maker of a promissory note is not discharged by the holder's failure to present it at due date.—I. L. R., 13 Mad. 172.

Prior party a principal in respect of each subsequent party.

38. As between the parties so liable as sureties, each prior party is, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, also liable thereon as a principal debtor in respect of each subsequent party.

Illustration.

A draws a bill payable to his own order on B, who accepts. A afterwards indorses the bill to C, C to D, and D to E. As between E and B, B is the principal debtor, and A, C, and D, are his sureties. As between E and A, A is the principal debtor, and C and D are his sureties. As between E and C, C is the principal debtor, and D is his surety.

39. When the holder of an accepted bill of exchange enters into any contract with the acceptor which, under section 134 or 135 of the Indian Contract Act, 1872, would discharge the other parties, the holder may expressly reserve his right to charge the other parties, and in such case they are not discharged.

Suretyship.

Note.—See I. L. R., 13 Madr. 172, noted under sec. 37.

40. Where the holder of a negotiable instrument, without the consent of the indorser, destroys or impairs the indorser's remedy against a prior party, the indorser is discharged from liability to the holder to the same extent as if the instrument had been paid at maturity.

Discharge of indorser's liability.

Illustration.

A is the holder of a bill of exchange made payable to the order of B, which contains the following indorsements in blank :

First indorsement, "B."

Second indorsement, "Peter Williams."

Third indorsement, "Wright & Co."

Fourth indorsement, "John Rozario."

This bill A puts in suit against John Rozario, and strikes out, without John Rozario's consent, the indorsements by Peter Williams and Wright & Co. A is not entitled to recover anything from John Rozario.

41. An acceptor of a bill of exchange already indorsed is not relieved from liability by reason that such indorsement is forged, if he knew or had reason to believe the indorsement to be forged when he accepted the bill.

Acceptor bound, although indorsement forged.

42. An acceptor of a bill of exchange drawn in a fictitious name, and payable to the drawer's order, is not, by reason that such name is fictitious, relieved from liability to any holder in due course claiming under an indorsement by the same hand as the drawer's signature, and purporting to be made by the drawer.

Acceptance of bill drawn in fictitious name.

Negotiable instrument made, &c., without condition.

43. A negotiable instrument made, drawn, accepted, indorsed, or transferred without consideration, or for a consideration which fails, creates no obligation of payment between the parties to the transaction. But, if any such party has transferred the instrument with or without indorsement to a holder for consideration, such holder, and every subsequent holder deriving title from him, may recover the amount due on such instrument from the transferor for consideration or any prior party thereto.

Exception I.—No party for whose accommodation a negotiable instrument has been made, drawn, accepted, or indorsed, can, if he have paid the amount thereof, recover thereon such amount from any person who became a party to such instrument for his accommodation.

Exception II.—No party to the instrument, who has induced any other party to make, draw, accept, indorse, or transfer the same to him for a consideration which he has failed to pay or perform in full, shall recover thereon an amount exceeding the value of the consideration (if any) which he has actually paid or performed.

44. When the consideration for which a person signed a promissory note, bill of exchange, or cheque, consisted of money, and was originally absent in part, or has subsequently failed in part, the sum which a holder standing in immediate relation with such signer is entitled to receive from him is proportionally reduced.

Explanation.—The drawer of a bill of exchange stands in immediate relation with the acceptor. The maker of a promissory note, bill of exchange, or cheque, stands in immediate relation with the payee, and the indorser with his indorsee. Other signers may by agreement stand in immediate relation with a holder.

Illustration.

A draws a bill on B for Rs. 500, payable to the order of A. B accepts the bill, but subsequently dishonours it by non-payment. A sues B on the bill. B proves that it was accepted for value as to Rs. 400, and as an accommodation to the plaintiff as to the residue. A can only recover Rs. 400.

45. Where a part of the consideration for which a person signed a promissory note, bill of exchange, or cheque, though not consisting of money, is ascertainable in money without collateral enquiry, and there has been a failure of that part, the sum which a holder standing in immediate relation with such signer is entitled to receive from him is proportionally reduced.

45A.* Where a bill of exchange has been lost before it is over-due, the person who was the holder of it may apply to the drawer to give him another bill of the same tenor, giving security to the drawer, if required, to indemnify him against all persons whatever in case the bill alleged to have been lost shall be found again.

If the drawer, on request as aforesaid, refuses to give such duplicate bill, he may be compelled to do so.

CHAPTER IV.

OF NEGOTIATION.

46. The making, acceptance, or indorsement of a promissory note, bill of exchange, or cheque, is completed by delivery, actual or constructive.

As between parties standing in immediate relation, delivery to be effectual must be made by the party making, accepting, or indorsing the instrument, or by a person authorized by him in that behalf.

As between such parties and any holder of the instrument other than a holder in due course, it may be shown that the instrument was delivered conditionally or for a special purpose only, and not for the purpose of transferring absolutely the property therein.

A promissory note, bill of exchange, or cheque payable to bearer, is negotiable by the delivery thereof.

A promissory note, bill of exchange, or cheque payable to order, is negotiable by the holder by indorsement and delivery thereof.

47. Subject to the provisions of section fifty-eight, a promissory note, bill of exchange, or cheque payable to bearer, is negotiable by delivery thereof.

Exception.—A promissory note, bill of exchange, or cheque delivered on condition that it is not to take effect except in a certain event, is not negotiable (except in the hands of a holder for value without notice of the condition), unless such event happens.

* Sec. 45A has been inserted by Act 11. of 1885, sec. 3.

Illustrations.

(a.) A, the holder of a negotiable instrument payable to bearer, delivers it to B's agent to keep for B. The instrument has been negotiated.

(b.) A, the holder of a negotiable instrument payable to bearer, which is in the hands of A's banker, who is at the time the banker of B, directs the banker to transfer the instrument to B's credit in the banker's account with B. The banker does so, and accordingly now possesses the instrument as B's agent. The instrument has been negotiated, and B has become the holder of it.

48. Subject to the provisions of section fifty-eight, a promissory note, bill of exchange, or cheque payable to the order of a specified person, or to a specified person or order, is negotiable by the holder by indorsement and delivery thereof.

49. The holder of a negotiable instrument indorsed in blank may, without signing his own name, by writing above the indorser's signature a direction to pay to any other person as indorsee, convert the indorsement in blank into an indorsement in full; and the holder does not thereby incur the responsibility of an indorser.

50. The indorsement of a negotiable instrument followed by delivery transfers to the indorsee the property therein with the right of further negotiation; but the indorsement may, by express words, restrict or exclude such right, or may merely constitute the indorsee an agent to indorse the instrument, or to receive its contents for the indorser, or for some other specified person.

Illustrations.

B signs the following indorsements on different negotiable instruments payable to bearer :—

(a.) "Pay the contents to C only."

(b.) "Pay C for my use."

(c.) "Pay C or order for the account of B."

(d.) "The within must be credited to C."

These indorsements exclude the right of further negotiation by C."

(e.) "Pay C."

(f.) "Pay C value in account with the Oriental Bank."

(g.) "Pay the contents to C, being part of the consideration in a certain deed of assignment executed by C to the indorser and others."

These indorsements do not exclude the right of further negotiation by C.

Who may negotiate.

51. Every sole maker, drawer, payee, or indorsee, or all of several joint makers, drawers, payees, or indorsees of a negotiable instrument, may, if the negotiability of such instrument has not been restricted or excluded as mentioned in section fifty, indorse and negotiate the same.

Explanation.—Nothing in this section enables a maker or drawer to indorse or negotiate an instrument, unless he is in lawful possession or is holder thereof ; or enables a payee or indorsee to indorse or negotiate an instrument unless he is holder thereof.

Illustration.

A bill is drawn payable to A or order. A indorses it to B, the indorsement not containing the words “or order” or any equivalent words. B may negotiate the instrument.

52. The indorser of a negotiable instrument may, by express words in the indorsement, exclude his own liability thereon, or make such liability or the right of the indorsee to receive the amount due thereon depend upon the happening of a specified event, although such event may never happen.

Indorser who excludes his own liability or makes it conditional.

Where an indorser so excludes his liability, and afterwards becomes the holder of the instrument, all intermediate indorsers are liable to him.

Illustrations.

(a) The indorser of a negotiable instrument signs his name, adding the words—“Without recourse.”

Upon this indorsement he incurs no liability.

(b.) A is the payee and holder of a negotiable instrument. Excluding personal liability by an indorsement “without recourse,” he transfers the instrument to B, and B indorses it to C, who indorses it to A. A is not only reinstated in his former rights, but has the rights of an indorsee against B and C.

53. A holder of a negotiable instrument, who derives title from a holder in due course, has the rights thereon of that holder in due course.

Holder deriving title from holder in due course.

54. Subject to the provisions hereinafter contained as to crossed cheques, a negotiable instrument indorsed in blank is payable to the bearer thereof, even although originally payable to order.

Instrument indorsed in blank.

55. If a negotiable instrument, after having been indorsed in blank, is indorsed in full, the amount of it cannot be claimed from the indorser in full except by the person to whom it has been indorsed in full, or by one who derives title through such person.

Conversion of indorsement in blank into indorsement in full.

56. No writing on a negotiable instrument is valid for the purpose of negotiation if such writing purports to transfer only a part of the amount appearing to be due on the instrument; but, where such amount has been partly paid, a note to that effect may be indorsed on the instrument, which may then be negotiated for the balance.

57. The legal representative of a deceased person cannot negotiate, by delivery only, a promissory note, bill of exchange, or cheque payable to order, and indorsed by the deceased, but not delivered.

58. When a negotiable instrument has been lost, or has been obtained from any maker, acceptor, or holder thereof by means of an offence or fraud, or for an unlawful consideration, no possessor or indorsee who claims through the person who found or so obtained the instrument is entitled to receive the amount due thereon from such maker, acceptor, or holder, or from any party prior to such holder, unless such possessor or indorsee is, or some person through whom he claims was, a holder thereof in due course.

59. The holder of a negotiable instrument, who has acquired it after dishonor, whether by non-acceptance or non-payment, with notice thereof, or after maturity, has only, as against the other parties, the rights thereon of his transferor :

Provided that any person who, in good faith and for consideration, becomes the holder, after maturity, of a promissory note or bill of exchange made, drawn, or accepted without consideration, for the purpose of enabling some party thereto to raise money thereon, may recover the amount of the note or bill from any prior party.

Illustration.

The acceptor of a bill of exchange, when he accepted it, deposited with the drawer certain goods as a collateral security for the payment of the bill, with power to the drawer to sell the goods and apply the proceeds in discharge of the bill if it were not paid at maturity. The bill not having been paid at maturity, the drawer sold the goods and retained the proceeds, but indorsed the bill to A. A's title is subject to the same objection as the drawer's title.

60. A negotiable instrument may be negotiated (except by the maker, drawee, or acceptor after maturity) until payment or satisfaction thereof by the maker, drawee, or acceptor at or after maturity, but not after such payment or satisfaction.

Instrument negotiable till payment or satisfaction.

CHAPTER V.

OF PRESENTMENT.

61. A bill of exchange payable after sight must, if no time or place is specified therein for presentment, be presented to the drawee thereof for acceptance, if he can, after reasonable search, be found, by a person entitled to demand acceptance, within a reasonable time after it is drawn, and in business-hours on a business-day. In default of such presentment, no party thereto is liable thereon to the person making such default.

If the drawee cannot, after reasonable search, be found, the bill is dishonoured.

If the bill is directed to the drawee at a particular place, it must be presented at that place; and, if at the due date for presentment he cannot, after reasonable search, be found there, the bill is dishonoured.

Where authorised by agreement or usage, a presentment through the post-office by means of a registered letter is sufficient.*

Notes.

A hundi was drawn in Calcutta upon a firm at Jeypore, and made payable on arrival at the place. The hundi reached Jeypore, on the 5th April; but was not presented for payment until the 29th of that month, when it was dishonoured, and soon after drawee's firm became insolvent:—Held, that the hundi was presented within reasonable time, and the delay which occurred in its presentation did not absolve the drawers from liability. In considering the question whether a hundi has been presented within reasonable time, regard should be had to the situation and interests of both drawer and payee, and to the distance of the place where the hundi is drawn from that where it is to be accepted.—I. L. R., 11 Cal. 344.

Presentation for acceptance within reasonable time is a condition precedent to a right of action on a bill or hundi payable after sight. Where the drawer had not assets in the hands of the drawee at or subsequent to the date of the hundi:—Held, that the question of presentation within reasonable time was immaterial.—10 Bom. 346.

* This para has been added by Act II. of 1885, sec. 4.

In a suit on an indemnity bond executed by way of collateral security by the maker of six hundies, it appeared that three of the hundies were paid and when three which were unpaid were presented to the maker, he did not at once insist upon want of notice of dishonour or on non-presentment as a ground of discharge:—Held, that since the defendant did not prove that the drawee had effects of his to meet the hundies on presentment, or that he had sustained damage by reason of the want of notice of dishonour, the plaintiff was entitled to a decree.—14 Madr. 470.

62. A promissory note, payable at a certain period after sight, must be presented to the maker thereof for sight (if he can, after reasonable search, be found) by a person entitled to demand payment, within a reasonable time, after it is made, and in business-hours on a business-day. In default of such presentment, no party thereto is liable thereon to the person making such default.

The holder must, if so required by the drawee of a bill of exchange presented to him for acceptance, allow the drawee twenty-four hours (exclusive of public holidays) to consider whether he will accept it.

64. Promissory notes, bills of exchange, and cheques, must be presented for payment to the maker, acceptor, or drawee thereof, respectively, by or on behalf of the holder as hereinafter provided.

Where authorized by agreement or usage, a presentment through the post-office by means of a registered letter is sufficient.*

Exception.—Where a promissory note is payable on demand, and is not payable at a specified place, no presentment is necessary in order to charge the maker thereof.

65. Presentment for payment must be made during the usual hours of business, and, if at a banker's, within banking hours.

A promissory note or bill of exchange, made payable at a specified period after date or sight thereof, must be presented for payment at maturity.

Note.—See I. L. R., 13 Madr. 172, noted under sec. 37.

Presentment for payment of promissory note payable by instalments.

67. A promissory note payable by instalments must be presented for payment on the third day after the date fixed for payment of each instalment; and non-payment on such presentment has the same effect as non-payment of a note at maturity.

68. A promissory note, bill of exchange, or cheque, made, drawn, or accepted payable at a specified place, and not elsewhere, must, in order to charge any party thereto, be presented for payment at that place.

Presentment for payment of instrument payable at specified place, and not elsewhere.

69. A promissory note or bill of exchange made, drawn, or accepted payable at a specified place, must, in order to charge the maker or drawer thereof, be presented for payment at that place.

Instrument payable at specified place.

70. A promissory note or bill of exchange, not made payable as mentioned in sections sixty-eight and sixty-nine, must be presented for payment at the place of business (if any), or at the usual residence, of the maker, drawee, or acceptor thereof, as the case may be.

Presentment where no exclusive place specified.

71. If the maker, drawee, or acceptor of a negotiable instrument, has no known place of business or fixed residence, and no place is specified in the instrument for presentment for acceptance or payment, such presentment may be made to him in person wherever he can be found.

Presentment when maker, &c., has no known place of business or residence.

72. A cheque must, in order to charge the drawer, be presented at the bank upon which it is drawn before the relation between the drawer and his banker has been altered to the prejudice of the drawer.

Presentment of cheque to charge drawer.

73. A cheque must, in order to charge any person except the drawer, be presented within a reasonable time after delivery thereof by such person.

Presentment of cheque to charge any other person.

74. Subject to the provisions of section thirty-one, a negotiable instrument payable on demand must be presented for payment within a reasonable time after it is received by the holder.

Presentment of instrument payable on demand.

75. Presentment for acceptance or payment may be made to the duly authorized agent of the drawee, maker, or acceptor, as the

Presentment by or to representative of deceased, or assignee of insolvent.

case may be, or, where the drawee, maker, or acceptor has died, to his legal representative, or, where he has been declared an insolvent, to his assignee.

76. No presentment for payment is necessary, and the instrument is dishonoured at the due date for presentment in any of the following cases:—

When presentment unnecessary.

(a) if the maker, drawee, or acceptor, intentionally prevents the presentment of the instrument, or, if, the instrument being payable at his place of business, he closes such place on a business-day during the usual business hours, or, if, the instrument being payable at some other specified place, neither he nor any person authorized to pay it attends at such place during the usual business hours, or, if, the instrument not being payable at any specified place, he cannot, after due search, be found;

(b) as against any party sought to be charged therewith, if he has engaged to pay notwithstanding non-presentment;

(c) as against any party if, after maturity, with knowledge that the instrument has not been presented—he makes a part-payment on account of the amount due on the instrument, or promises to pay the amount due thereon in whole or in part, or otherwise waives his right to take advantage of any default in presentment for payment;

(d) as against the drawer, if the drawer could not suffer damage from the want of such presentment.

77. When a bill of exchange, accepted payable at a specified bank, has been duly presented there for payment and dishonored, if the banker so negligently or improperly keeps, deals with, or delivers back such bill as to cause loss to the holder, he must compensate the holder for such loss.

Liability of banker for negligently dealing with bill presented for payment.

CHAPTER VI.

OF PAYMENT AND INTEREST.

78. Subject to the provisions of section eighty-two, clause (c), payment of the amount due on a promissory note, bill of exchange,

To whom payment should made.

or cheque, must, in order to discharge the maker or acceptor, be made to the holder of the instrument.

Note.—See I. L. R., 15 Bom. 267, noted under sec. 6.

79. When interest at a specified rate is expressly made payable on a promissory note or bill of exchange, interest shall be calculated at the rate specified, on the amount of the principal money due thereon, from the date of the instrument, until tender or realization of such amount, or until such date after the institution of a suit to recover such amount as the Court directs.

80. When no rate of interest is specified in the instrument, interest on the amount due thereon shall, except in cases provided for by the Code of Civil Procedure, section 532,* be calculated at the rate of six per centum per annum, from the date at which the same ought to have been paid by the party charged, until tender or realization of the amount due thereon, or until such date after the institution of a suit to recover such amount as the Court directs.

Explanation.—When the party charged is the indorser of an instrument dishonoured by non-payment, he is liable to pay interest only from the time that he receives notice of the dishonor.

81. Any person liable to pay, and called upon by the holder thereof to pay, the amount due on a promissory note, bill of exchange, or cheque, is, before payment, entitled to have it shown, and is, on payment, entitled to have it delivered up to him, or, if the instrument is lost or cannot be produced, to be indemnified against any further claim thereon against him.

CHAPTER VII.

OF DISCHARGE FROM LIABILITY ON NOTES, BILLS, AND CHEQUES.

82. The maker, acceptor, or indorser, respectively, of a negotiable instrument, is discharged from liability thereon—

(a) to a holder thereof who cancels such acceptor's or indorser's name with intent to discharge him, and to all parties claiming under such holder ;

by cancellation ;

* See Act XIV. of 1882, sec. 3.

(b) to a holder thereof who otherwise discharges such maker, acceptor, or indorser, and to all parties deriving title under such holder by release ;
after notice of such discharge ;

(c) to all parties thereto, if the instrument is payable to bearer, or has been indorsed in blank, by payment.
and such maker, acceptor, or indorser, makes payment in due course of the amount due thereon.

83. If the holder of a bill of exchange allows the drawee more than twenty-four hours, exclusive of public holidays, to consider whether he will accept the same, all previous parties not consenting to such allowance are thereby discharged from liability to such holder.
Discharge by allowing drawee more than twenty-four hours to accept.

84. When the holder of a cheque fails to present it for payment within a reasonable time, and the drawer thereof sustains loss or damage from such failure, he is discharged from liability to the holder.
When cheque not duly presented and drawer damaged thereby.

85. Where a cheque payable to order purports to be indorsed by or on behalf of the payee, the drawee is discharged by payment in due course.
Cheque payable to order.

Note.—See I. L. R., 15 Bom. 267, noted under sec. 6.

86. If the holder of a bill of exchange acquiesces in a qualified acceptance, or one limited to part of the sum mentioned in the bill, or which substitutes a different place or time for payment, or which, where the drawees are not partners, is not signed by all the drawees, all previous parties whose consent is not obtained to such acceptance are discharged as against the holder and those claiming under him, unless, on notice given by the holder, they assent to such acceptance.
Parties not consenting discharged by qualified or limited acceptance.

Explanation.—An acceptance is qualified—

(a) where it is conditional, declaring the payment to be dependent on the happening of an event therein stated ;

(b) where it undertakes the payment of part only of the sum ordered to be paid ;

(c) where, no place of payment being specified on the order, it undertakes the payment at a specified place, and not otherwise or elsewhere ; or where, a place of payment being specified in the order, it undertakes the payment at some other place, and not otherwise or elsewhere ;

(d) where it undertakes the payment at a time other than that at which, under the order, it would be legally due.

87. Any material alteration of a negotiable instrument renders the same void as against any one who is a party thereto at the time of making such alteration, and does not consent thereto, unless it was made in order to carry out the common intention of the original parties ; and any such alteration, if made by an indorsee, discharges his indorser from all liability to him in respect of the consideration thereof.

Effect of material alteration.

Alteration by indorsee.

The provisions of this section are subject to those of Sections twenty, forty-nine, eighty-six, and one-hundred and twenty-five.

88. An acceptor or indorser of a negotiable instrument is bound by his acceptance or indorsement, notwithstanding any previous alteration of the instrument.

Acceptor or indorser bound notwithstanding previous alteration.

Payment of instrument on which alteration is not apparent.

89. Where a promissory note, bill of exchange, or cheque, has been materially altered, but does not appear to have been so altered, or where a cheque is presented for payment which does not, at the time of presentation, appear to be crossed, or to have had a crossing which has been obliterated, payment thereof by a person or banker liable to pay, and paying the same according to the apparent tenor thereof at the time of payment and otherwise in due course, shall discharge such person or banker from all liability thereon ; and such payment shall not be questioned by reason of the instrument having been altered, or the cheque crossed.

90. If a bill of exchange which has been negotiated is, at or after maturity, held by the acceptor in his own right, all rights of action thereon are extinguished.

Extinguishment of rights of action on bill in acceptor's hands.

CHAPTER VIII.

OF NOTICE OF DISHONOUR.

91. A bill of exchange is said to be dishonoured by non-acceptance when the drawee, or one of several drawees not being partners, makes default in acceptance upon being duly required to accept the bill, or where presentment is excused, and the bill is not accepted.

Where the drawee is incompetent to contract, or the acceptance is qualified, the bill may be treated as dishonoured.

92. A promissory note, bill of exchange, or cheque, is said to be dishonoured by non-payment, when the maker of the note, acceptor of the bill, or drawee of the cheque, makes default in payment upon being duly required to pay the same.

Note.—See I. L. R., 15 Bom. 267, noted under sec. 6.

93. When a promissory note, bill of exchange, or cheque, is dishonoured by non-acceptance or non-payment, the holder thereof, or some party thereto who remains liable thereon, must give notice that the instrument has been so dishonoured to all other parties whom the holder seeks to make severally liable thereon, and to some one of several parties whom he seeks to make jointly liable thereon.

Nothing in this section renders it necessary to give notice to the maker of the dishonoured promissory note, or the drawee or acceptor of the dishonoured bill of exchange or cheque.

Note.

In the absence of any local usage to the contrary it is just and equitable that the doctrine of notice of dishonour propounded in the Negotiable Instruments Act (XXVI of 1881) should be applied to hundi in the vernacular, the "reasonable time" within which such notice is to be given being determined according to the circumstances of the case. Held, therefore, that where the holder of such a hundi, which had been dishonoured, sued the prior indorsors on it, without having given them such notice, and did not prove that they could not suffer damage for want of such notice, the suit must fail.—I. L. R., 6 Al. 78.

94. Notice of dishonour may be given to a duly authorized agent of the person to whom it is required to be given, or, where he has died, to his legal representative, or, where he has been declared an insolvent, to his assignee; may be oral or written; may, if written, be sent by post; and may be in any form; but it must inform the party to whom it is given, either in express terms or by reasonable intendment, that the instrument has been dishonoured, and in what way, and that he will be held liable thereon; and it must be given within a reasonable time after dishonour, at the place of business or (in case such party has no place of business) at the residence of the party for whom it is intended.

If the notice is duly directed and sent by post and miscarries, such miscarriage does not render the notice invalid.

Note.

A hundi was drawn in Calcutta upon a firm at Jeypore, and made payable on arrival at the place. The hundi reached Jeypore on the 5th April; but was not presented for payment until the 29th April, when it was dishonoured, and soon after the drawee's firm became insolvent:

Held, that the hundi was presented within reasonable time, and the delay which occurred in its presentation did not absolve the drawers from liability.

In considering the question whether a hundi has been presented within reasonable time, regard should be had to the situation and interests of both drawer and payee, and to the distance of the place where the hundi is drawn from that where it is to be accepted.—I. L. R., 11 Cal. 344.

See I. L. R., 6 Al. 78, noted under sec. 93.

95. Any party receiving notice of dishonour must, in order to render any prior party liable to himself, give notice of dishonour to such party within a reasonable time, unless such party otherwise receives due notice as provided by Section ninety-three.

96. When the instrument is deposited with an agent for presentment, the agent is entitled to the same time to give notice to his principal as if he were the holder giving notice of dishonour, and the principal is entitled to a further like period to give notice of dishonour.

97. When the party to whom notice of dishonour is despatched is dead, but the party despatching the notice is ignorant of his death, the notice is sufficient.

Note.—See I. L. R., 6 Al. 78, noted under sec. 93.

98. No notice of dishonour is necessary.

(a) when it is dispensed with by the party entitled thereto;

(b) in order to charge the drawer, when he has countermanded payment;

(c) when the party charged could not suffer damage for want of notice ;

(d) when the party entitled to notice cannot, after due search, be found ; or the party bound to give notice is, for any other reason, unable, without any fault of his own, to give it ;

(e) to charge the drawers, when the acceptor is also a drawer ;

(f) in the case of a promissory note which is not negotiable ;

(g) when the party entitled to notice, knowing the facts, promises unconditionally to pay the amount due on the instrument.

Notes.

Previous formal written notice of dishonor of hundi is not necessary before suit brought, unless it can be shewn that the parties charged have been prejudiced by such omission.—I. L. R., 3 Cal. 339.

See I. L. R., 6 Al. 78, noted under sec 93.

CHAPTER IX.

OF NOTING AND PROTEST.

99. When a promissory note or bill of exchange has been dishonoured by non-acceptance or non-payment, the holder may cause such dishonour to be noted by a notary public upon the instrument, or upon a paper attached thereto, or partly upon each.

Noting.

Such note must be made within a reasonable time after dishonour, and must specify the date of dishonour, the reason (if any) assigned for such dishonour, or, if the instrument has not been expressly dishonoured, the reason why the holder treats it as dishonoured, and the notary's charges.

100. When a promissory note or bill of exchange has been dishonoured by non-acceptance or non-payment, the holder may, within a reasonable time, cause such dishonour to be noted and certified by a notary public. Such certificate is called a protest.

Protest.

When the acceptor of a bill of exchange has become insolvent, or his credit has been publicly impeached before the maturity of the bill, the holder may, within a reasonable time, cause a notary public to demand better security of the acceptor, and, on its being refused, may, within a reasonable time, cause such facts to be noted and certified as aforesaid. Such certificate is called a protest for better security.

Protest for better security.

Contents of protest.

101. A protest under section one-hundred must contain—

(a) either the instrument itself, or a literal transcript of the instrument and of everything written or printed thereupon ;

(b) the name of the person for whom and against whom the instrument has been protested ;

(c) a statement that payment or acceptance, or better security, as the case may be, has been demanded of such person by the notary public ; the terms of his answer (if any), or a statement that he gave no answer, or that he could not be found ;

(d) when the note or bill has been dishonoured, the place and time of dishonour, and, when better security has been refused, the place and time of refusal ;

(e) the subscription of the notary public making the protest ;

(f) in the event of an acceptance for honour or of a payment for honour, the name of the person by whom, of the person for whom, and the manner in which, such acceptance or payment was offered and effected.

A notary public may make the demand mentioned in clause (c) of this section either in person or by his clerk, or, where authorized by agreement or usage, by registered letter.*

102. When a promissory note or bill of exchange is required by law to be protested, notice of such protest must be given instead of notice of dishonour, in the same manner and subject to the same conditions ; but the notice may be given by the notary public who makes the protest.

103. All bills of exchange drawn payable at some other place than the place mentioned as the residence of the drawee, and which are dishonoured by non-acceptance, may, without further presentment to the drawee, be protested for non-payment, in the place specified for payment, unless paid before or at maturity.

Protest for non-payment after dishonour by non-acceptance.

* This para, has been added by Act II. of 1885, sec. 5.

104. Foreign bills of exchange must be protested for dishonour when such protest is required by the law of the place where they are drawn.

Protest of foreign bills.

104A.* For the purposes of this Act, where a bill or note is required to be protested within a specified time or before some further proceeding is taken, it is sufficient that the bill has been noted for protest before the expiration of the specified time or the taking of the proceeding; and the formal protest may be extended at any time thereafter as of the date of the noting.*

When noting equivalent to protest.

CHAPTER X. OF REASONABLE TIME.

105. In determining what is a reasonable time for presentment for acceptance or payment, for giving notice of dishonour, and for noting, regard shall be had to the nature of the instrument and the usual course of dealing with respect to similar instruments; and, in calculating such time, public holidays shall be excluded.

Reasonable time.

Note.—See I. L. R., 11 Cal. 344, noted under sec. 61.

106. If the holder and the party to whom notice of dishonour is given carry on business or live (as the case may be) in different places, such notice is given within a reasonable time if it is despatched by the next post or on the day next after the day of dishonour.

Reasonable time of giving notice of dishonour.

If the said parties carry on business or live in the same place, such notice is given within a reasonable time if it is despatched in time to reach its destination on the day next after the day of dishonour.

Note.—See I. L. R., 11 Cal. 344, noted under sec. 61.

107. A party receiving notice of dishonour, who seeks to enforce his right against a prior party, transmits the notice within a reasonable time if he transmits it within the same time after its receipt as he would have had to give notice if he had been the holder.

Reasonable time for transmitting such notice.

Note.—See I. L. R., 11 Cal. 344, noted under sec. 61.

* Sec. 104A has been inserted by Act II, of 1885, sec. 6.

CHAPTER XI.

OF ACCEPTANCE AND PAYMENT FOR HONOUR AND REFERENCE
IN CASE OF NEED.

108. When a bill of exchange has been noted or protested for non-acceptance or for better security, any person not being a party already liable thereon may, with the consent of the holder, by writing on the bill, accept the same for the honour of any party thereto.*

109. A person desiring to accept for honour must, by writing on the bill under his hand, declare that he accepts under protest the protested bill for the honour of the drawer or of a particular indorser whom he names, or generally for honour.†

110. Where the acceptance does not express for whose honour it is made, it shall be deemed to be made for the honour of the drawer.

111. An acceptor for honour binds himself to all parties subsequent to the party for whose honour he accepts to pay the amount of the bill if the drawee do not; and such party and all prior parties are liable in their respective capacities to compensate the acceptor for honour for all loss or damage sustained by him in consequence of such acceptance.

But an acceptor for honour is not liable to the holder of the bill unless it is presented, or (in case the address given by such acceptor on the bill is a place other than the place where the bill is made payable) forwarded for presentment, not later than the day next after the day of its maturity.

112. An acceptor for honour cannot be charged unless the bill has, at its maturity, been presented to the drawee for payment, and has been dishonoured by him, and noted or protested for such dishonour.

113. When a bill of exchange has been noted or protested for non-payment, any person may pay the same for the honour of any party liable to pay the same, provided that the person so paying, "or

* The second sentence of this section has been repealed by Act II. of 1885, sec. 7, and has therefore been omitted.

† As amended by Act II. of 1885, sec. 8.

his agent in that behalf"* has previously declared before a notary public the party for whose honour he pays, and that such declaration has been recorded by such notary public.

114. Any person so paying is entitled to all the rights, in respect of the bill, of the holder at the time of such payment, and may recover from the party for whose honour he pays all sums so paid, with interest thereon, and with all expenses properly incurred in making such payment.

115. Where a drawee in case of need is named in a bill of exchange or in any indorsement thereon, the bill is not dishonoured until it has been dishonoured by such drawee.

116. A drawee in case of need may accept and pay the bill of exchange without previous protest.

CHAPTER XII.

OF COMPENSATION.

117. The compensation payable in case of dishonour of a promissory note, bill of exchange, or cheque, by any party liable to the holder or any indorsee, shall (except in cases provided for by the Code of Civil Procedure, section 532†) be determined by the following rules:—

(a) the holder is entitled to the amount due upon the instrument, together with the expenses properly incurred in presenting, noting, and protesting it;

(b) When the person charged resides at a place different from that at which the instrument was payable, the holder is entitled to receive such sum at the current rate of exchange between the two places;

(c) an indorser who, being liable, has paid the amount due on the same, is entitled to the amount so paid, with interest at six per centum per annum from the date of payment until tender or realization thereof, together with all expenses caused by the dishonour and payment;

(d) when the person charged and such indorser reside at different places, the indorser is entitled to receive such sum at the current rate of exchange between the two places;

* The words quoted have been inserted by Act II. of 1885, sec. 9.

Act XIV. of 1882, sec. 3.

(e) the party entitled to compensation may draw a bill upon the party liable to compensate him, payable at sight or on demand, for the amount due to him, together with all expenses properly incurred by him. Such bill must be accompanied by the instrument dishonoured and the protest thereof (if any). If such bill is dishonoured, the party dishonouring the same is liable to make compensation thereof in the same manner as in the case of the original bill.

CHAPTER XIII.

SPECIAL RULES OF EVIDENCE.

118. Until the contrary is proved, the following presumptions shall be made:—

Presumptions as to negotiable instruments—

(a) that every negotiable instrument was made or drawn for consideration, and that every such instrument, when it has been accepted, indorsed, negotiated, or transferred, was accepted, indorsed, negotiated, or transferred, for consideration;

(b) that every negotiable instrument bearing a date was as to date; made or drawn on such date;

(c) that every accepted bill of exchange was accepted as to time of acceptance; within a reasonable time after its date and before its maturity;

(d) that every transfer of a negotiable instrument was as to time of transfer; made before its maturity;

(e) that the indorsements appearing upon a negotiable instrument were made in the order in which they appear thereon;

(f) that a lost promissory note, bill of exchange, or cheque, as to stamp; was duly stamped;

(g) that the holder of a negotiable instrument is a holder in due course: provided that, where the instrument has been obtained from its lawful owner, or from any person in lawful custody thereof, by means of an offence or fraud, or has been obtained from the maker or acceptor thereof by means of an offence or fraud, or for unlawful consideration, the burthen of proving that the holder is a holder in due course lies upon him.

In a suit upon an instrument which has been dishonoured, the Court shall, on proof of protest, presume the fact of dishonour, unless and until such fact is disproved.

120. No maker of a promissory note, and no drawer of a bill of exchange or cheque, and no acceptor of a bill of exchange for the honour of the drawer, shall, in a suit thereon by a holder in due course, be permitted to deny the validity of the instrument as originally made or drawn.

121. No maker of a promissory note, and no acceptor of a bill of exchange payable to, or to the order of, a specified person, shall, in a suit thereon by a holder in due course, be permitted to deny the payee's capacity, at the date of the note or bill, to indorse the same.

122. No indorser of a negotiable instrument shall, in a suit thereon by a subsequent holder, be permitted to deny the signature or capacity to contract of any prior party to the instrument.

CHAPTER XIV.

OF CROSSED CHEQUES.

123. Where a cheque bears across its face an addition of the words "and company" or any abbreviation thereof, between two parallel transverse lines, or of two parallel transverse lines simply, either with or without the words "not negotiable," that addition shall be deemed a crossing, and the cheque shall be deemed to be crossed generally.

124. Where a cheque bears across its face an addition of the name of a banker, either with or without the words "not negotiable," that addition shall be deemed a crossing, and the cheque shall be deemed to be crossed specially, and to be crossed to that banker.

125. Where a cheque is uncrossed, the holder may cross it generally or specially.

Where a cheque is crossed generally, the holder may cross it specially.

Where a cheque is crossed generally or specially, the holder may add the words "not negotiable."

Where a cheque is crossed specially, the banker to whom it is crossed may again cross it specially to another banker, his agent, for collection.

126. Where a cheque is crossed generally, the banker on whom it is drawn shall not pay it otherwise than to a banker.

Payment of cheque crossed generally.

Where a cheque is crossed specially, the banker on whom it is drawn shall not pay it otherwise than to the banker to whom it is crossed, or his agent, for collection.

Payment of cheque crossed specially.

127. Where a cheque is crossed specially to more than one banker, except when crossed to an agent for the purpose of collection, the banker on whom it is drawn shall refuse payment thereof.

Payment of cheque crossed specially more than once.

128. Where the banker on whom a crossed cheque is drawn has paid the same in due course, the banker paying the cheque, and (in case such cheque has come to the hands of the payee) the drawer thereof, shall respectively be entitled to the same rights, and be placed in the same position in all respects, as they would respectively be entitled to and placed in if the amount of the cheque had been paid to and received by the true owner thereof.

Payment in due course of crossed cheque.

129. Any banker paying a cheque crossed generally otherwise than to a banker, or a cheque crossed specially otherwise than to the banker to whom the same is crossed, or his agent, for collection, being a banker, shall be liable to the true owner of the cheque for any loss he may sustain owing to the cheque having been so paid.

Payment of crossed cheque out of due course.

130. A person taking a cheque crossed generally or specially, bearing in either case the words "not negotiable," shall not have, and shall not be capable of giving, a better title to the cheque than that which the person from whom he took it had.

Cheque bearing "not negotiable."

131. A banker who has, in good faith, and without negligence, received payment, for a customer, of a cheque crossed generally or specially to himself, shall not, in case the title to the cheque proves defective, incur any liability to the true owner of the cheque by reason only of having received such payment.

CHAPTER XV.

OF BILLS IN SETS.

132. Bills of exchange may be drawn in parts, each part being numbered, and containing a provision that it shall continue payable only so long as the others remain unpaid. All the parts together make a set; but the whole set constitutes only one bill, and is extinguished when one of the parts, if a separate bill, would be extinguished.

Set of bills.

Exception. When a person accepts or indorses different parts of the bill in favour of different persons, he and the subsequent indorsers of each part are liable on such part as if it were a separate bill.

133. As between holders in due course of different parts of the same set, he who first acquired title to his part is entitled to the other parts and the money represented by the bill.

Holder of first acquired part entitled to all.

CHAPTER XVI.

OF INTERNATIONAL LAW.

134. In the absence of a contract to the contrary, the liability of the maker or drawer of a foreign promissory note, bill of exchange, or cheque, is regulated in all essential matters by the law of the place where he made the instrument, and the respective liabilities of the acceptor and indorser by the law of the place where the instrument is made payable.

Law governing liability of maker, acceptor, or indorser of foreign instrument.

Illustration.

A bill of exchange was drawn by A in California where the rate of interest is 25 per cent, and accepted by B, payable in Washington, where the rate of interest is 6 per cent. The bill is endorsed in British India, and is dishonored. An action on the bill is brought against B in British India. He is liable to pay interest at the rate of 6 per cent. only; but, if A is charged as drawer, A is liable to pay interest at the rate of 25 per cent.

135. Where a promissory note, bill of exchange, or cheque, is made payable in a different place from that in which it is made or indorsed, the law of the place where it is made payable determines what constitutes dishonour, and what notice of dishonour is sufficient.

Law of place of payment governs dishonour.

Illustration.

A bill of exchange drawn and indorsed in British India, but accepted payable in France, is dishonoured. The indorsee causes it to be protested for such dishonour, and gives notice thereof in accordance with the law of France, though not in accordance with the rules herein contained in respect of bills, which are not foreign. The notice is sufficient.

136. If a negotiable instrument is made, drawn, accepted, or indorsed out of British India, but in accordance with the law of British India, the circumstance that any agreement evidenced by such instrument is invalid according to the law of the country wherein it was entered into does not invalidate any subsequent acceptance or indorsement made thereon in British India.

137. The law of any foreign country regarding promissory notes, bills of exchange, and cheques, shall be presumed to be the same as that of British India, unless and until the contrary is proved.

CHAPTER XVII.*

NOTARIES PUBLIC.

138. The Governor-General in Council may, from time to time, by notification in the official Gazette, appoint any person, by name or by virtue of his office, to be a notary public under this Act, and to exercise his functions as such within any local area, and may, by like notification, remove from office any notary public appointed under this Act.

139. The Governor-General in Council may, from time to time, by notification in the official Gazette, make rules consistent with this Act for the guidance and control of notaries public appointed under this Act, and may, by such rules (among other matters) fix the fees payable to such notaries.

SPECIFIC RELIEF.

ACT No. I. OF 1877.

RECEIVED THE G.-G.'S ASSENT ON THE 7TH FEBRUARY 1877.

An Act to define and amend the law relating to certain kinds of Specific Relief.

WHEREAS it is expedient to define and amend the law relating to certain kinds of specific relief obtainable in civil suits ; It is hereby enacted as follows :—

Preamble.

PART I.—PRELIMINARY.

Short title.

1. This Act may be called “ The Specific Relief Act, 1877 :”

Local extent.

It extends to the whole of British India, except the Scheduled Districts as defined in Act No. XIV of 1874.

Commencement.

And it shall come into force on the 1st day of

2. [Repealed by Act XII. of 1891.]

Interpretation-clause.

3. In this Act, unless there be something repugnant in the subject or context, ‘ obligation ’ includes every duty enforceable by law :

‘ obligation.’

‘ trust ’ includes every species of express, implied, or constructive fiduciary ownership :

‘ trust.’

‘ trustee ’ includes every person holding, expressly, by implication, or constructively, a fiduciary character ;

‘ trustee.’

Illustrations.

(a.) Z bequeaths land to A, ‘ not doubting that he will pay thereout an annuity of rupees 1,000 to B for his life. A accepts the bequest. A is a trustee within the meaning of this Act, for B, to the extent of the annuity.

(b.) A is the legal, medical, or spiritual adviser of B. By availing himself of his situation as such adviser, A gains some pecuniary advantage which might otherwise have accrued to B. A is a trustee for B, within the meaning of this Act, of such advantage.

(c.) A, being B’s banker, discloses for his own purpose the state of B’s account. A is a trustee, within the meaning of this Act, for B, of the benefit gained by him by means of such disclosure.

(d.) A, the mortgagee of certain leaseholds, renews the lease in his own name. A is a trustee, within the meaning of this Act, of the renewed lease, for those interested in the original lease.

(e.) A, one of several partners, is employed to purchase goods for the firm. A unknown to his co-partners, supplies them, at the market-price, with goods previously bought by himself when the price was lower, and thus makes a considerable profit. A is a trustee, for his co-partners, within the meaning of this Act, of the profit so made.

(f.) A, the manager of B's indigo-factory, becomes agent for C, a vendor of indigo seed, and receives, without B's assent, commission on the seed purchased from C for the factory. A is a trustee, within the meaning of this Act, for B, of the commission so received.

(g.) A buys certain land with notice that B has already contracted to buy it. A is a trustee, within the meaning of this Act, for B, of the land so bought.

(h.) A buys land from B, having notice that C is in occupation of the land. A omits to make any inquiry as to the nature of C's interest therein. A is a trustee, within the meaning of this Act, for C, to the extent of that interest.

'settlement' means any instrument (other than a will or codicil as defined by the Indian Succession Act) whereby the destination or devolution of successive interests in moveable or immoveable property is disposed of or is agreed to be disposed of :

'settlement.'

and all words occurring in this Act, which are defined in the Indian Contract Act, 1872, shall be deemed to have the meanings respectively assigned to them by that Act.

Words defined in Contract Act.

4. Except where it is herein otherwise expressly enacted, nothing in this Act shall be deemed—

(a) to give any right to relief in respect of any agreement which is not a contract ;

(b) to deprive any person of any right to relief, other than specific performance, which he may have under any contract ; or

(c) to affect the operation of the Indian Registration Act* on documents.

Specific relief how given.

5. Specific relief is given—

(a) by taking possession of certain property and delivering it to a claimant;

(b) by ordering a party to do the very act which he is under an obligation to do ;

* See Act III. of 1877, sec. 2.

by preventing a party from doing that which he is under an obligation not to do ;

(d) by determining and declaring the rights of parties otherwise than by an award of compensation ; or

(e) by appointing a Receiver.

Preventive relief.

6. Specific relief granted under Clause (c) of Section 5 is called preventive relief.

not granted to penal law.

7. Specific relief cannot be granted for the mere purpose of enforcing a penal law.

PART II.—OF SPECIFIC RELIEF.

CHAPTER I.

OF RECOVERING POSSESSION OF PROPERTY.

(a).—Possession of Immoveable Property.

8. A person entitled to the possession of specific immoveable property may recover it in the manner prescribed by the Code of Civil Procedure.*

Recovery of specific immoveable property.

9. If any person is dispossessed without his consent of immoveable property otherwise than in due course of law, he or any person claiming through him may, by suit,† recover possession thereof, notwithstanding any other title that may be set up in such suit.

Suit by person dispos-of immoveable pro-

Nothing in this section shall bar any person from suing to establish his title to such property and to recover possession thereof.

No suit under this section shall be brought against the Government.

No appeal shall lie from any order or decree passed in any suit instituted under this section, nor shall any review of any such order or decree be allowed.

Notes.

The mere discontinuance of payment of rent by tenants does not constitute a dispossession within the meaning of sec. 9 of the Specific Relief Act. The object of that section is to provide a speedy remedy for that class of cases where a person in physical possession of property is forcibly dispossessed from it against his will and consent.—I. L. R., 14 Cal. 649.

* See Act XIV. of 1882, sec. 3.

Here certain words, repealed by Act XII. of 1891, have been omitted.

Mere previous possession will not entitle a plaintiff to a decree for the recovery of possession except in a suit under sec. 9 of the Specific Relief Act, 1877, which must be brought within six months from the date of dispossession. *Khajah Enaetollah Chowdhry v. Held by the Full Bench (PRINSEP and PIGOT, JJ., dissenting).—A suit for the possession of a right to fish in a khal, the soil of which does not belong to the plaintiff, does not come within the provisions of sec. 9 of the Specific Relief Act. The right to refer to the "Objects and Reasons" of a Bill discussed.—19 Cal.

The plaintiff sued, under sec. 9 of the Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), to recover possession of certain lands which they alleged had been in their possession since 1856. They alleged that while retaining possession of the said land through caretakers appointed by them, they had been in the habit of yearly selling the grass of the land to purchasers who themselves cut the grass so purchased; that in 1878 the grass of the land for the ensuing year was sold to T; that in the month of August, 1879, the defendant forcibly dispossessed the plaintiffs of said land and prevented them and their servants and T from entering the same. Defendant No. 2 denied the dispossession, and disclaimed any interest in the land. Defendants Nos. 1 and 3 denied that the land in question belonged to the plaintiffs, and alleged that it was the property of A, of whom defendant No. 1 was manager, and No. 3 the lessee of the said land. They also alleged that the plaintiffs had tried to take forcible possession of the said land, and that defendant No. 1, acting on A's behalf, prevented them. They submitted that A was a necessary party to the suit. Held that the three defendants were properly made parties to the suit, and that A was not a necessary party. Defendant No. 1 (the lessee) had the physical occupation of the land sued for; but all three defendants not having made any declaration, in taking possession, that it was taken for one or two of their number, acquired it jointly, and handed on a derivative possession to the actual occupant which as against third parties ranked as their own. If it was properly assumed, they all had a right to defend it; if not, they might all be called on for restitution. As to A, he was not actually in possession, and had taken no personal part in the dispossession. He was said to be owner, but that did not imply that he committed the alleged acts of defendants, or insisted on his ownership. As he had not the physical possession of the land, it could not be assumed that he had the jural possession merely on the assertion of the defendants. He, therefore, having done no palpable wrong, was not a necessary party. Held, also, the defendant No. 2 was properly made a defendant, and that, in case the dispossession should be established, he should be retained as a defendant notwithstanding his disclaimer. It was possible that No. 3 held the land on terms beneficial to No. 2, and the disclaimer in the present suit would not estop No. 2 from enforcing these terms in a subsequent suit against No. 3. Where, under a contract between A and B, an exclusive occupation of immoveable property is given to A, he is the proper plaintiff in a suit for possession brought under sec.

9 of the Specific Relief Act (1 of 1877). If B desires to sue immediately on the possessory right, he should sue in A's name, though for an injury to the reversion he (B) may properly sue in his own name. The intention of the Specific Relief Act (1 of 1877), sec. 9, is not to be frustrated by any private arrangement under which the ejector has acted, or by which he may consent to hold on behalf of some other person. As between him and that person, his possession may be that of an agent, but to the former holder, he is the dispossessor: possession derived from him cannot be superior to his, and (the right of suit being given in general terms) is equally subject, as his, to the result of proceedings taken within the prescribed six months. A person who has been ejected from his property, in suing to recover it under sec. 9 of the Specific Relief Act (1 of 1877), may sue the actual ejector or the person under whose orders or by whose authority the actual ejector has acted, or he may sue both; but the wrong-doer who has taken possession is the one from whom primarily it is to be reclaimed. If a third party desire to maintain the expulsion as an act done on his behalf, it is for him to come forward and avow it. He may claim to be admitted as a defendant; but if he had himself a right to do what his agent has done, his right and his authority may be pleaded by the agent, and will be an effectual answer. The alleged owner or principal, therefore, is not a necessary party for the protection of the agent. The suit against the latter will fail if he acted on due authority, where that authority is shown. In a suit for ejectment a mere misstatement of the area of the land sought to be recovered, ought not to be regarded as anything more than a "false demonstration." If the space is precisely defined by other description, the statement of its measurement in square yards may be treated as surplusage, and of no consequence.—5 Bom. 208.

It is no answer to a suit for possession under sec. 9 of the Specific Relief Act, brought against a mortgagor by a mortgagee who has been forcibly dispossessed by the mortgagor, to allege that the mortgage and possession under it were obtained by the fraud of the mortgagee. The mortgagor's proper remedy was by way of a suit to set aside the mortgage and recover possession.—5 Bom. 446.

A trespasser who has been dispossessed is not entitled to bring a suit under sec. 9 of the Specific Relief Act 1 of 1879 or under Bombay Act III of 1876 to recover possession. Dadabhai Narsidas v. The Sub-Collector of Broach (7 Bom. H. C. Rep., 82, A. C. J.), Krishnarav Yashavant v. Vasudev Apaji Ghotikar (I. L. R., 8 Bom. 371) and Virjivandas Madhavdas v. Mahomed Alikhan Ibrahimkhau (I. L. R., 5 Bom., 208) referred to.—15 Bom. 685.

A possessory suit lies under sec. 9 of the Specific Relief Act when plaintiff's possession has been partially as well as when it has been wholly disturbed.—3 Madr. 250.

A right of ferry is immoveable property or an interest therein within the meaning of Specific Relief Act, sec. 9.—13 Madr. 54.

Per EDGE, C. J., STRAIGHT and TYRRELL, J. J. (MAHMOOD, J., dissentiente.) Section 9 of the Specific Relief Act is intended to provide a special summary remedy for a person who, being, whatever his title, in possession of immovable property, is ousted therefrom. That section does not debar a person who has been ousted by a trespasser from the possession of immovable property to which he has merely a possessory title from bringing a suit in ejectment on his possessory title after the lapse of six months from the date of his dispossession. Davison v. Gent, Asher v. Whitlock, Wise v. Ameer-unnessa Khatoon, Pemraj Bhavaniram v. Narayan Shivararam Khisti, Krishnarav Yashvant v. Vasudev Apaji Ghotikar and Muhammad Yusuf v. Sukh Nath referred to. Per MAHMOOD J. A person who is suing upon a merely possessory title to recover possession of immovable property against a person who has ousted him, must bring his suit, if at all, under sec. 9 of Act I of 1877, and therefore within six months from the date of his dispossession.—13 Al. 537.

See I. L. R., 4 Madr. 217, noted under sec. 622 of the Civil Procedure Code; 3 Madr. 104, noted under sec. 331 of the Civil Procedure Code.

(b).—Possession of Moveable Property.

- 10. A person entitled to the possession of specific moveable property may recover the same in the manner prescribed by the Code of Civil Procedure.*

Explanation I.—A trustee may sue under this section for the possession of property to the beneficial interest in which the person for whom he is trustee is entitled.

Explanation II.—A special or temporary right to the present possession of property is sufficient to support a suit under this section.

Illustrations.

(a.) A bequeaths land to B for his life, with remainder to C. A dies. B enters on the land, but C, without B's consent, obtains possession of the title-deeds. B may recover them from C.

(b.) A pledges certain jewels to B to secure a loan. B disposes of them before he is entitled to do so. A, without having paid or tendered the amount of the loan, sues B for possession of the jewels. The suit should be dismissed, as A is not entitled to their possession, whatever right he may have to secure their safe custody.

(c.) A receives a letter addressed to him by B. B gets back the letter without A's consent. A has such a property therein as entitles him to recover it from B.

(d.) A deposits books and papers for safe custody with B. B loses them, and C finds them, but refuses to deliver them to B when demanded. B may recover them from C, subject to C's right, if any, under sec. 168 of the Indian Contract Act, 1872.

(e.) A, a warehouse-keeper, is charged with the delivery of certain goods to Z, which B takes out of A's possession. A may sue B for the goods.

- 11. Any person having the possession or control of a particular article of moveable property, of which he is not the owner, may be compelled specifically to deliver it to the person entitled to its immediate possession, in any of the following cases:—

Liability of person in possession, not as owner, to deliver to person entitled to immediate possession.

* See Act XIV. of 1882, Sec. 3.

when the thing claimed is held by the defendant as the agent or trustee of the claimant;

(b) when compensation in money would not afford the claimant adequate relief for the loss of the thing claimed;

(c) when it would be extremely difficult to ascertain the actual damage caused by its loss;

(d) when the possession of the thing claimed has been wrongfully transferred from the claimant.

Illustrations.

of clause (a).—A, proceeding to Europe, leaves his furniture in charge of B as his agent during his absence. B, without A's authority, pledges the furniture to C, and C, knowing that B had no right to pledge the furniture, advertises it for sale. C may be compelled to deliver the furniture to A, for he holds it as A's trustee.

of clause (b).—Z has got possession of an idol belonging to A's family, and of which A is the proper custodian. Z may be compelled to deliver the idol to A.

of clause (c).—A is entitled to a picture by a dead painter and a pair of rare china vases. B has possession of them. The articles are of too special a character to bear an ascertainable market-value. B may be compelled to deliver them to A.

CHAPTER II.

OF THE SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE OF CONTRACTS.

(a) Contracts which may be specifically enforced.

12. Except as otherwise provided in this chapter, the specific performance of any contract may, in the discretion of the Court, be enforced—

Cases in which specific performance enforceable.

(a) when the act agreed to be done is in the performance, wholly or partly, of a trust;

(b) when there exists no standard for ascertaining the actual damage caused by the non-performance of the act agreed to be done;

(c) when the act agreed to be done is such that pecuniary compensation for its non-performance would not afford adequate relief; or

(d) when it is probable that pecuniary compensation cannot be got for the non-performance of the act agreed to be done.

Explanation.—Unless and until the contrary is proved, the Court shall presume that the breach of a contract to transfer immoveable property cannot be adequately relieved by compensation in money, and that the breach of a contract to transfer moveable property can be thus relieved.

Illustrations.

of clause (a).—A holds certain stock in trust for B. A wrongfully disposes of the stock. The law creates an obligation on A to restore the same quantity of stock to B, and B may enforce specific performance of this obligation.*

of clause (b).—A agrees to buy, and B agrees to sell, a picture by a dead painter and two rare China vases. A may compel B specifically to perform this contract, for there is no standard for ascertaining the actual damage which would be caused by its non-performance.

of clause (c).—A contracts with B to sell him a house for Rs. 1,000. B is entitled to a decree directing A to convey the house to him, he paying the purchase-money.

In consideration of being released from certain obligations imposed on it by its Act of Incorporation, a railway-company contract with Z to make an archway through their railway to connect lands of Z severed by the railway, to construct a road between certain specified points, to pay a certain annual sum towards the maintenance of this road, and also to construct a siding and a wharf as specified in the contract. Z is entitled to have this contract specifically enforced, for his interest in its performance cannot be adequately compensated for by money; and the Court may appoint a proper person to superintend the construction of the archway, road, siding, and wharf.

A contracts to sell, and B contracts to buy, a certain number of railway-shares of a particular description. A refuses to complete the sale. B may compel A specifically to perform this agreement, for the shares are limited in number and not always to be had in the market, and their possession carries with it the status of a shareholder, which cannot otherwise be procured.

A contracts with B to paint a picture for B, who agrees to pay therefor Rs. 1,000. The picture is painted. B is entitled to have it delivered to him on payment or tender of the Rs. 1,000.

of clause (d).—A transfers without endorsement, but for valuable consideration, a promissory note to B. A becomes insolvent, and C is appointed his assignee. B may compel C to endorse the note, for C has succeeded to A's liabilities, and a decree for pecuniary compensation for not endorsing the note would be fruitless.

Note.

The plaintiffs, alleging that the defendants, having executed in their favour and delivered to them a bond, the consideration for which was money due to them for rent of land and on a former bond, had received it back for registration, and, refusing to register it, had retained it, sued the defendants to have a similar bond executed and registered. Per MAHMOOD, J.—That it was doubtful whether the suit could be regarded as a suit for

The said illustration will, when the said Act II. of 1882 is extended to other territories, be repealed in such territories.

specific performance of a contract, and whether the only remedy open to the plaintiffs was not a suit for the money. It was only on the hypothesis that the mere writing of the original bond, in the absence of the registration and final delivery, did not amount to a performance of the contract, that the suit was entertainable at all. That, assuming the suit to be one for specific performance of a contract, the plaintiffs were not entitled to the specific relief which they sought, since they could obtain their full remedy by suing for the money in respect of which the fresh bond was sought to be executed; and they had failed to prove the exact terms of the original bond. Observations on the nature of the evidence required to prove a contract of which specific performance is sought. Per STUART, C. J.—That the suit was bad in form and substance, and there was no ground for the remedy by specific performance of a contract. If the alleged bond were in existence, a suit simply and directly for the recovery of the money claimed by the plaintiffs would have sufficed, for in such a suit facts relating to the loss or concealment of the bond might have been proved, and under the circumstances secondary evidence at least of the terms of the bond might have been admissible, or the plaintiffs might have found themselves in a position to make out their claim by other evidence; but if the plaintiffs considered it material to their case to have their claim on the bond, the loss or destruction of which could not be doubted, their proper course of proceeding was by a suit to restore the terms of the lost bond, or, as it was said in Courts of Equity in England, by a suit to obtain the benefit of the lost deed or instrument; and that, if the suit could be taken to be one affording such a remedy, it contained no sufficient materials to warrant it being held that the bond was of the tenor and in the terms alleged by the plaintiffs.—I. L. R., 5 Al. 44.

13. Notwithstanding anything contained in section 56 of the Indian Contract Act, a contract of which the subject has partially ceased to exist is not wholly impossible of performance because a portion of its subject-matter, existing at its date, has ceased to exist at the time of the performance.

Illustrations.

(a.) A contracts to sell a house to B for a lakh of Rupees. The day after the contract is made the house is destroyed by a cyclone. B may be compelled to perform his part of the contract by paying the purchase-money.

(b.) In consideration of a sum of money payable by B, A contracts to grant an annuity to B for B's life. The day after the contract has been made, B is thrown from his horse and killed. B's representative may be compelled to pay the purchase-money.

14. Where a party to a contract is unable to perform the whole of his part of it, but the part which must be left unperformed bears only a small proportion to the whole in value, and admits of compensation in money, the Court may, at the suit of either party, direct the specific performance of so much of the contract as can be performed, and award compensation in money for the deficiency.

Illustrations.

(a.) A contracts to sell to B a piece of land consisting of 100 bighas. It turns out that 98 bighas of the land belong to A, and the two remaining bighas to a stranger who refuses to part with them. The two bighas are not necessary for the use or enjoyment of the 98 bighas, nor so important for such use or enjoyment that the loss of them may not be made good in money. A may be directed, at the suit of B, to convey to B the 98 bighas, and to make compensation to him for not conveying the two remaining bighas; or B may be directed, at the suit of A, to pay to A, on receiving the conveyance and possession of the land, the stipulated purchase-money, less a sum awarded as compensation for the deficiency.

(b.) In a contract for the sale and purchase of a house and lands for two lakhs of rupees, it is agreed that part of the furniture should be taken at a valuation. The Court may direct specific performance of the contract, notwithstanding the parties are unable to agree as to the valuation of the furniture, and may either have the furniture valued in the suit and include it in the decree for specific performance, or may confine its decree to the house.

15. Where a party to a contract is unable to perform the whole of his part of it, and the part which must be left unperformed forms a considerable portion of the whole, or does not admit of compensation in money, he is not entitled to obtain a decree for specific performance. But the Court may, at the suit of the other party, direct the party in default to perform specifically so much of his part of the contract as he can perform, provided that the plaintiff relinquishes all claim to further performance, and all right to compensation, either for the deficiency, or for the loss or damage sustained by him through the default of the defendant.

(a.) A contracts to sell to B a piece of land consisting of 100 bighas. It turns out that 50 bighas of the land belong to A, and the other 50 bighas to a stranger, who refuses to part with them. A cannot obtain a decree against B for the specific performance of the contract; but, if B is willing to pay the price agreed upon, and to take the 50 bighas which belong to A, waiving all right to compensation either for the deficiency or for loss sustained by him through A's neglect or default, B is entitled to a decree directing A to convey those 50 bighas to him on payment of the purchase-money.

(b.) A contracts to sell to B an estate with a house and garden for a lakh of rupees. The garden is important for the enjoyment of the house. It turns out that A is unable to convey the garden. A cannot obtain a decree against B for the specific performance of the contract; but, if B is willing to pay the price agreed upon, and to take the estate and house without the garden, waiving all rights to compensation either for the deficiency or for loss sustained by him through A's neglect or default, B is entitled to a decree directing A to convey the house to him on payment of the purchase-money.

16. When a part of a contract, which, taken by itself, can and ought to be specifically performed, stands on a separate and independent footing from another part of the same contract which cannot or ought not to be specifically performed, the Court may direct specific performance of the former part.

17. The Court shall not direct the specific performance of a part of a contract except in cases coming under one or other of the three last preceding sections.

Note.

See I. L. R., 6 Cal. 328, noted under section 44 of the Civil Procedure Code.

18. Where a person contracts to sell or let certain property, having only an imperfect title thereto, the purchaser or lessee (except as otherwise provided by this chapter) has the following rights:—

(a) if the vendor or lessor has, subsequently to the sale or lease, acquired any interest in the property, the purchaser or lessee may compel him to make good the contract out of such interest ;

(b) where the concurrence of other persons is necessary to validate the title, and they are bound to convey at the vendor's or lessor's request, the purchaser or lessee may compel him to procure such concurrence ;

(c) where the vendor professes to sell unincumbered property, but the property is mortgaged for an amount not exceeding the purchase-money, and the vendor has, in fact, only a right to redeem it, the purchaser may compel him to redeem the mortgage, and to obtain a conveyance from the mortgagee ;

(d) where the vendor or lessor sues for specific performance of the contract, and the suit is dismissed on the ground of his imperfect title, the defendant has a right to a return of his deposit (if any) with interest thereon, to his costs of the suit, and to a lien for such deposit, interest, and costs on the interest of the vendor or lessor in the property agreed to be sold or let.

Note.

A member of an undivided Hindu family, consisting of himself, his adoptive son and his uncle, sold certain land belonging to the family to the plaintiff. In a suit by the plaintiff for a declaration of his title to, and for possession of, the land, it appeared that the sale was not justified by any circumstances of family necessity ; and that the above-mentioned adoptive son was the son of the paternal uncle of the adoptive father. During the pendency of the suit the undivided uncle died, having made a gift of his property to his daughter-in-law :—Held, (1) that the adoption was not invalid by reason of the above-mentioned circumstance ; (2) that the gift by the undivided uncle to his daughter-in-law was invalid ; (3) that the plaintiff was entitled to a moiety of the land sold to him.—I. L. R., 14 Madr. 459.

19. Any person suing for the specific performance of a contract may also ask for compensation for its breach, either in addition to, or in substitution for, such performance.

If in any such suit the Court decides that specific performance ought not to be granted, but that there is a contract between the parties which has been broken by the defendant, and that the plaintiff is entitled to compensation for that breach, it shall award him compensation accordingly.

If in any such suit the Court decides that specific performance ought to be granted, but that it is not sufficient to satisfy the justice of the case, and that some compensation for breach of the contract should also be made to the plaintiff, it shall award him such compensation accordingly.

Compensation awarded under this section may be assessed in such manner as the Court may direct.

Explanation.—The circumstance that the contract has become incapable of specific performance, does not preclude the Court from exercising the jurisdiction conferred by this section.

of the second paragraph :—A contracts to sell a hundred maunds of rice to B. B brings a suit to compel A to perform the contract or to pay compensation. The Court is of opinion that A has made a valid contract, and has broken it, without excuse, to the injury of B, but that specific performance is not the proper remedy. It shall award to B such compensation as it deems just.

of the third paragraph :—A contracts with B to sell him a house for Rupees 1,000, the price to be paid and the possession given on the 1st January 1877. A fails to perform his part of the contract, and B brings his suit for specific performance and compensation, which is decided in his favour on the 1st January 1878. The decree may, besides ordering specific performance, award to B compensation for any loss which he has sustained by A's refusal.

of the Explanation :—A, a purchaser, sues B, his vendor, for specific performance of a contract for the sale of a patent. Before the hearing of the suit, the patent expires. The Court may award A compensation for the non-performance of the contract, and may, if necessary, amend the plaint

A sues for the specific performance of a resolution passed by the directors of a public company, under which he was entitled to have a certain number of shares allotted to him, and for compensation for the non-performance of the resolution. All the shares had been allotted before the institution of the suit. The Court may, under this section, award A compensation for the non-performance.

Note.—See I. L. R., 8 Cal. 963, noted under sec. 28 of the Civil Pro. Code.

20. A contract, otherwise proper to be specifically enforced, may be thus enforced, though a sum be named in it as the amount to be paid in case of its breach, and the party in default is willing to pay the same.

Liquidation of damages not a bar to specific performance.

Illustration.

A contracts to grant B an underlease of property held by A under C, and that he will apply to C for a license necessary to the validity of the underlease, and that, if the license is not procured, A will pay B Rs. 10,000. A refuses to apply for the license, and offers to pay B the Rs. 10,000. B is nevertheless entitled to have the contract specifically enforced if C consents to give the license.

Note.

The defendant signed an agreement in England with a Railway Company, whereby he contracted to serve the company exclusively for four years in India under a penalty of £100. The defendant having come to India at the expense of the company and served it for two years, left its service for that of another employer, alleging that he had not been fairly treated by a locomotive superintendent:—Held, (1) that the instrument executed by the defendant was an agreement merely and did not require to be stamped as a bond; (2) that the defendant had no right to rescind the agreement and the plaintiff company was entitled to an interlocutory injunction restraining defendant from serving others on the terms that the plaintiff company should consent to retain him in its employ.—I. L. R., 14 Madr. 18.

Contracts which cannot be specifically enforced.

Contracts not specifically enforceable.

21. The following contracts cannot be specifically enforced:—

(a) a contract for the non-performance of which compensation in money is an adequate relief;

(b) a contract which runs into such minute or numerous details, or which is so dependent on the personal qualifications or volition of the parties, or otherwise from its nature is such, that the Court cannot enforce specific performance of its material terms;

(c) a contract the terms of which the Court cannot find with reasonable certainty;

(d) a contract which is in its nature revocable;

(e) a contract made by trustees either in excess of their powers or in breach of their trust;

(f) a contract made by or on behalf of a corporation or public company created for special purposes, or by the promoters of such company, which is in excess of its powers ;

(g) a contract the performance of which involves the performance of a continuous duty extending over a longer period than three years from its date ;

(h) a contract of which a material part of the subject-matter, supposed by both parties to exist, has, before it has been made, ceased to exist.

And, save as provided by the Code of Civil Procedure,* no contract to refer a controversy to arbitration shall be specifically enforced ; but if any person who has made such a contract, and has refused to perform it, sues in respect of any subject which he has contracted to refer, the existence of such contract shall bar the suit.

Specific performance of this contract must be refused to B.

(h).—A contracts to pay an annuity to B for the lives of C and D. It turns out that, at the date of the contract, C, though supposed by A and B to be alive, was dead. The contract cannot be specifically performed.

Notes.

A contract to sell goods contained the following clause :—" That any dispute arising hereafter shall be settled by the selling broker, whose decision shall be final." In a suit to recover damages for breach of the contract, the defendant pleaded, that the dispute should have been referred to the decision of the selling broker, and that the suit was, therefore, barred under sec. 21 of the Specific Relief Act, the latter clause of which provides that " save as provided by the Code of Civil Procedure no contract to refer a controversy to arbitration shall be specifically enforced ; but if any person, who has made such a contract, and has refused to perform it, sues in respect of any subject which he has contract to refer, the existence of such contract shall bar the suit." Held, that before that section could be relied upon, it must be shown that the plaintiff had refused to refer to arbitration ; and that the filing of the plaint was not such a refusal.—I. L. R., 5 Cal. 498.

The plaintiff was the widow of one Pitambar Nathu, who was the son of one Nathu Jadowji. Nathu Jadowji had three sons, viz., Morarji, Pitambar, and the defendant, Cursandas, and all lived together as a joint family. The plaintiff was married to Pitambar about thirty years previously to this suit, she being then eleven years of age. Pitambar died when he was fourteen years old, before the plaintiff had attained puberty, and while she was still living with her parents. After her husband's death she went to the house of her father-in-law, Nathu Jadowji, and was residing there at the time of his death. He died intestate in 1881, leaving moveable and immoveable property of the value of Rs. 1,50,000, all of which was admittedly self-acquired property. His widow (Lalvahu) and two sons, viz., Morarji and the defendant, Cursandas, survived him. Morarji died in 1883. After Nathu's death, the plaintiff continued for a time to reside in the family house with Cursandas. Disputes, however, arose, and she left the house, and went to reside with her brother. She now sued her brother-in-law, Cursandas, for maintenance, alleging that she had been obliged to leave his house in consequence of ill-treatment. She claimed Rs. 1,000 per month by way of maintenance, and also prayed for the delivery of certain ornaments belonging to her, which she said were in the defendant's possession. The defendant denied possession of the plaintiff's ornaments ; and, as to her claim for maintenance, he contended that all the property of his father, Nathu Jadowji, was self-acquired, and that, as such, the plaintiff's husband, Pitambar, had never any interest in it, having pre-deceased Nathu, and that she was, therefore, not entitled to maintenance out of it. He stated, however, that he was willing to maintain her if she would return to his house, and live with his family.

Held, that the plaintiff being, as Pitambar's widow, a member of her husband's undivided family, was entitled to maintenance from the defendant. Upon Nathu's death, intestate, his property devolved upon his sons (Morarji and Cursandas) as ancestral property for the benefit of the undivided family, of which he (Nathu) was in his life-time the head ; or, in other words, subject to the incidents to which ancestral property is liable. If one of such sons had been disqualified from inheriting by reason of idiocy, &c., he, though a member of the undivided family, would only be entitled to maintenance. The plaintiff, by reason of her sex, was disqualified from inheriting in competition with males, but none the less was she entitled to maintenance out of the ancestral estate which had devolved upon the males, with whom she constituted an undivided family.

Where a widowed sister-in-law claims maintenance from a brother-in-law, the only question for the Court to consider is, whether the brother-in-law has ancestral property in his hands.

Held, also, that the plaintiff being legally entitled to claim maintenance from the defendant, she was entitled to separate maintenance, and that the defendant, could not insist upon her living in his house.

The property left by Nathu at his death was of the value of Rupees 1,50,000.

Held, that an allowance of Rs. 40 per month should be paid to the plaintiff by the defendant as maintenance. If Pitambar, (the plaintiff's husband), had survived his father Nathu, the share of Nathu's property, (deducting one-fourth for Lalvahu, the widow of Nathu), which would have devolved on him would have been a little less than Rs. 40,000, or Rs. 1,600 per annum at 4 per cent.,—that is, Rs. 133 per month. The plaintiff could not be allowed more than the interest on that sum. By analogy to the case of a deserted wife's claim for maintenance against her husband, the plaintiff ought not to be allowed less than one-third of such interest, her husband having left no sons.

The defendant alleged that, after the plaintiff had left his house, an agreement had been made between them to refer their dispute to arbitration, that the agreement of reference had been actually signed, but that, on the day fixed by the arbitrators for making their award, the plaintiff had given notice to them not to make an award, and, accordingly, they had not done so. The defendant contended that, by reason of this agreement, the plaintiff's suit was barred by sec. 21 of the Specific Relief Act I of 1877.

The alleged agreement to refer was in the following terms :—

“The Bhai Dossa Morarji and Dwarkadas Damodar. We, the undersigned two persons, give in writing to you as follows :—We used to reside and act in the house together in peace and harmony. Lately, a few days ago, in consequence of a disagreement amongst the women, Vahu Kuvervahu resided separately. Upon persuasion having been used towards her, Vahu Kuvervahu again resides in the house together with the rest: so now all are residing in the house in peace and harmony. If any occasion should arise, and if any disagreement should take place amongst the women, in order to find a remedy for that, we, the undersigned two persons, give in writing to you as follows :—As to whatever award or settlement you, two persons, together will make in accordance therewith, we agree to receive or pay. As to that, we are truly to act on our true religious faith; and we have written and delivered this writing of our free will and pleasure. The same is agreed to and approved of by our heirs and representatives, all; the 11th Jyesth Vadya, Samvat 1939, the day of the event, Friday, the 1st June, 1883. And as to this, you are truly to make and deliver a settlement within fifteen days' time.”

Held, that the plaintiff's suit was not barred. The agreement did not indicate what was the subject-matter to be referred, and there was no evidence to show that the plaintiff's claim to maintenance had been laid before the arbitrators, or that the plaintiff had refused to perform her agreement to refer in reference to that claim. Nor was there any evidence to show the time at which the plaintiff withdrew from the arbitration—whether before or after the time allowed to the arbitrators to make and publish their award, viz., fifteen days. If the latter, her withdrawal could not, in any view of the section, be held to be a refusal on her part to perform her agreement to refer. Even if the plaintiff's withdrawal was unjustifiable, it appeared that the defendant had taken no steps, under sec. 523 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), to have the agreement filed in Court, and thus render her withdrawal of no effect. There was nothing to show that the defendant did not acquiesce in it.

Quære, whether the above agreement was not void by reason of uncertainty.

Quære, whether the actual submission of a subject in dispute to named arbitrators, followed by the attempt of one of the parties to such submission, to withdraw from or to prevent an award being made upon the submission, falls within the concluding paragraph of sec. 21 of the Specific Relief Act I of 1877.—11 Bom. 199.

The parties to a suit applied for an adjournment of it on the ground that they had agreed to refer the matters in difference between them in such suit to arbitration. The Court accordingly adjourned the suit, and the matters in difference therein were referred to arbitration by the parties, and an award was made thereon disallowing the plaintiff's claim. Held that, under these circumstances, the further hearing of such suit was barred.—4 Al. 546.

The wording of sec. 21 of the Specific Relief Act (I of 1877) is wide enough to cover contracts to refer and matter which can legally be referred to arbitration, and one of such matters is a suit which is proceeding in Court. The parties to a suit, while it was pending, agreed to refer the matters in difference between them to arbitration, and for this purpose applied to the Court for an order of reference under sec. 506 of the Civil Procedure Code. The application was granted, arbitrators were appointed, and it was ordered that they should make their award within one week. Before the week had expired, and before any award had been made, one of the parties made an ex-parte application under sec. 373 of the Code for leave to withdraw from the suit with liberty to bring a fresh suit in respect of the same subject-matter. The application was granted, the suit struck off, and a fresh suit instituted in pursuance of the permission thus given by the court. In defence to this suit it was pleaded that the suit was barred by sec. 21 of the Specific Relief Act (I of 1877). Held that the Court in the former proceedings had no power to revoke the order of reference prior to award except as provided by sec. 510 of the Code; that consequently the Courts order under sec. 373 was ultra vires if involving such revocation, or, if not involving it, left the order of reference still in force; that in either alternative the suit was barred by sec. 21 of the Specific Relief Act; and that it was immaterial that the period within which the award was to be made expired before the bringing of the second action. Per TYRRELL J., that the suit was barred by the second clause of sec. 373 the Court having had no jurisdiction to pass the order under that section, or, having referred the suit to arbitration, to restore the suit to its file and treat it as awaiting the Court's decision.—9 Al. 168.

See I. L. R., 5 Al. 44, noted under sec. 12.

(c).—Of the Discretion of the Court.

Discretion as to decree specific performance.

22. The jurisdiction to decree specific performance is discretionary, and the Court is not bound to grant such relief merely because it is lawful to do so; but the discretion of the Court is not arbitrary, but sound and reasonable, guided by judicial principles, and capable of correction by a Court of appeal.

The following are cases in which the Court may properly exercise a discretion not to decree specific performance:—

I. Where the circumstances under which the contract is made are such as to give the plaintiff an unfair advantage over the defendant, though there may be no fraud or misrepresentation on the plaintiff's part.

Illustrations.

—A, a tenant for life of certain property, assigns his interest therein to B. C contracts to buy, and B contracts to sell, that interest. Before the contract is completed, A receives a mortal injury, from the effects of which he dies the day after the contract is executed. If B and C were equally ignorant or equally aware of the fact, B is entitled to specific performance of the contract. If B knew the fact, and C did not, specific performance of the contract should be refused to B.

(b).—A contracts to sell to B the interest of C in certain stock-in-trade. It is stipulated that the sale shall stand good, even though it should turn out that C's interest is worth nothing. In fact, the value of C's interest depends on the result of certain partnership accounts, on which he is heavily in debt to his partners. This indebtedness is known to A, but not to B. Specific performance of the contract should be refused to A.

(c).—A contracts to sell, and B contracts to buy, certain land. To protect the land from floods, it is necessary for its owner to maintain an expensive embankment. B does not know of this circumstance, and A conceals it from him. Specific performance of the contract should be refused to A.

(d).—A's property is put up to auction. B requests C, A's attorney, to bid for him. C does this inadvertently and in good faith. The persons present, seeing the vendor's attorney bidding, think that he is a mere puffer, and cease to compete. The lot is knocked down to B at a low price. Specific performance of the contract should be refused to B.

II. Where the performance of the contract would involve some hardship on the defendant which he did not foresee, whereas its non-performance would involve no such hardship on the plaintiff.

Illustrations.

(e).—A is entitled to some land under his father's will on condition that, if he sells it within twenty-five years, half the purchase-money shall go to B. A, forgetting the condition, contracts, before the expiration of the twenty-five years, to sell the land to C. Here the enforcement of the contract would operate so harshly on A that the Court will not compel its specific performance in favour of C.

(f).—A and B, trustees, join their beneficiary, C, in a contract to sell the trust-estate to D, and personally agree to exonerate the estate from heavy incumbrances to which it is subject. The purchase-money is not nearly enough to discharge those incumbrances, though, at the date of the contract, the vendors believed it to be sufficient. Specific performance of the contract should be refused to D.

(g).—A, the owner of an estate, contracts to sell it to B, and stipulates that he, A, shall not be obliged to define its boundary. The estate really comprises a valuable property not known to either to be part of it. Specific performance of the contract should be refused to B, unless he waives his claim to be unknown property.

(h).—A contracts with B to sell him certain land, and to make a road to it from a certain railway-station. It is found afterwards that A cannot make the road without exposing himself to litigation. Specific performance of the part of the contract relating to the road should be refused to B, even though it may be held that he is entitled to specific performance of the rest with compensation for loss of the road.

(i).—A, a lessee of mines, contracts with B, his lessor, that at any time during the continuance of the lease B may give notice of his desire to take the machinery and plant used in and about the mines, and that he shall have the articles specified in his notice delivered to him at a valuation on the expiry of the lease. Such a contract might be most injurious to the lessee's business, and specific performance of it should be refused to B.

(j).—A contracts to buy certain land from B. The contract is silent as to access to the land. No right of way to it can be shown to exist. Specific performance of the contract should be refused to B.

(k).—A contracts with B to buy from B's manufactory, and not elsewhere, all the goods of a certain class used by A in his trade. The Court cannot compel B to supply the goods; but, if he does not supply them, A may be ruined, unless he is allowed to buy them elsewhere. Specific performance of the contract should be refused to B.

The following is a case in which the Court may properly exercise a discretion to decree specific performance:—

III. Where the plaintiff has done substantial acts or suffered losses in consequence of a contract capable of specific performance.

Illustration.

A sells land to a railway-company, who contract to execute certain works for his convenience. The company take the land and use it for their railway. Specific performance of the contract to execute the works should be decreed in favour of A.

Note.

See I. L. R., 5 Al. 44, noted under sec. 12; 6 Cal. 328, noted under sec. 44 of the Civil Procedure Code.

(d).—For whom Contracts may be specifically enforced.

23. Except as otherwise provided by this chapter, the specific performance of a contract may be obtained by—

Who may obtain specific performance.

(a) any party thereto;

(b) the representative in interest, or the principal, of any party thereto: provided that, where the learning, skill, solvency, or any personal quality of such party is a material ingredient in the contract, or where the contract provides that his interest shall not be assigned, his representative in interest or his principal shall not be entitled to specific performance of the contract, unless where his part thereof has already been performed ;

(c) where the contract is a settlement on marriage, or a compromise of doubtful rights between members of the same family, any person beneficially entitled thereunder ;

(d) where the contract has been entered into by a tenant for life in due exercise of a power, the remainderman ;

(e) a reversioner in possession, where the agreement is a covenant entered into with his predecessor in title, and the reversioner is entitled to the benefit of such covenant ;

(f) a reversioner in remainder, where the agreement is such a covenant, and the reversioner is entitled to the benefit thereof, and will sustain material injury by reason of its breach ;

(g) when a public company has entered into a contract, and subsequently becomes amalgamated with another public company, the new company which arises out of the amalgamation ;

(h) when the promoters of a public company have, before its incorporation, entered into a contract for the purposes of the company, and such contract is warranted by the terms of the incorporation, the company.

Note.

See I. L. R., 13 Bom. 415, noted under sec. 45 of the Indian Companies Act. (VI of 1882.)

—For whom Contracts cannot be specifically enforced.

24. Specific performance of a contract cannot be enforced in favour of a person—

Personal bars to the re-

(a) who could not recover compensation for its breach ;
(b) who has become incapable of performing, or violates, any essential term of the contract that on his part remains to be performed ;

(c) who has already chosen his remedy, and obtained satisfaction for the alleged breach of contract ; or

(d) who, previously to the contract, had notice that a settlement of the subject-matter thereof (though not founded on any valuable consideration) had been made and was then in force.

to clause (a).—A, in the character of agent for B, enters in to an agreement with C to buy C's house. A is, in reality, acting, not as agent for B, but on his own account. A cannot enforce specific performance of this contract.

to clause (b).—A contracts to sell B a house, and to become tenant thereof for a term of fourteen years from the date of the sale at a specified yearly rent. A becomes insolvent. Neither he nor his assignee can enforce specific performance of the contract.

A contracts to sell B a house and garden in which there are ornamental trees, a material element in the value of the property as a residence. A, without B's consent, fells the trees. A cannot enforce specific performance of the contract.

A, holding land under a contract with B for a lease, commits waste, or treats the land in an unhusbandlike manner. A cannot enforce specific performance of the contract.

A contracts to let, and B contracts to take, an unfinished house, B contracting to finish the house, and the lease to contain covenants on the part of A to keep the house in repair. B finishes the house in a very defective manner; he cannot enforce the contract specifically, though A and B may sue each other for compensation for breach of it.

to clause (c).—A contracts to let, and B contracts to take, a house for a specified term at a specified rent. B refuses to perform the contract. A thereupon sues for, and obtains, compensation for the breach. A cannot obtain specific performance of the contract.

Contracts to sell property by one who has no title, or who is a voluntary settler.

25. A contract for the sale or letting of property, whether moveable or immoveable, cannot be specifically enforced in favour of a vendor or lessor—

(a) who, knowing himself not to have any title to the property, has contracted to sell or let the same ;

(b) who, though he entered into the contract, believing that he had a good title to the property, cannot, at the time fixed by the parties or by the Court for the completion of the sale or letting, give the purchaser or lessee a title free from reasonable doubt ;

(c) who, previous to entering into the contract, has made a settlement (though not founded on any valuable consideration) of the subject-matter of the contract.

Illustrations.

(a.) A, without C's authority, contracts to sell to B an estate which A knows to belong to C. A cannot enforce specific performance of this contract, even though C is willing to perform it.

(b.) A bequeaths his land to trustees, declaring that they may sell it with the consent in writing of B. B gives a general prospective assent in writing to any sale which the trustees may make. The trustees then enter into a contract with C to sell him the land. C refuses to carry out contract. The trustees cannot specifically enforce this contract, as, in the absence of B's consent to the particular sale to C, the title which they can give C is, as the law stands, not free from reasonable doubt.

(c.) A, being in possession of certain land, contracts to sell it to Z. On enquiry it turns out that A claims the land as heir of B, who left the country several years before, and is generally believed to be dead, but of whose death there is no sufficient proof. A cannot compel Z specifically to perform the contract.

(d.) A, out of natural love and affection, makes a settlement of certain property on his brothers and their issue, and afterwards enters into a contract to sell the property to a stranger. A cannot enforce specific performance of this contract so as to override the settlement, and thus prejudice the interests of the persons claiming under it.

(f).—For whom Contracts cannot be specifically enforced except with a variation.

26. Where a plaintiff seeks specific performance of a contract in writing, to which the defendant sets up a variation, the plaintiff cannot obtain the performance sought, except with the variation so set up, in the following cases (namely):—

(a) where by fraud or mistake of fact the contract of which performance is sought is in terms different from that which the defendant supposed it to be when he entered into it;

(b) where by fraud, mistake of fact, or surprise, the defendant entered into the contract under a reasonable misapprehension as to its effect as between himself and the plaintiff;

(c) where the defendant, knowing the terms of the contract and understanding its effect, has entered into it relying upon some misrepresentation by the plaintiff, or upon some stipulation on the plaintiff's part which adds to the contract, but which he refuses to fulfil;

(d) where the object of the parties was to produce a certain legal result, which the contract as framed is not calculated to produce;

(e) where the parties have, subsequently to the execution of the contract, contracted to vary it.

Illustrations.

(a.) A, B, and C, sign a writing, by which they purport to contract each to enter into a bond to D for Rs. 1,000. In a suit by D, to make A, B, and C separately liable each to the extent of Rs. 1,000, they prove that the word 'each' was inserted by mistake; that the intention was that they should give a joint bond for Rs. 1,000. D can obtain the performance sought only with the variation thus set up.

(b.) A sues B to compel specific performance of a contract in writing to buy a dwelling-house. B proves that he assumed that the contract included an adjoining yard, and the contract was so framed as to leave it doubtful whether the yard was so included or not. The Court will refuse to enforce the contract, except with the variation set up by B.

(c.) A contracts in writing to let to B a wharf, together with a strip of A's land delineated in a map. Before signing the contract, B proposed orally that he should be at liberty to substitute for the strip mentioned in the contract another strip of A's land of the same dimensions, and to this A expressly assented. B then signed the written contract. A cannot obtain specific performance of the written contract, except with the variation set up by B.

(d.) A and B enter into negotiations for the purpose of securing land to B for his life, with remainder to his issue. They execute a contract, the terms of which are found to confer an absolute ownership on B. The contract so framed cannot be specifically enforced.

(e.) A contracts in writing to let a house to B, for a certain term, at the rent of Rs. 100 per month, putting it first into tenantable repair. The house turns out to be not worth repairing; so, with B's consent, A pulls it down and erects a new house in its place; B contracting orally to pay rent at Rs. 120 per mensem. B then sues to enforce specific performance of the contract in writing. He cannot enforce it except with the variations made by the subsequent oral contract.

Note.

A certificated guardian of certain minors entered into an agreement with the plaintiff to sell certain land belonging to them for a fixed price contingent upon the leave of the Court, which was necessary, being obtained to the transaction, and a portion of the purchase-money was paid by the plaintiff. The Court sanctioned the sale but at a higher price than that agreed on between the plaintiff and the guardian, and the latter sold to a third party. The plaintiff, thereupon, sued the minors by their guardian as next friend and the third party for specific performance of the agreement to sell to him at the price mentioned in the agreement:—Held, that the contract was not one which could be specifically enforced, and that sec. 26 of the Act did not only apply. The contract as it stood was never a complete contract at any time as it was contingent upon the permission of the Court, and the permission of the Court did not extend to the whole contract as agreed upon between the parties.—I. L. R., 12 Cal. 152.

—Against whom Contracts may be specifically enforced.

Relief against parties and persons claiming under them by subsequent title.

27. Except as otherwise provided by this chapter, specific performance of a contract may be enforced against—

(a) either party thereto ;

(b) any other person claiming under him by a title arising subsequently to the contract, except a transferee for value who has paid his money in good faith and without notice of the original contract ;

(c) any person claiming under a title which, though prior to the contract, and known to the plaintiff, might have been displaced by the defendant ;

when a public company has entered into a contract, and subsequently becomes amalgamated with another public company, the new company which arises out of the amalgamation ;

(e) when the promoters of a public company have, before its incorporation, entered into a contract, the company : provided that the company has ratified and adopted the contract, and the contract is warranted by the terms of the incorporation.

to clause (b).—A contracts to convey certain land to B by a particular day. A dies intestate before that day without having conveyed the land. B may compel A's heir or other representative in interest to perform the contract specifically.

A contracts to sell certain land to B for Rs. 5,000. A afterwards conveys the land for Rs. 6,000 to C, who has notice of the original contract. B may enforce specific performance of the contract as against C.

A contracts to sell land to B for Rs. 5,000. B takes possession of the land. Afterwards A sells it to C for Rs. 6,000. C makes no enquiry of B relating to his interest in the land. B's possession is sufficient to affect C with notice of his interest, and he may enforce specific performance of the contract against C.

A contracts, in consideration of Rs. 1,000, to bequeath certain of his lands to B. Immediately after the contract A dies intestate, and C takes out administration to his estate. B may enforce specific performance of the contract against C.

A contracts to sell certain land to B. Before the completion of the contract A becomes a lunatic, and C is appointed his committee. B may specifically enforce the contract against C.

to clause (c).—A, the tenant for life of an estate, with remainder to B, in due exercise of a power conferred by the settlement under which he is tenant for life, contracts to sell the estate to C, who has notice of the settlement. Before the sale is completed, A dies. C may enforce specific performance of the contract against B.

A and B are joint tenants of land, his undivided moiety of which either may alien in his lifetime, but which, subject to that right, devolves on the survivor. A contracts to sell his moiety to C, and dies. C may enforce specific performance of the contract against B.

Notes.

The plaintiffs sued to enforce an agreement for the execution of a conveyance of certain immoveable property, and for the possession of such property, making the party to such agreement and the persons who had, subsequently to the date of the same, purchased such property in execution of decree, defendants in the suit, on the allegation that such persons had purchased in bad faith and with notice of the agreement. Held, with reference to sec. 27 of Act I of 1877, that, under such circumstances, there was not necessarily a misjoinder of causes of action.—I. L. R., 1 Al. 555.

On the 7th February, 1873, F mortgaged the equity of redemption of a certain estate to B and G. On the 7th August, 1877, he mortgaged such estate to P, agreeing that, if he failed to pay the mortgage-money within the time fixed, he would convey such estate to P, and that, if he failed to execute such conveyance, P should be competent to bring a suit "to get a sale effected and a deed of absolute sale executed." On the 6th October, 1877, F mortgaged such estate to B and D. By this mortgage the lien created by the mortgage of the 7th February, 1873, was extinguished. In December, 1877, B and D obtained a decree against F on the mortgage of the 6th October, 1877, and in June, 1878, in execution of that decree, such estate was put up for sale and was purchased by D. In February, 1880, P sued F and D for the execution of a conveyance of such estate to him in accordance with F's agreement of the 7th August, 1877. Held that the mortgage of the 7th August, 1877, was not in the nature of a mortgage by conditional sale and there was no necessity for P to take proceedings to foreclose the mortgage, and the suit was maintainable. Also that, assuming that D had no notice of the agreement of the 7th August 1877, it was very doubtful whether under sec. 27 (b) of Act I of 1877 D could claim that specific performance of that agreement should not be granted, inasmuch as the contest lay between a prior and subsequent lien created upon the same property, which had passed to the transferee under a sale in execution of a decree for the enforcement of the subsequent lien.—3 Al. 706.

See I. L. R., 13 Madr. 324, noted under sec. 54 of the Transfer of Property Act; 13 Bom. 415, noted under sec. 45 of the Indian Companies Act.

—Against whom Contracts cannot be specifically enforced.

28. Specific performance of a contract cannot be enforced against a party thereto in any of the following cases :— parties cannot be compelled to perform.

(a) if the consideration to be received by him is so grossly inadequate with reference to the state of things existing at the date of the contract, as to be either by itself or coupled with other circumstances, evidence of fraud, or of undue advantage taken by the plaintiff;

(b) if his assent was obtained by the misrepresentation (whether wilful or innocent), concealment, circumvention, or unfair practices of any party to whom performance would become due under the contract, or by any promise of such party which has not been substantially fulfilled;

(c) if his assent was given under the influence of mistake of fact, misapprehension, or surprise: provided that, when the contract provides for compensation in case of mistake, compensation may be made for a mistake within the scope of such provision, and the contract may be specifically enforced in other respects if proper to be so enforced.

to clause (c). A, one of two executors, in the erroneous belief that he had the authority of his co-executor, enters into an agreement for the sale to B of his testator's property. B cannot insist on the sale being completed.

A directs an auctioneer to sell certain land. A afterwards revokes the auctioneer's authority as to 20 bighas of this land, but the auctioneer inadvertently sells the whole to B, who has not notice of the revocation. B cannot enforce specific performance of the agreement.

(i).—The Effect of dismissing a Suit for Specific Performance.

29. The dismissal of a suit for specific performance of a contract or part thereof shall bar the plaintiff's right to sue for compensation for the breach of such contract or part as the case may be.

Bar of suit for breach after dismissal.

(j).—Awards and directions to execute settlements.

Applications of preceding sections to awards and testamentary directions to execute settlements.

30. The provisions of this chapter as to contract shall, mutatis mutandis, apply to awards and to directions in a will or codicil to execute a particular settlement.

Note.

A suit for money, based on an award, which directs its payment by the defendant to the plaintiff, is virtually a suit to have the award specifically enforced; and, as by sec. 30 of the Specific Relief Act, 1877, awards are placed on the same footing as contracts, No. 113, sch. ii of the Limitation Act, 1877, is applicable to such a suit.—I. L. R., 5 Al. 263.

CHAPTER III.

OF THE RECTIFICATION OF INSTRUMENTS.

31. When, through fraud or a mutual mistake of the parties, a contract or other instrument in writing does not truly express their intention, either party or his representative in interest may institute a suit to have the instrument rectified; and if the Court find it clearly proved that there has been fraud or mistake in framing the instrument, and ascertain the real intention of the parties in executing the same, the Court may, in its discretion, rectify the instrument so as to express that intention, so far as this can be done without prejudice to rights acquired by third persons in good faith and for value.

When instrument may be rectified.

Illustrations.

(a.) A, intending to sell to B his house and one of three godowns adjacent to it, executes a conveyance prepared by B, in which, through B's fraud, all three godowns are included. Of the two godowns which were fraudulently included, B gives one to C, and lets the other to D for a rent, neither C nor D having any knowledge of the fraud. The conveyance may, as against B and C, be rectified so as to exclude from it the godown given to C; but it cannot be rectified so as to affect D's lease.

(b.) By a marriage-settlement, A, the father of B, the intended wife, covenants with C, the intended husband, to pay to C, his executors, administrators and assigns, during A's life, an annuity of Rs. 5,000. C dies insolvent, and the official assignee claims the annuity from A. The Court, on finding it clearly proved that the parties always intended that this annuity should be paid as a provision for B and her children, may rectify the settlement, and decree that the assignee has no right to any part of the annuity.

Notes.

Three plots of land were let to A under one kabuliat. A relinquished two plots, but admitted to being in possession of one, alleging that the kabuliat had been obtained by fraud and misrepresentation. Held, that as the lease was an entire contract, one portion only could not be repudiated on the ground of fraud: but that, if the tenancy was to be avoided on the ground of fraud, it must be avoided in toto. Where a party to a contract of tenancy desires to have it rectified or altered, the suit should be brought under sec. 31 of the Specific Relief Act.—I. L. R., 8 Cal. 118.

A mortgagor alleged that a sum in excess of his debt to the mortgagee had been inserted in the instrument; but, on the facts, there being no reason to suppose that there was any fraud or deceit on the part of the mortgagee, or that there was any mutual mistake of the parties as to the amount stated as that for which the security was given, a suit, under sec. 31 of Act I of 1877 (the Specific Relief Act), to have the instrument rectified was held to have been rightly dismissed.—14 Cal. 303.

32. For the purpose of rectifying a contract in writing, the Court must be satisfied that all the parties thereto intended to make an equitable and conscientious agreement.

Presumption as to intent of parties.

33. In rectifying a written instrument, the Court may inquire what the instrument was intended to mean, and what were intended to be its legal consequences, and is not confined to the inquiry what the language of the instrument was intended to be.

Principles of rectification.

34. A contract in writing may be first rectified, and then, if the plaintiff has so prayed in his plaint, and the Court thinks fit, specifically enforced.

Specific enforcement of rectified contract.

Illustration.

A contracts in writing to pay his attorney, B, a fixed sum in lieu of costs. The contract contains mistakes as to the name and rights of the client, which, if construed strictly, would exclude B from all rights under it. B is entitled, if the Court thinks fit, to have it rectified, and to an order for payment of the sum, as if at the time of its execution it had expressed the intention of the parties.

CHAPTER IV.

OF THE RESCISSION OF CONTRACTS.

Note.—See I. L. R., 7 Cal. 474, noted under sec. 56 of the Contract Act.

35.* Any person interested in a contract in writing may any of the following cases, namely :—

(a) where the contract is voidable or terminable by the plaintiff ;

(b) where the contract is unlawful for causes not apparent on its face, and the defendant is more to blame than the plaintiff ;

(c) where a decree for specific performance of a contract of sale, or of a contract to take a lease, has been made, and the purchaser or lessee makes default in payment of the purchase-money or other sums, which the Court has ordered him to pay.

When the purchaser or lessee is in possession of the subject-matter, and the Court finds that such possession is wrongful, the Court may also order him to pay to the vendor or lessor the rents and profits, if any, received by him as such possessor.

In the same case, the Court may, by order in the suit in which the decree has been made and not complied with, rescind the contract either so far as regards the party in default, or altogether as the justice of the case may require.

to (a).—A sells a field to B. There is a right of way over the field of which A has direct personal knowledge, but which he conceals from B. B is entitled to have the contract rescinded.

to (b).—A, an attorney, induces his client B, a Hindu widow, to transfer property to him for the purpose of defrauding B's creditors. Here the parties are not equally in fault, and B is entitled to have the instrument of transfer rescinded.

OF THE CANCELLATION OF INSTRUMENTS.

Note.—See I. L. R., 7 Cal. 474, noted under sec. 56 of the Contract Act.

39. Any person against whom a written instrument is
When cancellation may be ordered. void or voidable, who has reasonable apprehension that such instrument, if left outstanding, may cause him serious injury, may sue to have it adjudged void or voidable, and the Court may, in its discretion, so adjudge it, and order it to be delivered up and cancelled.

If the instrument has been registered under the Indian Registration Act,* the Court shall also send a copy of its decree to the officer in whose office the instrument has been so registered, and such officer shall note on the copy of the instrument contained in his books the fact of its cancellation.

Illustrations.

(a.) A, the owner of a ship, by fraudulently representing her to be seaworthy, induces B, an underwriter, to insure her. B may obtain the cancellation of the policy.

(b.) A conveys land to B, who bequeaths it to C, and dies. Thereupon D gets possession of the land, and produces a forged instrument, stating that the conveyance was made to B in trust for him. C may obtain the cancellation of the forged instrument.

(c.) A, representing that the tenants on his land were all at will, sells it to B, and conveys it to him by an instrument dated the 1st January 1877. Soon after that day, A fraudulently grants to C a lease of part of the lands, dated the 1st October 1876, and procures the lease to be registered under the Indian Registration Act.† B may obtain the cancellation of this lease.

(d.) A agrees to sell and deliver a ship to B, to be paid for by B's acceptances of four bills of exchange, for sums amounting to Rs. 30,000 to be drawn by A on B. The bills are drawn and accepted, but the ship is not delivered according to the agreement. A sues B on one of the bills. B may obtain the cancellation of all the bills.

Notes.

Under the special procedure provided in the Registration Act (III of 1877) the defendant, in whose favour a document was said to have been executed, succeeded in obtaining an order from the District Registrar for the registration of the same, although the plaintiff, who was alleged to have executed it, appeared before the Sub-Registrar, and subsequently before the Registrar, and denied executing it, and alleged it to be a forgery. In a suit brought under the above circumstances to have the document declared void, and to have it cancelled, the Court placed the onus of proving its genuineness and its execution by the plaintiff on the defendant.—Held, that the proceedings of the Registrar, when he enquired whether the document had been duly executed or not, were in no sense those of a “competent Court,” but only those of an executive officer invested with quasi-judicial functions, and that, consequently such a suit was maintainable; and that, under the circumstances, the onus of proof was properly placed on the defendant. Held also, that the Specific Relief Act (I of 1877) applied, sec. 39 evidently contemplating and providing for such a suit.—I. L. R., 7 Cal. 736.

Upon the cancellation of instruments of hypothecation and sale on proof of fraud and collusion between the grantee, who had advanced money, and the manager of the grantor's estate, the grantor having been unduly influenced in the transaction:—Held, that the condition of cancellation should be, not the repayment of all money received by the manager, but only of sums shown to have been paid to the grantor personally, and of such sums received by the manager, as he would have been justified in borrowing in the course of a prudent management of the estate.—11 Cal. 61.

A suit was filed in 1888 on behalf of a Malabar Tarwad by two of its members to recover property improperly alienated in 1879 under a kanom instrument by the karnavan, who had since been removed from office:—Held, that since a prayer for the cancellation of the kanom instrument was not an essential part of the plaintiff's relief, the suit was not barred by the 3 years rule in Limitation Act 1877, Sch. II. Art. 91.—14 Madr. 26.

The plaintiff, alleging that he was the proprietor of certain land; that defendant No. 2 had wrongfully and fraudulently mortgaged it to defendant No. 1; and that defendant No. 1 had applied for foreclosure of the mortgage, and notice of foreclosure had issued; claimed “that, the mortgage-deed being set aside, the land be protected from the illegal foreclosure, by cancelment of the foreclosure proceedings.” Held that the suit was not strictly one for the cancelment or setting aside of an instrument to which the limitation in No. 91, sch. ii, of the Limitation Act, 1877, would apply, (which relates to suits of the nature of those referred to in sec. 39 of the Specific Relief Act), but rather one for a declaratory decree.—5 Al. 322.

A vendor of land who, had covenanted with his vendees that he had a good title, and who after the sale, had no interest remaining in the property, brought a suit in which he claimed to set aside as fraudulent a mortgage on which the defendant had obtained a decree against the vendees, and the decree itself. He based his right to maintain the suit upon his liability under his covenant. The vendees were not parties to the suit. Held that as the defendant's mortgage had merged in his decree, the suit could only be maintained if the plaintiff could show himself entitled to have the defendant's decree set aside, and that he had shown no interest which would entitle him to maintain a suit for such a purpose.—9 Al. 439.

In a suit under sec. 39 of the Specific Relief Act (I of 1877) for cancelment of a deed of gift executed by the plaintiff in favour of the defendant, the plaintiff was a Chatrī by caste, well advanced in years, and the defendant was his guru or spiritual adviser, a Brahman held in high consideration in the locality where he resided. The gift comprised the whole of the plaintiff's property, and the only reason for its execution was the plaintiff's desire to secure benefits to his soul in the next world, and his having heard the defendant recite the holy book called Bhagwat. Almost immediately after execution of the deed the plaintiff repudiated it, and sued for its cancellation on the ground of fraud. Held that having regard to the fiduciary relation subsisting between the parties, the improvidence of the gift, the absurdity of the reason alleged for it, and the principal recognized by sec. 111 of the Evidence Act (I of 1872), the burden rested upon the defendant to show that the transaction was made without undue influence and in good faith; and, in the absence of such proof the plaintiff was entitled to obtain cancellation of the deed. Sital Prasad v. Parbhu Lal, referred to.—12 Al. 523.

instruments may be cancelled.

Illustration.

A draws a bill on B, who endorses it to C, by whom it appears to be endorsed to D, who endorses it to E. C's endorsement is forged. C is entitled to have such endorsement cancelled, leaving the bill to stand in other respects.

Notes.

In a suit for cancellation of a sale-deed by the person whose name appeared on it as executant, it was alledged in the plaint that it was a forgery, and that if it was not a forgery, its execution had been obtained by fraud and that it was, moreover, void for want of consideration. The plaintiff's interest in the property to which the instrument related had been assigned by her to another by a conveyance which contained certain covenants by her with regard to the land:—Held, that the plaintiff was not entitled to maintain the suit. Per cur: The gist of the plaintiff's charge against the defendant was that she had never executed a sale-deed in his favor, and that the document set up by him was a forgery. It was not competent to the plaintiff to combine with this charge as an alternative the wholly inconsistent charge that if she did execute the document no consideration was received by her or that fraud had been practised upon her.—I. L. R., 13 Madr. 549.

See I. L. R., 14 Madr. 26, noted under sec. 39.

41. On adjudging the cancellation of an instrument, the Court may require the party to whom such relief is granted to make any compensation to the other which justice may require.

CHAPTER VI.

OF DECLARATORY DECREES.

42. Any person entitled to any legal character, or to any right as to any property, may institute a suit against any person denying, or interested to deny, his title to of Court as to declarations of status or right.

such character or right, and the Court may, in its discretion, make therein a declaration that he is so entitled, and the plaintiff need not, in such suit, ask for any further relief:

Bar to such declaration. Provided that no Court shall make any such declaration where the plaintiff, being able to seek further relief than a mere declaration of title, omits to do so.

Explanation.—A trustee of property is a person interested to deny a title adverse to the title of some one who is not in existence, and for whom, if in existence, he would be a trustee.

Illustrations.

(a.) A is lawfully in possession of certain land. The inhabitants of a neighbouring village claim a right of way across the land. A may sue for a declaration that they are not entitled to the right so claimed.

(b.) A bequeaths his property to B, C, and D, 'to be equally divided amongst all and each of them, if living at the time of my death, then amongst their surviving children.' No such children are in existence. In a suit against A's executor, the Court may declare whether B, C, and D, took the property absolutely, or only for their lives, and it may also declare the interests of the children before their rights are vested.

(c.) A covenants that, if he should at any time be entitled to property exceeding one lakh of rupees, he will settle it upon certain trusts. Before any such property accrues, or any persons entitled under the trusts are ascertained, he institutes a suit to obtain a declaration that the covenant is void for uncertainty. The Court may make the declaration.

(d.) A alienates to B property in which A has merely a life-interest. The alienation is invalid as against C, who is entitled as reversioner. The Court may, in a suit by C against A and B, declare that C is so entitled.

(e.) The widow of a sonless Hindu alienates part of the property of which she is in possession as such. The person presumptively entitled to possess the property if he survive her may, in a suit against the alienee, obtain a declaration that the alienation was made without legal necessity, and was therefore void beyond the widow's lifetime.

(f.) A Hindu widow in possession of property adopts a son to her deceased husband. The person presumptively entitled to possession of the property on her death without a son may, in a suit against the adopted son, obtain a declaration that the adoption was invalid.

(g.) A is in possession of certain property. B, alleging that he is the owner of the property, requires A to deliver it to him. A may obtain a declaration of his right to hold the property.

(h.) A bequeaths property to B for his life, with remainder to B's wife and her children, if any, by B, but if B die without any wife or children, to C. B has a putative wife, D, and children, but C denies that B and D were ever lawfully married. D and her children may, in B's lifetime, institute a suit against C, and obtain therein a declaration that they are truly the wife and children of B.

Notes.

The plaintiff, claiming to be entitled in reversion to certain property on the death of his grandfather's widow, sued for a declaration that certain alienations made by the widow were void as against him. To this suit the widow and her alienee were defendants. The defence was, that the plaintiff was not the reversioner, and certain parties, who claimed to be the real reversioners, intervened, and were made defendants by order of the Court. The plaintiff obtained a declaration of his reversionary right, and the deeds of sale were, on certain conditions, declared void as against him. The intervenors appealed to the High Court. Held, on appeal, that, notwithstanding the provisions of sec. 42 of the Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), the plaintiff was not entitled to the relief sought, and that the defendants who claimed as reversioners should not have been made parties to the suit. Sec. 42 of the Specific Relief Act refers only to existing and vested rights, and not to contingent rights.—I. L. R., 8 Cal. 12.

Certain trusts of a house were declared in favour of A and B for life subject to forfeiture upon the happening of particular events and further trusts in favour of the issue of A and B were also declared. The settlor died leaving a will under which C took an estate for his life, with remainder to the settlor's son E absolutely. E assigned his interest in the premises to the plaintiff, who now sued the cestuis que trustent and C, praying that, in the events which had happened, it might be declared that the life-estates of A and B had been forfeited. He also asked for various declarations as to his rights. Held, that no declaratory decree could be made.—8 Cal. 761.

Notwithstanding the confiscation of land in Oudh, followed by its restoration under the Government Order 11th March 1858, affirming the absolute title of those with whom summary settlements had been made, and the granting of sanads to the latter persons, with full power of alienation, confirmed by "The Oudh Estates Act, 1869," the legal owner may, either by express agreement, or by his conduct, constitute himself a trustee for others as to the whole or part of the beneficial interest in the land, the subject of such restoration, settlement, and sanad. A taluqdar, deceased before annexation, had provided by will for the succession of his five widows, one at a time, to his estate, with remainder to a son of his nephew. Settlement was made with the senior widow after the mutiny; a sanad granted to her as taluqdar, with full power of alienation, and her name was afterwards entered in the lists prepared under sec. 8 of "The Oudh Estates Act, 1869." But certain of her acts were not explicable except on the understanding that she was abiding by the will. Held, in a suit by the widow next in order, that such senior widow had undertaken the trust of carrying out the provisions of the will, and that a deed of gift made by her transferred only her interest, which was an estate for life. Held also, in a suit by the remainderman for a declaration of the invalidity of the transfer by the widow as against him, that although declaratory relief might have been, at the Court's discretion, refused to him, on the ground of his remoteness in remainder, and the identity of the object of his suit with that of the other, yet he was entitled on this appeal to the decree which he sought, because his suit had been wrongly decided against him on the merits.—8 Cal. 769.

The Civil Courts have no jurisdiction to make a decree reversing an order for the registration of the name of any person made by a registering officer under Beng. Act VII of 1876. All that the Civil Courts can do is to declare the title of an individual, or to give him a decree for possession and then the registration officers should, as a matter of course, proceed to amend their registers in accordance with the rights of the parties as settled by the Civil Courts.—10 Cal. 350.

It is open to a landlord, where his title is in jeopardy from the aggressions of a neighbouring zemindar, and where his title may be damaged by a denial of his rights over his land, to bring a suit for the purpose of having his rights declared as against such wrong-doer and for the purpose of being put into possession of the land as against them. Womesh Chunder Goopto v. Raj Narain Roy, 10 W. R., 15, explained.—10 Cal. 1076.

A plaintiff, admitting a defendant's right to a Kursa-jama tenure in certain lands but denying a permanent malguzari tenure set up by him, sought to eject the defendant from the kursa-jama holding, and for a declaration that the defendant was not entitled to the permanent malguzari tenure :—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to the declaration asked for, notwithstanding that in consequence of his failure to prove a reasonable notice to quit, he was unable to obtain a decree for ejectment. A Judge, interfering with the discretion exercised by a lower Court in granting a declaratory decree, should state his reasons for so doing.—13 Cal. 3.

In a suit for declaratory decree in respect of plaintiff's right to certain land where it appeared that rent was due to the plaintiff in respect of such land, if his case were a true one, and where such rent was not claimed: Held, that the "further relief" referred to in the proviso to sec. 42 of the Specific Relief Act is further relief in relation to "the legal character of right as to any property which any person is entitled to, and whose title to such character or right any person denies or is interested in denying," and does not include a claim for arrears of rent.—14 Cal. 586.

An owner of land has a right to bring a suit under sec. 42 of the Specific Relief Act against any one of the public who formally claims to use such lands as a public road, and who thereby has endangered the title of the owner. To such a suit it is unnecessary to make the Secretary of State a party. Such a suit is not barred by an order of a Criminal Court under sec. 137 of the Criminal Procedure Code. Khodabuksh Mundul v. Monglai, Mundul, I. L. R., 14 Cal. 60, overruled.—15 Cal. 460.

A person bringing a suit under sec. 42 of the Specific Relief Act to stay a partition directed by the Collector under Beng. Act VIII of 1876, on the ground that a private partition has already been come to, must prove not only that there has been a private partition, but also that, under that partition, he is entitled to, and was in possession of, in severalty some specific portion of the property again sought to be partitioned by the Collector; and such person is entitled to no declaration effecting the rights of other shares in the parent estate. Khobun v. Wooma Churn Singh, 3 C. L. R., 453, distinguished. Semble.—Sec. 26 of Beng. Act VIII of 1876 does not bar the right to bring an action, but merely limits the effect of the decree unless the action is brought within a certain time.—16 Cal. 117.

M pledged his ship in August 1878 to C as security for a bond debt of Rs. 1,500, repayable by two instalments in February and August 1879. S seized the ship in French territory for a debt due to him by M and the French Court sold the ship. C made a claim on the proceeds of the sale in the hands of the Court in December 1878. The French Court required C to produce a copy of an English Court's judgment acknowledging and sanctioning C's claim against M. C sued S to obtain a declaration of his right to recover the amount due by M on the bond. Held that whether or not his lien was destroyed by the sale of the ship in French territory, C was not entitled to any of the proceeds of the sale either at the date of the sale or of his claim in the French Court and the denial by S of C's right to any of the proceeds of the sale gave C no cause of action.—5 Madr. 330.

A grant of lands free of revenue does not come within the purview of the Indian Pensions Act, 1871. A joint Hindu family, consisting of three brothers, enjoyed an undivided one-third share of certain lands. One member sued the others for partition of the family property, claiming to have his right declared to receive one-third of the share of the family in the profits of the said lands:—Held, that the Court was not debarred from granting the relief prayed for by the provisions of sec. 42 of the Specific Relief Act.—7 Madr. 191.

The plaintiffs, uncle's sons of R, a deceased Hindu, brought a suit as reversioners of R, for a declaration that certain alienations made by M the widow of R were not binding beyond the lifetime of M. The District Judge held on the strength of Greeman Singh v. Wahari Lall Singh (I. L. R., 8 Cal., 12) that the suit would not lie under sec. 42 of the Specific Relief Act:—Held, that the suit would lie.—10 Madr. 90.

The proviso to sec. 42 of the Specific Relief Act that "no Court shall pass a declaratory decree where the plaintiff, being able to seek further relief than a mere declaration of title, omits to do so" refers to the position of plaintiff at the date of suit: where a suit was brought for a declaration that certain alienations of land made by a Hindu widow to the defendants were not binding on plaintiff, her reversionary heir, and pending appeal by the plaintiff, the widow died:—Held, (1) that the plaintiff was entitled to proceed with his appeal: (2) that plaintiff could not be permitted to amend his plaint and claim possession.—12 Madr. 136.

Suit to declare plaintiff's title to the stanom of fifth Raja of Palghat; the first Raja (defendant No. 1) received a malikana allowance from Government payable to the various stanomdars, but had refused to pay to plaintiff the fifth Raja's share:—Held, the plaintiff being entitled to sue for further relief than the declaration of his title and having omitted to do so, the suit must be dismissed under Specific Relief Act, sec. 42. Per cur.—Pensions Act, sec. 6, was not applicable to this case.—13 Madr. 75.

The intervention of two life estates does not preclude the reversioner from obtaining a declaration of his interest as to land under Specific Relief Act, sec. 42.—13 Madr. 195.

Suit for a declaration that a decree of a Subordinate Court was passed fraudulently, the Judge having been bribed by the present defendant:—Held, that the suit did not lie. Per cur.—The remedy would appear to be by way of injunction to restrain the party from executing the decree.—14 Madr. 167.

The plaintiff obtained a decree in a suit in which he averred that he was entitled to the office of Sheik of Kallai and to certain properties attached hereto, and prayed for a declaration that the defendant had no right either to the office of Sheik or to the properties in question, for an injunction restraining him from interfering with the properties or doing anything in any way inconsistent with the plaintiff's right to the office, and for further and other relief. It appeared, on the evidence for the defence, that the defendant was in possession of part of the property, but no issue had been framed as to the maintainability of the suit under the last clause of Specific Relief Act, sec. 42:—Held, on appeal by the defendant, that the Court of First Instance should take evidence and try an issue specifically directed to this question. It having appeared on the evidence recorded on that issue that the defendant was substantially in possession of the office of Sheik and of its emoluments:—Held, that the suit was not maintainable, although an injunction was asked for as relief consequential on the declaration. The plaintiff was permitted to pay additional stamp duty and amend the plaint by adding a prayer for possession.—15 Madr. 15.

In a suit in which the plaintiffs sought declarations that they were members of an undivided Aliyasantana family with the defendants, that certain property belonged to the family, and that plaintiff No. 1, the senior member of the family, was entitled to have the lands registered in his name, the defendants denied the allegations in the plaint, and pleaded that the suit for declarations only was not maintainable, and that it was barred by limitation. It was found that the plaintiffs had separated themselves from the defendants, and had for more than twelve years been excluded to their own knowledge from the joint family property :—Held, that, if, as alleged by the plaintiffs, plaintiff No. 1 was the de jure ejaman of the family, he was entitled to the possession and management of the family property, and a suit for a mere declaration of his right would not lie—Chandu v. Chathu Nambiar, I. L. R., 1 Madr. 381, distinguished. Per cur.—“We are of opinion that article 127 applies to this case, and that the plaintiffs, having separated themselves from the defendants, have for more than twelve years been to their own knowledge excluded from the joint family property, and that their suit to enforce a right to share therein is barred”—Mahalinga v. Mariyamma, I. L. R., 12 Madr. 462, distinguished.—15 Madr. 186.

A karar was executed by members of two Malabar tarwads, by which the tarwad of the plaintiffs and defendants Nos. 1 and 2 was amalgamated with that of which defendant No. 3 was a karnavan ; part of the property of the plaintiffs' branch was in the possession of defendants Nos. 1 and 3, and part of it was held under demises from defendant No. 3. The plaintiffs sued for a declaration of their title to this property and for a declaration that the karar was not binding on them. An issue was framed on the question whether the suit was maintainable for want of a prayer for all relief consequential on these declarations :—Held, (1) that the suit was not maintainable for want of a prayer for possession of the lands under demise ; (2) that the plaintiffs should not be permitted to amend the plaint on appeal by the addition of such a prayer.—15 Madr. 255.

The widows of a shrotriendar, who was a Sudra, brought a suit for a declaration of their title by inheritance to his lands against his illegitimate son, who had been registered as shrotriendar in lieu of his deceased father, and to whom certain of the raiyats had attorned. The defendant claimed to be legitimate according to the customary law governing the family, although his parents might not have been married at the time of his birth, by reason of his parents having performed the ceremony of pariyam before his birth:—Held (1) that the suit was not precluded by Specific Relief Act, sec. 42, proviso ; (2) that the defendant was illegitimate and that the plaintiffs were accordingly entitled to one-half of the lands in question, and the defendant was entitled to the other half. Observations on the allegation and proof of a custom in derogation of the general Hindu law of inheritance.—15 Madr. 307.

The defendant was in possession of the estate of a deceased gosavi as his shishya (spiritual son). The plaintiff sued upon a stamp of Rs. 10 for a declaration that he was the true shishya of the gosavi by a previous adoption, his real object being to establish a title to the estate in the hands of the defendant.—Held that under the circumstances the Court would not exercise, in the plaintiff's favour, the discretionary power to grant a declaratory decree vested in it by sec. 42 of the Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), inasmuch as to do so would enable the plaintiff to obtain a relief on a stamp of Rs. 10 which the Legislature intended should be chargeable with a higher fee, and thus would have the effect of giving countenance to an evasion of the stamp law.—3 Bom. 230.

The defendant obtained a decree against D, father of the plaintiffs, for satisfaction of his debt by the sale of a moiety of a village mortgaged to him by D. In execution of it he attached the mortgaged property, the attachment being made, under sec. 274 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877), by an order prohibiting D from transferring or charging the property in any way, and all persons from receiving it from him by purchase, gift, or otherwise. The plaintiffs thereupon applied for the removal of the attachment, but their application was rejected. They then sued for a declaration of their right to two thirds of the property. The District Judge, who tried the suit, rejected it on the ground that it was barred by s. 42 of the Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), because the plaintiffs might have sought further relief than a mere declaration of title, and omitted to do so. He was of opinion that the attachment constituted a dispossession, and that the plaintiffs might have asked to be replaced in possession, or, at any rate, for the removal of the attachment. Held by the High Court on appeal that the plaint was not open to objection on the ground that it only asked for a declaratory decree, without any consequential relief. Held that the prohibitory order to D did not constitute a dispossession of D, and still less of the plaintiffs, and that they could not have properly asked for removal of the attachment by a cancellation of the prohibitory order to D so long as they admitted that D had an interest in the attached property. Held, also, that the plaintiffs could not have properly asked for any consequential relief in their suit, but that when they instituted it, they were entitled and, indeed, bound to ask for a declaration of their right, if only to prevent a purchaser at the sale, under the defendant's decree against D, from afterwards alleging that he had purchased without notice of the plaintiffs' claim.—4 Bom. 529.

A suit will lie in a Civil Court for a declaration of the plaintiffs' right to officiate, in alternate years, as priests in a temple and receive the offerings to the idol. A suit should not be dismissed by an Appellate Court on the ground of its being one asking merely for a declaratory decree, and no consequential relief, where that objection has never been taken by the defendants to the suit. The plaintiffs should in such a case be allowed an opportunity of amending their plaint.—13 Bom. 548.

The plaintiff sued for a declaration that he was entitled to succeed, on his father's death, to a talukdari estate, to the exclusion of defendant No. 1, who, he alleged, was a supposititious child set up by his step-mother to defeat the plaintiff's right of inheritance. It appeared that defendant No. 1 had obtained a decree against the plaintiff's father, establishing his legitimacy, and declaring him entitled to receive maintenance out of the estate in question. In accordance with this decree, the Talukdari Settlement Officer, (defendant No. 2), who was in management of the estate under Bombay Act XXI of 1881, paid defendant No. 1 an allowance of Rs. 200 a month on account of his maintenance. The plaintiff alleged that the payment to defendant No. 1 was illegal and wrongful, but he did not ask for an injunction restraining him from receiving the allowance. The defendant contended that the suit was bad, (1) because notice had not been given to the Talukdari Settlement Officer as required by section 424 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), and (2) because the plaintiff had sued for a mere declaration of title without asking for consequential relief. Held, following Shahebzadee v. Fergusson and Bhau Balapa v. Nana, that the suit was maintainable without giving the Talukdari Settlement Officer the notice required by sec. 424 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Held, also, (Candy, J., doubting) that the suit was barred under sec. 42 of the Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), as the plaintiff had omitted to seek the relief of an injunction against defendant No. 1, restraining him from receiving future payment of maintenance. Held, further, that plaintiff was at liberty to amend his plaint by praying for an injunction as against both defendants.—14 Bom. 395.

Bai Javer, a Hindu widow, made a will disposing of property, and of which under an award she had only the use during her life and to which the plaintiff, her son, was entitled after her death. While she was still living the plaintiff filed this suit, praying that the will might be declared invalid. The defendants were the testatrix and those who took under the will. While the suit was pending, the testatrix died. The Subordinate Judge passed a decree in plaintiff's favour and declared the will invalid. The defendants appealed, and contended for the first time, in appeal, that the allegations in the plaint, viz., that the will was in their favour and that they (the defendants) were interested in denying the plaintiff's title as reversioner, did not constitute a case in which, in the exercise of a sound judicial discretion, a declaratory decree ought to be made. Held, that as the objection was taken for the first time in appeal, it would be unjust to allow the defendants to benefit after they had failed to resist G.'s claim on the merits. Held, further, that the will of J. should be declared to be invalid so far as it operated to defeat the award.—15 Bom. 697.

S sued B in a Court of Small Causes for arrears of ground-rent of a house. The latter denied S's proprietary right to the land and his liability to pay ground-rent, and S's suit was in consequence dismissed. Thereupon S sued B in the Civil Court for a declaration of proprietary right to the land and of his right to receive ground-rent. Held that the suit was not barred by the proviso to sec. 42 of the Specific Relief Act because it did not include a claim for arrears of ground rent; and that the suit was one in which the specific relief claimed might properly be granted. The principle laid down in Sadut Ali Khan v. Khajeh Abdool Gunnee (19 W. R., 171.) applied.—5 Al. 55.

On the death of P a Hindu widow, who had been in possession of the estate of her deceased husband, D's daughter B was entitled to succeed to the estate, if it were D's separate property. S, however, alleging that the estate was ancestral property, to which he was entitled to succeed, took possession of it. Thereupon the sons of another daughter of D, alleging that the estate of D was his separate property, that B was entitled to succeed to it, that they were the next reversioners, and that B was acquiescing in a possession on the part of S which was adverse to her and to them as next reversioners, sued B and S for a declaration of their reversionary right, and for possession of D's estate or such relief in this respect as the Court might think fit to give. Held that the plaint disclosed a right to sue on the part of the plaintiffs and a cause of action. Nobin Chunder Chuckerbutty v. Gurn Persad Doss (B. L. R., F. B. R., 1008); Radha Mohan Dhar v. Ram Das Dey (3 B. L. R., 362); Gunesh Dutt v. Lall Muttee Kooer (17 W. R., 11); and sec. 42 of the Specific Relief Act referred to. In order to show separation in a Hindu family, it is not necessary to establish a partition of the joint estate into separate shares or holdings: it is enough that there has been ascertainment and definition of the extent of right and interest of the several co-sharers in the whole, and of the proportion of participation each of them is to have in the income derived from the property, to effect a severance and destruction of the joint tenancy, so to speak, and to convert it into a tenancy in common, Appovier v. Rama Subba Aiyan (11 Moo. L. A. 75) followed. Held, therefore, where, although the ancestral property of a Hindu family had not been formally and completely partitioned by metes and bounds, the income of it had been enjoyed by the different members of it in distinct and defined share, that the family was not a joint and undivided Hindu family. It being decided that B was entitled to the estate of D and that she should be in possession of it, the Court, having regard to B's conduct, gave the plaintiffs a declaration of their reversionary right to D's estate and directed that possession of it should be given to B, and, if she declined to accept possession, then that A, one of the plaintiffs, should be put in possession for her as manager on her behalf, and he should act under the orders and directions of the lower Court, filing accounts in, and paying the income to her, through such Court, whose receipts should be a sufficient discharge.—5 Al. 532.

The zemindars of a village sued an occupancy-tenant for a declaration of their right to maintain a custom which was thus recorded in wajib-ul-arz:—"When necessary, one or two bighas out of the tenant's lands are taken without their consent (khushi) for sowing indigo." Upon the basis of this entry, they claimed to be entitled to take a portion of the occupancy-holding at a certain period of the year, for the purpose of cultivating indigo:—Held, by the Full Bench that the word "khushi" used in the wajib-ul-arz indicated that the land was only to be taken with the occupancy-tenant's consent, and the document created no right of the nature alleged, namely to take the land despite the tenant. Per Tyrrell, J.—That the suit was not maintainable under the special provisions of the Act.—7 Al. 880.

Subsequent to a decree for partition of an ancestral estate, the creditors of one of the parties thereto who, from the time of the suit, had borrowed money from them on the security of his rights and interests in the estate, brought a suit against their debtor and obtained a decree for the monies due to them. They then sued all the parties to the partition for a declaration that the decree then passed was, so far as it affected their (the plaintiff's), interests, fraudulent and collusive, and of no effect:—Held, that the suit was not maintainable.—7 Al. 884.

The name of the widow of a member of a joint hindu family was allowed by the other members to be recorded in her husband's place in respect of his rights and interests in the family property by way of compliment to her, and they consented that, in lieu of maintenance, she should receive the profits of the property during her lifetime. The widow executed a deed of mortgage of the property, which did not specifically state the amount of the estate mortgaged, and also a bond upon which the obligee obtained a decree, in execution whereof he attached part of the property recorded in the name of the obligor. The members of the family brought a suit in which they prayed for a declaration that the mortgage executed by the widow was invalid, and that the property was not liable for the amount due thereunder, or to attachment in execution of the decree obtained upon the bond:—Held, that if the widow's possession were only a possession by the plaintiff's consent entitling her merely to receive the profits for her maintenance, the plaintiffs might eject her from the property, and that before they could obtain a declaration under sec. 42 they must seek their relief by ejectment, that being the substantial and real relief appropriate to the cause of action. On the other hand, if the widow had an estate in possession, given to her in exchange for her maintenance, she had an interest which she was competent to alienate :—Held also that inasmuch as the deed of mortgage contained no description of the amount of the estate mortgaged by the widow, and upon its face, mortgaged her share of the property only, it could have no operation beyond her share, and the Court would not be justified in granting a declaration merely because the plaintiffs apprehended some possible future claim based upon the allegation that the transfer comprised the entire estate.—8 Al. 70.

An improper or irregular exercise of the discretionary power conferred by sec. 42 of the Specific Relief Act (I of 1877) does not in itself constitute sufficient ground for the reversal of a decree which is not open to objection on the ground of jurisdiction or of the merits of the case, being covered by sec. 578 of the Civil Procedure Code. Sant Kumar v. Deo Saran referred to.—9 Al. 622.

Under the Specific Relief Act (I of 1877) sec. 42, a suit was brought for a decree declaratory of the plaintiffs' title to be mutawalis and managers of property from ancient times connected with religious observances, viz., a ghat upon the Jumna with temples adjoining; of their title also to receive a proportion of the offerings; and they also claimed to have the proceeds of a decree obtained by the defendants against a third party spent upon repairs. Held that the suit had been rightly dismissed in the first Court. Even if the evidence had shown that the plaintiffs had some rights in respect of the property in question, they had, nevertheless, so far failed in giving definite proof of their claims that they were not entitled to the decree claimed. No decision was, however, given, nor was any opinion expressed, with respect to other rights, which either of the parties might have, or claim to have, relating to the property.—12 Al. 587.

The effect of sec. 95 (a) and sec. 10 of the North-Western Provinces Rent Act (XII of 1881) is to deprive the Civil Courts of jurisdiction to take cognizance of any suit the object of which is to declare, as between the zemindar and tenants, the status of the tenants. A Civil Court has no jurisdiction to entertain a suit in which, the defendants being admittedly the tenants of the plaintiffs, the plaintiffs pray for a declaration that certain entries of the defendants in the revenue records as occupancy tenants, and certain orders of the Revenue Courts maintaining those entries, be set aside, and that the defendants are shikmis and not occupancy tenants, and that the land in question is the plaintiffs' sir land. Such a suit cannot be brought within the Civil Court's jurisdiction by dropping all the reliefs claimed except the last-mentioned declaration, that being merely of importance as incidental to the previous ones, and as a roundabout mode of obtaining a declaration that the defendants are not the plaintiffs' occupancy tenants. Per EDGE, C.J., and MAHMOOD, J.—Whether the last-mentioned prayer is one which could be brought under sec. 42 of the Specific Relief Act, quaere. Per STRAIGHT, J.—The suit might also be considered as one to set aside orders passed by the Settlement Officer in the discharge of his duty for the purpose of correcting the jamabandi as a part of the record of rights, and thus the jurisdiction of the Civil Court was barred by sec. 241 of the North-Western Provinces Land Revenue Act (XIX of 1873).—13 Al. 17.

43. A declaration made under this chapter is binding only on the parties to the suit, persons claiming through them respectively, and, where any of the parties are trustees, on the persons for whom, if in existence at the date of the declaration, such parties would be trustees.

Effect of declaration.

Illustration.

A, a Hindu, in a suit to which B, his alleged wife, and her mother, are defendants, seeks a declaration that his marriage was duly solemnized, and an order for the restitution of his conjugal rights. The Court makes the declaration and order. C, claiming that B is his wife, then sues A for the recovery of B. The declaration made in the former suit is not binding upon C.

CHAPTER VII.

OF THE APPOINTMENT OF RECEIVERS.

44. The appointment of a receiver pending a suit is a matter resting in the discretion of the Court.

Appointment of receivers discretionary.

The mode and effect of his appointment, and his rights, powers, duties and liabilities, are regulated by the Code of Civil Procedure.*

Reference to Code of Procedure.

CHAPTER VIII.

OF THE ENFORCEMENT OF PUBLIC DUTIES.

45. Any of the High Courts of Judicature at Fort William, Madras and Bombay, may make an order requiring any specific act to be done or forborne, within the local limits of its ordinary original civil jurisdiction, by any person holding a public office, whether of a permanent or a temporary nature, or by any corporation or inferior Court of Judicature: provided—

Power to order public servants and others to do certain specific acts.

(a) that an application for such order be made by some person whose property, franchise, or personal right, would be injured by the forbearing or doing (as the case may be) of the said specific act;

(b) that such doing or forbearing is, under any law for the time being in force, clearly incumbent on such person or

* See Act XIV. of 1882, sec. 3.

Court in his or its public character, or on such corporation in its corporate character ;

(c) that, in the opinion of the High Court, such doing or forbearing is consonant to right and justice ;

(d) that the applicant has no other specific and adequate legal remedy ; and

(e) that the remedy given by the order applied for will be complete.

Exemptions from such power.

Nothing in this section shall be deemed to authorize any High Court—

(f) to make any order binding on the Secretary of State for India in Council, on the Governor-General in Council, on the Governor of Madras in Council, on the Governor of Bombay in Council, or on the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal ;

(g) to make any order on any other servant of the Crown as such, merely to enforce the satisfaction of a claim upon the crown ; or

(h) to make any order which is otherwise expressly excluded by any law for the time being in force.

Notes.

Section 31 of Bengal Act II of 1888 does not impose on the Chairman of the Municipality the duty of exercising any judicial discretion or taking any judicial action with regard to the list of candidates prepared under that section.—L. L. R., 19 Cal. 192.

Mr. G. bought some shares in the Bombay Fire Insurance Company and applied to the directors for registration as a shareholder in respect of the shares bought. The directors refused the application, giving no reason for so doing. Mr. G. now applied to the Court, under sec. 45 of the Specific Relief Act and under sec. 58 of the Indian Companies Act, for an order compelling the directors to register him as a shareholder. The Articles of Association of the Company provided (inter alia) that any shareholder might with the sanction of the Board of Directors sell or dispose of and transfer all or any of his shares to any other person approved by the Board (who shall not be bound to assign any reason for the withholding of such sanction). Held, that the application should be refused, for section 45 of the Specific Relief Act did not apply (there being another “specific and adequate legal remedy”), and under the Companies Act the proper procedure had not been adopted. Mr. G. was a transferee whose title was not complete, in as much as the requisite sanction to the transfer had not been obtained, and, therefore, there was no privity between him and the directors of the company, and he had no right to complain.—16 Bom. 398.

46. Every application under section 45 must be founded on an affidavit of the person injured, stating his right in the matter in question, his demand of justice, and the denial thereof ; and the High Court may, in its discretion, make the order applied for absolute in the first instance, or refuse it, or grant a rule to show cause why the order applied for should not be made.

Application how made.

Procedure thereon.

If in the last case, the person, Court, or corporation complained of, shows no sufficient cause, the High Court may first make an order in the alternative, either to do or forbear the act mentioned in the order, or to signify some reason to the contrary, and make an answer thereto by such day as the High Court fixes in this behalf.

47. If the person, Court, or corporation, to whom or to which such order is directed makes no answer, or makes an insufficient or a false answer, the High Court may then issue a peremptory order to do or forbear the act absolutely.

Every order under this chapter shall be executed, of, and appeal and may be appealed from, as if it were from, orders. a decree made in the exercise of the ordinary original civil jurisdiction of the High Court.

49. The costs of all applications and orders under this chapter shall be in the discretion of the High Court.

50. Neither the High Court nor any Judge thereof shall hereafter issue any writ of mandamus.

51. Each of the said High Courts shall, as soon as conveniently may be, frame rules to regulate the procedure under this chapter; and, until such rules are framed, the practice of such Court as to applications for and grants of writs of mandamus shall apply, so far as may be practicable, to applications and orders under this chapter.

PART III.—OF PREVENTIVE RELIEF.

CHAPTER IX.

OF INJUNCTIONS GENERALLY.

52. Preventive relief is granted at the discretion of the Court by injunction, temporary or perpetual.

53. Temporary injunctions are such as are to continue until a specified time or until the further order of the Court. They may be granted at any period of a suit, and are regulated by the Code of Civil Procedure.*

A perpetual injunction can only be granted by the decree made at the hearing and upon the merits of the suit: the defendant is thereby perpetually enjoined from the assertion of a right, or from the commission of an act, which would be contrary to the rights of the plaintiff.

CHAPTER X.

OF PERPETUAL INJUNCTIONS.

54. Subject to the other provisions contained in, or referred to by, this chapter, a perpetual injunction may be granted to prevent the breach of an obligation existing in favour of the applicant, whether expressly or by implication.

When such obligation arises from contract, the Court shall be guided by the rules and provisions contained in Chapter II. of this Act.

When the defendant invades or threatens to invade the plaintiff's right to, or enjoyment of, property, the Court may grant a perpetual injunction in the following cases (namely):—

(a) where the defendant is trustee of the property for the plaintiff;

(b) where there exists no standard for ascertaining the actual damage caused, or likely to be caused, by the invasion;

(c) where the invasion is such that pecuniary compensation would not afford adequate relief;

(d) where it is probable that pecuniary compensation cannot be got for the invasion;

(e) where the injunction is necessary to prevent a multiplicity of judicial proceedings.

Explanation.—For the purpose of this section, trademark is property.

Illustrations.

(a.) A lets certain land to B, and B contracts not to dig sand or gravel thereout. A may sue for an injunction to restrain B from digging in violation of this contract.

(b.) A trustee threatens a breach of trust. His co-trustees, if any, should, and the beneficial owners may, sue for an injunction to prevent the breach.

(c.) The directors of a public company are about to pay a dividend out of capital or borrowed money. Any of the shareholders may sue for an injunction to restrain them.

(d.) The directors of a fire and life-insurance company are about to engage in marine insurances. Any of the shareholders may sue for an injunction to restrain them.

(e.) A, an executor, through misconduct or insolvency, is bringing the property of the deceased into danger. The Court may grant an injunction to restrain him from getting in the assets.

(f.) A, a trustee for B, is about to make an imprudent sale of a small part of the trust-property. B may sue for an injunction to restrain the sale, even though compensation in money would have afforded him adequate relief.

(g.) A makes a settlement (not founded on marriage or other valuable consideration) of an estate on B and his children. A then contracts to sell the estate to C. B or any of his children may sue for an injunction to restrain the sale.

(h.) In the course of A's employment as a vakil, certain papers belonging to his client, B, come into his possession. A threatens to make these papers public, or to communicate their contents to a stranger. B may sue for an injunction to restrain A from so doing.

(i.) A is B's medical adviser. He demands money of B, which B declines to pay. A then threatens to make known the effect of B's communications to him as a patient. This is contrary to A's duty, and B may sue for an injunction to restrain him from so doing.

(j.) A, the owner of two adjoining houses, lets one to B, and afterwards lets the other to C. A and C begin to make such alterations in the house let to C as will prevent the comfortable enjoyment of the house let to B. B may sue for an injunction to restrain them from so doing.

(k.) A lets certain arable lands to B for purposes of husbandry, but without any express contract as to the mode of cultivation. Contrary to the mode of cultivation customary in the district, B threatens to sow the lands with seeds injurious thereto, and requiring many years to eradicate. A may sue for an injunction to restrain B from sowing the lands in contravention of his implied contract to use them in a husbandlike manner.

(l.) A, B and C, are partners, the partnership being determinable at will. A threatens to do an act tending to the destruction of the partnership-property. B and C may, without seeking a dissolution of the partnership, sue for an injunction to restrain A from doing the act.

(m.) A, a Hindu widow in possession of her deceased husband's property, commits destruction of the property without any cause sufficient to justify her in so doing. The heir-expectant may sue for an injunction to restrain her.

(n.) A, B, and C, are members of an undivided Hindu family. A cuts timber growing on the family-property, and threatens to destroy part of the family-house, and to sell some of the family-utensils. B and C may sue for an injunction to restrain him.

(o.) A, the owner of certain houses in Calcutta, becomes insolvent. B buys them from the official assignee, and enters into possession. A persists in trespassing on and damaging the houses, and B is thereby compelled, at considerable expense, to employ men to protect the possession. B may sue for an injunction to restrain further acts of trespass.

(p.) The inhabitants of a village claim a right of way over A's land. In a suit against several of them, A obtains a declaratory decree that his land is subject to no such right. Afterwards each of the other villagers sues A for obstructing his alleged right of way over the land. A may sue for an injunction to restrain them.

(q.) A, in an administration-suit, to which a creditor, B, is not a party, obtains a decree for the administration of C's assets. B proceeds against C's estate for his debt. A may sue for an injunction to restrain B.

(r.) A and B are in possession of contiguous lands and of the mines underneath them. A works his mine so as to extend under B's mine, and threatens to remove certain pillars which help to support B's mine. B may sue for an injunction to restrain him from so doing.

(s.) A rings bells or makes some other unnecessary noise so near a house as to interfere materially and unreasonably with the physical comfort of the occupier, B. B may sue for an injunction restraining A from making the noise.

(t.) A pollutes the air with smoke so as to interfere materially with the physical comfort of B and C, who carry on business in a neighbouring house. B and C may sue for an injunction to restrain the pollution.

(u.) A infringes B's patent. If the Court is satisfied that the patent is valid, and has been infringed, B may obtain an injunction to restrain the infringement.

(v.) A pirates B's copyright. B may obtain an injunction to restrain the piracy, unless the work of which copyright is claimed is libellous or obscene.

(w.) A improperly uses the trademark of B. B may obtain an injunction to restrain the user, provided that B's use of the trademark is honest.

(x.) A, a tradesman, holds out B as his partner against the wish and without the authority of B. B may sue for an injunction to restrain A from so doing.

(y.) A, a very eminent man, writes letters on family-topics to B. After the death of A and B, C, who is B's residuary legatee, proposes to make money by publishing A's letters. D, who is A's executor, has a property in the letters, and may sue for an injunction to restrain C from publishing them.

(z.) A carries on a manufactory, and B is his assistant. In the course of his business, A imparts to B a secret process of value. B afterwards demands money of A, threatening, in case of refusal, to disclose the process to C, a rival manufacturer. A may sue for an injunction to restrain B from disclosing the process.

Notes.

Before a Court will, in the case of co-sharers, make an order directing that a portion of the joint property alleged to have been dealt with by one of the co-sharers without the consent of the other should be restored to its former condition (as, for instance, where a tank has been excavated), a plaintiff must show that he has sustained, by the act he complains of, some injury which materially affects his position. Lala Biswambhar v. Rajaram Lal, 3 B. L. R., Ap. 67, applied in principle; Shamnagar Jute Factory Co. v. Ram Narain Chatterjee, I. L. R., 14 Cal. 189, approved. The fact that a portion of the land on which a tank had been excavated by the defendant was fit for cultivation does not constitute an injury of a substantial nature such as would justify an order of that nature.—I. L. R., 14 Cal. 236.

The plaintiffs were owners of the Grant Buildings situated at Colaba in Bombay. The said buildings comprised two three-storied blocks known respectively as the eastern block and the western block. Each block consisted of four divisions, those in the eastern block being numbered respectively Nos. 1, 2, 3, and 4, and those in the western block being numbered Nos. 5, 6, 7, and 8. Each block contained thirty-four sets of rooms. The plaintiffs became owners of the Grant Buildings in 1868, and had ever since derived a considerable income from the rooms by letting them as dwelling rooms to Europeans at an average rent of Rs. 50 ^{per} month. The defendants were owners of an adjacent cotton mill known as the Nicol Mill, which was erected in 1873. Prior to 1873 the site of the mill was occupied by the buildings of the Hydraulic Press Company, which were erected in 1868. These premises were in 1873 purchased by the Nicol Press and Manufacturing Company, who thereupon proceeded to build the Nicol Mill. On the 3rd August, 1874, the erection of the mill having then just commenced, the plaintiff's solicitor wrote to the Secretaries of the Nicol Press and Manufacturing Company as follows:—"It is rumoured that it is intended to carry on the business of spinning and weaving in the buildings now being erected. A business of this nature carried on so close to the Grant Buildings will render our client's property comparatively valueless, and we are instructed to bring this fact to your notice and to say that the Bank will not permit any business of the kind to be carried on to the detriment of their property." To this letter the Company replied that the business of the Hydraulic Press Company had been previously carried on by that Company on the same site without any remonstrance either from the plaintiff's or from the occupants of the Grant Buildings; that the value of the plaintiffs' property would be increased, not depreciated by the erection of the new mill; that the plaintiffs had been aware of the intention of the Nicol Company to convert the Hydraulic Press Company's premises into a spinning and weaving mill, and that they should have entered their protest months before; that under the circumstances the plaintiffs had no right to interfere in the working of the mill, and that the Nicol Company therefore intended to continue the erection of the building and to use it, when completed, for the purposes of the Company. The mill was completed and commenced working in June, 1876, with 13,644 spindles, there being room and engine-power sufficient for 40,000 spindles and 250 additional looms. In March, 1877, the number of spindles was increased to 19,832, which was the number in the mill at the date of suit. Since March, 1874, the eastern block of the Grant Buildings had been closed and not offered to tenants, the demand for rooms of that character having been only sufficient to fill the western block. In 1878, however, the demand again increased and the eastern block was re-opened and let to tenants, Division No. 1 being opened in January, 1878, and Division No. 2 in March, 1878, Division No. 3 in November and Division No. 4 in December, 1878. Complaints having been received from the tenants of these divisions of the nuisance arising from the Nicol Mill, the plaintiffs in December, 1878, sent instructions to counsel to prepare a plaint against the Nicol Press and Manufacturing Company. On the 26th of that month, however, a resolution was passed to wind up the Company and the working of the mill was discontinued. In consequence of this no plaint was prepared, but the plaintiffs' solicitor sent a notice to the Liquidators of the Company referring to what had taken place and warning them not to sell the mill without giving the purchaser notice of the plaintiffs' intention to take proceedings against any person who should recommence to work the mill. Advertisements to that effect were also published in the English and native daily newspapers. On the 9th August, 1880, hearing that the mill was to be put up to auction, the plaintiffs sent to the Liquidators a similar notice. On the 25th August, 1880, the defendants' mill was put up for sale and the notices were read out by the plaintiffs' solicitor. The defendants were present and heard the notice read. The defendants purchased the property for Rupees 3,61,000, and the sale was confirmed by the Court. On the 1st January, 1881, the mill recommenced working, having been idle for two years. On the 26th January, 1881, a notice was sent to the defendants to discontinue the working of the mill on pain of a suit. The defendants replied denying the nuisance and stating that any suit would be defended. The suit was filed on the 5th February, 1881. The plaintiffs alleged a nuisance, especially to the tenants of the eastern block of the Grant Buildings, arising from the noise, smoke and cotton fluff and smells issuing from the defendants' mill. They complained that the said nuisances would be much increased when the defendants carried out their intention of completing the number of spindles and looms for which the mill was built. They prayed for an injunction and Rs. 1,000 damages. The defendants denied the alleged nuisance and contended that the plaintiffs were debarred from the relief claimed. At the time of the filing of the suit the only rooms in the Grant Buildings that were vacant were the following:—In the east block two rooms in Division No. I, one room in Division No. III, and one room in Division No. IV. In the west block five rooms were vacant. The total net rental of the vacant rooms was Rs. 350 a month, and of the occupied rooms Rs. 2,410. Evidence was given that many tenants had vacated their rooms in the east block on account of the nuisance experienced from the mill, but that the demand for rooms was so great that other tenants were found to fill the vacancies almost as soon as they occurred. At the time of the hearing of the suit four rooms were vacant in the east block and none in the west block. Between the date of the filing of the suit and the hearing, changes had been effected in the mill which decreased the nuisance, e.g., new boilers were erected, smokeless coal was used, screens, steam-jets and baffleplates were introduced. In order to diminish the noise double fixed windows were put in on the north side of the mill and the cog-wheeled gearing was bricked up. At the hearing it was contended—(1) that the mill was no nuisance; (2) that even if it was, the plaintiffs were debarred by their conduct from objecting; (3) that the plaintiffs being reversioners were not entitled to sue. Held, on the evidence, that the plaintiffs were not debarred from suing by acquiescence or laches, but that the defendants and the previous owners of the mill had been at every stage acquainted with the plaintiffs' intention to resist the working of the mill if it proved to be a nuisance; (2). That the working of the mill was a nuisance to the occupants of Divisions 2, 3 and 4 by reason of (a) the noise and also by reason of the (b) smoke and cotton fluff issuing from the mill during the monsoon; (3). That the only cause of action on which the plaintiffs could rely in support of their claim to an injunction was the diminution in the value of their property owing to the working of the mill being a nuisance in respect of the four rooms vacant in Divisions Nos. 2, 3 and 4, at the time of the filing of the suit ; (4). That the efficacy of the changes and improvements made by the defendants after the filing of the suit for the purpose of diminishing the nuisance complained of depended so much on the good intention and constant personal care of the defendants and their servants that it ought not to influence the question of injunction when once the nuisance was proved to have existed ; (5). That although (the plaintiffs being at the date of the suit entitled only to complain of the nuisance as to four out of sixty-eight sets of rooms) it might be said there was no material diminution of the value of the property arising from the nuisance, the Court in considering the propriety of granting an injunction would have regard to the fact that the injunction, if granted, would render it unnecessary for the plaintiffs to bring an action in respect of all the other rooms in Division Nos. 2, 3 and 4 after giving the tenants notice to quit, and so prevent that multiplicity of suits on which an injunction is authorized by sec. 54 of the Specific Relief Act. Under the special circumstances of the cause the question whether an injunction should go, should be dealt with as if the plaintiffs had a right of action in respect of all the rooms in Divisions Nos. 2, 3 and 4 ; (6). The only interest of the plaintiffs in the Grant Buildings being a personal interest and the only object of the plaintiffs having been to secure the highest value for their property, and considering that, from the nature of the case, an injunction, such as the plaintiffs prayed for, would place the defendants entirely in the power of the plaintiffs, the relief given to the plaintiffs should assume the form of pecuniary compensation rather than of an injunction, and directed further evidence to be taken as to the diminution in value of the plaintiffs' property caused or likely to be caused by the nuisance so far as it affected Divisions Nos. 2, 3, and 4 of the eastern block. After taking further evidence the Court considered that the case would be best dealt with by a combination of damages and injunction ; and made an order for an injunction to issue against noise, smoke and cotton fluff so as to be a nuisance to the plaintiffs as owners or to their tenants for the time being of Divisions Nos. 2, 3 and 4. Such injunction not to issue in case the defendants should pay to the plaintiffs the sum of Rs. 40,000 before the expiration of a fortnight from the date of the decree. In the event of the payment of the said sum to them, an injunction to issue restraining defendants from working the said mill otherwise than with closed double glass windows on the side next the Grant Buildings, and also restraining defendants from allowing any smoke or cotton fluff to issue so as to cause such nuisance as aforesaid with liberty to plaintiffs to apply in case the noise be materially increased beyond what it is at present. On appeal, Held, per Bayley, C. J. (Acting) and West, J., that admitting that money compensation was a right form of relief, it should be compensation measured by the premises not owned but occupied by the plaintiffs ; in other words the rooms unlet. It was only in respect of these that the plaintiffs were competent to sue, and they could not be entitled to compensation on as more extensive ground. It was only in respect of the rooms in question that the present suit and the decree therein could guard the defendants against further actions. An award of Rs. 40,000 to the plaintiffs could not prevent any tenant of the rooms affected by the nuisance from suing the defendants on the same grounds as were taken by the plaintiffs in this suit. It would be unreasonable that the defendants should be made to pay as damages in bulk to persons not legally entitled what they might have to pay over again to those who are or may be entitled in detail. For the damages arising to the plaintiffs on account of the rooms unlet at the institution of the suit, Rs. 1,000 would afford sufficient compensation, and the sum awarded should be reduced to that amount. The decree was varied accordingly and a clause was also inserted, distinctly providing against any increase of smoke, cotton fluff or noise of machinery beyond what subsisted at the date of the decree, and further providing that in case any invention should be made by which the nuisance might easily be diminished, the decree was not to be deemed to prejudice the right, if any, the plaintiffs as owners or the tenants of the Grant Buildings to require the defendants to introduce such invention into the said mill so as to cause the least annoyance reasonably possible.—I. L. R., 8 Bom. 34.

The plaintiff complained that the defendants intended to build so as to obstruct the passage of light and air through an ancient window in his house, and render a room therein unfit for use, and prayed for a perpetual injunction restraining the defendant from so building. It was proved that the wall intended to be built would so shut out the light and air as to render the room completely dark and unfit for use. The Subordinate Judge granted the injunction as prayed. The defendants appealed to the Joint Judge, who amended the lower Court's decree by ordering the removal of the injunction and directing, in its stead, a new window to be opened in the plaintiff's house to the east of the window in question. On appeal by the plaintiff to the High Court. Held, reversing the decree of the lower Appellate Court that the plaintiff had an absolute and indefeasible right to the easement he had acquired; and the only possible question was whether injunction or damages was the appropriate remedy under the circumstances of the particular case. Held, also, that, as the evidence established that, after defendant's wall was built, plaintiff's room would not remain substantially as useful to him as before, the plaintiff was entitled to an injunction. The High Court also directed a mandatory injunction to issue to the defendants to remove the wall they had raised after the lower Appellate Court had passed the decree in their favour and pending the plaintiff's appeal to the High Court.—13 Bom. 674.

One of several co sharers in a mahal having begun to erect certain kacheha buildings upon the common land, another co-sharer, three or four days after the building had commenced, brought a suit for an injunction to restrain the continuance thereof, on the ground that the defendant was ousting the plaintiff as a co-sharer from a portion of the common land. It was found that the defendant was building upon land which was in excess of the share which would come to him on partition, and that on partition the plaintiff could not be adequately compensated. Held, by the Full Bench that the plaintiff was entitled to a perpetual injunction restraining the defendant from proceeding further with the building, and directing that the building so far as it had proceeded be pulled down, and prohibiting the defendant from building on the land as exclusive owner at any future time. Paras Ram v. Sherjit referred to. Per Straight, J., that it was for the defendant appellant to show that the lower appellate Court had exercised a wrong discretion in granting the injunction, and that, this not having been shown, the High Court ought not to interfere.—12 Al. 436.

Mandatory injunctions.

55. When, to prevent the breach of an obligation, it is necessary to compel the performance of certain acts which the Court is capable of enforcing, the Court may, in its discretion, grant an injunction to prevent the breach complained of, and also to compel performance of the requisite acts.

Illustrations.

(a.) A, by new buildings, obstructs lights, to the access and use of which B has acquired a right under the Indian Limitation Act, Part IV.* B may obtain an injunction, not only to restrain A from going on with the buildings, but also to pull down so much of them as obstructs B's lights.

(b.) A builds a house with eaves projecting over B's land. B may sue for an injunction to pull down so much of the eaves as so project.

(c.) In the case put as illustration (i) to section 54, the Court may also order all written communications made by B as patient to A, as medical adviser, to be destroyed.

(d.) In the case put as illustration (y) to section 54, the Court may also order A's letters to be destroyed.

(e.) A threatens to publish statements concerning B, which would be punishable under Chapter XXI of the Indian Penal Code. The Court may grant an injunction to restrain the publication, even though it may be shown not to be injurious to B's property.

(f.) A, being B's medical adviser, threatens to publish B's written communications with him, showing that B has led an immoral life. B may obtain an injunction to restrain the publication.

(g.) In the cases put as illustrations (v) and (w) to section 54, and as illustrations (e) and (f) to this section, the Court may also order the copies produced by piracy, and the trademarks, statements, and communications, therein respectively mentioned, to be given up or destroyed.

Injunction when refused. 56. An injunction cannot be granted—

(a) to stay a judicial proceeding pending at the institution of the suit in which the injunction is sought, unless such restraint is necessary to prevent a multiplicity of proceedings ;

(b) to stay proceedings in a Court not subordinate to that from which the injunction is sought ;

(c) to restrain persons from applying to any legislative body ;

(d) to interfere with the public duties of any department of the Government of India or the Local Government, or with the sovereign acts of a Foreign Government ;

(e) to stay proceedings in any criminal matter ;

(f) to prevent the breach of a contract, the performance of which would not be specifically enforced ;

(g) to prevent, on the ground of nuisance, an act of which it is not reasonably clear that it will be a nuisance ;

(h) to prevent a continuing breach in which the applicant has acquiesced ;

* See Act XV. of 1877, sec. 2.

(i) when equally efficacious relief can certainly be obtained by any other usual mode of proceeding, except in case of breach of trust ;

(j) when the conduct of the applicant or his agents has been such as to disentitle him to the assistance of the Court ;

(k) where the applicant has no personal interest in the matter.

Illustrations.

(a.) A seeks an injunction to restrain his partner, B, from receiving the partnership-debts and effects. It appears that A had improperly possessed himself of the books of the firm, and refused B access to them. The Court will refuse the injunction.

(b.) A manufactures and sells crucibles, designating them as "patent plumbago crucibles," though, in fact, they have never been patented. B pirates the designation. A cannot obtain an injunction to restrain the piracy.

(c.) A sells an article called "Mexican Balm," stating that it is compounded of divers rare essences, and has sovereign medicinal qualities. B commences to sell a similar article to which he gives a name and description such as to lead people into the belief that they are buying A's Mexican Balm. A sues B for an injunction to restrain the sale. B shows that A's Mexican Balm consists of nothing but scented hog's lard. A's use of his description is not an honest one, and he cannot obtain an injunction.

Notes.

An injunction did not, under the law as it stood before the Specific Relief Act, 1877, lie against the decree-holder, by assignment or otherwise, to restrain him from executing a decree granted to him by a Court exercising co-ordinate jurisdiction with the Court in which the injunction was applied for, on the ground that the proceedings by which the decree was obtained against the person applying for the injunction were altogether illegal. The cases in which injunctions were granted by the Courts of Chancery in England against proceedings in other Courts rested upon the assumption that the rights of the parties could not be inquired into, except through the Courts of Chancery, and are, therefore not applicable to India. Injunctions to stay proceedings under the Specific Relief Act can only be granted in cases where the Court in which the proceedings are to be stayed is subordinate to that in which the injunction is sought.—I. L. R., 4 Cal. 380.

In a suit brought in a Subordinate Court by the junior members of a Malabar tarwad against their karnavan and others, the plaintiffs prayed for a declaration of the uraima right of their tarwad in a certain devasom, and for an injunction to restrain the defendants, other than the members of the plaintiffs' tarwad, from executing a decree of a District Court, passed on appeal from a Munsif's Court, whereby certain lands of the devasom were decreed to be surrendered to them in the character of uralers ; it appeared (1) that plaintiffs' karnavan was a party to the suit in which the above-mentioned decree was passed, (2) that the plaintiffs' tarwad was otherwise entitled to the uraima right by adverse possession, if not immemorial title :—Held, (1) that the plaintiffs were entitled to maintain the suit without proof of fraud and collusion on the part of their karnavan in the previous suit ; (2) that the injunction sought was not precluded by Specific Relief Act, sec. 56 (b) ; (3) that the plaintiffs were entitled to the decree as prayed.—14 Madr. 425.

A tenant, on whom a notice of ejectment had been served under the N.W.P. Rent Act, 1881, and whose suit to contest his liability to ejectment, brought under that Act, had failed, sued in the Civil Court for a perpetual injunction to prevent his ejectment, bringing his suit on an agreement that he should not be ejected so long as he paid certain rent. Held that the suit was not maintainable, the jurisdiction of the Civil Court being excluded by sec. 95 of the Rent Act and by sec. 56, (b) and (f), of the Specific Relief Act.—5 Al. 429.

See I. L. R., 15 Madr. 15, noted under sec. 42.

57. Notwithstanding section 56, clause (f), where a

Injunctions to perform contract comprises an affirmative agreement to do a certain act, coupled with a negative agreement. negative agreement. negative agreement, express or implied, not to do a certain act, the circumstance that the Court is unable to compel specific performance of the affirmative agreement shall not preclude it from granting an injunction to perform the negative agreement ; provided that the applicant has not failed to perform the contract so far as it is binding on him.

Illustrations.

(a.) A contracts to sell to B for Rupees 1,000 the good-will of a certain business unconnected with business-premises, and further agrees not to carry on that business in Calcutta. B pays A the Rupees 1,000, but A carries on the business in Calcutta. The Court cannot compel A to send his customers to B, but B may obtain an injunction restraining A from carrying on the business in Calcutta.

(b.) A contracts to sell to B the good-will of a business. A then sets up a similar business close by B's shop, and solicits his old customers to deal with him. This is contrary to his implied contract, and B may obtain an injunction to restrain A from soliciting the customers, and from doing any act whereby their good-will may be withdrawn from B.

(c.) A contracts with B to sing for twelve months at B's theatre, and not to sing in public elsewhere. B cannot obtain specific performance of the contract to sing, but he is entitled to an injunction restraining A from singing at any other place of public entertainment.

(d.) B contracts with A that he will serve him faithfully for twelve months as a clerk. A is not entitled to a decree for specific performance of this contract. But he is entitled to an injunction restraining B from serving a rival-house as clerk.

(e.) A contracts with B that, in consideration of Rupees 1,000 to be paid to him by B on a day fixed, he will not set up a certain business within a specified distance. B fails to pay the money. A cannot be restrained from carrying on the business within the specified distance.

LAW OF LIMITATION.

ACT No. XV. OF 1877.

RECEIVED THE G.-G.'s ASSENT ON THE 19TH JULY 1877.

(As amended up to date.)

An Act for the Limitation of Suits, and for other purposes.

WHEREAS it is expedient to amend the law relating to the limitation of suits, appeals, and certain applications to Courts; and whereas it is also expedient to provide rules for acquiring by possession the ownership of easements and other property; It is hereby enacted as follows:—

Preamble.

Notes.

The law of limitation fixes a time at the expiration of which an action or right not already prosecuted becomes extinguished; and the law of prescription determines by what length of user the acquisition of right may be accomplished. And the rules of law, into which the element of time thus enters, belong to public law in the sense that individuals cannot by contract withdraw themselves from their operation. But persons may by agreement between themselves postpone to some future day the full completion of a right and therewith the accrual of a cause of action.

Laws of limitation and prescription rest on a common ground of policy derived from the necessity of circumscribing within some limits the uncertainty in which matters of right may be involved. In order to attain this object the one law prevents persons from asserting their rights, and the other law prevents persons from disputing the rights of others after the lapse of a certain time: the law of limitation securing persons against the further demands of others, that of prescription securing the possession of rights acquired.

Apart from the circumstances of their being based on a common ground of public policy, the law of limitation is clearly distinguishable from that of prescription. The former provides a mode in which actions or rights are extinguished, while the latter provides a mode for the acquisition of rights. The former is negative in its operation depriving a person of a power which he before possessed; the latter is affirmative conferring on a person the right to that which he has hitherto enjoyed in fact only.

The Act, as it now stands after the repeal by Act V of 1882 of secs. 27 and 28, is purely an Act of limitation, furnishing rules on the one hand for the limitation of suits, and on the other for the limitation of appeals and applications. The rules of prescription applicable to easements which formed part of the original Act have now found a more appropriate place in the Easements Act.

The Legislature did not intend to include in the Limitation Act every application to a Court with reference to its own list of causes, such as applications to transfer a case from one board to another, to transfer a case to the bottom of the board, change of attorneys, and so forth.—I. L. R., 6 Cal. 60.

Act XV of 1877 operates from the date on which it came to force as regards all applications made under it. Bekari Lall v. Goberothun Lall, 9 Cal. 446, dissented from.—I. L. R., 11 Cal. 55.

The Limitation Act is not applicable to an application for probate.—I. L. R., 6 Cal. 707 ; nor to applications of a ministerial character.—4 Madr. 172.

PART I.

PRELIMINARY.

Short title. 1. This Act may be called “The Indian Limitation Act, 1877 :”

Extent of Act. It extends to the whole of British India ;* but nothing contained in sections two and three or in Parts II and III. applies—

(a) to suits under the Indian Divorce Act ; or

(b) to suits under Madras Regulation VI of 1831.

Commencement. And it shall come into force on the first day of October 1877.

2.† All references to the Indian Limitation Act, 1871,‡ shall be read as if made to this Act ; and nothing herein or in that Act contained shall be deemed to affect any title acquired, or to revive any right to sue barred, under that Act, or under any enactment thereby repealed ; and nothing herein contained shall be deemed to affect the Indian Contract Act, section 25.§

References to Act IX. of 1871. Saving of titles already acquired. Saving of Act IX. of 1872, sec. 25.

Notes.

The words in sec. 2 of Act XV of 1877—“nothing herein shall be deemed to revive any right to sue”—should be used in their widest signification, and will include any application invoking the aid of the Court for the purpose of satisfying a demand. Where, therefore, a judgment-creditor sought, on the 25th September 1877, to execute a decree passed on the 27th May 1874 (which decree, at the time of the application for execution, was barred by art. 167 of sched. ii. of Act IX of 1871), on the ground that he was entitled to take advantage of art. 179 of sched. ii of Act XV of 1877 which was more favourable to him : Held that, under the wording of sec. 2 of the latter Act, he was not entitled to do so.—I. L. R., 5 Cal. 897.

Under Act IX of 1871, sched. ii. cl. 127, the limitation for a suit by a person excluded from joint family property, to enforce a right to share therein, was twelve years from the time when the plaintiff claimed and † Certain words, repealed by Act XII. of 1891, have been omitted here. Those words originally formed the first para. of sec. 2.;

§ The third para. of sec. 2, as originally enacted, has been repealed by Act XII. of 1891, and therefore omitted here.

was refused his share. Under Act XV of 1877, sched. ii, cl. 127, the limitation for such a suit is twelve years from the time the exclusion becomes known to the plaintiff. Held, that the period of limitation prescribed by the latter Act is shorter than the period prescribed by the former Act, within the meaning of sec. 2, Act XV of 1877.—7 Cal. 461.

The period of limitation prescribed by Article 73 of the Second Schedule to Act XV of 1877 is a "shorter period of limitation" within the meaning of the last clause of sec. 2 of that Act than the period prescribed by Article 72 of the Second Schedule to Act IX of 1871. The language of Acts IX of 1871 and XV of 1877 leads to the conclusion that by each of these enactments the starting point and period given in its schedule were to take the place of those given by [the Act which preceded it, in the case of all suits instituted after the date of the Act coming into force, and that the expiration of the period, calculated with reference to the Act in force at the date at which the note was executed, does not necessarily affect the remedy.—2 Madr. 113

Acknowledgments which are insufficient to keep alive a cause of action because they were signed only by an agent, are equally insufficient to sustain a suit on the same cause of action under Act XV of 1877, as sec. 2 of the Act expressly bars the revival of a right to sue barred under the earlier Acts, although they might have been sufficient under Act IX of 1871.—8 Bom. 99.

Under the Limitation Act IX of 1871 the period of Limitation for suits to recover possession of property purchased from a mortgagee depended upon the good faith of the purchaser. A suit against a purchaser in good faith was barred after twelve years from the date of the purchase, under article 134 of Schedule II. In other cases a suit might be brought against the purchaser within sixty years from the date of the mortgage, under article 148. Article 134 of Act XV of 1877, by the omission of the words "in good faith," makes twelve years from the date of the purchase the period of limitation for all such suits, without reference to the question of good faith on the part of the purchaser. The result is, that, in cases of a purchase not in good faith from a mortgagee, the period of limitation allowed by Act XV of 1877 for a suit to recover the property is shorter than the period allowed by Act IX of 1871; and, consequently, under the provisions of Act XV of 1877, the plaintiff in such a suit has two years from the 1st October, 1877.—9 Bom. 475.

The plaintiff sued the defendant for money due upon accounts stated between them in December, 1874, when Act IX of 1871 was in force. Such accounts were not signed by the defendant. The suit was instituted after Act XV of 1877, which repealed Act IX of 1871, had come into force. Held that the plaintiff's right to sue upon such accounts within three years from the date the same were stated was not a "title" acquired under Act IX of 1871, within the meaning of sec. 2 of Act XV of 1877, which, under the provisions of that section, was not affected by the repeal of Act IX of 1871, and the suit was not governed by the provisions of Act IX of 1871, but by those of Act XV of 1877, and that, therefore, the accounts not being signed by the defendant, the plaintiff could not claim the benefit of art. 64 of sch. ii. of the latter Act, but must be regarded as suing merely for money lent.—2 Al. 872.

The accounts in a suit on accounts stated were stated when Act IX of 1871 was in force and were not signed by the defendant or an authorized agent on his behalf. Had that Act been in force when the suit was instituted the suit would have been within time under No. 62 of schedule ii. of that Act. The suit was brought, however, after the passing of Act XV of 1877, and by reason of the accounts not being signed did not come within the scope of No. 64 of schedule ii. of that Act. Held that the words in sec. 2 of Act XV of 1877, "nothing herein contained shall be deemed to affect any title acquired under the Act IX of 1871," did not save the plaintiff's right to sue on the accounts stated, a right to sue not being meant by or included in the term "title acquired," that term denoting a title to property and being used in contradistinction to a right to sue; that the last clause of that section was not applicable, because Act XV of 1877 did not prescribe a shorter period of limitation than that prescribed by Act IX of 1871 but attached a new condition to the suit, viz, that the accounts must be signed by the defendant or his agent duly authorized in that behalf; and that the suit was in consequence barred by limitation.—3 Al. 148.

The cause of action in a suit on a registered bond payable on demand, bearing date the 2nd March, 1870, was alleged to have arisen on the 5th January, 1879, the date of demand. Under Act XIV of 1859 the limitation for such a suit was six years computed from the date of the bond. Before that period expired Act IX of 1871 came into force, which provided a limitation for such a suit of three years computed from the date of demand. Held that, as the cause of action and the institution of such suit occurred after the repeal of Act IX of 1871, the provisions of that Act were not applicable, and accordingly, whether Act XIV of 1859 or Act XV of 1877 governed such suit, it was barred, as, in either case, limitation began to run from the date of such bond.—3 Al. 340.

Act XV of 1877, by making the period of limitation for a suit on a bond payable on demand computable from the date of its execution, has shortened the period a limitation prescribed for such a suit by Act IX of 1871 under which the period was computable from the date of demand. Held, therefore, that, under the provisions of sec. 2 of Act XV of 1877, a suit on such a bond executed on the 14th December, 1869, having been brought within two years from the date that Act came into force was, with in time.—3 Al. 415.

See I. L. R., 5 Cal. 894, noted under sec. 230 of the Civil Procedure Code.

3. In this Act, unless there be something repugnant in the subject or context,—

Interpretation-clause.

'plaintiff' includes also any person from or through whom a plaintiff derives his right to sue; 'applicant' includes also any person from or through whom an applicant derives his right to apply; and 'defendant' includes also any person from or through whom a defendant derives his liability to be sued;

'easement'* includes also a right, not arising from contract by which one person is entitled to remove and appropriate for his own profit any part of the soil belonging to another, or anything growing in, or attached to or subsisting upon, the land of another:

* The definition of "easement" is repealed by the Indian Easements Act (V. of 1882), sec. 3, in the territories to which that Act extends, namely, Madras, the Central Provinces, and Coorg.

‘bill of exchange’ includes also a hundi and a cheque :

‘bond’ includes any instrument whereby a person obliges himself to pay money to another, on condition that the obligations* shall be void if a specified act is performed, or is not performed, as the case may be :

‘promissory note’ means any instrument whereby the maker engages absolutely to pay a specified sum of money to another at a time therein limited, or on demand, or at sight :

‘trustee’ does not include a benamidar, a mortgagee remaining in possession after the mortgage has been satisfied, or a wrong-doer in possession without title :

‘suit’ does not include an appeal or an application :

‘registered’ means duly registered in British India under the law† for the registration of documents in force at the time and place of executing the document, or signing the decree or order referred to in the context :

‘foreign country’ means any country other than British India :

and nothing shall be deemed to be done in ‘good faith’ which is not done with due care and attention.

Notes.

The word ‘easement,’ as used in the Limitation Act, 1877, has, by force of the interpretation-clause (sec. 3), a very much more extensive meaning than the word bears in the English law, for it includes any right not arising from contract by which one person is entitled to remove and appropriate for his own profit any part of the soil belonging to another, or anything growing, or attached to, or subsisting upon the land of another. An easement, therefore, under the Indian law, embraces what in English law is called a profit a prendre,—that is to say, a right to enjoy a profit out of the land of another. A prescriptive right of fishery is an ‘easement’ as defined by sec. 3 of the Act, and may be claimed by any one who can prove a ‘user’ of it,—that is to say, that he has of right claimed and enjoyed it without interruption for a period of twenty years, although he does not allege, and cannot prove, that he is, or was, in the possession, enjoyment, or occupation of any dominant tenement.—I. L. R., 5 Cal. 945.

The right of establishing a private ferry and levying tolls is recognized in British India. Per GARTH, C. J., and WHITE, J.—Twenty years is the shortest period within which such a right of ferry can be established by user. Per MITTER, J.—Where the existence of a private right of ferry plying between the lands of A and B is admitted by B no question of user arises ; the issue that is raised between the parties is not whether a private ferry exists, but whether the recognized private ferry which is in existence is the property of A or B ; but semble, supposing such question of user to arise, a right of private ferry cannot be established as an indefeasible right by long user.—6 Cal. 608.

“Suit” does not include application.—5 Bom. 29.

* Sic. Read “Obligation.”

† See Act III. of 1877.

The purchaser at an auction sale acquires the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtor and in virtue of that is put in possession by reason of which he becomes liable to be sued by the true owner. He, therefore, derives such liability within the contemplation of sec. 3 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877) from or through the judgment-debtor. R., the owner of sixty-two thikans, had mortgaged fourteen of them to M. On the 7th Dec., 1871, that is subsequent to the mortgage to M., R. sold the sixty-two thikans to the plaintiff, but did not give up possession. On the 18th June, 1872, the sixty-two thikans were sold in execution of a decree against R. and were purchased at the auction-sale by A., who redeemed the fourteen thikans from the mortgagee. On the 7th December, 1883, the present suit was filed by the plaintiff to recover possession against the heirs of R. and M. On the 17th January, 1884, A was joined as a co-defendant to the suit. Held, that the plaintiff's claim against A. was time-barred with respect to the forty-eight thikans which were not mortgaged, A. being entitled to add to the period of his possession to that of R., who remained in possession after the sale to the plaintiff.—16 Bom. 197.

PART II.

LIMITATION OF SUITS, APPEALS, AND APPLICATIONS.

4. Subject to the provisions contained in sections five to twenty-five (inclusive), every suit instituted, appeal presented, and application made after the period of limitation prescribed therefor by the second schedule hereto annexed, shall be dismissed, although limitation has not been set up as a defence.

Dismissal of suits, &c., instituted, &c., after period of limitation.

Explanation.—A suit is instituted in ordinary cases when the plaint is presented to the proper officer; in the case of a pauper, when his application for leave to sue as a pauper is filed; and, in the case of a claim against a company which is being wound up by the Court, when the claimant first sends in his claim to the Official Liquidator.

Illustrations.

(a.) A suit is instituted after the prescribed period of limitation. Limitation is not set up as a defence, and judgment is given for the plaintiff. The defendant appeals. The Appellate Court must dismiss the suit.

(b.) An appeal presented after the prescribed period is admitted and registered. The appeal shall, nevertheless, be dismissed.

Notes.

A plaintiff wishing to appeal from a decision passed against him on the Original Side of the High Court, dated 16th August 1883, presented for filing his memorandum of appeal to the Registrar on the 5th September 1883, but by reason of the decree not having been signed on that date, no copy of the decree was presented therewith. The Registrar refused to accept the appeal. On the 6th September the decree was signed, and on the 7th an office copy thereof was obtained by the defendant's attorney, who, on the 8th September served a copy at the office of the plaintiff's attorney. On the 12th September, the plaintiff applied for an office copy, which he obtained on the 13th, and on the 15th tendered such copy and his memorandum of appeal to the Registrar. The Registrar refused to accept the appeal, unless under an order of Court, it being in his opinion out of time. On the 6th December 1883 a Judge sitting on the Original Side admitted the appeal. The appeal subsequently came on for hearing, when the defendant contended that the appeal was barred, it not having been filed within twenty days from the date of the decree. The Court held that the appeal was so barred. Held, on review, that the plaintiff having allowed five days to expire after the decree was signed before applying for a copy, and not having filed his appeal, after so obtaining a copy, at the earliest opportunity possible, such a delay, being entirely unaccounted for, could not be held to be "time requisite for obtaining a copy of the decree," and that, therefore, the appeal was out of time.—I. L. R., 10 Cal. 652.

If in an application for execution the Court erroneously holds that the application is not barred and orders a sale, the order, though erroneous and liable to be set aside in the way presented by the procedure law, is not a nullity but remains in full force until set aside, and a sale held in pursuance of such order is, until set aside, a valid sale; a suit to set aside such a sale is governed by Art. 12, cl. (a) of Sch. II of Act XV of 1877. The word "disallowed" in sec. 312 of the Civil Procedure Code has no reference to an order passed on an appeal, but refers to the disallowance of the objection by the Court before which the proceedings under sec. 311 are taken. On the 15th June 1878, a Judgment-debtor filed a petition objecting to execution of a decree against him proceeding on the ground that the decree was barred. On the 18th November 1878, that objection was overruled and certain of his property sold. Against the order overruling his objection the judgment-debtor appealed, and ultimately on the 13th January 1880 the order was set aside by the High Court, and the decree was held to have been barred. Pending these proceedings the judgment-debtor also, on the 17th December 1878, applied, under the provision of sec. 311 of the Civil Procedure Code, to set aside the sale on the ground of material irregularity, but that application was ultimately rejected on the 17th May 1879, and the sale was confirmed on the 21st May 1879. On the 2nd April 1880, the judgment-debtor applied to set aside the sale, on the ground that the decree, in execution of which it had taken place had been held to be barred, and though an order setting aside the sale was made by the Original Court, it was subsequently set aside by the High Court on the 13th April 1881, as having been made without jurisdiction. The judgment-debtor now brought a suit on the 4th January 1882, upon the same grounds to set aside the sale and recover possession:—Held, that the suit was barred.—11 Cal. 287.

A landlord not having tendered a legal patta to his tenant made a demand on him as for rent, and on his refusal to pay attached his holding. The tenant, to release the attachment, paid the sum demanded under protest on 23rd September 1885. On 22nd March 1886 the tenant filed a suit on the small cause side of the District Munsiff's Court to recover the amount so paid: that suit was dismissed for want of jurisdiction on 2nd September 1886. On the last-mentioned date the tenant filed the present suit on the same cause of action: Held, (1) the suit was not barred by limitation under the six-months' rule in sec. 78 of the Rent Recovery Act by reason of the provisions of sec. 14 of the Limitation Act, 1877; (2) the landlord not having tendered a legal patta was not in a condition to establish any right to recover rent directly or by way of set off.—12 Madr. 467.

Where a petition of appeal was presented unstamped within the period of limitation and the stamp was ultimately affixed after the appeal would have been barred by limitation:—Held, following Skinner v. Orde (L. R., 6 I. A 126) that the appeal was in time.—15 Madr. 78.

Where, under the provisions of sec. 336, Act VIII of 1859, a memorandum of appeal is returned for the purpose of being corrected, the appellate Court should specify a time for such correction. Where an appellant presented an appeal within the period of limitation prescribed therefor, and the Appellate Court returned the memorandum of appeal for correction without specifying a time for such correction, the appeal again presented some days after the period of limitation was presented within time, the date of its presentation being the date it was first presented.—1 Al. 260.

Held (per STUART, C. J., SPANKIE, J., dissenting) that, in computing the period of limitation prescribed by art. 177, sch. ii. of Act XV of 1877, for an application for leave to appeal to Her Majesty in Council, the time requisite for obtaining a copy of the judgment on which the decree against which leave to appeal is sought is founded cannot be excluded under the provisions of sec. 12 of Act XV of 1877.—1 Al. 644.

Where a person, being at the time a pauper, petitions, under the provisions of Act VIII of 1859 for leave to sue as a pauper, but subsequently, pending an inquiry into his pauperism, obtains funds which enable him to pay the Court-fees, and his petition is allowed upon such payment to be numbered and registered as a plaint, his suit shall be deemed to have been instituted from the date when he filed his pauper petition, and limitation runs against him only up to that time.—2 Al. 241.

Where the decree-holder had not on the last preceding application under sec. 230 of Act X of 1877 used due diligence to procure complete satisfaction of the decree, and Act X of 1877 had not been in force three years, held that the provisions of the third clause of sec. 230 of Act X of 1877 were applicable to a subsequent application under that section.—2 Al. 282.

The plaint in a suit for money charged upon immoveable property which described such property as “the defendants one-biswa five-biswanisi share within the jurisdiction of the Court” was presented on the 21st November, 1878, within the period of limitation prescribed for such a suit by Act XV of 1877. It was subsequently returned for amendment, and, having been amended by the insertion of the words “in mauza S, pargana S” after the word “share” was presented again on the 8th January, 1879, after such period. Held that the date of the amendment of the plaint did not affect the question of limitation for the institution of the suit, and the return of the plaint for amendment and its subsequent presentation and acceptance by the Court did not constitute a fresh institution of the suit — 2 Al. 832. Also 2 Bom. 120.

For the purpose of limitation, an appeal is preferred when the memorandum of appeal is presented to the proper officer, and not when, where the memorandum of appeal is insufficiently stamped and is returned in order that the deficiency may be supplied, it is again presented. When an appellate Court returns an insufficiently stamped memorandum of appeal in order that it may be sufficiently stamped, it should fix a time within which the deficiency is to be supplied.—2 Al. 875.

B and S executed a bond, dated the 15th August 1874, in favour of plaintiff in consideration of a loan of Rs. 15,000, agreeing to repay the same within three years from the above date, and covenanting to pay every half year interest on the same, at the rate of 8 per cent. per annum; and also to pay the premia on certain policies of insurance made over to plaintiff by way of collateral security. In the event of failure in payment on due date of interest and premia, the obligors made themselves liable to pay the full amount of the bond debt. The bond also contained the stipulation that it should be optional with the obligee to claim and if necessary to sue for the full amount of the bond on the failure of any one or more stipulated payment, or on the full expiry of the period of three years. Held, that the bond was not an instalment-bond, and therefore art. 75, sch. ii. of Act XV of 1877 was inapplicable. Held, by STUART, C. J., that limitation commenced after the expiration of the three years allowed by the bond for payment of the debt. Held, by SPANKIE, J.,—That Art. 80, sch. ii. of Act XV of 1877 applies to the suit, and limitation would run from the date when the bond became due, that according to the stipulation in the bond, it would become due on failure in payment on date of both the interest and premia, and not on failure in payment of either of them only. Held further, that arts. 67 and 68, sch. ii. of Act XV of 1877, were not applicable to the suit. —2 Al. 322.

A suit to enforce a right of pre-emption in respect of a share of an undivided village was instituted against the vendor and the purchaser, the latter being a minor, on the 1st June, 1880. The instrument of sale was registered on the 9th June, 1879. On the 14th June, 1880, the Court in which such suit was instituted made an order appointing a guardian for such suit for the minor purchaser. Held, having regard to the provisions of sec. 4 of Act XV of 1877, and Ram Lal v. Harrison, I. L. R., 2 Al. 832, Stuart Skinner v. William Orde, I. L. R., 2 Al. 241, that, for the purposes of limitation, such suit was instituted, as regards the minor purchaser, on the 1st June, 1880, when the plaint was first presented, and not on the 14th June, 1880, when the order appointing a guardian for such suit for him was made, and such suit was therefore within time.—4 Al. 37.

See I. L. R., 5 Cal. 897, noted under sec. 2; 12 Al. 461, noted under sec. 5.

5. If the period of limitation prescribed for any suit, appeal, or application, expires on a day when the Court is closed, the suit, appeal or application may be instituted, presented, or made on the day that the Court re-opens.

Any appeal or application for a review of judgment may be admitted after the period of limitation prescribed therefor, when the appellant or applicant satisfies the Court that he had sufficient cause for not presenting the appeal or making the application within such period.

Notes.

The provisions of sec. 5 of Act XV of 1877 apply to suits instituted under the provisions of sec. 77 of the Registration Act (III of 1877).—I. L. R., 1 Cal. 910.

An order made ex parte under cl. b, sec. 5 of the Limitation Act of 1871, permitting an appeal to be registered although filed beyond time, may, on proper cause being shown, be set aside by the Court which made it; but such an order made by a District Judge cannot be afterwards cancelled by a Subordinate Judge upon the appeal coming on for hearing before him.—5 Cal. 1.

Although a suit to recover moneys or obtain papers or accounts from an agent, must, under sec. 30 of Beng. Act VIII of 1869, be instituted within one year from the determination of the agency, yet, if on the last day of such year the Courts be closed, the suit will, under sec. 5 of Act XV of 1877, not be barred if filed on the first day of the re-opening of the Court.—5 Cal. 314.

When a tenant has been sued for arrears of rent and a decree obtained against him under Beng. Act VIII of 1869, sec. 52, which provides for the stay of execution if the amount of the arrears, together with interest and costs of suit, be paid into Court within fifteen days from the date of the decree, and the Court is closed on or before the last day of the period so limited, the tenant is at liberty to pay into Court the arrears, interest, and costs on the first day that the Court re-opens ; and if he does so, execution must be stayed.—5 Cal. 906.

The provisions of sec. 5 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877) apply equally to suits under the Bengal Rent Act (Beng. Act VIII of 1869). In a suit for rent, where it appeared that a deposit had been made in Court under the provisions of the Bengal Rent Act [Beng. Act VIII of 1869], and that the six months allowed by sec. 31 of that Act for the purpose of instituting a suit had expired on a day when the Court was closed for an authorized holiday, but that the plaint had been filed on the first day the Court re-opened.—Held, that the provisions of sec. 5 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877) applied to such cases, and that, consequently, the suit was not barred. Golop Chand Nowluckha v. Krishto Chunder Dass Biswas, I. L. R., 5 Cal. 314, and Hossein Ally v. Donzelle, I. L. R., 5 Cal. 314, followed. Purran Bhunder Ghose v. Muttu Lall Ghose Lahira, I. L. R., 4 Cal. 50, dissented from.—7 Cal. 690.

The High Court, sitting on second appeal, has power to look into the grounds which a Judge has given for admitting an appeal after the lapse of the period allowed by the Limitation Act. Mowri Bewa v. Surendranath Roy, 2 B. L. R., A. C., 184, note ; S. C., 10 W. R., 178, followed.—8 Cal. 251.

The fact that the plaintiff's attorney on being served with notice of appeal failed to notice that a party who had been a defendant in the Court below had not been made a respondent in the appeal, coupled with the fact that the application made by the plaintiff to make such defendant a party respondent after the period of limitation had expired, was not made at the earliest opportunity possible, is not a sufficient ground under sec. 5 of the Limitation Act for non-prosecution of the appeal within the period allowed.—10 Cal. 445.

Poverty is not "sufficient cause" within the meaning of sec. 5 for admitting an appeal after the ordinary period of limitation prescribed therefor has expired.—13 Cal. 78.

Section gives a discretion to a Court to admit an appeal filed out of time. A valued his suit at Rs. 18,000 which was reduced to less than Rs. Rs. 5,000 by the Court of first instance at Rajshahye. A decree, dated the 20th December 1883, was given against the defendant, who applied for copies on the 3rd of February, and the decree was ready on the 7th. The defendant was apparently under the impression that the appeal would lie to the High Court ; but on the 16th of March a letter was despatched by his Calcutta agent informing him that he was mistaken and that the appeal lay to the District Judge. This letter reached Rajshahye on the 17th, and the appeal was filed on the 23rd of March :—Held, that under the circumstances the Court might admit the appeal in the exercise of its discretion.—13 Cal. 266.

Where parties are prevented from doing a thing in Court on a particular day, not by any act of their own, but by the act of the Court itself, they are entitled to do it at the first subsequent opportunity.—18 Cal. 631.

In the Limitation Act it was intended to draw a clear distinction between what are styled 'applications' and what are styled 'appeals.' The language of the Limitation Act precludes any other construction than that while a pauper may apply for a review of judgment with the same indulgence as to delay in making the application as a person who is not a pauper, yet, in making his application for leave to appeal, similar indulgence is not extended to him.—2 Madr. 230.

Where a District Court was adjourned for two months but the notification stated that the Court would be open twice a week for one hour for the reception of complaints, petitions, and other papers : Held per curiam (Innes, J., dissenting) that the Court was not closed till the last day of the adjournment within the meaning of sec. 5 of the Indian Limitation Act, 1877, so as to allow an appellant to present his appeal on the day the Court re-opened after the adjournment, the appeal time having expired during the adjournment.—5 Madr. 189.

An order made ex parte, under sec. 5 of the Indian Limitation Act, 1877 admitting an appeal after the period prescribed therefor, may be set aside on proper cause being shown by the court which made it.—9 Madr. 450.

Delay in preferring an appeal under the Madras Forest Act beyond the period prescribed by sec. 14 of that Act, may be excused, sec. 5 of the Indian Limitation Act, 1877.—10 Madr. 210.

Land was sold in execution of a decree which was passed against the defendant for a sum exceeding Rs. 5,000. A suit to set aside the sale was instituted in a Subordinate Court and was dismissed. The plaintiff who desired to appeal against the decree dismissing his suit was advised that the appeal lay to the High Court in which a memorandum of appeal was accordingly filed. On its appearing that the value of the property sold was less than Rs. 5,000 the High Court returned the memorandum of appeal for presentation to the District Court. The District Judge rejected it on the ground that it was barred by limitation, holding that the delay caused by the error, which the appellant committed in taking proceedings in the wrong Court, could not be excused :—Held, that the District Judge should have decided whether the appellant, under the special circumstances of the case in appealing to the High Court acted on an honest belief formed with due care and attention. Per cur : "We are not prepared to hold that a mistake in law is under no circumstances a sufficient cause within the meaning of sec. 5 of the Limitation Act."—13 Madr. 269.

An appellant is not entitled as of right to the exclusion of the time occupied by him in seeking a review of judgment, in the computation of the time within which his appeal is preferred. Where it appeared that the application for review proceeded on grounds dealt with in the judgment sought to be reviewed and on the discovery of fresh evidence which was made nearly three months before the application, the Court declined to exercise its discretionary power to exclude the time so occupied.—14 Madr. 81.

Where the period of limitation for the filing of an appeal has expired during vacation, a party to a suit has a right, under the provisions of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877), to have his appeal admitted on the day the Court re-opens, and the Prothonotary of the High Court has power to receive and file a memorandum of appeal on that day.—6 Bom. 487.

G obtained a decree against M in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Ahmedabad for the refund of a certain sum of money alleged to have been illegally levied by B, as inamdar for local-fund cess due for certain years. In appeal, the District Court on the 21st March, 1882, varied the decree, and reduced the amount. On 2nd appeal the High Court, on 23rd June, 1882, dismissed the appeal, on the ground that the lower Courts had no jurisdiction, the suit being a Small Cause Court suit. The decree of the District Court consequently remained in force. In July, 1882, G brought a second suit against M in the Small Cause Court at Ahmedabad for moneys illegally levied by M in subsequent years. The Judge of that Court held that the decree in the former suit passed on 21st March, 1881, estopped M from disputing G's claim, and that the matter was res judicata. M then procured the proceedings in the Small Cause Court to be stayed, and on the 11th November, 1882, applied to the District Court for a review of its decree of 21st March, 1881. The District Judge granted the review on the ground that the time lost by M in the prosecution of the second appeal should be excluded from computation, and that the subsequent delay was justified by the fact that M was not aware of the effect of the decision in the first suit until informed of it by the Judge of the Small Cause Court at the hearing of the second suit. On appeal to the High Court: Held, reversing the order of the District Judge, that circumstances did not justify the admission of M's application for review after the expiration of the ninety days allowed by the Limitation Act. The pendency of an appeal is not a "sufficient cause" for not presenting the application earlier within the meaning of sec. 5 of the Limitation Act XV of 1877.—8 Bom. 260.

The plaintiffs filed the present suit, (No. 317 of 1888), at the same time with Suit No. 316 of 1888 (supra, p. 360). They filed both suits as executors of the will of one Damodhar Madhowji. In Suit No. 316 of 1888 they sued the two sons (Gordhandas and Vullubhdas) of their testator for the purpose of having his will construed and of ascertaining the shares of his property taken under it by his said two sons respectively. The present suit (No. 317 of 1888) was filed by them against Gordhandas, one of the said sons of the testator, and against three other persons to whom he had mortgaged his interest in his father's estate. They alleged that the said Gordhandas had made over possession of the whole of his father's estate to the mortgagees, and that they refused to give it up. The plaintiffs submitted that, under the mortgage, no charge was created, save upon Gordhandas' individual interest in the estate, and they prayed for a declaration as to the extent of the mortgage, for an order for possession, for an account, &c., &c. Suit No. 316 of 1888 was heard and decided on the 15th August, 1889, and after argument, the Court of first instance, construing the will, held that the fourth defendant, Gordhandas, was entitled absolutely to certain property situate at the Girgaum Back Road in Bombay. Immediately after the said decree was made, the present suit was called on for hearing before the same Judge. As the questions raised in both suits were the same, a decree in this suit was passed at once, without argument, in accordance with the construction put upon the will in Suit No. 316 of 1888. Against the decree in Suit No. 316 of 1888, Vullubhdas, (one of the defendants therein), appealed, and on the 27th February, 1890, the Appeal Court reversed the decree of the Court below, and held that Gordhandas was not entitled to an absolute estate in the above-mentioned property, but was entitled only to be paid the income thereof for his life. The plaintiffs in the present suit, being executors and not personally interested, had taken no steps to appeal from the decree of the 15th August. As soon, however, as the decree in Suit No. 316 was reversed, they proposed to have the decree in the present suit amended, so as to be in accordance with the construction put upon their testator's will by the Appeal Court. The defendants refused to consent, and the plaintiff now moved for leave to file an appeal, although the time limited for appealing had expired. It was contended that the fact they were executors and trustees and, as such, could not appeal, save at their own risk, was "sufficient cause," under section 5 of the Limitation Act XV of 1877, for their delay until the appeal in the other suit had been decided. Held, refusing the application, that no sufficient cause was shown for the plaintiffs' delay. The two suits were quite independent of each other. The plaintiffs thought proper to bring this second suit against the mortgagees, and they got a decision. If they were not satisfied, they should have appealed within the proper time. There was nothing in their position, as executors, to entitle them to any special consideration.—14 Bom. 365.

Where a District Judge admits an appeal filed beyond time, and the appeal is referred for disposal to a Subordinate Judge with appellate powers, the Subordinate Judge has the power to consider whether the delay in presenting the appeal is sufficiently accounted for. The power "to hear" an appeal conferred by section 27 of the Bombay Civil Courts Act (XIV of 1869) includes also the power to hear any question as to limitation relating thereto. The order for admission of an appeal under section 5 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877) made before issue of notice to the respondent, is an ex-parte order, and cannot bind him.—14 Bom. 594.

Held that the order admitting an appeal after time, made ex-parte by a single Judge of the High Court sitting to receive applications for the admission of appeals, under a rule of the Court made in pursuance of 24 and 25 Vic., c. 104, sec. 13, and the Letters Patent of the Court, sec. 27, was liable to be impugned and set aside at the hearing by the Division Court before which it was brought for hearing, on the ground that the reasons assigned for admitting it were erroneous or inadequate.—1 Al. 34.

Held, that where the period of limitation prescribed for a suit expired when the Court was closed for a vacation, and the Court, instead of re-opening after the vacation on the day that it should have re-opened, re-opened on a later day, and the suit was instituted when it did re-open, it was instituted within time.—1 Al. 263.

A certain suit was dismissed on the 26th July, 1874, on which day the plaintiff applied for a copy of the Court's decree. She obtained the copy on the 31st July, and on the 31st August, or one day beyond the period allowed by law, she presented an appeal to the appellate Court. She did not assign in her petition any cause for not presenting it within such period, but alleged verbally that she had miscalculated the period. The appellate Court recorded that it should excuse the delay, and admitted the appeal. Held, that there was, under the circumstances, no sufficient cause for the delay. An appellate Court should not admit an appeal after the period of limitation prescribed therefor without recording its reasons for being satisfied that there was sufficient cause for not presenting it within such period.—1 Al. 250.

The plaintiff in a suit applied, more than two years after the proper time, for a review of the judgment in such suit, filing with his application a copy of a decision by the High Court, which had been passed subsequently to the date of such judgment, in support of a contention contained in his application which should have been, but was not, urged at the hearing of his suit. Such contention, and the other arguments and statements contained in his application might have been adduced within the time allowed by law for an application for a review of judgment. Held that, as such contention might have been urged at the first hearing of the case, there was no "just and reasonable cause" for preferring the application after time, and the Court of first instance was therefore not warranted in granting the application and reviewing its judgment.—2 Al. 287.

The circumstances contemplated in sec. 14 of the Limitation Act, 1877, will ordinarily constitute a sufficient cause in the sense of sec. 5 for not presenting an appeal within the period of limitation. A bond for money provided that on failure on the part of the obligor to pay interest as agreed in the bond, and within a certain period from the date of the bond, the obligee might sue for possession of the immoveable property mortgaged in the bond. Default was made in the payment of interest as agreed, but the obligee deferred bringing a suit for possession of the mortgaged property so long that the time mentioned in the bond expired before he could obtain a decree. Held that under these circumstances a decree for possession of the property should not be granted to him.—5 Al. 591.

In February, 1884 the High Court dismissed an application by a Muhammadan pardah-nashin lady under sec. 592 of the Civil Procedure Code for leave to appeal as a pauper from a decree passed in September, 1882, on the ground that it was barred by limitation. On the 16th August, 1884, an order was passed allowing an application which had been made for review of the said order to stand over pending the decision of a connected case which had been remanded for re-trial under sec. 562 of the Code. On the 24th April, 1885, the connected case having then been decided, the application for review was heard and dismissed. On the 18th June, 1885, an order was passed ex-parte by PETHERAM, C. J., allowing the applicant, under sec. 5 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877), to file an appeal on full stamp paper, and she thereupon, having borrowed money on onerous conditions to defray the necessary institution-fees, presented her appeal, which was admitted provisionally by a single Judge.

Held by TYRRELL, J. (MAHMOOD, J., dissenting), that the appellant had made out a sufficient case for the exercise of the Court's discretion under sec. 5 of the Limitation Act, and that the Court should proceed to the trial of her appeal.

Held by MAHMOOD, J., that the ex-parte order of the 18th June, 1885, was one which the Civil Procedure Code nowhere allowed and was ultra vires, and that the Bench before which the appeal came for hearing was competent to determine whether the order admitting the appeal should stand or be set aside. Dubey Sahai v. Ganeshi Lal referred to.

Held also by MAHMOOD, J. (TYRRELL, J., dissenting), that the circumstances were such as to require the Court to set aside the order admitting the appeal to dismiss the appeal as barred by limitation, inasmuch as it was presented more than two years beyond time, and neither the facts that the main reason why it was presented so late was that the appellant was awaiting the result of the connected case, and that the appellant was a pauper and a pardah-nashin lady, nor the orders of the 16th August, 1884, and the 18th June, 1885, constituted "sufficient cause" for an extension of the limitation period within the meaning of sec. 5 of the Limitation Act. Mosh-ullah v. Ahmed-ullah and Mangu Lal v. Kandhai Lal referred to.

Held further by MAHMOOD, J., that although but for the erroneous order of the 18th June, 1885, the appellant would neither have borrowed the money required to defray the institution-fees nor preferred the appeal, and this was a circumstance to be considered in the exercise of the discretionary power conferred by sec. 220 of the Code, it could not be said that the error of a Court of Justice which leads a party to initiate proceedings against another is sufficient to exonerate the losing party from paying the costs incurred by the opposite party, and that the appeal should therefore be dismissed with costs.—9 Al. 11.

On the 14th February, 1884, the High Court dismissed an application of the 22nd March, 1883, by a pardah-nashin lady, for leave to appeal in forma pauperis from a decree dated the 16th September, 1882, the application, after giving credit for 86 days spent in obtaining the necessary papers, being out of time by 73 days. On the 16th August, 1884, an order was passed allowing an application which had been made for review of the previous order to stand over, pending the decision of a connected case. On the 24th April, 1885, the connected case having then been decided, the application for review was heard and dismissed. Nothing more was done by the appellant until the 18th June, 1885, when, on her application, an order was passed by a single Judge allowing her under sec. 5 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877) to file an appeal on full stamp paper, and she thereupon, having borrowed money on onerous conditions to defray the necessary institution fees, presented her appeal, which was admitted provisionally by a single Judge. Held, affirming the judgment of MAHMOOD, J., that the poverty of the appellant, and the fact that she was a pardah-nashin lady, did not constitute “sufficient cause” for an extension of the limitation period within the meaning of sec. 5 of the Limitation Act, and that such extension ought not to be granted. Moshaullah v. Ahmedullah and Collins v. The Vestry of Paddington referred to.—9 Al. 655.

In a suit for ejectment instituted in the Revenue Court under sec. 93 (b) of the N.-W. P. Rent Act (XII of 1881,) the Court gave judgment decreeing the claim, on the 15th September, 1884. The value of the subject-matter exceeded Rs. 100, and an appeal consequently lay to the District Judge ; but there was nothing upon the face of the record to show that the value exceeded Rs. 100 and that the decree was appealable. The period of limitation for the appeal expired on the 15th October, and the defendant, being under the impression that the decree was not appealable, applied to the Board of Revenue on the 8th January, 1885, for revision of the first Court’s decree. The proceedings before the Board lasted until the 24th April, when the defendant for the first time was informed that the value of the subject-matter being over Rs. 100, the decree was appealable, and that the application for revision had therefore been rejected. On the 23rd May, the defendant filed an appeal to the District Judge, who, under sec. 5 of the Limitation Act, admitted the appeal and, reversing the first Court’s decision, dismissed the claim. Held, on appeal by the plaintiff, that under the circumstances, the High Court ought not to interfere with the discretion exercised by the District Judge in admitting the appeal under sec. 5 of the Limitation Act after the period of limitation prescribed therefor. Per EDGE C. J., that under the circumstances above stated, he would not himself have held that the defendant had shown “sufficient cause,” within the meaning of sec. 5, for the admission of the appeal ; but that the Court ought not to interfere with the discretion of the Judge when he had applied his mind to the subject-matter before him, unless he had clearly acted on insufficient grounds or improperly exercised his discretion.—9 Al. 244.

Questions of jurisdiction, whether with reference to the nature of the suit or with reference to the pecuniary limits of the claim, are matters to be governed by the statements contained in the plaint in the cause. The valuation of the claim as preferred by the plaintiff, and not as set up by the plea in defence, would govern the action, not only for the purposes of the original Court, but also for the purposes of appeal, and indeed throughout the litigation. Presentation of an appeal within the period of limitation prescribed therefor to a wrong Court in ignorance of the provision of law, is not a sufficient cause within the meaning of sec. 5 of the Limitation Act for admitting the same appeal in the proper Court after the period of limitation prescribed therefor had expired. To enable the Court to admit an appeal after the period of limitation prescribed therefor had expired, on the ground that the same had in the first instance been preferred within the period of limitation provided therefor but to a wrong Court, the appellant must satisfy that he made his appeal to the wrong Court bona fide, that is under an honest though mistaken belief, formed with due care and attention, that he was appealing to the right Court.—10 Al. 524.

On the 26th January, 1889, an application was presented to the Munsarim of the District Judge's Court for review of a judgment passed on the 19th December, 1888. The application was insufficiently stamped, and the Munsarim endorsed on it "stamp insufficient." On this a dispute ensued between the pleader for the applicant and the Munsarim as to the sufficiency of the stamp. On the 25th April, 1889, the deficiency pointed by the Munsarim was made good. On the 26th May the Judge admitted the application, on the applicant paying the court-fee payable on an application presented on or after ninety days from the date of the decree. Held that sec. 6 and the first paragraph of sec. 28 of the Court-fees Act (VII of 1870) were applicable; that there was no mistake or inadvertence within the meaning of the second paragraph of sec. 28; that the Judge had no power under the circumstances to admit the application as one presented after ninety days from the date of the decree; that there was no presentation within ninety days of an application which could have been received; that no sufficient cause had been shown, within the meaning of sec. 5 of the Limitation Act, for not making the application within ninety days; and that the application was consequently barred by limitation and ought to have been rejected. Held also that the application should have been presented to the Judge, and not to the Munsarim.—12 Al. 57.

Judgment was pronounced by the Court of first instance on the 23rd May 1887. The decree was signed on the 31st May. An application for copies was made by the defendants on the same day. Information of the estimate of the cost of copies was given to them on the 1st June; but they did not comply with that estimate until the 9th June. The copies were delivered on the 11th June. On the 30th June, the defendants filed their memorandum of appeal in the lower appellate Court which, on an office report that it was within time, admitted it, and fixed the 19th August for the hearing. On the 1st August, another office report was submitted, which showed that the appeal was beyond time. Accordingly the Judge on the 2nd August, directed the defendants to be informed that their appeal was dismissed. On the 27th August, however, the defendants presented a petition to the Judge, in consequence of which he readmitted the appeal, and, cancelling his order of the 2nd August, directed that the appeal should be heard. Held that the appeal was barred by limitation under art. 152, sch. ii. of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877). A question of limitation, when it arises upon the facts before a Court, must be heard and determined, whether or not it is directly raised in the pleadings or in the grounds of appeal. The fact that a subordinate Court has decided that the suit or appeal before it was brought within time, or that there was sufficient cause, within the meaning of sec. 5 of the Limitation Act, for the appellant in that Court not presenting the appeal within the period of limitation prescribed, does not preclude the High Court from considering that decision in appeal. Sec. 5 of the Limitation Act cannot be applied in making the computation of time provided for by sec. 12, and does not become applicable until after such computation has been made. Raj Coomar Roy v. Shaikh Mahomed Wais dissented from. In computing the time to be excluded under sec. 12 of the Limitation Act from a period of limitation, the "time requisite for obtaining a copy" does not begin until an application for copies has been made. If therefore, after judgment, the decree remains unsigned, such interval is not to be excluded from the period of limitation, unless, an application for copies having been made, the applicant is actually and necessarily delayed, through the decree not having been signed. Bani Madhub Mitter v. Matungini Dassi dissented from. Per EDGE, C. J., BRODHURST and YOUNG, JJ.—A Court in computing under sec. 12 of the Indian Limitation Act, 1877, the time requisite for obtaining a copy of a decree or of a judgment has no discretion, and is confined to ascertaining for the purposes of such computation the time occupied by the office, after application made, in preparing the estimate, and, after payment of the amount of the estimate has been made, the time occupied by the office in preparing the copy or copies ready to be delivered to the party who has applied for them. Per EDGE, C. J.—The only section in the Limitation Act which enables a Court to admit an appeal or an application which is presented beyond the period of limitation prescribed by that Act, is sec. 5. Per MAHMOOD, J.—Where there is delay in compliance with the estimate which is unavoidable and due to causes beyond the control of the applicant, such delay may be included in "the time requisite for obtaining a copy." Whether or not such delay is unavoidable is a question of fact in each case. Per MAHMOOD, J.—A bare mistake of law is not a "sufficient cause" within the meaning of sec. 5 of the Limitation Act for extending the period of limitation. Huro Chunder Roy v. Surnāmoyi, dissented from.—12 Al. 461.

See I. L. R., 15 Cal. 242, noted under art. 156; 10 Al. 587, noted under sec. 14; 12 Al. 79, noted under art. 170.

"5A.* Whenever it is shown to the satisfaction of the Court that an appeal or an application for a review of judgment was presented after the expiration of the period of limitation prescribed for such appeal or application owing to the appellant or applicant having been misled by any order, or practice, or judgment of the High Court of the Presidency, Province or District, such appeal or application, if otherwise in accordance with law, shall for all purposes be deemed by all Courts to have been presented within the period of limitation prescribed therefor."

India, a period of limitation is specially prescribed for any suit, appeal, or application, nothing herein contained shall affect or alter the period so prescribed.

Notes.

Though by sec. 6 of the Limitation Act, 1877 nothing in that Act affects the period of limitation prescribed by any special or local law for any suit, appeal, or application, still the rules prescribed by that Act for computing the period of limitation are applicable to such suit, appeal, or application, sec. 6 of Act IX of 1871, contrasted with sec. 6 of XV of 1877.—I. L. R., 5 Cal. 110.

In a suit under Bengal Act VIII of 1869 for arrears of rent, which accrued during minority, the plaintiff is not entitled to a fresh period of limitation under secs. 6 and 7 of the Limitation Act, 1877. Dinonath Panday v. Roghoonath Panday, 5 W. R. (Act X Rul.), 41; Behari Lal Mookerjee v. Mongolanath Mookerjee, I. L. R., 5 Calc., 110; Golap Chand Nowlocka v. Krishto Chundar Das Biswas, I. L. R., 5 Cal., 314; Khoshelal Mahton v. Gonesh Dutt, I. L. R., 7 Calc., 690; and Phoolbas Koonwar v. Lalla Jogeshur Sahay, I. L. R., 3 I. A., 7; I. L. Suit, in July 1885, to set aside a sale of land of the plaintiff, sold in July 1884 as if for arrears of revenue under Act II of 1864 (Madras), on the ground that the sale had been brought about by fraud and collusion between the purchaser and the village officers; the plaintiff had knowledge of the alleged fraud more than six months before suit: Held, that the law of limitation applicable to the case was sec. 59 of Act II of 1864, and not sec. 95 of the Limitation Act, and that the suit was therefore barred. Venkatapathi v. Subramanya (I. L. R., 9 Madr., 457) explained, Baij Nath Sahu v. Lala Sital Prasad (2 B. L. R., Full Bench., 1), and Lala Mobaruk Lal v. The Secretary of State for India (I. L. R., 11 Cal. 200) considered.—12 Madr. 168.

The general provisions of the Limitation Act XV of 1877 are applicable to cases for which periods of Limitation are specially provided by local or special laws. Therefore where a suit was brought in the Court of the District Judge of Belgaum on 30th January, 1882, but was returned for want of jurisdiction on 6th February, 1882, and was subsequently presented on the same day in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Belgaum, the High Court held that the provisions of sec. 14 taken together with sec. 6 of the Limitation Act XV of 1877 applied to the case so as to exclude the period between 30th January and 6th February, 1882, in computing the period of three months prescribed by the Bombay District Municipal Act (Bombay Act VI of 1871), sec. 86.—8 Bom. 529.

See I. L. R., 10 Madr. 210 & 18 Cal. 631, noted under sec. 5; 5 Cal. 314, noted under sec. 5; 12 Madr. 467, noted under sec. 4.

7. If a person entitled to institute a suit or make an application be, at the time from which the period of limitation is to be reckoned, a minor, or insane, or an idiot, he may institute the suit or make the application within the same period, after the disability has ceased, as would otherwise have been allowed from the time prescribed therefor in the third column of the second schedule hereto annexed.

When he is, at the time from which the period of limitation is to be reckoned, affected by two ^{Double and successive disabilities.} such disabilities, or when, before his disability has ceased, he is affected by another disability, he may institute the suit or make the application within the same period after both disabilities have ceased as would otherwise have been allowed from the time so prescribed.

When his disability continues up to his death, his legal representative may institute the suit or make the application within the same period after the death as would otherwise have been allowed from the time so prescribed.

When such representative is at the date of the death affected by any such disability, the rules ^{Disability of representative.} contained in the first two paragraphs of this section shall apply.

Nothing in this section applies to suits to enforce rights of pre-emption, or shall be deemed to extend, for more than three years, from the cessation of the disability or the death of the person affected thereby, the period within which any suit must be instituted or application made.

Illustrations.

(a.) The right to sue for the hire of a boat accrues to A during his minority. He attains majority four years after such accruer. He may institute his suit at any time within three years from the date of his attaining majority.

(b.) A, to whom a right to sue for a legacy has accrued during his minority, attains majority eleven years after such accruer. A has, under the ordinary law, only one year remaining within which to sue. But under this section an extension of two years will be allowed him, making in all a period of three years from the date of his attaining majority, within which he may bring his suit.

(c.) A right to sue accrues to Z during his minority. After the accruer, but while Z is still a minor, he becomes insane. Time runs against Z from the date when his insanity and minority cease.

(d.) A right to sue accrues to X during his minority. X dies before attaining majority, and is succeeded by Y, his minor son. Time runs against Y from the date of his attaining majority.

(e.) A right to sue for an hereditary office accrues to A, who at the time is insane. Six years after the accruer A recovers his reason. A has six years, under the ordinary law, from the date when his insanity ceased within which to institute a suit. No extension of time will be given him under this section.

(f.) A right to sue as landlord to recover possession from a tenant accrues to A who is an idiot. A dies three years after the accruer, his idiotcy continuing up to the date of his death. A's representative in interest has, under the ordinary law, nine years from the date of A's death within which to bring a suit. This section does not extend that time, except where the representative is himself under disability when the representation devolves upon him.

Notes.

The benefit of secs. 11 and 12 of Act XIV of 1859 is not limited to the period when the disability of minority has ceased, but applies also to the period during which the disability continues; and therefore, during the latter period, it is open to the minor to sue by his guardian—I. L. R., 1 Cal. 226. See also Al. H. C. R. 1869, p. 122.

The privilege of this section is limited to minor, and after his death to legal representatives. A purchaser from the minor cannot claim the benefits of this section.—15 B. L. R., 357.

A suit by a guardian on behalf of a minor is that of the minor, and is governed by the law of limitation applicable to the minor. So, where a minor had been dispossessed of his share in certain property which had been sold in execution of a decree, and where an application under sec. 268 of Act VIII of 1859 to obtain possession of the share, was made by the then guardian of the minor, and disallowed, and subsequently, but beyond the period of one year from the date of the application, a suit was brought to obtain possession by another guardian of the infant who had been duly appointed.—Held, that such suit was not barred by limitation, the right to sue being that of the minor, and that it might be exercised by any one duly appointed on his behalf during his minority, or by the infant himself, within the time limited by sec. 7 of Act XV of 1877, after attaining his majority.—I. L. R., 7 Cal. 137. See also 17 W. R., 419; 3 W. R., 8.

A plaintiff, who has obtained a decree during his minority, has the option either of applying through his guardian to execute the decree during his minority or to wait until the expiration of his minority before executing his decree. The application of the guardian is the application of the infant. The minor is under disability during the whole period of his minority. His disability does not cease, because he, through his guardian, makes two or more applications for execution, however, long the interval between them, provided they are all made during his minority.—I. L. R., 9 Cal. 81.

In execution of a decree, dated the 29th April 1862, certain proceedings were taken which terminated on the 5th September 1866, when the execution case was struck off the file. Between that date and the 25th September 1882, no further proceedings were taken. On the latter date an application was made for execution. The decree-holder was a minor when the decree was passed and did not attain his majority till the 25th September 1879. Held, that the words to "bring an action" as used in sec. 11, Act XIV of 1859, must be taken to be synonymous with the words to "bring a suit" and that the word "suit" must be construed in the same way as the word "suit" used in sec. 14, and following the decision of the majority of the Full Bench in Huro Chunder Roy Chowdhry v. Shoorodhoney Debia, 9 W. R., 402, must be taken to include execution proceedings; Mothoora Dass v. Shambhoo Dutt, 20 W. R., 53, dissented from. Held, therefore, that as Act XIV of 1859, was applicable to the case previous to the date on which Act XV of 1877 came into operation, and as under sec. 11 the decree-holder was entitled to have the time during which he was a minor deducted from the period during which limitation was running against him, his right to execution was not barred when Act XV of 1877 came into force, and that being so, and the present application being made within three years of the date on which he attained his majority, execution of the decree was not barred. Gurupadapa Basapa v. Virbhadrappa Irsangapa, I. L. R., 7 Bom., 459, discussed; Bahary Lall v. Goberdhun Lall, I. L. R., 9 Cal. 446; 12 C. L. R., 431, dissented from; Nursingh Doyal v. Hurryhur Saha, 6 C. L. R., 489; Shambhu Nath Saha Chowdhry v. Gurn Churn Lahiry, 6 C. L. R., 437, approved.—10 Cal. 748.

The fact that a minor is for a time represented by a guardian does not remove the disability of the minor.—4 Madr. 119.

A member of an undivided Hindu family and his two minor brothers (who sued by him as their next friend) brought a suit for partition of family property against their father, and joined as defendants certain persons who were in possession of part of the property under alienations made by the father but alleged in the plaint to be invalid as against the family. In 1875 a decree was passed in favor of the plaintiffs in the above suit. No application for the execution of the decree was made by either the first or second plaintiff; but the third plaintiff, having attained his majority in June 1881, applied for execution in April 1884: his application was opposed by two of the defendants. The District Judge made an order granting his application in respect of the one quarter share to which he was declared to be entitled under the decree:—Held, that the order of the District Judge was wrong, as neither sec. 7 nor sec. 8 of the Limitation Act affected the case, and the application was accordingly barred by limitation.—13 Madr. 236.

The guardian and administratrix of her minor sons obtained a money decree against the defendants in August, 1874, and on the 22nd February, 1875, applied for its execution. The application was struck off on the 30th July, 1875, as no property belonging to the defendants could be found. On the 16th of June, 1881, the guardian died, and one of the sons, on the 20th of October, 1882, soon after attaining his majority made a fresh application for execution of the decree. Held that the fresh application was not time barred, the time from which the period of limitation began to run against the applicant being the date on which he attained majority.—7 Bom. 179.

Section 7 of the Statute of Limitations (Act XV of 1877), strictly speaking, only applies to cases dealt with by that statute itself. The provisions of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882) must, in the absence of anything to the contrary, be deemed to be subject to the general principle of law as to the disability of minors, which is that time does not run against a minor, and the circumstance that a minor has been represented by a guardian does not affect the question.—16 Bom. 536.

See I. L. R., 17 Cal. 263, noted under sec. 6.

8. When one of several joint creditors or claimants is under any such disability, and when a discharge can be given without the concurrence of such person, time will run against them all; but where no such discharge can be given, time will not run as against any of them until one of them becomes capable of giving such discharge without the concurrence of the others.

Illustrations.

(a.) A incurs a debt to a firm, of which B, C, and D, are partners. B is insane, and C is a minor. D can give a discharge of the debt without the concurrence of B and C. Time runs against B, C, and D.

(b.) A incurs a debt to a firm, of which E, F, and G, are partners. E and F are insane, and G is a minor. Time will not run against any of them until either E or F becomes sane, or G attains majority.

Notes.

Attained majority on the 11th March, 1882, sued from that date, upon a bond obtained in 1872 by his mother and guardian in the plaintiff's name alone. The defendant contended that the plaintiff's brother, who was capable of giving a valid discharge to his debtors, having failed to sue within proper time, the suit was barred. On reference the High Court held, that suit was not barred. The plaintiff's brother not being a party to the bond, sec. 8 would not apply. The bond was passed to the plaintiff alone, and the right of action accrued to him on the 8th July, 1878. Being then a minor, time did not begin to run until he attained his majority.—I. L. R., 10 Bom. 241.

The manager of a joint Hindu family, of which S was a minor member, lent money on behalf of the family to K. The time limited by law for a suit for such money was three years from the date of the loan. During that period there were several members of the family who were sui-juris. After attaining his age of majority S sued K for such money, and as the period limited by law for such suit had expired, relied on the saving provisions of sec. 8 of the Limitation Act, 1877. Held that, although during such period S was one of several joint creditors who was under disability, yet as more than one member of the family could have given a discharge to K without S's concurrence, such provisions of sec. 8 of the Limitation Act were not applicable, and S's suit was therefore barred by limitation.—4 Al. 512.

See I. L. R., 13 Madr. 236, noted under sec. 7.

Continuous running of time.

9. When once time has begun to run, no subsequent disability or inability to sue stops it:

Provided that, where letters of administration to the estate of, a creditor have been granted to his debtor, the running of the time prescribed for a suit to recover the debt shall be suspended while the administration continues.

Notes.

Absence beyond seas voluntarily or in consequence of transportation gives no exemption when once time has begun to run, 1 B. L. R., S. N., 25; nor voluntary absence abroad after attaining majority, 2 M. H. C. R., 113; nor ignorance of the defendant's residence.—Al. H. C. R., 1870, p. 173.

When time began to run owing to cause of action arising in lifetime of ancestor, subsequent disability of heir was not reckoned.—3 B. L. R., App. 80.

On the 20th August, 1879, the defendant being indebted to the plaintiff, gave his bond for Rs. 8,000. The bond provided for the payment of monthly instalments of Rs. 80 each, the first of such instalments to become due on the 4th September, 1879. The bond also contained the following clause :—"If the said Arthur Bowles shall—in default of payment of any one of such instalments, or in the event of default being made by him in payment of the premium money when and as the same shall become due in respect of the said policy, if so required by the said Hamantram Sadhuram Pity, his executors, administrators or assigns—pay the whole amount which may then be due under and by virtue of these presents without deduction, then the above written bond or obligation shall be of no effect ; otherwise the same shall be and remain in full force and virtue." The defendant paid three of the said monthly instalments, the last of which was paid on the 2nd December, 1879, being that which had fallen due on the 4th November, 1879. No further instalments were paid, but no demand for payment of the entire sum secured by the bond was made by the plaintiff until the 30th January, 1884. The plaintiff filed this suit on the 28th April, 1884. The defendant contended that the plaintiff's cause of action arose on the 4th December, 1879, when he (the defendant) failed to pay the instalment then due, and pleaded limitation. The plaintiff contended (1) that under the bond the cause of action did not arise until the date of his demand, viz., on the 30th January, 1884 ; (2) that, even if the cause of action arose on the 4th December, 1879, the suit was not barred, the defendant having been absent from India for upwards of two years and three months out of the four years and four months which had elapsed between the date of the defendant's default and the date of suit. Held that the suit was not barred. The language of the bond showed that it was the intention of the parties that, in case of default being made in payment of one instalment, the whole amount should become due only if a demand for such amount were made. The cause of action did not arise against the defendant until the date of demand, viz., the 30th January 1884. Held, also, dissenting from Naronji Bhimji v. Mugniram Chandaji, that, even if the cause of action had arisen on the 4th December, 1879, nevertheless the suit was not barred, inasmuch as the period during which the defendant had been absent from India was to be deducted in computing the period of limitation.—8 Bom. 561.

Where time has once begun to run, subsequent absence of the defendant from British India will not be excluded. Secs. 9 and 13 must be read together.—I. L. R., 6 Bom. 103. This was dissented from in.—4 Al. 530.

10. Notwithstanding anything hereinbefore contained, Suits against express no suit against a person in whom proand their repre- perty has become vested in trust for any specific purpose, or against his legal representatives or assigns (not being assigns for valuable consideration) for the purpose of following in his or their hands such property, shall be barred by any length of time.

Notes.

In 1860 certain shares in a Company then formed were allotted to S, on the understanding, as the plaintiffs alleged, that 120 of such shares should, on the amount thereof being paid to S, be transferred to, and registered in the Books of the Company in the names of, the plaintiffs. In 1862 the plaintiffs completed the payment to S in respect of the shares, and during his lifetime received dividends in respect of the said shares. S died in 1870, leaving a will, probate of which was granted to the defendant as his executor. In a suit brought by the plaintiffs after demand of the shares from the defendant, and refusal by him to deliver them, to compel the defendant to transfer the shares to the plaintiffs and register the same in their names, the plaintiffs case was, that the shares had been held in trust for them, and that, consequently, their suit was not barred by lapse of time. Held, that the transaction between S and the plaintiffs did not amount to "a trust for any specific purpose" within the meaning of sec. 10 of the Limitation Act, or to a trust at all, but to an agreement of which the plaintiffs were entitled to specific performance; and the limitation applicable was that provided by cl. 113 of Sch. II, Act IX of 1871, and, therefore, the suit was not barred. Nor were the plaintiffs disentitled to relief by reason of any laches or delay in bringing the suit.—2 Cal. 323.

Where trust is expressly created for specific purpose and property vested in a trustee upon such trust, the section applies, but not where trust is implied or is to be inferred by law.—4 Cal. 456; See also 4 Cal. 897.

A suit against trustees for the purpose of charging certain property with the trusts declared by the author of the trust in respect of that property and for an account, is a suit to follow property, and as such, is not barred by any lapse of time.—8 Cal. 766.

A alleged that his father B had, before his death, placed in the hands of C a certain sum of money, and had also transferred to C his landed property upon trust, that C should, during the minority of A, hold the money and manage the property for the benefit of A, and maintain A, and should, on A's attaining his majority, make over to him the property and so much of the money as should then be unexpended; and that C had accepted the trust, but, upon A's coming of age, had refused to render any account. A, accordingly, brought a suit for an account. C pleaded that A had attained his majority at a much earlier period than he alleged, and that the suit was barred by limitation. A replied that, under sec. 10 of Act XV of 1877, his suit could not be barred by any length of time. Held, that sec. 10 of Act XV of 1877 did not apply to such a case, and that A's suit would be barred if not brought within six years from the time when he attained his majority, and became entitled to demand an account. In India, suits between a cestui que trust and a trustee for an account are governed solely by the Limitation Act (Act XV of 1877); and unless they fall within the exemption of sec. 10 are liable to become barred by some one or other of the articles in the second schedule of the Act. To claim the benefit of sec. 10, a suit against a trustee must be for the purpose of following the trust-property in his hands. If the object of the suit is not to recover any property in specie, but to have an account of the defendant's stewardship, which means an account of the moneys received and disbursed by the defendant on plaintiff's behalf, and to be paid any balance which may be found due to him upon taking the account, it must be brought within six years from the time when the plaintiff had first a right to demand it.—5 Cal. 910.

A charge of debts generally by a testator upon his property or any part of it, will not affect limitation, because it does not at all vary the legal liabilities, of the parties, or make any difference with respect to the effect and operation of the Statute itself. The executors take the estate subject to the claim of the creditors, and are in point of law trustees for the creditors, and such a charge adds nothing to their legal liabilities. But the case is different when particular property is given upon trust to pay a particular debt or debts. In such a case the trustee has a new duty, not the ordinary duty of an executor to pay debts generally out of property generally, but a duty to apply a particular property to secure a particular debt; and there is a trust within the meaning of sec. 10 of the Limitation Act.—7 Cal. 772.

An auction-purchaser acquiring trust property for valuable consideration at a sale in execution of a decree is an assignee of the trustee within the meaning of that term as used in sec. 10 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877), and consequently a suit against such a person by a plaintiff claiming to be entitled as trustee to possession of the trust property is governed by the ordinary rules of limitation and not excluded therefrom by the provisions of sec. 10.—15 Cal. 703.

A solehnama in 1847 to which were parties the sons, daughters, and widow of a deceased Mahomedan proprietor, transferred the shares of two minor daughters in their father's estate, having been executed by their mother, the widow, on their behalf. In a suit in 1882 to set aside the solehnama at the instance of the two daughters, the evidence showed that sons managed the property after their fathers death, and at the time the solehnama was executed. Held, on the question of limitation, that it was not to be inferred that the sons, by reason of their having managed their late father's estate, should be regarded as trustees, at the time of the execution of the solehnama, for the daughters; and, therefore, sec. 10 of Act XV of 1877 was inapplicable. So that as regards the property included in the solehnama a suit brought in 1882 by the daughters would be barred by time.—16 Cal. 161.

Where A. instituted a suit in November 1889 to recover from the Secretary of State for India in Council the surplus sale proceeds of three taluks sold for arrears of Government revenue on the 3rd of October 1877 and which were in the hands of the Collector, Held, that the suit was governed by art. 62, sch. II, of the Limitation Act, and was therefore barred. Held also, that sec. 31 of Act XI of 1859 did not vest the surplus sale-proceeds in the Collector as trustee, that a deposit did not necessarily create a trust, and that therefore section 10 did not apply. Held further, that the Collector was not a depository of the money within the meaning of art. 145 of sch. II.—18 Cal. 234.

A claim to vindicate the personal right of a trustee to the possession of immoveable property against another person claiming such right in the same character is not governed by sec. 10 of the Indian Limitation Act 1877.—7 Madr. 417.

Where property has become vested in a person in trust for specific purpose, a suit to follow such property in his hands is not barred by lapse of time. Acting under Regulation V of 1804, the Court of Wards took charge of an impartible zemindari, on the death of the zemindar, leaving minor sons, of whom the eldest was afterwards recognized as heir and received possession on attaining full age. Upon a subsequent adjudication of forfeiture against him under Regulation VII of 1808, the Government obtained possession of the zemindari :—Held, that the Government was not placed in the position of a person in whom property had become vested for a specific purpose, and that the above section was not applicable to prevent the operation of the law of limitation which barred the suit brought by another of the sons, alleging title to the zemindari.—8 Madr. 525.

This was a suit brought in 1881 with no written consent of the Advocate-General by the head of an Adhinam for declarations that a Mutt was subject to his control : that he was entitled to appoint a manager : that the present head of the Mutt was not duly appointed and his nomination by his predecessor was invalid ; and for delivery of possession of the moveable and immoveable properties of the Mutt to a nominee of the plaintiff. The claim extended also to religious establishments at Benares and elsewhere connected with the Mutt. The Mutt was founded by a member of the Adhinam.

Many previous heads of the Mutt had agreed to be "slaves" of the head of the Adhinam, but for over 60 years the head of the Adhinam had exercised no management over the endowments belonging to the Mutt; and in a suit (compromised) of the year 1854 the present pretensions of the head of the Adhinam had been denied in toto. The defendant had succeeded in 1880 to the management of the Mutt under the will of his predecessor, dated the same year, and was not a disciple of the Adhinam:—Held, (1) that the Mutt is affiliated to the Adhinam, but the head of the Adhinam is not entitled to appoint to the office of head of the Mutt and is not entitled to an order for delivery of the property of the Mutt to himself or to his appointee; (2) that on the evidence as to the usage in the establishments in question, the head of the Mutt is entitled to appoint his successor, but his erection is limited to members of the Adhinam; and the head of the Adhinam is entitled to enforce this rule though he is bound to invest a disciple properly nominated by the head of the Mutt; (3) that the defendant not being disciple of the Adhinam, his appointment is invalid and the head of the Adhinam is entitled to see that a competent member of the Adhinam was appointed in his stead; (4) that the plaintiff is entitled to declarations based on the two last-mentioned findings since they were comprised in the issues framed under secs. 146 and 147 of the Code of Civil Procedure, although the appropriate form in which the decree should be passed was not indicated with precision in the plaint itself; (5) that the suit was barred by limitation in respect of the personal claim to manage the endowments as to which no claim had been put forward for 60 years; (6) that the suit was not barred by limitation in respect of the claim to set aside the appointment of the defendant (who entered into possession in 1880 under a will, dated in the same year), or to see that a competent Dharmapuram man be appointed, in spite of the total denial of the claims of the head of the Adhinam in 1854; (7) that the consent of the Advocate-General to the suit is not required; the suit having been instituted under the Civil Procedure Code of 1877 and the cause of action not being an alleged breach of trust; (8) that there is nothing irregular in seeking to recover moveable and immoveable property in the same suit if the cause of action is the same in respect of both; (9) that the agreement of the head of the Mutt to become the "slave" of his guru could have no legal operation since 1843, and that the adverse possession of the defendant from that year is fatal to any claim of the plaintiff under such agreement.—10 Madr. 375.

Plaintiff, as dharmakarta of a Hindu temple, alleging that the defendant, a former dharmakarta, who had been removed from office, had, when in office, misappropriated certain temple funds held by him, sued to recover a certain sum alleged to have been misappropriated:—Held that the defendant was a person in whom the temple funds had become vested in trust for a specific purpose within the meaning of sec. 10 of the Limitation Act, 1887, and that as the plaint disclosed a right to follow trust funds in his hands, the suit might be treated as a suit for that purpose.—11 Madr. 274.

The plaintiff sued his father in 1887 for a declaration of his title to, and for possession of, certain property as being stridhanam property of his late mother, whose only son he was. The plaint alleged that some of the property had been given to the plaintiff's mother about the time of her marriage in 1836: that in 1843 her father had appointed the defendant trustee of the property for the plaintiff and his mother, and that further sums had been since paid to the defendant in his capacity of trustee on account of the stridhanam of the plaintiff's mother, and that he had traded with the property and misappropriated it:—Held, that under Limitation Act, sec. 10, the suit was not barred by limitation on the allegations in the plaint.—14 Madr. 61.

R died in 1865, leaving a will of which his nephews P and S were the executors. His will provided that after payment of all debts, &c., the residue of his property should remain in the hands of the executors, who were “to maintain the family in the same manner as I used to maintain the family in my house.” After the death of both the executors the residue was to be apportioned among the children of his nephews in equal shares. On the death of the testator, P took possession of the estate, and died on the 10th January, 1876. S remained passive until the 27th August, 1884, when he took out probate of R’s will. On the 23rd January, 1885, he filed the present suit against the defendant as widow and administratrix of P, praying for an account of the estate of R that had come to the hands of P, and also for an account of the estate of P. The plaintiff contended that R’s estate came into the hands of P as a trustee; that the suit was to recover the property for the purposes of the trust, and that sec. 10 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877) applied. The defendant alleged that all the moneys belonging to R’s estate, which had come into the hands of P, had been expended in paying R’s debts, and that there was no residue left for the purposes of the trusts of the will, and she contended that the suit was barred by limitation:—Held, that the suit was barred by article 120 being primarily not a suit to follow trust property in the hands of a representative of a trustee, but really to ascertain whether any trust remain to be administered after the testator’s debts and funeral expenses had been paid. No breach of trust was alleged. The suit was merely for an account against the executor or his representative. To such a suit sec. 10 does not apply.—10 Bom. 242.

G died without issue in 1854. By his will he appointed three executors, and after making certain bequests he directed as follows:—“After all the above matters shall have been settled, whatever property of mine may remain, that remaining property shall be disposed of in a righteous manner, in a pious and charitable way, as may appear advisable to all my three executors. It shall be disposed of in such manner that people may speak well of me, and that all my three heirs may acquire great fame.” The last surviving executor, (the brother’s widow), died in 1868, leaving a will, whereby she appointed four executors, and confirmed and continued the provisions of G’s will. In 1886 C, one of G’s heirs, assigned all his interest in G’s estate to the plaintiff, who in 1887 filed this suit for administration. He contended, that the above claim in the will was void for uncertainty; that there was, therefore, an intestacy as to the residue of the estate; and that the executors held such residue in trust for G’s heirs within the meaning of sec. 10 of the Limitation Act XV of 1877; and that the suit was, therefore, not barred. Held, that section 10 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877) did not apply, and that the suit was barred by limitation. The executors of G were, no doubt, trustees, and for some specific purposes property became vested in them under the will, but with regard to the residue there was no trust declared and no direction given to distribute it among the heirs-at-law. In the absence of such a trust or direction the executors could not be held to be express trustees, or trustees for a specific purpose, and it is to such trustees alone that the section applies.—14 Bom. 476.

Clause in Wajib-ool-urz that lands of absconded or absent co-sharers should be restored to them on return, did not constitute the ‘ad interim’ holders trustees.—2 Al. 394; Ibid, 493; 3 Al. 458.

Sec. 10 of the Limitation Act, 1877, has reference to express trustees, and in order to make a person an express trustee, within the meaning of that section, it must appear either from express words or clearly from the facts that the rightful owner has entrusted the property to the person alleged to be a trustee for the discharge of a particular obligation. In 1813 S, being unable to pay the Government revenue due on his land, abandoned his village. In 1838 H, who had paid the revenue due by S, and had taken, or obtained from the Government, possession of S's land, attested a village paper in which it was stated that, if S returned and reimbursed him, he should be entitled to his land. Sixty years after S abandoned his village B, as the representative of S, sued the representative of H for such land, alleging that it had vested in H in trust to surrender it to S or his heirs on demand. As evidence of such trust B relied on the village-paper mentioned above, and on the village administration-paper of 1862, in which it was stated that absent co-sharers might recover their shares on payment of the arrears of Government revenue due by them. Held that such documents did not prove any express trust within the meaning of sec. 10 of the Limitation Act, 1877, and the suit was therefore barred by limitation.—4 Al. 187.

Certain of the grantees of lands, granted for the maintenance of the grantees and the support of a mosque and other religious purposes, sued for the removal of the superintendent of the property from his office. The parties to this suit entered into a compromise, which made certain arrangements for the management of the property, and a decree was made in accordance with the compromise. The grantees who were not parties to this suit then sued the grantees who were to set aside the compromise and decree on the ground of fraud. Held that the suit fell within the terms of No. 95, sch. ii. of the Limitation Act, 1877, and there was nothing about it which made the exemption of sec. 10 of that Act applicable to it.—5 Al. 294.

M and S purchased certain property jointly in 1865 and had equal interests in it till 1868, when M's interest was reduced to one third. S paid the entire purchase-money in the first instance, and incurred expenses in conducting suits for possession of the property, and for registration of the deed, and ultimately obtained possession in 1869 or 1870, and took the profits from that date. M did not pay any part of the money up to 1870, and it was not till 1878 that the whole of this share of it was subscribed, and he paid little or nothing towards the expenses. Subsequently he sued S for possession of his share, to have an account taken of the profits, and to recover his share of them with future mesne profits and costs:—Held that, under the above circumstances, there was a resulting trust in favour of the plaintiff, and the defendant became liable to account to him for his share; but inasmuch as there was no express trust, and the property did not become vested in trust for a specific purpose within the meaning of sec. 10 of the Limitation Act, and the suit was not brought for the purpose of following such trust property in the hands of a trustee, within the meaning of the section, such suit was not one which, under sec. 10, might not be barred by any length of time. Bulwant Rao Bisharat Shor v. Puram Mal Chobey referred to.—7 Al. 52.

11. Suits instituted in British India on contracts entered Suits on foreign contracts entered into in a foreign country are subject to the rules prescribed by this Act.

Foreign limitation law.

No foreign rule of limitation shall be a defence to a suit instituted in British India on a contract entered into in a foreign country, unless the rule has extinguished the contract, and the parties were domiciled in such country during the period prescribed by such rule.

PART III.

COMPUTATION OF PERIOD OF LIMITATION.

In computing the period of limitation prescribed for any suit, appeal, or application, the day from which such period is to be reckoned shall be excluded.

Exclusion of day on which right to sue accrues.

In computing the period of limitation prescribed for an appeal, an application for leave to appeal as a pauper, and an application for a review of judgment, the day on which the judgment complained of was pronounced, and the time requisite for obtaining a copy of the decree, sentence, or order appealed against or sought to be reviewed, shall be excluded.

..... in case of ap- and certain applica- tions.

Where a decree is appealed against or sought to be reviewed, the time requisite for obtaining a copy of the judgment on which it is founded shall also be excluded.

In computing the period of limitation prescribed for an application to set aside an award, the time requisite for obtaining a copy of the award shall be excluded.

Notes.

Certain accused persons were convicted on the 29th February 1884, and made their first application for a copy of the judgment on the 25th March, tendering stamped paper for such copy on the 26th and 29th March. The copy was prepared on the 30th, and the prisoners, who had been admitted to bail on the 5th March, presented their appeal on the 7th April 1884, which was rejected as being out of time. Held, that the appeal ought to have been admitted.—I. L. R., 10 Cal. 642.

A plaintiff wishing to appeal from a decision passed against him on the Original Side of the High Court, dated 16th August 1883, presented for filing his memorandum of appeal to the Registrar on the 5th September 1883, but by reason of the decree not having been signed on that date, no copy of the decree was presented therewith. The Registrar refused to accept the appeal. On the 6th September the decree was signed, and on the 7th an office copy thereof was obtained by the defendant's attorney, who, on the 8th September served a copy at the office of the plaintiff's attorney. On the 12th September, the plaintiff applied for an office copy, which he obtained on the 13th, and on the 15th tendered such copy and his memorandum of appeal to the Registrar. The Registrar refused to accept the appeal, unless under an order of Court, it being in his opinion out of time. On the 6th December 1883 a Judge sitting on the Original Side admitted the appeal. The appeal subsequently came on for hearing, when the defendant contended that the appeal was barred, it not having been filed within twenty days from the date of the decree. The Court held that the appeal was so barred. Held, on review, that the plaintiff having allowed five days to expire after the decree was signed before applying for a copy, and not having filed his appeal, after so obtaining a copy, at the earliest opportunity possible, such a delay, being entirely unaccounted for, could not be held to be "time requisite for obtaining a copy of the decree," and that, therefore, the appeal was out of time.—10 Cal. 652.

Where a decree was passed on the 22nd September and application for a copy was made not until 29th, and then with insufficient folios, and the Court was closed for the vacation from 30th September to 1st November, the deficient folios being filed on the day it re-opened, 2nd November, the copy delivered on the 6th, and the appeal filed on the 14th:—Held, that the appeal was out of time under sec. 12 the appellant not being entitled to deduction of the time occupied in ascertaining what the requisite number of folios was.—12 Cal. 30.

Where a suitor is unable to obtain a copy of a decree from which he desires to appeal, by reason of the decree being unsigned, he is entitled under sec. 12 of the Limitation Act to deduct the time between the delivery of the judgment and that of the signing of the decree in computing the time taken in presenting his appeal.—13 Cal. 104.

In calculating the period allowed by the Indian Limitation Act, 1877, for presenting an appeal, the time during which an application for review of judgment is pending cannot be excluded as a matter of right. But, if an application for review has been presented with due diligence, and admitted, and there was a reasonable prospect that the petitioner would obtain by the review all he could obtain by appeal, the Court would be justified in admitting an appeal presented out of time. Where a District Court admitted an appeal presented out of time on the ground that the appellant having filed an application for review within the time allowed for an appeal was entitled to exclude the time occupied in prosecuting the review:—Held, that the High Court could not interfere on revision.—7 Madr. 584.

A filed a plaint on 28th June 1882 for a declaration of his title as karnam of a village and for arrears of dues payable to him as such, including those for fasli 1288, which accrued due on 1st July 1879. His family had held the office and discharged its duties for three generations, but there was no evidence of any formal appointment of A or his ancestors:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to the dues as de facto karnam, and his claim was not barred in respect of any of the arrears claimed.—10 Madr. 292.

On a petition for leave to appeal to the Privy Council presented on the 8th April, it appeared that the period of six months from the date of the decree to be appealed against had expired on the 23rd of March if the time occupied by the petitioner in getting a copy of the decree was to be computed in that period:—Held, that the petition was barred by limitation.—10 Madr. 373.

In computing the period of limitation for an application for a certificate admitting an appeal to Her Majesty in Council, the time occupied in obtaining copies of the decree and judgment sought to be appealed against cannot be excluded.—15 Madr. 169.

Held that, in computing the period of limitation prescribed by art. 177, sch. ii. of Act XV of 1877, for an application for leave to appeal to Her Majesty in Council, the time requisite for obtaining a copy of the judgment on which the decree against which leave to appeal is sought is founded, cannot be excluded under the provisions of sec. 12 of Act XV of 1877.—1 Al. 644.

In computing the period of limitation prescribed for an appeal under cl. 10 of the Letters Patent, the time requisite for obtaining a copy of the judgment appealed from cannot be deducted, such copy not being required, under the rules of the Court, to be presented with the memorandum of appeal.—2 Al. 192.

See I. L. R., 5 Cal. 110, noted under sec. 6; 12 Al. 79, noted under art. 170; 12 Al. 461 and 14 Madr. 81, noted under sec. 5.

13. In computing the period of limitation prescribed for any suit, the time during which the defendant has been absent from British India shall be excluded.

of time of dem Bri-

India.

Notes.

The provisions of sec. 13 of Act XV of 1877 are not applicable to proceedings in the execution of a decree.—I. L. R., 3 Al. 185; nor, if the absence of the defendant from British India is subsequent to time having commenced to run in respect of the cause of action.—I. L. R., 6 Bom. 103. But see I. L. R., 4 Al. 530, where it was held that this section is in no way affected or controlled by sec. 9, and that, in every case, the time a defendant was absent from British India must be excluded.

Sec. 13 of the Limitation Act, which excludes the time during which a defendant has been absent from British India in computing the period of limitation for any suit, does not apply to a case when, to the knowledge of plaintiff, the defendant, though not residing in British India, is represented by a duly constituted agent and mookhtar.—I. L. R., 10 Cal. 440.

Money paid as the price of goods to be delivered hereafter is money received for the use of the seller, and it is only upon failure of consideration that the money so paid becomes money received for the use of the buyer. When goods which have already been paid for are afterwards found to be short delivered, the failure of consideration takes place on the date of delivery, and limitation in respect of a suit to recover back the sum overpaid will be reckoned from that date. The words "absent from British India," in sec. 13 of the Limitation Act should be construed broadly, and not limited in their application only to such persons as have been present there, or would ordinarily be present, or may be expected to return. Semble.—A defendant is within sec. 13, notwithstanding his having carried on trade or had a shop or a house of business under an agent in British India. Harrington v. Gonesh Roy, I. L. R., 10 Cal. 440, commented upon.—14 Cal. 457.

14. In computing the period of limitation prescribed for any suit, the time during which the plaintiff has been prosecuting with due diligence another civil proceeding whether in a Court of first instance or in a Court of appeal, against the defendant, shall be excluded, where the proceeding is founded, upon the same cause of action, and is prosecuted in good faith in a Court which, from defect of jurisdiction or other cause of a like nature, is unable to entertain it.

suit, proceedings in which have been stayed by order under the Code of Civil Procedure,* section 20, the interval between the institution of the suit and the date of so staying proceedings, and the time requisite for going from the Court in which proceedings are stayed to the Court in which the suit is re-instituted, shall be excluded.

application, the time during which the applicant has been making another application for the same relief shall be excluded, where the last-mentioned application is made in good faith to a Court which, from defect of jurisdiction, or other cause of a like nature, is unable to grant it.

Explanation 1.—In excluding the time during which a former suit or application was pending or being made, the day on which that suit or application was instituted or made, and the day on which the proceedings therein ended, shall both be counted.

Explanation 2.—A plaintiff resisting an appeal presented on the ground of want of jurisdiction shall be deemed to be prosecuting a suit within the meaning of this section.

Notes.

In the following cases time was deducted.

(1.) The plaintiff brought in 1876 a suit against the defendant in respect of the same subject-matter and founded on the same cause of action as the present suit. Issues of fact arising on the merits were inquired into; but a certificate of the Collector under sec. 6 of the Pension Act (No. XXIII of 1877), which was necessary to give jurisdiction to the Court not having been obtained, the claim was rejected on that ground. The non-production of the Collector's certificate does not necessarily constitute such a want of due diligence on the plaintiff's part as disentitle him to the deduction of time allowed by sec. 14 of the Limitation Act, XV of 1877.—I. L. R., 3 Bom. 325.

(2.) A suit was instituted in the Court of the Subordinate Judge, who, after seven months returned the plaint to be filed in the Munsif's Court, on the ground that the suit had been over-valued. There was nothing to show want of bona fides in the plaintiffs' instituting the suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge. Held that in computing the period of limitation prescribed for the suit, time during which the plaint was on the file of the Subordinate Judge's Court must be deducted.—I. L. R., 7 Cal. 284. See also 1 B. L. R., S. N., 12, where plaint was returned as undervalued by Munsiff.

* See Act XIV. of 1882, sec. 8.

(3.) Where decree was reversed on appeal on the ground that Court had no jurisdiction and the plaintiff filed his plaint in proper Court, time was deducted.—13 B. L. R., 146.

(4.) Where plaintiff sued co-talukdars in Revenue Court for arrears of rent, and the suit was dismissed for want of jurisdiction, time was deducted.—15 B. L. R., 56.

(5.) Plaintiff, as payee of an order drawn by defendant at Ahmedabad where he (defendant) resided, on a firm at Bangkok in Siam and dishonoured on presentation, sued defendant and an agent of the Bangkok firm who resided at Surat, in the Subordinate Judge's Court at Surat. Permission to proceed with the suit against the defendant (the drawer) having been refused by the High Court, plaintiff withdrew his plaint and filed his suit in the Court at Ahmedabad against the drawer alone. The Subordinate Judge rejected the claim as barred by limitation. Held by the High Court in appeal that, under sec. 15 of the Limitation Act (No. IX of 1871), a deduction might properly be made of the time during which the suit was pending in the Court at Surat, and that the deduction on this account was to run from the filing of the plaint to the final refusal of the High Court to allow the suit to proceed at Surat against the drawer (defendant).—I. L. R., 3 Bom. 182.

(6.) Time was deducted where a second suit was instituted before the first suit decided in Court without jurisdiction.—6 M. H. C. R., 45.

(7.) Where the plaintiff sued two defendants at Surat, but the High Court refused leave to sue one of them, and consequently the plaintiff withdrew the suit and filed it at Ahmedabad, time was deducted.—I. L. R., 3 Bom. 312.

(8.) See I. L. R., 8 Bom. 529, noted under sec. 6.

In the following cases time was not deducted :—

(1.) The defendants cut down and carried away some trees which had been growing on the plaintiff's land. The plaintiff's manager brought a suit in his own name against the defendants for the value of the trees so cut and carried away. This suit was dismissed on the ground that the manager had no cause of action against the defendants. In a subsequent suit brought by the plaintiff against the defendants for the value of the same trees, he contended that the time occupied in the former suit ought to be excluded in computing the period of limitation prescribed for the second suit. Held that the provisions of this section did not apply, and that the time could not be excluded, as the reason why the previous suit was dismissed, was, because it was brought in the name of the wrong person, not from defect of jurisdiction, or from any cause of a like nature.—I. L. R., 7 Cal. 367. See also Al. H. C. R., 1875, 284.

(2.) Where a plaint was presented in a wrong Court and returned to the party to be presented to a Court having jurisdiction within one month,—Held, that the order of the Court allowing the plaintiff one month in which to present his plaint could not extend the Statutory period.—5 M. H. C. R., 407.

(3.) Where a plaintiff sues upon his jenm title, having previously instituted a suit in which he unsuccessfully set up his kanom right, the latter suit cannot avail to prevent the Statute of Limitations from running against him.—2 M. H. C. R., 266.

(4.) The provision of the Indian Limitation Act of 1877, sec. 14, which excepts such time as is spent in litigating in a Court of defective jurisdiction in favour of a plaintiff does not apply where the plaintiff brought his suit in a foreign Court which, according to its own laws, had ample jurisdiction, but according to the law of British India had no jurisdiction whatever.—1. L. R., 2 Madr. 407.

(5.) Where the plaintiff was non-suited on appeal, time was not deducted.—B. L. R., Sup., Vol. 553.

On the 2nd of September 1869 a suit was instituted for, among other things, the possession of land claimed under a kobala, dated the 31st October 1867. This suit was dismissed on the ground of misjoinder of causes of action. On the 14th of April 1881, the plaintiff sued for possession of the land only. Held, that the suit was not barred by limitation as the plaintiff had, within the meaning of sec. 14, been prosecuting his claim in a Court which, from a cause of "like nature" to defect of jurisdiction, was unable to entertain it. Ram Sabhag Das v. Gobind Prasad, 2 Al. 662.—1. L. R., 10 Cal. 86.

Sec. 14 of the Limitation Act provides for cases in which a plaintiff in perfect good faith, but under mistake, has instituted proceedings in a Court not having jurisdiction in the matter, and is applicable not only to the provisions of all Acts providing a special time for the Limitation of suits, but also to the provisions of the Limitation Act itself.—10 Cal. 265.

The plaintiff on the 31st March 1884 brought a suit in the Small Cause Court on a promissory note, dated the 24th April 1879. In his plaint he omitted to set out certain payments of interest by the defendant, which payments (if so set out) would have had the effect of saving the suit from being barred by limitation. The Judge of the Small Cause Court held, that on the face of the plaint the suit was barred, and rejected the plaint on the 24th April 1884, under cl. (c) of sec. 54 of the Civil Procedure Code. On the 25th April 1884 the plaintiff brought a fresh suit on the same promissory note, and in his plaint set out how it was that he claimed exemption from limitation:—Held, that in computing the period of limitation, the plaintiff was not entitled under sec. 14 of Act XV of 1877 to exclude the time during which he was prosecuting the previous suit.—11 Cal. 264.

The provisions of sec. 14 of Act XV of 1877 are not applicable to suits for arrears of rent under Act X of 1859 — 18 Cal. 368.

The karnavan and an anandravan of a Malabar tarwad were authorized by a karar to manage the affairs of the tarwad. A decree was obtained against them, and land belonging to the tarwad was attached and sold in execution. The plaint did not describe the defendants otherwise than by their individual names, but the plaintiff's claim was, inter alia, in respect of the breach of a contract by the defendants to put him into possession of certain land which was expressed to be "the jenm of the defendants' tarwad." It was found in the present suit that the amount decreed in the prior suit constituted a debt due by the tarwad: Held, the decree and the execution sale did not bind the tarwad—Daulat Ram v. Meer Chand (1. L. R., 15 Cal. 70) distinguished. This suit was brought on 8th August 1884 to declare that the sale in execution was not binding on the tarwad. The present plaintiffs being members of the tarwad intervened in execution of the decree, but their claim was dismissed on 5th September 1882. On the 27th September 1882 they filed a suit in the Court of the District Munsiff, praying for the relief now sought. The District Munsiff dismissed the suit on the ground that he had no jurisdiction. On appeal the District Judge made an order directing him to dispose of it, which he accordingly did, and he passed a decree against which an appeal was pending on 17th August 1883. But on the last-mentioned date the High Court set aside the order of the District Judge and directed him to ascertain the market-value of the land and make a fresh order, and the enquiry, directed by the High Court, did not terminate until 30th October 1883, when another order was made by the District Judge by which the original decision of the District Munsiff was confirmed: Held, that the prior suit terminated only on the 30th October 1883, and that the present suit was not barred, under Limitation Act, 1877, sch. ii, art. 11.—12 Madr. 434.

Of six persons in whom was vested the obligee's interest under a hypothecation bond, three brought a suit upon it in a District Court and the other three brought a similar suit in a District Munsiff's Court to recover, with interest, their respective shares of the sum secured. The former suit was dismissed as not being maintainable and the latter was withdrawn. The present suit was brought by all six:—Held, that in computing the time within which the plaintiffs had to sue, the time occupied by them in prosecuting the former suits should be deducted. Deo Prosad Sing v. Pertab Kairee (I. L. R., 10 Cal. 86) followed.—13 Madr. 451.

In October, 1881, an account was struck between K and M, and a sum of Rs. 1,457 was agreed between them to be the correct balance then due by the latter to the former. Of this amount a sum of Rs. 885 was paid. In March, 1885, K sued M for the balance of Rs. 600 then due on the account stated. The plaintiffs claimed the benefit of sec. 14 as suspending the running of limitation during the pendency of a former suit which he had prosecuted against the defendant in 1884 and 1885, and which had been dismissed on the merits. That was a suit for the redemption of certain zemindari property on which the defendant held a mortgage, and the plaintiff claimed in that suit that the amount of the balance due by the defendant on the account stated should be deducted from the mortgage-money under an oral agreement entered into by the parties in October, 1881:—Held that the plaintiff could not be said to have formerly prosecuted his remedy in respect of the items now claimed in a Court which, for want of jurisdiction or other cause of a like nature, was unable to entertain it; that the provisions of sec. 14 were not applicable; and that the suit was barred by limitation. Per Straight, Offg. C. J.—The former suit was not founded upon the same cause of action as the present, inasmuch as it was founded upon the alleged oral agreement and not upon the account stated. Per Mahmood, J.—The Courts of British India in applying Acts of Limitation are not bound by the rules established by a balance of authority in England, that statutes of this description must be construed strictly. On the contrary, such Acts, whether their language is ambiguous or indistinct, should receive a liberal interpretation, and be treated as “statutes of repose” and not as of a penal character or as imposing burdens. Roddam v. Morley, Syed Ali Saib v. Sri Raja Saunairaz Peddabaliyra Simhula Bhadr, Empress v. Kola Lalang, Beil v. Morrison, Shah Keramut Hossein v. Gulab Koonwur, and Mahummud Bobadoor Khan v. The Collector of Barcilly, referred to.—8 Al. 475.

Sec. 14 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877) does not contemplate cases where questions of want of jurisdiction arise from simple ignorance of the law, the facts being fully apparent, but is limited to cases where from bona fide mistake of fact the suitor has been misled into litigating in a wrong Court. The phrase “other cause of a like nature” in the section is vague, and cannot be held to release a person from the obligation to know the law of the land. The decree in this suit was passed by the Subordinate Judge as the Court of first instance on the 31st March, 1886. Against the decree the plaintiffs preferred an appeal to the District Court on the 1st July, 1886, and on the 11th December, 1886, the District Court returned the memorandum of appeal filed in that Court to the plaintiff upon the ground that the subject-matter in dispute was above Rs. 5,000. The plaintiff then on the 20th December, 1886, presented the memorandum of appeal to the High Court, and it was admitted, subject to the consideration by the Bench determining the appeal of any question as to its admissibility, after the period of limitation prescribed for presentation of appeals to the High Court. Upon the hearing of the appeal, the respondent objected to the appeal being entertained, on the ground that it was presented beyond the period of limitation. Held that no sufficient cause being shown for the delay in the presentation of the appeal, the appeal must be dismissed. Balwant Singh v. Gumani Ram explained.—10 Al. 587.

The words "other cause of a like nature" in sec. 14 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877) mean some cause analogous to defect of jurisdiction. Where a suit dismissed on the ground that the debt sued for was due not to the plaintiff alone, but to the plaintiff and his partner, the latter not having been joined in the suit; and where the plaintiff subsequently brought a fresh suit for the same debt, making his co-partner a party, Held that the case was not within sec. 14 of the Limitation Act, and that the time during which the plaintiff had been prosecuting the former suit could not be excluded in computing the period of limitation prescribed for the second suit. Ram Subhag Das v. Gobind Prasad and Chander Madhub Chnokerbutty v. Ram Coomar Chowdry referred to. Deo Prasad Singh v. Pertab Kairce not followed.—12 Al. 207.

See I. L. R., 11 Cal. 287, 12 Madr. 467, noted under sec. 4; 10 Al. 524, 13 Madr. 269, noted under sec. 5.

15. In computing the period of limitation prescribed for any suit, the institution of which has been stayed by injunction or order, the time of the continuance of the injunction or order, the day on which it was issued or made, and the day on which it was withdrawn, shall be excluded.

Exclusion of time during which commencement of suit is stayed by injunction or order.

Notes.

A member of a firm sued for a partnership debt and obtained a decree; he died before execution. In a suit brought by his widow an injunction was issued restraining his partner from realising the partnership assets. Subsequently, a receiver was appointed for the partnership assets, and he applied for execution of the above decree:—Held, that the time during which the injunction was in force was not to be excluded in computing the period of limitation.—I L. R., 11 Madr. 103.

Where an injunction obtained against the execution of a decree has been dissolved, the time during which it was in force cannot be deducted under sec. 15 of Act XV of 1877 in computing the period of limitation within which an application for execution may be made. Sec. 15 only relates to injunctions which stay the institution of suits, and the word "suit" does not include an application (section 3)—5 Bom. 29.

See I. L. R., 13 Al. 76 & 14 Al. 162, noted under sec. 268 of the Civil Procedure Code.

computing the period of limitation prescribed for a suit for possession by a purchaser at a sale in execution of a decree, the time during which the judgment-debtor has been prosecuting a proceeding to set aside the sale shall be excluded.

17. When a person, who would, if he were living, have a right to institute a suit or make an application, dies before the right accrues, the period of limitation shall be computed from the time when there is a legal representative of the deceased capable of instituting or making such suit or application.

When a person against whom, if he were living, a right to institute a suit or make an application would have accrued, dies before the right accrues, the period of limitation shall be computed from the time when there is a legal representative of the deceased against whom the plaintiff may institute or make such suit or application.

Nothing in the former part of this section applies to suits to enforce rights of pre-emption or to suits for the possession of immoveable property or of an hereditary office.

Note.

A manager is bound to account to his employer whenever he is called upon to do so under reasonable circumstances. On the death of such manager a fresh right to an account accrues to the employer as against the manager's representatives. In a suit for such an account accruing to the employer on the death of his manager, limitation will not commence to run until administration has been taken out to such manager's estate.—I. L. R., 7 Cal. 627.

18. When any person, having a right to institute a suit or make an application, has, by means of fraud, been kept from the knowledge of such right, or of the title on which it is founded, or where any document necessary to establish such right has been fraudulently concealed from him, the time limited for instituting a suit or making an application—

(a) against the person guilty of the fraud or accessory thereto, or

(b) against any person claiming through him otherwise than in good faith and for a valuable consideration, shall be computed from the time when the fraud first became known to the person injuriously affected thereby, or, in the case of the concealed document, when he first had the means of producing it or compelling its production.

Notes.

The words "any document, necessary to establish such right, has been fraudulently concealed from him," show that the document must have been fraudulently concealed from the knowledge of the plaintiff, and that he must, owing to such fraudulent concealment, have been unaware of its existence. What is a 'necessary document' considered.—7 M. H. C. R., 22.

Sec. 18 is applicable only to those cases where the fraud is committed by the party against whom a right is sought to be enforced.—I. L. R., 2 Cal. 1.

Prior to and in the year 1865 the defendant's brother Alladinbhoy carried on an extensive business in Bombay and in China. The defendant and another brother (Ahmedbhoy) carried on a separate business under the name of Ahmedbhoy Hubibbhoy. In December, 1866, Alladinbhoy became insolvent, and his property vested in the Official Assignee. The present suit was brought in 1887 against the defendant by the Official Assignee to recover certain property which he alleged belonged to the insolvent, and ought to be distributed among his creditors. The plaintiff alleged that in 1865 the insolvent was possessed of a very large amount of property, and that, being unwilling to meet his liabilities, he and his son and his two brothers, viz., Ahmedbhoy and the defendant Rahmubhoy, fraudulently concealed his property from his creditors, and in September, 1866, he himself went to Daman, beyond British jurisdiction. In 1881 the plaintiff, having obtained information that some of the insolvent's property was in the possession of his brother Ahmedbhoy, filed a suit (No. 473 of 1881) against Ahmedbhoy to recover it. That suit was referred to arbitration, and the plaintiff obtained a decree for Rs. 3,60,600. The plaintiff now alleged that, shortly before the hearing of that suit and subsequently, he had obtained information which led him to believe that the defendant had obtained some of the insolvent's property for which he was accountable. The defendant had been made a party to the former suit, No. 473 of 1881, for the purpose of discovery only, and it was in the course of such discovery being given that some of the above information had been obtained. The plaintiff then set forth, in detail, the various items of claim in respect of which the plaintiff sought to make the defendant liable. The defendant pleaded (1) that the claims were barred by limitation; (2) that the said claims had been in issue in the former suit (No. 473 of 1881), and were adjudicated upon, and that this suit was, therefore, barred by section 13 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882); (3) that the plaintiff was barred by sec. 43 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), the plaintiff having omitted to include these claims in the former suit to which defendant was a party; (4) that the decree in the former suit (No. 473 of 1881) was (inter alia) in respect of the matters alleged in this suit, and that as, according to the plaintiff's allegation, the defendant in that suit was a joint wrong-doer with the defendant in this suit in respect of these matters, the said decree was a bar to this suit. Held by Scott, J.—(1) That the suit was not barred by limitation. There was sufficient evidence of fraud to bring the case under sec. 18 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877). The limitation only began to run from the time the fraud became fully known to the Official Assignee, which was not until December, 1885. The knowledge required by sec. 18 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877) is not mere suspicion. It must be knowledge of such a character as will enable the person defrauded to seek his remedy in Court. (2) That the suit was not barred, either by sec. 13 or sec. 43 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882). The defendant was made a party to the former suit for certain limited purposes only. No relief was asked from him; no decree was made against him. He was merely a nominal defendant. He was not a party to the former suit in such a way as to bring the present suit within the section. (3) That the rule of King v. Hoare (13 M. & W., 494,) applies in India, viz., that a judgment recovered against any one of several joint-debtors merges the remedy for the joint debt, and is a bar to an action against a co-debtor upon the joint liability; and, similarly, in a matter of tort-feasance, a judgment against one of several wrong-doers is a bar to an action on the same matter against the others. Such of the wrongs, therefore, alleged in the present suit as were of a joint character, and were adjudicated upon in the previous suit, were extinguished by the former judgment. Applying the above rule, the Judge disallowed some of the items of the plaintiff's claim, and allowed others, and directed an account in respect of the latter. The Court of Appeal confirmed the decree of first instance, except as to the one of the allowed items, which it held to be barred by limitation.—14 Bom. 408.

The plaintiff claimed, as an heir to N, deceased, a moiety of moneys, which, at the time of N's death, were deposited with a banker, and which the defendant, the other heir to N, had received from such banker. Held that the suit was one for money received by the defendant for the plaintiff's use, to which the limitation provided in art. 62, sch. ii. of Act XV of 1877, applied, and not one to which the limitation provided in art. 120 applied.—3 Al. 170.

See I. L. R., 5 Al. 294, noted under sec. 10.

19. If, before the expiration of the period prescribed for a suit or application in respect of any property or right, an acknowledgment of liability in respect of such property or right has been made in writing signed by the party against whom such property or right is claimed, or by some person through whom he derives title or liability, a new period of limitation, according to the nature of the original liability, shall be computed from the time when the acknowledgment was so signed.

When the writing containing the acknowledgment is undated, oral evidence may be given of the time when it was signed; but oral evidence of its contents shall not be received.

Explanation 1.—For the purposes of this section an acknowledgment may be sufficient, though it omits to specify the exact nature of the property or right, or avers that the time for payment, delivery, performance, or enjoyment, has not yet come, or is accompanied by a refusal to pay, deliver, perform, or permit to enjoy, or is coupled with a claim to a set-off, or is addressed to a person other than the entitled to the property or right.

Explanation 2.—In this section ‘signed’ means signed either personally or by an agent* duly authorized in this behalf.

Notes.

B’s agent, under the orders of B, wrote a letter to S containing an acknowledgment in respect of a debt. This letter was headed as follows:—Written by B to S. The concluding portion of the letter was written by B in his own handwriting. Held that, under these circumstances there was sufficient evidence that the heading of the letter was written by an agent duly authorized. Held also, looking at the heading of the letter, that the letter was “signed” by B.—1 Al. 683. For similar rulings see 5 Bom. 22, 23; 2 M. L. C. R., 70.

The manager of a Hindu family, as such, is not an agent “generally or specifically authorized” by his co-partners so as to bind them by acknowledgment.—1 Madr. 385. See also 14 B. L. R., 21.

Acknowledgments which under Act XIV of 1859 were insufficient to keep alive a cause of action, because they were signed only by an agent, held to be sufficient to sustain a suit on the same cause of action under cipal.—6 Cal. 340.

An application for the execution of a decree is an application in respect of a “right” within the meaning of sec. 19, Act XV of 1877, and a petition made by a judgment-debtor, and signed by his vakeel, praying for additional time for payment of the amount of a decree, constitutes an “acknowledgment of liability” within the meaning of that section, and a new period of limitation should be computed from the date of such petition in order to ascertain whether the execution of the decree is barred or not acknowledgment of a debt on account of a fresh start for the period of limitation.—13 Cal. 292.

The manager of a Hindu family has the same authority to acknowledge as he has to create debts on behalf of the family, but has no power, without special authority, to revive a claim, already barred by against the family.—5 Madr. 169.

Where a landlord sued to recover arrears of rent due from a tenant who entered as a Chalgaini tenant for one year and continued in possession without executing a fresh agreement: Held that an admission, made in writing, and signed by the tenant, that he hold the land as Mulgaini or permanent tenant at a lighter rent, was not an acknowledgment of the landlord's right, which, under sec. 19 of the Limitation Act, 1877, would entitle the landlord to recover arrears of rent for three years prior to the date of the admission.—6 Madr. 182.

* See 19 and 20 Vic, c. 97, sec.

The acceptance of a sale certificate, granted by a Zila Court in 1824 to the purchaser of a mortgagee's interest in land sold by auction in satisfaction of a decree, is not an acknowledgment, by the purchaser, of the title of the mortgagor which will satisfy the conditions of sec. 19 of the Limitation Act and give a fresh starting point from which limitation will run for redemption.—6 Madr. 325.

Where a creditor sued an agent of his debtor, alleging that the agent had made himself personally liable for the debt, and the suit was dismissed on the ground that the creditor gave credit to the principal:—Held, that the creditor was not debarred by such proceedings from suing the principal, R who owed V money, drew a hundi in favour of V which was dishonoured. V sued R to recover the sum for which the hundi had been drawn. Within three years before suit R wrote a letter to the drawee of the hundi requesting him to pay the amount due by R upon the hundi:—Held, that the letter was a sufficient acknowledgment, within the meaning of sec. 19 of the Indian Limitation Act, 1877, of R's liability for the debt for which the hundi was drawn.—7 Madr. 392.

A acted as commission agent for B and C. A furnished a debit and credit account in February 1878. The account was disputed and the matter was referred to an arbitration: for which purpose in March 1880 a "memorandum of items to be settled" was drawn up and signed by B and C, in which they denied that any balance would be found due to A, but acknowledged that account must be taken and that they would be liable if any balance were found due to A. In June 1880 B signed and supplied to the arbitrator an account on behalf of himself and C. The arbitrator made an award which was set aside. A filed a suit against B and C in September 1882 for a balance due to him:—Held, that the accounts were mutual, open and current accounts; that B and C had made an acknowledgment of their debt to A; and that the suit was not barred by limitation.—10 Madr. 259.

In a suit against the legal representative of a deceased debtor to recover the amount of the debt, it appeared that the debt was contracted more than three years, but was payable less than three years before suit. In bar of limitation the plaintiff relied upon an admission of the debt in a draft will, written by the testator, in the first line of which his name appeared:—Held, per Weir, J., that the admission in the will did not constitute an acknowledgment under Limitation Act, sec. 19; per Muttusami Ayyar and Parker, JJ., that the period of limitation should be computed from the date when the debt was due and the suit was not barred.—15 Madr. 380.

An unregistered instrument, the registration of which is compulsory, may be put in evidence as acknowledgment of debt for the purposes of this section, I. L. R., 3 Al. 523; but not as evidence of acknowledgment of title.—4 Bom. 590.

A sum of money was deposited with the defendant's firm in 1857. Three years afterwards interest was paid by the firm, which was debited in the ledger to the creditor against a credit of a like amount. In 1875 a balance was struck, and carried to another account signed by the defendant, and acknowledging the same to be "due for balance of old account." In 1878, the account was again balanced, and the balance again transferred to a fresh account similarly signed. Held that the transaction did not amount to an account stated within the meaning of article 62, schedule II of Act IX of 1871, or article 64 of schedule II of Act XV of 1877, and was no more than a mere acknowledgment, which, as the suit had then long been barred by limitation, was of no avail. An account stated, in the true sense of the term, and in the sense employed in the above-mentioned sections of the Limitation Acts of 1871 and 1877, is where several items of claim are brought into account on either side, and, being set against one another, a balance is struck, and the consideration for the payment of the balance is the discharge on each side; each party resigning his own rights on the sums he can claim, in consideration of a similar abandonment on the other side, and of an agreement to pay, and to receive in discharge the balance found due.—7 Bom. 414.

Acknowledgment must be made within ordinary period of limitation, and when special law fixes period, within that period.—5 Cal. 303; 6 Bom. 683.

On the 7th of December 1877, additional time for payment of the amount of a decree, dated the 24th of March 1876, was granted to the judgment-debtor upon a petition signed by his vakeel. On the 4th of December 1880 a fresh application for execution was made. Held, that it was not barred under art. 179 of sch. ii, inasmuch as the petition constituted an acknowledgment of liability under sec. 19, and a new period of limitation began to run from the 7th of December 1877. The object of the words "application in respect of any property or right" in sec. 19 is to extend to the applications mentioned in sch. ii. the same privilege as is accorded to "suits"—I. L. R., 8 Cal. 716. But for a ruling to the contrary, i. e., that the provisions of the section do not apply to applications for execution of a decree, see 5 Madr. 171.

A balance of account was written by a person at the request of an illiterate debtor in the debtor's name, and signed by the writer in his own name, held a binding acknowledgment by a duly authorized agent within the meaning of sec. 19, expln. 2 of Act XV of 1877.—7 Bom. 515.

A khata consisting of one item only on the debit side, and bearing the mark of the debtor:—Held to be a mere acknowledgment, and not an account stated.—9 Bom. 516.

An entry in a debtor's own book does not amount to an acknowledgment within the meaning of sec. 19 of Act XV of 1877, unless communicated to his creditor or to some one on his behalf—Explanation, to sec. 19 showing that the acknowledgment is contemplated as "addressed" to the creditor. Every acknowledgment, in order to create a new period of limitation, must be signed by the debtor, or some one deputed by him, no matter in what part of the document the signature is placed.—10 Bom. 71.

On 20th July, 1871, the plaintiffs obtained a decree against the defendants for the sum of Rs. 4,083 and for the sale of their mortgaged property. On the 16th July, 1877, the plaintiffs applied for execution. The application was granted, the property was attached, and the sale was fixed for the 30th November, 1878. On the 18th November 1878, one of the defendants applied for a postponement of the sale until harvest time, when he said he would pay the amount of the decree. The sale was accordingly, with the plaintiff's consent, postponed to the 31st May, 1879. On the 13th June, 1879, the plaintiffs informed the Court that negotiations were proceeding between themselves and the defendants for the settlement of the decree, and prayed that their application the 16th July, 1877, might be struck off; adding that, if the negotiations failed, they would present a fresh application. The negotiations for settlement proved abortive, and the case being one to which the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act (XVII of 1879) applied, the plaintiffs took steps to obtain a conciliator's certificate. These proceedings occupied the period from the 3rd July, 1880, to the 19th January, 1881. The certificate was granted on the 1st December, 1881. On the 13th December, 1881, more than three years after the date of the previous application, viz., 16th July, 1877, the plaintiffs made the present application for execution. The defendants contended that it was barred by limitation:—Held, that the application was not barred. As it was understood between the parties when the application of the 16th July, 1877, was struck off on the 13th June, 1879, that if negotiations failed, a fresh application should be presented, the application of the 13th December, 1881, was to be regarded as an application for the revival of the old execution proceedings. But, in any case, the application by the defendant, of the 18th November, 1877, for a postponement of the sale of his property when he promised to pay the amount of the decree, was an admission of the plaintiffs' right to execute the decree within the contemplation of sec. 19 and created a new period of limitation, which would ordinarily have expired on the 18th November, 1881. As, however, by the provisions of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act (XVII of 1879) the period during which the conciliator was endeavouring to effect an amicable settlement, viz., from 8th July, 1880, to 1st December, 1881, would have to be deducted, the present application was within time.—10 Bom. 108.

In a suit brought on the 20th July, 1886, by the plaintiff to recover the price of goods sold on the 12th March, 1881, to the defendant, the plaintiff filed two khatas under the defendant's signature, acknowledging the debt, and bearing dates the 6th March, 1882, and the 29th October, 1884. The Subordinate Judge, being of opinion that the suit was barred, referred the case to the High Court. Held, that the suit was not barred; the second acknowledgment having been made within "the new period" arising from the first acknowledgment, was made within a period prescribed for the suit, and was, therefore, itself the starting point of a new period.—11 Bom. 282.

Where the defendant, after his debt had become barred by limitation, wrote as follows to his creditor in reply to a demand for payment:—"I bear the matter in mind, and will do my utmost to repay this money as soon as I possibly can," Held, that this promise by the defendant was only a conditional promise, viz., to pay when he was able; and the plaintiff having failed to prove the defendant's ability to pay, the promise did not operate, and the plaintiff could not recover.—11 Bom. 580.

The suit was for a sum of money with interest, being the balance of an account for money lent and advanced. The original loan was made in 1876. A balance was struck every year and a new receipt or acknowledgment was passed by the defendant. The last receipt or acknowledgment was dated 3rd November, 1880. The present suit was filed within three years of that date. The intermediate acknowledgments were alleged to have been returned to the defendants. Defence was limitation. For the plaintiff it was argued that, on proof of the intermediate acknowledgments having been given back to defendant, oral evidence might be let in to prove the acknowledgments of the intermediate period of four years. Held, that under sec. 19 of Act XV of 1877 and sec. 20 of Act IX of 1871, oral evidence of the contents of an acknowledgment could not be let in. The acknowledgments of the intermediate four years not being thus legally proved the suit was dismissed.—12 Bom. 269.

Where the defendants attested as correct the record-of-rights prepared at a settlement with them of an estate in which they were described as mortgagees of the estate, but which did not mention the name of the mortgagor, held (Spankie, J. dissenting), that there was an acknowledgment of mortgagor's right to redeem.—1 Al. 117.

Held, in the case of a decree for money payable by instalments, with a proviso that, in the event of default, the decree should be executed for the whole amount, that the decree-holder was strictly bound by the terms of the decree, and, not having applied for execution within three years from the date of the first default, the decree was barred. Held also, the judgment-debtor having, three years after the first default, acknowledged in writing his liability under the decree, and signed such acknowledgment, did not create a new period of limitation.—2 Al. 443.

An application for the execution of a decree is an application in respect of a "right," that is to say, the "right" of the decree-holder to execution, within the meaning of sec. 19 of Act XV of 1877. An application, in writing by a judgment-debtor for the postponement of a sale in the execution of the decree and the issue of fresh notifications of sale is "an acknowledgment of liability" within the meaning of the same section in respect of such "right." Such an acknowledgment, when the application is signed by the pleader expressly authorized to make it, is "signed" by an "agent duly authorized in the judgment-debtor's behalf," within the meaning of the same section.—3 Al. 247.

The nature of the pecuniary transactions between B and G were such, that sometimes a balance was due to the one, and sometimes to the other. On the 1st October, 1875, there was a balance due to B. During the ensuing year, as computed in the account, G made payments to B exceeding such balance. On the 19th November, 1876, a balance of Rs. 3,500 was found to be due from G to B. On the 11th December, 1876, G executed a conveyance of certain land to B, for which such debt was partly the consideration. In such conveyance G acknowledged his liability in respect of such debt. He died before such conveyance was registered, and it did not operate. On the 18th November, 1879, B sued G's widow for such debt. Held that such conveyance was admissible as evidence of the acknowledgment by G of his liability for such debt, notwithstanding such conveyance was not registered; that, applying art. 85, sch. ii of Act XV of 1877, such debt was not barred by limitation when such acknowledgment was made; and that, if that article was not applicable, but the period of limitation began to run from the time each item composing such debt became a debt, still such debt would not have been barred when such acknowledgment was made, as the debt with which the year, computed from the 1st October, 1875, opened, was extinguished by payments made by G in the course of that year.—3 Al. 523.

A decree for money, dated the 24th June 1878, directed that a certain instalment should be paid on the 22nd July 1878, and a like on the 20th December 1878, and the balance by certain instalments commencing from a certain date; and that, in case of default, the decree-holder might realize the whole amount of the decree. The instalments were not paid at the fixed dates but part-payments of the amount of the decree were made by the judgment-debtor from time to time out of court. On the 7th May 1879 he made a part-payment and an endorsement on the decree to the following effect:—"I, G, judgment-debtor of this decree, have myself paid Rs—, and have endorsed this payment on the decree in my own handwriting." On the 15th September 1881, the decree-holder applied for execution of the whole decree. Held by the Court that the application was governed by the rule contained in sec. 19 of the Limitation Act, 1877; that the endorsement made by the judgment debtor on the decree was an acknowledgment of liability under the decree; and that consequently the period of limitation for the application should be computed from the time such endorsement was made, and the application was therefore within time. Ramhit Rai v. Satgur Rai, (I. L. R., 3 Al. 247) followed, but with doubt. Per MAHMOOD, J.—That, following the ratio decidendi in Ramhit Rai v. Satgur Rai, (I. L. R., 3 Al. 247), the part-payment made and endorsed on the decree by the judgment-debtor fell within the terms of sec. 20 of the Limitation Act 1877, Asmutullah Dalal v. Kally Churn Mitter, (I. L. R., 7 Cal. 56) distinguished. Also per MAHMOOD, J.—That it was doubtful whether in this case the decree-holder was bound to execute the whole decree when the first default occurred, as the terms of the decree appeared to give the decree-holder an option in the matter, and therefore whether the application for execution was barred because it was made more than three years after that date. Shib Dat v. Kalka Prasad (I. L. R., 2 Al. 443) distinguished.—5 Al. 201.

In the course of proceedings in execution of a decree dated the 14th June, 1878, the parties, on the 11th January, 1881, entered into an agreement, which was registered, and filed in the Court executing the decree. On the same day that this deed was executed, the decree-holder filed a petition in the Court, to the effect that under the agreement an arrangement had been made for payment of the judgment-debt, by which the judgment-debtor made over to him the bond advertized for sale; and he prayed that the sale to be held that day might be postponed, and the application for execution struck off for the present, and the previous attachment maintained, and stating that, after realization of the amount entered in the bond advertized for sale, an application for execution would be duly filed. On this the order was that the execution case be struck off the file, and the attachment maintained. On the 24th December, 1883, the decree-holder applied for execution of the decree alleging that the judgment-debtor had failed to make over the bond to him according to the agreement. The judgment-debtor objected that the decree was no longer capable of execution, having been superseded by the agreement of the 11th January, 1881, and that the application was barred by limitation, the previous application being dated the 9th November, 1880:—Held that the application was within time, inasmuch as the acknowledgment in the deed of the 11th January, 1881, came within the terms of sec. 19 so as to originate a fresh period of limitation in respect of the execution of the decree. Ghansham v. Mukha, Janki Prasad v. Ghulam Ali and Pamhit Rai v. Satgur Rai followed. Per Oldfield, J.—That the agreement of the 11th January, 1881, did not contemplate, and had not the effect of cancelling the decree and substituting for it a new contract, inasmuch as the deed contained nothing to the effect that the decree was superseded, and all it did was to provide means by which the decree, together with another small sum due by the judgment-debtor to the decree-holder, might be satisfied without having recourse to the sale of the bond attached, and the effect would be that, on realization, satisfaction would be certified in whole or in part to the Court executing the decree. Further, if the arrangement was to be regarded as within the meaning of an adjustment of the decree under sec. 258 of the Civil Procedure Code, it could only be recognized by the Court when certified by the decree-holder or judgment-debtor; and in this case the only certification which was made was by the decree-holder, by his petition of the 11th January, 1881, which was in respect of a temporary arrangement under which the decree remained in force. Per Mahmood, J.—That the agreement of the 11th January, 1881, was intended by the parties as a performance of the obligation created by the decree, by substituting a fresh obligation founded upon contract, but that the deed could not be regarded as such an adjustment of the decree as satisfied the requirements of sec. 258, because the creditors, whilst admitting the creation of a separate contract, took care to say that the decree was to be kept alive, and the attachment thereunder was to subsist; and that therefore the certification of the adjustment was inadequate and could not be recognized in executing the decree.—7 Al. 424.

A bond had been executed by A, B & C. The suit was brought against all the three. C contested the suit stating that he was only a surety, that the principal debtors were A & B, and that the suit, as against him, was barred, the ordinary period allowed by the Limitation Act having run by. The plaintiff relied on certain letters of acknowledgments by C, as taking the suit out of the bar. For the defence it was contended, in respect of these letters, that they were acknowledgments by C only as surety and that, therefore, they were not available for saving limitation. Held, that the acknowledgments, though they were of a conditional character, were sufficient to save limitation.—10 Al. 93.

See I. L. R., 7 Bom. 414, noted under art. 64; 15 Madr. 491, noted under sec. 65 of the Evidence Act.

20. When interest on a debt or legacy is, before the expiration of the prescribed period, paid as such by the person liable to pay the debt or legacy, or by his agent duly authorized in this behalf, or when part of the principal of a debt is, before the expiration of the prescribed period, paid by the debtor or by his agent duly authorized in this behalf.

a new period of limitation, according to the nature of the original liability, shall be computed from the time when the payment was made :

Provided that, in the case of part-payment of the principal of a debt, the fact of the payment appears in the handwriting of the person making the same.

Where mortgaged land is in the possession of the mortgagee, the receipt of the produce of such land shall be deemed to be a payment for the purpose of this section.

Notes.

The word 'debt' applies only to a liability for which a suit may be brought, and does not include a liability for which judgment has been obtained.—I. L. R., 2 Cal. 468.

Two of the sons out of a joint Mitakshara family, consisting of a father and three sons and the widow and sons of a deceased son, and carrying on business in partnership, suit to recover money due on a hatchitta, dated the 11th December, 1876 ; the last payment made and entered by the defendant being on the 20th July, 1877. No time was fixed for payment of the money, so that it became payable on the date of the hatchitta. The suit was instituted on the 19th July, 1880, and came on for hearing on the 26th July, when an objection was taken, that all the parties who ought to sue were not on the record. On the application of the original plaintiffs the names of the father and the third son were then added, and the plaintiffs were described as surviving partners of the deceased son. At the time the additional plaintiffs were made parties, the suit was, as regards them, barred by limitation. Held that the additional plaintiffs were rightly made parties to the suit, notwithstanding that the suit was, as far as they were concerned, barred. In actions of contract it is the right of the defendant if he takes the objection in proper time, to insist upon all the persons with whom he contracted being joined as plaintiffs, and if, after the objection has been raised, the plaintiff proceeds with the suit without taking steps to add the person or persons whose non-joinder has been objected to, and the Court finds that the objection is well founded, the suit must be dismissed. That, inasmuch as the original plaintiffs could only enforce their claim in conjunction with the added plaintiffs, and the added plaintiffs were barred by sec. 22 of Act XV of 1877, the claim of the original plaintiffs was also barred. That the suit, if all the plaintiffs had originally joined in suing, would not have been barred by sec. 20 of Act XV. of 1877. The words "prescribed period" in that section mean, not the period prescribed for the payment of the debt, but the prescribed period of limitation. There is no equity, but often much injustice, in allowing one joint contractor out of many to sue a defendant, notwithstanding an objection duly made by the latter ; and the Court has no right to allow one contractor to recover under such circumstances, though he may, no doubt, afterwards adjust the sum which he recovers with his co-contractors. As between the members of a joint family, any one or more may be authorized by the rest to act as their agent or agents in any business-transaction ; but when a joint family or any members of it carry on a trade in partnership, and contract with the outside public in the course of that trade, they have no greater privileges than any other traders. If they are really partners, they must be bound by the same rules of law for enforcing their contracts in Courts of law as any other partnership.—6 Cal. 815.

An agent may be impliedly authorised within the meaning of sec. 20 of the Limitation Act to make a payment of interest or principal before the expiration of the period prescribed.—17 Cal. 944.

A mortgagee held a usufructuary mortgage for five years from 1858, and in 1861 leased lands to mortgagor, who paid rent till 1871. The mortgagee in 1877 sued to recover the mortgage-debt, which was repayable on the expiry of the five years, alleging that payment of rent up to 1871 was payment of interest. Semble, that he might do this under the present law if it be held that payment of rent by the mortgagor is such a receipt of produce in virtue of a usufructuary mortgage as is to be deemed equivalent to a payment of interest.—3 Madr. 57.

To satisfy the conditions of sec. 20 of the Limitation Act, the endorsement in the handwriting of the person making a part-payment of the principal of a bond need not show the appropriation of the payment to principal, but only the fact of the payment.—6 Madr. 281.

In sec. 20 of the Indian Limitation Act, 1877, the condition that the fact of payment in the case of part payment of the principal of a debt must appear in the handwriting of the person making the same is satisfied, if the payer signs or affixes his mark beneath an endorsement not written by him.—7 Madr. 55.

The mark of the payer subscribed to an endorsement not in the handwriting of the payer will satisfy the proviso to sec. 20 of the Indian Limitation Act, 1877, which requires that the fact of the payment of part of the principal of a debt made by the debtor or his agent duly authorized in that behalf shall appear in the handwriting of the person making the payment, in order that a new period of limitation may run from the date of such payment.—7 Madr. 76.

Receipt of the produce of land held under a deed of mortgage required to be, but not registered, cannot be deemed to be a payment for the purpose of sec. 20 of the Indian Limitation Act, 1877.—7 Madr. 539.

Where the only evidence in the handwriting of the debtor of the part-payment of the principal of a debt was the endorsement of a cheque to the creditor.—Held, that such endorsement did not satisfy the conditions of sec. 20 so as to give rise to a new period of limitation from the date of such endorsement.—9 Madr. 271.

The words “prescribed period,” used in sec. 20 of the Limitation Act, 1877, mean the period prescribed by the Act. The contention that only one extension of the period of limitation is given by payment of interest is unfounded.—11 Madr. 218.

The defendant, at different times made payments to the plaintiff, who was his creditor, in reduction of the general balance of account against him, but without intimating that any of such payments was to be appropriated in satisfaction of the interest due on his debt. Held that there had been no payment of interest “as such” by the defendant.—3 Bom. 198.

The relationship between a native banker and the person depositing money with him in the ordinary way of business is that of borrower and lender, and the money lodged can be recovered as money lent. Article 59 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877) applies to such a transaction. The plaintiffs, who were members of the Dalvadi community, sued in 1883 to recover from the defendants the sum of Rs. 2,611-3-6 as found credited to their account in 1880 by the defendants’ father with whom the community had lodged a sum of Rs. 2,320 in 1874. They alleged that the sum was lodged on the condition that it was to be returned with interest on demand. It appeared that small sums were paid by Kalidas to the plaintiffs from time to time, and no demand had ever been made during the lifetime of Kalidas for repayment. The defendants denied the alleged condition, and contended that the suit was barred. The Court of first instance awarded the plaintiffs’ claim. The defendants appealed to the Assistant Judge, who reversed the decree, being of opinion that the transaction was a loan and not a deposit, and that the suit was barred. On appeal by the plaintiffs to the High Court. Held confirming the decree of the lower appellate Court, that the plaintiffs’ suit was barred by article 59 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877). The plaintiffs contended that the money was lodged as a “deposit” and not as a loan, and that article 60 of Schedule II of the Limitation Act applied. They relied upon the following circumstances as showing the nature of the transaction, viz., (1) that it was arranged that the money should remain until a favourable opportunity should occur for applying it to the building of a dharmshala; (2) that interest was to be paid upon it; (3) that the account was to be annually settled; (4) that it was to be withdrawn in one sum. Held that these circumstances, if proved, did not necessarily deprive the transaction of the character of a loan by creating a fiduciary relationship between the parties, (which is essential to a deposit in its technical sense), and thus distinguishing it from the ordinary dealings between native bankers and their customers. It was further contended that the entry of interest in the defendant's book was made in the plaintiffs' presence, and amounted to a payment of interest within the meaning of section 20 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877). Held, that such an entry did not amount to payment of interest within the meaning of the section so as to save limitation. Nothing took place which could be regarded as equivalent to payment of interest.—13. Bom. 338.

See I. L. R., 5 Al. 201, noted under sec. 19.

21. Nothing in sections 19 and 20 renders one of several joint contractors, partners, executors, or mortgagees chargeable by reason only of a written acknowledgment signed, or of payment made by, or by the agent of, any other or others of them.

Notes.

The plaintiff, as heir of his mother, sued a firm, in which he was himself a partner, to recover the amount of certain loans which he alleged that his mother in her life-time had made to the said firm. The plaintiff was made a defendant in the suit along with the other partners. The alleged loans were made on the 2nd November, 1881, and the 12th October, 1882. The present suit was not filed until December, 1885. The plaintiff, however, relied on an acknowledgment signed in his mother's account book by himself as partner in the firm on the 1st November, 1883. The first defendant did not appear, or put in any defence. The second defendant pleaded limitation, and alleged that on the 2nd November, 1880, prior to the date of the alleged loans, he had retired from the firm, and, therefore, was not liable. From the evidence given at the hearing it appeared that the business stopped, so far as buying and selling and fresh trading were concerned, at the end of the year 1881, and that subsequently to that date the partners were occupied solely in winding up the affairs of the firm:—Held, that, under the circumstances, the acknowledgment given by the plaintiff did not bind the other partners, and that the claim against them was barred. If, at the time the acknowledgment was given, the firm had been a going concern, the plaintiff's authority to make such an acknowledgment on behalf of the firm might have been presumed; but in this case the business had been closed, and the partnership entirely dissolved. The presumption, therefore, which arises in active partnership, no longer existed, and there was no evidence that the plaintiff had been expressly authorized to act for the other partners in making the acknowledgment.

The meaning of the word "only" in sec. 21 of the Limitation Act XV of 1877 is that it must also be shown that the partner signing the acknowledgment had authority, express or implied, to do so. In a going mercantile concern such agency is to be presumed as an ordinary rule. It was objected that the suit was improperly framed, in as much as the plaintiff was also made a defendant:—Held, that the objection was not maintainable, the plaintiff being a defendant in a different capacity. Premji Ludha v. Dossa Doongersey.—I. L. R., 10 Bom. 358.

The word "only" in section 21 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877) is not to be treated as a surplusage. It means that the mere writing or signing of an acknowledgment by one partner does not necessarily of itself bind his co-partner, unless it can be shown that he had otherwise power to bind that partner for the purpose of making such acknowledgment, and in effect purported so to bind him.—I. L. R., 10 Al. 418.

22. When, after the institution of a suit, a new plaintiff or defendant is substituted or added, the suit shall, as regards him, be deemed to have been instituted when he was so made a party :

Effect of substituting or adding new plaintiff or defendant.

Provided that, when a plaintiff dies, and the suit is continued by his legal representative, it shall, as regards him, be deemed to have been instituted when it was instituted by the deceased plaintiff :

Proviso where original plaintiff dies.

Provided also that, when a defendant dies, and the suit is continued against his legal representative, it shall, as regards him, be deemed to have been instituted when it was instituted against the deceased defendant.

Proviso where original defendant dies.

Notes.

Where a plaint was filed against wrong parties supposed to be representatives of a deceased debtor, and after the expiration of the period true representatives were substituted, the suit was held barred.—10 Bom. H. C. R., 224.

In actions of contract it is the right of the defendant, if he takes the objection in proper time, to insist upon all the persons with whom he contracted being joined as plaintiffs, and if, after the objection has been raised the plaintiff proceeds with the suit, without taking steps to add the person or persons whose non-joinder has been objected to, and the Court finds that the objection is well founded, the suit must be dismissed. Where the original plaintiffs could only enforce their claim in conjunction with the added plaintiffs and the added plaintiffs were barred by sec. 22, the claim of the original plaintiffs was also barred. I. L. R., 3 Cal, 26, dissented from—I. L. R., 6 Cal. 815.

A suit for property in the possession of several persons was brought by the plaintiff against one of those persons only. After the institution of the suit, and after the period of limitation prescribed for a separate suit on the same cause of action against the other persons in possession had elapsed, these latter were added as defendants. Held that the suit must be dismissed as against the added defendants, on the ground that it was barred by limitation.—7 Cal. 284.

The creditor of a deceased trustee of a temple sued two persons, as his successors in office, to recover the amount of the debt. One of the defendants died; the other, who was the brother of the deceased, pleaded that other persons were joint trustees with him, and should have been impleaded with him, he also alleged that the debt in question was a private debt, and had not been incurred by the deceased as a trustee. The persons named were joined as defendants, and they repeated the above allegation. The plaintiff, thereupon, amended the plaint and prayed for a personal decree against the original surviving defendant, and the others were removed from the record. The amendment took place more than three years after the date when the debt was payable, but the suit had been instituted within that period :—Held, that the claim was not barred by limitation.—15 Madr. 417.

To amend a plaint by making the plaintiff sue as attorney instead of on his own account, is not a substitution of a new plaintiff so as to bar the suit.—3 Bom. 312.

A, who with his three brothers composed a joint Hindu family, brought a suit in his own sole name to recover a joint debt. When the objection was taken to the form of the suit on the ground of the non-joinder of A's three brothers, it was too late to add them as co-plaintiffs, by reason of sec. 22 of the Limitation Act, XV of 1877,—a suit on the debt being by that time-barred. The three brothers at the hearing expressed their willingness that A should sue alone. Held that such assent did not obviate the necessity of joining all the proper parties as co-plaintiffs, and that the suit, therefore, as framed, would not lie. Held, further, that A would have been in no better position had he joined his three brothers as co-plaintiffs after the suit was, as regards them, time-barred ; since such a suit would have been virtually a suit by himself alone, and therefore bad. Boydonth Bag v. Grish Chunder Roy, (I. L. R., 3 Cal. 26) disapproved of.—7 Bom. 217.

On the 27th June, 1883, the plaintiff was arrested by a bailiff of the Small Cause Court at Bombay, under a writ of arrest for the amount of a decree obtained by the defendant on the 2nd May, 1883, against the plaintiff. On arrest the plaintiff informed the bailiff, that the money due under the decree had already been paid, as was the fact. Plaintiff could not produce the receipt of payment, and the bailiff refused to raise the arrest until payment was made. The plaintiff thereupon paid the money under protest, and was set at liberty. The mistake was subsequently discovered, and the money was refunded to the plaintiff. It appeared that, prior to plaintiff's arrest, defendant's clerk had inquired of the head Cashier of the Small Cause Court if the amount of the decree had been paid, but was told it was not, and a certificate of non-payment was issued. In conformity with the usual practice of the Court the chief Clerk of the Court on receipt of the certificate issued the writ of arrest under seal of the Small Cause Court, and the plaintiff was arrested. In March 1884, the plaintiff presented a petition to the High Court for leave to sue as pauper, and claimed Rs. 25,000 from first defendant as damages for the wrongful arrest. When the petition came on for inquiry into the pauperism of the plaintiff, the presiding Judge was of opinion that it disclosed no cause of action, and the plaint was returned to the plaintiff to be amended, but at the same time allowed to be filed. The plaintiff subsequently desired to add as party-defendants the Cashier, and the chief Clerk of the Small Cause Court, and on 5th July 1884, took out a summons calling upon the defendants to show cause why his amended plaint should not be received on the file of the Court in place of his first petition. It was contended for the Cashier and the chief Clerk of the Small Cause Court that the suit against them was barred by limitation :—Held, as regard the first defendant, that the plaint should be rejected, as there was no bad faith, fault or irregularity on the part of the first defendant so as to make him responsible for the wrongful arrest. The plaintiff's imprisonment having taken place under a warrant of the Court issued in regular manner, and such Court being of competent jurisdiction, the plaintiff had no cause of action as against the first defendant,—the error was wholly and entirely the error of the officers of the Small Cause Court :—Held, also, as regards the Cashier and the chief Clerk of the Small Cause Court that the plaintiff's suit was barred, as more than one year had elapsed from the date of the termination of the plaintiff's imprisonment.—9 Bom. 1.

An Appellate Court has a discretionary power to substitute or add a new appellant or respondent after the period of limitation prescribed for an appeal. The right, title, and interest of G in certain immoveable property was attached and notified for sale in the execution of a money-decree held by T. It was also attached and notified for sale in the execution of a money-decree held by S and R. The same date was fixed for both sales. The officer conducting sales first sold the property in execution of T's decree, and T purchased the property. He then sold the property in execution of the decree held by S and R, and K purchased the property. The Court executing the decrees confirmed the sale to T, granting him a sale certificate, and disallowing K's objection to the confirmation. It also confirmed the sale to K, ordering the purchase-money to be paid to S and R, and disallowing K's objection to the confirmation; but it refused to grant K a sale-certificate, on the ground that, as the sale to T had been confirmed and a sale-certificate granted to him, it could not give K possession of the property. In a suit by K against S and R to recover his purchase-money, held, distinguishing the suit from the cases in which it had been held that, when the right, title, and interest of a judgment-debtor in a particular property is sold, there is no warranty that he has any right, title, or interest, and therefore the auction-purchaser cannot recover his purchase-money, if it turns out that the judgment-debtor had no interest in the property, that the rule of caveat emptor did not apply, and the suit was maintainable. The provisions of sec. 257 of Act VIII of 1859 apply to applications made under sec. 256 of that Act, and to those only. Held, therefore, that, inasmuch as K objected to the confirmation of the sale to him on the ground that the Court was not competent to confirm a sale which had by its previous order been nullified, and not on any of the grounds mentioned in sec. 256 of Act VIII of 1859, K was not precluded by the terms of sec. 257 of that Act from maintaining his suit. Where the Court executing two decrees made separate orders directing the sale on the same date of certain immoveable property in execution of such decrees, the officer conducting sales was not bound to sell such property once for all in execution of both decrees, and his selling such property separately was therefore not an irregularity in the conduct of the sales.—2 Al. 107.

P, on the 12th April, 1880, instituted a suit against Z, claiming to enforce a right of pre-emption in respect of the sale of a share of an undivided estate to the latter and his minor brother A jointly, under an instrument dated the 12th April. 1879. On the 3rd May 1880, A was made a defendant to such suit, Z being appointed guardian for the suit for him. Held that, inasmuch as such suit, as regards A, was beyond time, and as the only relief which could be granted therein to P was the invalidation of the joint sale to Z and A, such suit, even admitting it was within time as regards Z, was not maintainable.—4 Al. 145.

Where, after a notice required by sec. 43 of Act XV of 1873 had been left at the office of a Municipal Committee, such Committee were sued within three months of the accrual of the plaintiff's cause of action in the name of their Secretary instead of in the name of their President, as required by sec. 40 of Act XV of 1873, and the plaintiff applied to the Court more than three months after the accrual of his cause of action to substitute the name of the President for that of the Secretary, held that by reason of such substitution such suit could not be deemed to have been instituted against such Committee when such substitution was made, sec. 22 of Act XV of 1877 applying to the case of a person personally made a party to a suit and not to the case of a Committee sued in the name of their officer, and that such substitution when applied for should have been made.—2 Al. 296.

See. I. L. R., 6 Cal. 815, noted under sec. 20 ; 14 Al. 524, noted under sec. 32 of the Civil Procedure Code.

 limitation begins to run at every moment of the time during which the breach or the wrong, as the case may be, continues.

Notes.

From time immemorial, and certainly for more than twenty years prior to the date of the obstruction by the defendants, the plaintiff enjoyed the right of having an egress for his rain-water through a drain in the defendant's land. The plaintiff, more than two years after the date of the obstruction, sued the defendants for the removal of the obstruction. Held that, though, under the circumstances, the plaintiff had failed to prove a title acquired under sec. 26 of Act XV of 1877, yet the plaintiff, having a title, evidenced by immemorial user, did not require the aid of that Act ; and inasmuch as the obstruction complained of constituted a continuing nuisance, as to which the cause of action was renewed de die in diem, the plaintiff's claim was not barred by any provision of the Act, but, on the contrary, was saved by the express provision of sec. 23.—I. L. R., 6 Bom. 20.

The purchasers of certain land agreed to pay the vendors certain fees annually in respect of such land, and that, in default of payment the vendors should be entitled to the proprietary possession of a certain quantity of such land. The purchasers never paid such fees, and more than twelve years after the first default the vendors sued them for possession of such quantity of such land. Held that there had not been a "continuing breach of contract" within the meaning of sec. 23 of Act XV of 1877, and therefore the provisions of that section were not applicable to the suit ; and, further, that the suit, being governed by art. 143, sch. II of Act XV 1877, and more than twelve years having expired from the first breach of such agreement, was barred by limitation. The difference between sec. 23 of Act IX of 1871 and Act XV. of 1877 pointed out.—4 Al. 493.

See I. L. R., 10 Al. 85, noted under art. 115 ; 13 Al. 126 & 16 Bom. 714, noted under art. 34.

fuses to employ B as his clerk. The period of limitation in the case of a suit by B against A for compensation for the slander does not commence till the refusal.

(b.) A Hindu makes a bond, bearing a native date only, for the repayment of money within one year. The period of limitation applicable to a suit on the bond runs from the expiry of one year after date computed according to the Gregorian calendar.

Notes.

Where a bond bears a native date only, and is made payable after a certain time, that time, whether denoted by the month or the year, is to be computed according to the Gregorian (British) calendar.—I. L. R., 4 Bom. 103.

The plaintiff sued on a note, bearing a native date, Ashad Vadya 13th, Shake 1799 (7th August, 1877), and containing a stipulation for payment of the money to this effect: "In the month of Kartik, Shake 1799,—that is to say, in four months,—we shall pay in full the principal and interest." The plaint was filed on the 6th December, 1880, in the Court of Small Causes at Poona. The Judge was of opinion that the claim was barred. On his referring the case to the High Court for its decision: Held that the period of four months was, for the purpose of ascertaining whether the suit was barred by lapse of time, to be calculated according to the Gregorian calendar, under sec. 25 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877), and that claim was not barred.—6 Bom. 83. PART IV.

ACQUISITION OF OWNERSHIP BY POSSESSION.

26.* Where the access and use of light or air to and for Acquisition of right to easement. any building have been peaceably enjoyed therewith as an easement, and as of right, without interruption, and for twenty years, and where any way or watercourse, or the use of any water, or any other easement (whether affirmative or negative), has been peaceably and openly enjoyed by any person claiming title thereto, as an easement, and as of right, without interruption, and for twenty years, the right to such access and use of light or air, way,

* Secs. 26 and 27 are repealed by Act V. of 1882 (Easements) in territories to which Act V. of 1882 extends. All references in any Act or Regulation to the said sections, or to secs. 27 and 28 of Act IX. of 1871, shall, in such territories, be read as made to secs. 15 and 16 of Act V. of 1882.

watercourse, use of water, or other easement shall be absolute and indefeasible.

Each of the said periods of twenty years shall be taken to be a period ending within two years next before the institution of the suit wherein the claim to which such period relates is contested.

Explanation.—Nothing is an interruption within the meaning of this section, unless where there is an actual discontinuance of the possession or enjoyment by reason of an obstruction by the act of some person other than the claimant, and unless such obstruction is submitted to, or acquiesced in, for one year after the claimant has notice thereof, and of the person making or authorizing the same to be made.*

Illustrations.

(a.) A suit is brought in 1881 for obstructing a right of way. The defendant admits the obstruction, but denies the right of way. The plaintiff proves that the right was peaceably and openly enjoyed by him, claiming title thereto as an easement and as of right without interruption from 1st January 1860 to 1st January 1880. The plaintiff is entitled to judgment.

(b.) In a like suit, also brought in 1881, the plaintiff merely proves that he enjoyed the right in manner aforesaid from 1858 to 1878. The suit shall be dismissed, as no exercise of the right by actual user has been proved to have taken place within two years next before the institution of the suit.

(c.) In a like suit the plaintiff shows that the right was peaceably and openly enjoyed by him for twenty years. The defendant proves that the plaintiff on one occasion during the twenty years had asked his leave to enjoy the right. The suit shall be dismissed.

Notes.

The provisions of this section do not exclude other modes of acquiring easements.—15 B. L. R., 361; 6 Cal. 394; 6 Bom. 20; 8 Cal. 956.

Where during the required 20 years the owner of the dominant tenement had himself for some years permanently obstructed the use of the easement, the easement could not be said, during the continuance of such obstruction, to have been “openly enjoyed.”—I. L. R., 1 Cal. 422.

On the 6th of April 1878, the plaintiffs sued for obstructing a right of way for boats in the rainy season. The defendants admitted the obstruction but denied the right of way. The plaintiffs proved that the right was peaceably and openly enjoyed, and actually used by them, claiming title thereto as an easement and as of right without interruption, from before 1855 down to November 1875, since when no actual user of the way by the plaintiffs had taken place. The lower Appellate Court dismissed the suit, on the ground that the plaintiff had made no actual use of the way within two years previous to the institution of the suit. Held, reversing the decision of the Court below, that notwithstanding Act XV of 1877, sec. 26 Illus. (b) actual user within two years previous to the institution of the suit is not necessary, in order that the right claimed may be acquired under Act XV of 1877, sec. 26. ed, specially when the effect would be to curtail a right which the section in its ordinary sense would confer.—7 Cal. 132.

In a suit to restrain the defendants from fishing in certain bhils, which admittedly belonged to the plaintiff's zemindari, it appeared that the plaintiff had let out some of the bhils to Ijaradars who had sued the defendants for the price of fish taken by them from the bhils, and that the suit had been dismissed, on the ground that the defendants, in common with other inhabitants of the villages in the zemindari, had acquired a prescriptive right to fish in the bhils. The defendants contended that they had been in possession of the bhils for more than 12 years, and that they had a prescriptive right to fish therein, under a custom according to which all the inhabitants of the zemindari had the right of fishing. Held, that the mere fact that the defendants had trespassed and had misappropriated fish did not amount to a dispossession of the plaintiff, and that the suit was not barred by limitation. Parputty Nath Roy Chowdhry v. Mudho Paroe, (I. L. R., 3 Cal. 276,) distinguished. Held, also, that no prescriptive right of fishery had been acquired under sec. 26 of the Limitation Act, and that the custom alleged could not, on the ground that it was unreasonable, be treated as valid. Lord Rivers v. Adams (L. R., 3 Ex. D., 361,) followed.—9 Cal. 698.

For the purpose of acquiring a right of way or other easement under sec. 26 of the Indian Limitation Act, it is not necessary that the enjoyment of the easement should be known to the servient owner. In this respect there is a difference between the acquisition of such rights under that Act and their acquisition under the English Prescription Act.—10 Cal. 214.

The Indian Limitation Act, unlike the English Prescription Act, places light and air on the same footing; and the object of the Prescription Act and of the provisions of the Indian Limitation Act is not to enlarge the extent and operation of the easement, but to provide another and more convenient way of acquiring such easements—a mode independent of legal fiction and capable of easy proof in a Court of law; these Acts do not, therefore, alter in any way the pre-existing law as to the nature and extent of the right. The only amount of light for a dwelling house which can be claimed by prescription or by length of time (whether prior or subsequently to the Limitation Act 1871) without an actual grant is such an amount as is reasonably necessary for the convenient and comfortable habitation of the house. Rule laid down in Bagram v. Khettranath Karformah, 3 B. L. R., O. C. 41, followed. The right of air is co-extensive with the right to light. To give a right of action, either prior or subsequently to the Limitation Act of 1871, in a case (where there is no express contract on the subject) for an interference with the access of air to dwelling houses by building on adjoining land, the obstruction must be such as to cause what is technically called a nuisance to the house; in other words, to render the house unfit for the ordinary purposes of habitation or business. There is no such right as a right to the uninterrupted flow of south breeze as such. The "45-degree rule" is not a positive rule of law, but is a circumstance which the Court may take into consideration, and is especially valuable when the proof of the obstruction is not definite or satisfactory.—14 Cal. 839.

The rule of construction according to which the Crown is not affected by a Statute, unless specially named in it, applies to India. Semble—The provisions of section 26 of the Limitation Act XV of 1877 do not apply to the Crown. The mere mention of the Crown in an Act has not the effect of making all its provisions applicable to the Crown, and section 26 does not relate to the limitation of suits, but to an entirely different matter, viz., the creation of rights by the enjoyment of them, which is a branch of the substantive law. The section is clearly in prejudice of the Crown's rights, and the other provisions of the Act do not afford sufficient evidence of an intention that this section should apply to the Crown. The rule of English law, that a claim to a profit a prendre cannot be acquired by the inhabitants of a village either by custom or prescription, does not apply to a right of pasturage claimed by a village in the Presidency of Bombay as against the Government. The right of free pasturage has always been recognized as a right belonging to certain villages, and must have been acquired by custom or prescription. The plaintiffs, who were the inhabitants of the village of Dani Limbda, sued for themselves and the other inhabitants to establish their right to graze their cattle on the banks and the dry part of the village tank Chandola and for a perpetual injunction restraining the defendant from interfering with such right. The defendant contended (inter alia) that the tank was kharabo or waste land, that it had never been set apart under the Land Revenue Code, sec. 38, for grazing purposes, and that the plaintiffs could not acquire, as against the Government, a right of grazing by prescription. The Court of first instance held the defendant not excluded from the operation of sec. 26 of the Limitation Act XV of 1877, but found that there was a break in the period of prescription, and, therefore, rejected the plaintiffs' claim. The lower Appellate Court held that there was no break, and awarded their claim. On appeal by the defendant to the High Court, held, restoring the decree of the Court of first instance, that the suit should be dismissed. Whether the plaintiffs' claim was considered with regard to sec. 26 of the Limitation Act XV of 1877, or to the general law of prescription, it was essential that the user should have been as "of right" to graze cattle on the tank in question. But the right of free pasturage which certain villages enjoy according to the recognized custom of the country, and which was admittedly enjoyed by the plaintiffs' village, does not necessarily confer the right of pasturage on any particular piece of land, although it may confer the right of having sufficient land set apart for the purposes of the village, and in the absence of special circumstances pointing to the tank in question having been used for grazing by the villagers in exercise of a right other than and independent of the aforesaid right, the user by the plaintiffs could only be referred to that general right.—14 Bom. 213.

In order to acquire an easement under section 26 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877), the enjoyment must have been by a person claiming title thereto as an easement as of right for twenty years. Evidence of immemorial user adduced in support of a right founded on ownership, does not, when that right is negatived, tend to establish an easement. Quære—whether upon a correct construction of section 1 of Regulation V of 1827 which applies to the acquisition of easements, the mere user would be sufficient to establish the right to the easement claimed.—16 Bom. 592.

See I. L. R., 16 Bom. 353, noted under art. 144; 13 Bom. 674, noted under sec. 54 of the Specific Relief Act.

any term of years exceeding three years from the granting thereof, the time of the enjoyment of such easement during the continuance of such interest or term shall be excluded in the computation of the said last-mentioned period of twenty years, in case the claim is within three years next after the determination of such interest or term, resisted by the person entitled, on such determination, to the said land or water.*

Illustration.

A sues for a declaration that he is entitled to a right of way over B's land. A proves that he has enjoyed the right for twenty-five years; but B shows that, during ten of these years, C, a Hindu widow, had a life interest in the land, that on C's death B became entitled to the land, and that within two years after C's death he contested A's claim to the right. The suit must be dismissed, as A, with reference to the provisions of this section, has only proved enjoyment for fifteen years.

Extinguishment of right to property.

Notes.

Adverse possession for more than 12 years of immovable property not only bars the remedy and extinguishes the right of the true owner, but also confers a good title on the trespasser.—II Moo. I. A. 345; I. L. R., 3 Cal. 224; 4 Cal. 357; 3 Al. 435.

Trees growing upon land are "land."—I. L. R., 3 Al. 435.

In 1842 H C executed in favour of the plaintiff, his brother, who was in possession of the family property as kurta and administrator of the estate of their father, a mortgage of his (H C's) share of the estate in consideration of Rs. 3,700 advanced to him by the plaintiff. In the mortgage deed the money was expressed to be payable "on demand." In 1847 an amicable partition of the family property was proposed, and it was agreed that a certain portion should be allotted to the plaintiff in satisfaction of the debt due to him by H, C, but this arrangement was never carried out. In a suit brought in 1876 against the representative of H C for foreclosure of the mortgage, the plaintiff, who had admittedly been, since 1842, in possession of the family property, alleged that no payment had ever been made in respect of the mortgage, nor any demand for payment, until 1876. The defendant contended that the suit was barred by lapse of time. Held, on the construction of the mortgage-deed; and under the circumstances of the case, per GARTH, C. J., that a demand was necessary; per MARKBY, J., that the words "on demand" did not postpone the date of payment, and that the mortgage-money became payable at once. Per GARTH, C. J., and MARKBY, J.—A demand was made in 1847 on the agreement to partition the property. The suit, therefore, was barred by Act XIV of 1859, as being brought more than twelve years after the cause of action arose. That Act not only barred the remedy, but extinguished the right, and therefore the plaintiff could derive no advantage from the extended period of limitation given by art. 149 of Act IX of 1871, which repealed the Act of 1859. Art. 149 of Act IX of 1871, moreover, only applies to cases in which some part of the principal or interest of the mortgage-debt has been paid. The 28th section of the Limitation Act of 1877 extends the doctrine that twelve years' adverse possession of land not only bars the remedy of the rightful owner, but extinguishes his right to property other than land ; but per GARTH, C. J., Quære : Whether this principle would apply to debts.—4 Cal. 284.

In a suit instituted in 1877, A prayed for a declaration, that he had a lakhiraj title to certain lands ; the defendant stated, that the lands for a declaration of a title to which A now sued formed part of certain lands which had been the subject of resumption-proceedings, which were terminated in 1863 by a decree declaring that the lands which were the subject of that suit, including the lands now claimed by A, were not lakhiraj. It being found as a fact, that A had neither been a party to, nor been represented in, the resumption-proceedings, that he had been in quiet and undisturbed possession of the lands which he now claimed for more than 12 years before the institution of his suit, and that proceedings had been taken by the defendant calculated to disturb such possession,—held that A was entitled under sec. 42 of Act I of 1877 to the declaration prayed for. Held also, that although the onus of proof lay on the plaintiff, it was not necessary for him to prove that the lands claimed by him to be held as lakhiraj had been held rent-free from before the date of the permanent settlement ; but it was sufficient for him to prove that the defendant was, at the time of the institution of the suit, debarred by lapse of time from instituting a suit for the resumption or assessment of rent upon the land.—5 Cal. 949. See also 1 Bom. 586 ; 9 Bom. H. C. R., 260 and Al. H. C. R., 1870, p. 106.

Failure to pay rent is a recurring cause of action, and therefore, where right to take it is proved or admitted, no question of limitation arises.—4 Cal. 661.

As far as regards debts, the Indian law of limitation merely bars the remedy but does not extinguish the right.—I. L. R., 6 Cal. 340. See also I. L. R., 5 Cal. 897 ; I. L. R., 1 Madr. 228 and 301.

Where the relation of landlord and tenant is proved to have existed, it lies on the defendant in possession of the land to prove that the relation was put an end to at such a period anterior to the suit as would entitle the defendant to rely on his possession as adverse to the plaintiff for 12 years. Non-payment of rent for upwards of 12 years and a grant of putta by Government to defendant for 5 years do not, when Government claims no interest adverse to plaintiff and plaintiff does not consent to defendant becoming tenant to Government, create any possession in defendant adverse to plaintiff.—3 Madr. 118. See also 4 Cal. 661 ; Ibid. 314 ; 2 Al. 517.

Where the equity of redemption of a certain estate became, on the death of the mortgagor, the property of two divided branches of a Malabar tarwad, and the rents and profits of the land paid by the mortgagee were enjoyed exclusively by K, the representative of one branch, for fifteen years : —Held, that K had not acquired thereby a title to the estate mortgaged.—7 Madr. 26.

A jenmi having demised certain land in Malabar on otti to defendant No. 3 in 1869, sold the jenm title to the plaintiff and defendants Nos. 1 and 2 in 1886. In 1888 defendant No. 3 made a further advance to and obtained a renewed demise from defendants Nos. 1 and 2. The plaintiff now sued more than six years after the sale to recover his share (defendant No. 3 being in possession) on payment of one-third of the otti amount :—Held, that (whether or not the suit was maintainable as framed) the third defendant had a right of pre-emption as otti-dar, which had not been waived by him and was not barred by limitation, and which constituted a good defence to the suit.—13 Madr. 490.

In 1872 the plaintiffs induced the first defendant by fraud and misrepresentation to execute in their favour a deed of sale of the property in dispute. They did not pay the purchase-money, nor obtain possession of the property. The defendant remained in possession, and in 1873 mortgaged the property with possession to defendants Nos. 2 and 3, and in 1880 sold it to defendant No. 2. In 1884 the plaintiffs sued for possession of the property, relying on their title under the sale-deed. The defendant impeached the deed as fraudulent, and disputed the plaintiffs' title. The plaintiffs contended that as the defendant had not sued to set aside the deed, on the ground of fraud, within three years, as provided by articles 91 or 95 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877), or within twelve years from the date of sale, it was too late for him to set up the plea of fraud. Held, (SCOTT, J., doubting) that the defendant's right to raise the plea of fraud was not barred by the law of limitation. Per SCOTT, J. :—There was another point of limitation which could be raised. The consideration money was never paid by the plaintiffs, and possession was never given. There was no complete contract of sale passing the property. Therefore the plaintiffs, only right was to sue for specific performance of the contract. Such a suit, however, became barred in three years after the date of the contract. The plaintiffs, therefore, had lost their rights against defendant No. 1; and even if they had not, the present claim for possession as against defendants Nos. 2 and 3 must fail, as defendant No. 2 was mortgagee and defendant No. 3 was bona-fide purchaser for value, and no satisfactory evidence was given by plaintiffs on whom lay the onus, that these defendants had notice of the deed of sale. Per JARDINE, J. :—Section 28 of the Limitation Act XV of 1877 does not apply to the case of defendants, who rely on an actual possession which has never been disturbed.—14 Bom. 222.

Where a suit for the recovery of possession of immoveable property is resisted by a plea of adverse possession for more than twelve years, the question of limitation becomes a question of title, and it lies upon the plaintiff in the first instance to give satisfactory prima facie evidence of his possession within twelve years of the suit. Mohima Chunder Mozoomdar v. Mohesh Chunder Neoghi and Parmanand Misr v. Sahib Ali referred to.—14 Al.

Rs. 199 by deeds of bai-bil-wufa dated the 12th and 21st June, 1876. C and D subsequently instituted foreclosure proceedings, and on the 5th May, 1884, were put into possession of B's share in the first mentioned putti in execution of a decree which they had obtained. On the 18th April, 1885, A sued C and D to enforce his right of pre-emption. Held, that though the coparcenery could not be said to have ceased to exist, or those who were coparceners be said to have become strangers to one another, yet, there being a finding that the puttis were separate, it was not necessary, in order to establish A's preferential right, that a partition by metes and bounds should be shewn to have taken place: but that a private partition, if full and final between the parties, would have the same effect as the most formal partition on the right of pre-emption, and that A's claim must, therefore, succeed. Held, also, that the suit was not barred by limitation, it being governed by either Art. 10, Sch. II of the Limitation Act (Act XV of 1877), plaintiff from the 5th May, 1884, the date on which he took possession of his share in the putti.

T a of his share in a should possession of his share, and lay the interest on the mortgage-money annually to the mortgagee, who, in the event of default in payment of the interest, was empowered to sue for actual possession of the share. On the 19th May, 1877, T's name was substituted for that of A in the proprietary registers in respect of the share. On the 8th February, 1878, G sued T and A to enforce his right of pre-emption in respect of the share, alleging that his cause of action arose on the 19th May, 1877, and that A, notwithstanding the mutation of names, was still in possession. T alleged that he had been in possession since the execution and registration of the deed of mortgage. Held that whether T had been in plenary possession of the share since the date of the deed, or whether he had only such constructive or partial possession of it as was involved in the receipt of interest on the mortgage-money, the plaintiff was equally bound to have sued within a year from the date of the deed, and was not entitled to reckon the year from the date on which possession by the mortgagee of the share was recognised by the revenue department, and the suit was therefore barred by art. 10, sch. II of Act XV of 1877.—2 Al. 237.

Held in a suit for pre-emption, where the property had been purchased by the mortgagee in possession, that the purchaser obtained physical possession of the property under the sale, not from the date of the sale-deed, but when the contract of sale became completed. Held, therefore, that the contract of sale having become completed on the payment of the purchase money, the suit being brought within one year from the date of such payment, was within time.—2 Al. 409.

Where a shareholder, if he desires to transfer his share, is bound to offer the transfer of it to his co-sharers before transferring it to a stranger, the right of pre-emption, in the case of a conditional sale, under which possession is not transferred, arises, not when such sale is made, but when the conditional sale becomes absolute. Under Art. 10, the period of limitation runs from the date of physical possession is taken of the whole of the property sold.—3 Al. 175.

This article does not apply to a suit to enforce a right of redemption in respect of a conditional sale of a share of an undivided mahal.—4 Al. 218. Also 5 Al. 187.

A share in an undivided zemindari mahal is not susceptible of "physical possession" in the sense of art. 10, sch. ii of Act XV of 1877. Limitation, therefore, in a suit to enforce a right of pre-emption in respect of such a share, runs from the date of the registration of the instrument of sale.—4 Al. 24.

In a suit to enforce a right of pre-emption in respect of a sale of property consisting in part of a share of an undivided mahal, which does not admit of a physical possession, limitation will run from the date of registration of the instrument of sale.—4 Al. 179.

A conditional vendee, who was in possession, applied under Regulation XVII of 1806 to have the conditional sale made absolute. The year of grace expired in July 1878. In November, 1871, the conditional vendee sued for possession of the property by virtue of the conditional sale having become absolute. He obtained a decree, in execution of which he obtained, on the 30th April, 1879, formal possession of the property according to law. On the 23rd March, 1880, a suit was brought against him, to enforce a right of pre-emption in respect of the property. Held that the period of limitation for such suit ran, not from the expiration of the year of grace, but from the 30th April, 1879, the date the conditional vendee obtained possession in execution of his decree.—4 Al. 291.

The wajib-ul-arz of a village provided that the right of pre-emption should accrue “not only in respect of absolute sales, but also on regard to conditional sales, mortgages, and thika leases.” Held that under its terms the right of pre-emption accrued on a mortgage by conditional sale becoming absolute.—5 Al. 187.

The pre-emptor, in the case of a mortgage by conditional sale which has become absolute, is bound to pay, as the price of the property, the entire amount due on such mortgage at the time it became absolute.—5 Al. 187.

The wajib-ul-arz of three villages which originally formed a single mahal gave a right of pre-emption to co-sharers in case of transfers of shares to strangers. Afterwards the shares in these villages were made the subject of a perfect partition and divided into separate mahals. Subsequently, by two deeds of sale executed on the 13th January, 1884, and registered on the 17th January, 1884, some of the original co-sharers sold to strangers their shares in all three villages. At the time of the sale, the shares in two of the villages were in possession of the vendees under a possessory mortgage, the amount due upon which was set off against the purchase-money. The share in the third village was, at the time of the sale, in possession of another of the original co-sharers under a possessory mortgage. On the 17th January, 1885, this last mentioned co-sharer brought a suit against the vendors and the vendees to enforce his right of pre-emption under the wajib-ul-arz in respect of the shares sold in three villages. Held that, notwithstanding the partition of the village into separate mahals, the existing wajib-ul-arz at the time of partition must be presumed to subsist and govern the separate mahals until it was shown that a new one had been made. Gokal Singh v. Mannu Lal referred to. Held that in the case of the sale of an equity redemption by the mortgagor to the mortgagee in possession, which has the effect of extinguishing the right to redeem by a merger of the two estates in the mortgagee, it cannot properly be said that any property is sold which is capable of “physical possession” within the meaning of art. 10, sch. ii, of the Limitation Act. In a statute, such as the law of limitation, which contemplates notice express or implied to the party to be affected by some act done by another in respect of which a right accrues to him to impeach it, and as to which time begins to run against him, quoad his remedy, from a particular point, the word “physical” implies some corporeal or preceptible act done which of itself conveys or ought to convey to the mind of a person notice that his right has been prejudiced. An equity of redemption is not susceptible of possession of this description under a sale by which it is transferred, and a pre-emptor impeaching such a sale has one year from the date of registration of the instrument of sale within which to bring his suit. Held, therefore, that the period of limitation began to run from the date of the registration of the deed of sale, and that the suit was within time. Held also that the Court below was wrong in holding that the plaintiff, by reason of his having omitted in a suit previously brought against him for redemption of his mortgage, and dismissed for want of jurisdiction, to set up in defence any right of pre-emption or to express any desire to purchase, was equitably estopped by in the sale from asserting his pre-emptive right.—9 Al. 234.

11.—By a person against whom an order is passed under section 280, 281, 282, or 335 of the Code of Civil Procedure* to establish his right to, or to the present possession of, the property comprised in the order.	One year	The date of the order.
--	----------	------------------------

Notes.

A refusal to postpone sale is not an order contemplated by the Article. A suit to recover lands sold in execution brought more than a year after refusal to postpone sale, is not barred.—15 B. L. R., 228.

Where property was released on objection of the defendant, and the plaintiff sued to establish his right more than a year after the order, it was held that the plaintiff was a person against whom the order was given.—4 M. H. C. R., 472.

Where plaintiff's property is sold without any objection being preferred, the period prescribed will be the ordinary limitation for a suit to recover.—3 Bom. H. C. R., (A. C.) 139; B. L. R. Sup. Vol. 638.

The period of limitation is to be computed from the date on which the order is signed, and not from that on which it is verbally made.—10 Bom. H. C. R., 19.

A person whose goods are illegally sold under an execution does not lose his right to them, although he may have claimed them unsuccessfully in the execution proceedings. He is not bound to sue to establish his right, but may follow them into the hands of the purchaser or of any other person, and sue for them or their value without reference to any thing which has taken place in the execution proceedings, except that he must bring his suit within one year from the time when the adverse order in the execution proceedings was made.—7 Cal. 608. See also 3 Al. 504.

Certain property, which the plaintiff alleged to belong to her, was sold in execution of a decree obtained by the purchaser of the property at the auction sale against a third party. The plaintiff put in a claim to the property, which was rejected on the 6th of September 1873. The plaintiff, on the 10th of January 1878, brought a suit to recover possession of the property sold. Held that the suit was not barred under this Article.—9 Cal. 43.

The defendants attached certain property, which the plaintiffs alleged belonged to them. The plaintiffs preferred a claim to the property under sec. 246 of Act VIII of 1859: this claim was disallowed on the 15th August 1877. In June 1878, the plaintiffs brought a suit to establish their title to the property attached, and for confirmation of possession. Pending this suit, the principal defendant died, and the plaintiffs applied for an order to substitute certain persons as defendants. The Court thereupon directed the issue of a summons on the defendants proposed by the plaintiffs to appear and defend the suit; but the plaintiffs failing to pay the costs of the service of this summons, the suit was dismissed on the 14th March 1879. On the 14th March 1880, the plaintiffs again brought a suit to establish their title to the same property, and for confirmation of possession. Held, that the order of the 15th August 1877 not being an order passed under sec. 283 of Act X of 1877, art. 11 of sched. ii. of Act XV of 1877 did not apply, but that art. 120 of sched. ii. was applicable; and that as the first suit had not been dismissed upon the merits, the plaintiffs were entitled to maintain the second suit.—9 Cal. 163.

Where in consequence of an adverse order passed under the provisions of Civil Procedure Code, a suit is instituted to establish the plaintiff's right to certain property, and for possession, such suit is not governed by this Article, but by the general limitation of 12 years.—9 Cal. 230.

The order contemplated by sec. 281 of the Code of Civil Procedure is an order made after investigation into the facts of the case, and it is only when the order is made after such investigation that the limitation of one year is applicable to a subsequent suit under sec. 283 of the Civil Procedure Code.—11 Cal. 108 & 12 Cal. 453.

A decree-holder, against whom the release of property, attached in execution of his decree, has been ordered, after investigation under sec. 280 of the Code of Civil Procedure, is limited by Art. 11 of sch. II of Act XV of 1877, the Indian Limitation Act, to one year within which to institute a suit to establish that the property is that of his judgment-debtor. The extent to which the "investigation" required by sec. 280 should be carried depends upon the circumstances of the case.—15 Cal. 521. See also 17 Cal. 260.

A judgment-debtor is not necessarily a party against whom an order is made within the meaning of that term as sued in sec. 283 of the Code of Civil Procedure so as to preclude his instituting a suit after the lapse of one year from the date of such order (the period of limitation prescribed by Art. 11, Sch. II, Act XV of 1877) to establish his title to and to recover possession of the property which has been the subject-matter of a claim in execution proceedings, and in respect of which an order has been made under sec. 280 of the Code. G, in execution of a decree, attached certain immoveable property belonging to the plaintiff, whereupon B preferred a claim, and on the 10th March 1881 got the attachment removed. On the 20th July 1881, B sold the property to K. In 1882 G instituted a suit against B to set aside the order of the 10th March 1881, and to have it declared that the property was liable to attachment as belonging to the plaintiff. K was not made a party to that suit, and it was eventually compromised between G and B, the plaintiff's title being admitted. G thereupon again attached the property, and was met by a claim preferred by K, which was allowed on the 15th August 1883. G then brought another suit against K to obtain relief similar to that claimed in his suit against B, but his suit was dismissed on the 17th February, 1885. On the 25th September 1885 the plaintiff instituted a suit against G, B and K, to obtain a declaration of his title to and to recover possession of the property. It was contended that the suit was barred by limitation, being governed by Art. 11, sch. II of Act XV of 1877, inasmuch as it was brought more than one year after the date of the order of the 15th August 1883. Held, that the suit was not such a suit as was contemplated by sec. 283 of the Code of Civil Procedure, not being one to establish any right which was the subject-matter of the litigation in the execution proceedings, and that consequently the provision of Art. 11 did not apply to it, and it was not barred by limitation.—15 Cal. 674.

Where an application was made under sec. 332 of the Code of Civil Procedure for possession of property and rejected, and the applicant brought a suit to recover the property more than one year, subsequent to the order rejecting the application:—Held, that the suit was not barred either by art. 11 or art. 13.—8 Madr. 82.

An order rejecting a claim petition under sec. 335 of the Civil Procedure Code, not being appealed against within one year acquires the force of a decree—Velayuthan v. Lakshmana, I. L. R., 8 Madr. 506, followed.—10 Madr. 357.

A in execution of a decree against B attached a house. C intervened and the property was released from attachment. A then brought a suit against B and C to establish the title of B to the house and obtained a decree. B was ex-parte throughout. In an appeal by C a decree was passed by consent of A and C reversing the decree appealed against. B now sued C and another, more than a year from the date of the order removing the attachment, to obtain a declaration of title to the house:—Held, that since there was nothing to show that the order releasing the attachment was an order against the plaintiff the suit was not barred by limitation.—13 Madr. 366.

The investigation prescribed in the Civil Procedure Code must taken place, otherwise the article will not apply. But the claimant may bring his suit within the ordinary period of limitation applicable to his suit.—4 Bom. 21. See also 3 M. H. C. R., 139.

An order passed under the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code, unless overruled in a regular suit brought within the statutory period, is binding on all persons who are parties to it, and is conclusive.—1 Al. 381.

See I. L. R., 8 Bom. 411; 12 Madr. 434, noted under sec. 14.

12.—To set aside any of the following sales:—

(a) sale in execution of a decree of a Civil Court;

(b) sale in pursuance of a decree or order of a Collector or other officer of Revenue;

(c) sale for arrears of Government revenue, or for any demand recoverable as such arrears;

(d) sale of a patni taluq sold for current arrears of rent.

Explanation—In this clause 'patni' includes any intermediate tenure saleable for current arrears of rent.

When the sale is confirmed, or would otherwise have become final and conclusive had no such suit been brought.

Notes.

Where a suit is to recover what has been taken in excess under color of sale the article does not apply.—Al. H. C. R., 1875, p. 288.

'Order' in (b) means order of the nature of a decree or made by the Collector or other Revenue Officer in his judicial capacity. Where sale was not made on such order, the article would not apply.—8 Bom. H. C. R., (A. C.) 219.

M sold to S her rights under a decree for mesne profits which she had obtained against A and two other persons, and S thereupon proceeded to execute the decree against A's property, and that property was sold in execution of the decree purchased by S and was purchased by B: but in a suit brought by A for a declaration that S was not the real purchaser, the Court found that S had in fact purchased the decree benami for A's two joint-debtors, and that consequently he had no right to execute it against the property of A. In a suit brought by A against B in 1874 for the purpose of recovering the property, held that the purchase of the benefit of the decree by A's joint-debtors, although it had the legal effect of satisfying the judgment-debt, did not affect the decree itself. The decree was not void, but only voidable, and the sale under it binding on A. The suit, therefore, was in effect a suit to set aside a sale under a decree, and inasmuch as it was not brought within one year from the date of the sale, was barred.—I. L. R., 2 Cal. 98.

When one of several co-sharers fraudulently continued to have an estate brought to sale for arrears under Act XI of 1859 and purchased it in the benami of his son, and another co-sharer aggrieved by the sale sued to have the property reconveyed, held that the article did not apply.—3 Cal. 300.

A suit to set aside a sale for arrears of Government revenue must be brought within one year from the date when the sale becomes final and collusive.—8 Cal. 329.

V having brought lands from A, whose husband (deceased) acquired than at a Court sale, sued S in ejectment in 1879. S pleaded limitation on the ground that B (her deceased husband) had purchased the lands in question at a Court sale in 1876. Held, that as A was no party to the decrees or the execution proceeding under which B purchased, it was not necessary for V to set aside the sale to B in this suit.—4 Madr. 178.

The article does not apply to suits in which the plaintiff was not a party to, and not bound by the sale sought to be set aside.—5 Madr. 54.

Where lands had been sold for alleged arrears of revenue and brought in for Government, but the sale had not been registered under sec. 38 of Madras Act II of 1864, held that a suit brought to set aside the sale after one year from the date thereof against bona fide purchaser for value from Government, was barred by limitation.—6 Madr. 148.

The land of D was improperly sold, in execution of a decree of a Civil Court obtained against S, for arrears of revenue, by the assignee of the revenue of the lands of D and S:—Held, in a suit brought by D to recover her land from the purchaser at the Court sale, that the suit, not having been brought within one year from the date of the confirmation of the sale, was barred by Article 12 of Schedule II of the Indian Limitation Act, 1877.—7 Madr. 258.

Under Act XII of 1879, Form 149 of Schedule IV of the Code of Civil Procedure provided that sixty days should elapse between a sale in execution of a decree and its confirmation. A sale having been confirmed before the expiry of sixty days:—Held, that the sale was not rendered inoperative, and that its effect was not postponed by reason of the provision in ~~Form No. 149~~. Where a suit was brought to recover money from the defendant, who was the karnavan of a Malabar tarwad, and it was not alleged in the plaint that the defendant was sued as karnavan or that the debt was binding on the tarwad: Held, that a sale of tarwad property in execution of the decree was not binding on the members of the tarwad and therefore that Article 12 of Schedule II of the Indian Limitation Act, 1877, did not apply to a suit brought by other members of the tarwad to recover the land sold in execution of the decree.—7 Madr. 512.

In 1866 V (the father of the plaintiff) sued his brother H and G (one of the two sons of H and defendant No. 1) to establish his right to a third share of the management of certain lands granted for the maintenance of a Hindu temple. In that suit V obtained a decree that he should have the exclusive management every third year, but was ordered to pay costs. To enforce payment of these costs, H in execution of the decree attached the third share of V in the management of the land. The share was accordingly sold by auction in January, 1870, to a Marwadi, who afterwards in May 1870, re-sold it to the appellant T (another son of H and defendant No. 2). V died in 1876. In 1879 the plaintiff sued G and the appellant (the two sons of H) for his share of the management. It was contended for the defence that as the execution sale of January, 1870, was not set aside within a year, the right to treat it as void by the plaintiff was barred by article 12 of Schedule II of Act XV of 1877.—7 Bom. 188.

On the 17th November, 1877, a certain piece of land described in the proclamation of sale as "Survey No. 294, Pot No. 3, measuring $23\frac{3}{4}$ gunthas" the boundaries of which were also set forth, was sold by auction in execution of a decree obtained by the first defendant against defendants Nos. 2, 3 and 4, and purchased by the plaintiff. The boundaries, as stated, really included another piece of land, Survey No. 294, Pot No. 4, which comprised 3 acres $2\frac{1}{2}$ gunthas. This latter piece of land was put up for sale on the following day, and was purchased by defendant No. 5. On 28th November, 1877, the plaintiff applied to the Court to have the sale set aside and his money returned, unless he was put in possession of all the land included in the boundaries mentioned in the proclamation; but his application was refused, and the sale was confirmed on 20th July, 1878. The plaintiff on the 3rd July, 1881, brought the present suit, praying that he might be put into possession of the land as described in the certificate of sale, which was identical with the proclamations, and included Pot No. 4, or that the first defendant might be ordered to pay him the amount of his purchase-money, with interest. Both the lower Courts rejected the plaintiff's claim. On appeal to the High Court:—Held, confirming the decree of the Court below, that suit, regarded as one to set aside the sale, was barred by sch. II, art. 12 cl. (a). It was contended in the Courts below and on second appeal that the plaintiff was, at any rate, entitled to damages or compensation because of the land as defined by the survey number proving to be of less acreage than that included in the boundaries, and the lower Court had held such a claim as barred also under article 36:—Held, that the suit, regarded as one for compensation, was not barred, as three years had not elapsed since the the confirmation of the sale when the suit was brought—article 36 applying only to suits for compensation for tortious acts independent of contract. But the claim for compensation was not maintainable, as the property offered for sale was sufficiently identified by the description as "Survey No. 294, Pot No. 3, containing $24\frac{3}{4}$ gunthas," and the statement of boundaries, so far as it was inaccurate, might be properly regarded as "falsa demonstratio."—10 Bom. 214.

The plaintiff, as the nearest heir of one Odhav Tulja, who died intestate in 1873, sued to set aside a sale of certain immoveable property belonging to the estate of the deceased, which had been sold on the 3rd November, 1875, in execution of a money-decree obtained by the defendant, Jagannath, against Bai Vakhat, the widow of Odhav Tulja. Bai Vakhat had married a second time in 1876, and her second husband was the brother of the purchaser at the execution sale. The plaintiff alleged that the decree had been fraudulently and collusively obtained on a bond in Odhav Tulja's name, which had been forged by Jagannath. The suit was brought on the 28th January, 1878, and the plaintiff prayed that the sale might be cancelled, having been made in order to defeat his rights; that he might be declared the heir of Odhav Tulja; and that possession of the property, with mesne profits, might be awarded to him. The lower Courts dismissed the suit, holding that it was barred by article 12, clause (a) of Schedule II of the Limitation Act XV of 1877. On appeal to the High Court held, that article 12 did not apply for, although the plaintiff sued to set aside a sale held in execution of a decree, he did so, not as one who would have been bound by the sale if the suit had not been brought, but in order to obtain a declaration that he was not bound by it, the decree under which the sale held having been fraudulent and collusive; so that the cause of action could only have arisen when he became aware of the fraud. Article 95 of Schedule II of Act XV of 1877 applied to the present suit, which was, therefore, in time. A widow of deceased Hindu represents the estate of the reversioner for some purposes; but it is her duty not only to represent the estate, but to protect it. When a suit is brought on the ground that the widow did not in a former suit protect the interests of the person who was to take after her death, but collusively suffered judgment against herself and sale of her husband's property in execution, then if such person on that ground treats the sale as inoperative, and seeks for a declaration that it is not binding on him, article 12, clause (a) of Schedule II of the Limitation Act XV of 1877 does not apply to the suit. Held, also, on the evidence, that the suit against Bai Vakhat was collusive, and that the sale in execution was in fraud of the plaintiff's right. He was, therefore, entitled to a decree declaring that he was not bound by the sale of the 3rd November, 1875 in the suit brought by Jagannath against Bai Vakhat as representative of her deceased husband, Odhav Tulja. Whether the plaintiff was entitled, also, to immediate possession of the property in the suit, depended on the question whether Bai Vakhat's life-estate was defeasible on her remarriage. She belonged to a caste in which remarriage was permitted. The following issue was accordingly sent to the lower Court for trial:—"Whether, by the usage of the country, the rights and interests of Bai Vakhat by inheritance in her deceased husband's property, the subject of this suit, ceased and determined on remarriage in 1876, as if she had then died."—11 Bom. 119.

In 1870 a creditor of the plaintiff's father brought a suit (No. 573 of 1870) against the plaintiff, and obtained a money decree against him. The plaintiff, was then a minor, and his estate was administered by the Collector of Ratnagiri. In this suit he was represented by his mother and guardian. At the sale held in 1871, in execution of the decree, the property in question was purchased by the defendant, who obtained possession in 1876. In 1879 the plaintiff attained majority, and in 1882 he brought the present suit to recover the property from the defendant. The lower Courts, regarding the suit as one to set aside the sale to the defendant, held that it was barred by limitation under article 12 of Schedule II of the Limitation Act XV of 1877. On appeal by the plaintiff to the High Court held, that article 12 of the Limitation Act XV of 1877 did not apply, and that the suit was not barred.

That article applies only to cases in which the plaintiff would be bound by the sale if he did not succeed in getting it set aside; but in the present case the plaintiff was not bound by the proceedings in suit No. 573 of 1870, as he had not been properly represented as required by sec. 2 of Act XX of 1864.—11 Bom. 130.

Articles 12 and 14 of Schedule II of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877) refer to orders and proceedings of a public functionary, to which by law is given a particular effect in favour of one person or against another, subject, in the regular course, to a further judicial proceeding having for its object to quash them or set them aside.

When an order does not fall within the authority of an official who makes it, it is legally a nullity, and, therefore, need not be set aside.—11 Bom. 429.

The plaintiff's land was sold by the revenue authorities for arrears of assessment due to the inamdar. The plaintiff applied to the Mamlatdar to have the sale set aside on the ground of fraud on the part of the inamdar, but his application was rejected; and the sale was confirmed in July, 1879. The auction-purchaser was thereupon put in possession. In 1886 the plaintiff sued to recover possession of the land in question. Held, that the suit, having been brought more than one year after the date of the sale, was barred by article 12, clauses (b) and (c) of Schedule II of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877). The sale was one in pursuance of an order of the Collector or other officer of revenue, and if not for arrears of Government revenue was at any rate a sale for arrears of rent recoverable as arrears of revenue. The plaintiff, as occupant of the land, was bound by the sale, unless and until it was reversed, and the title of the purchaser at the sale is a perfectly good title until the sale is set aside in due course of law. Held, also, that the plaintiff's allegation, that the sale took place in consequence of the fraud of the inamdar, would make, not article 144, but article 95, applicable to the case.—13 Bom. 221.

P obtained a decree against M in April 1874, in execution of which property belonging to the latter was sold in 1874, 1875 and 1876. In March 1880 this decree was reversed by the Court of last appeal. In February 1881 M sued to set aside the sales of his property in execution of the decree, and for possession of the property. Held that, both under No. 14, sch. ii. of the Limitation Act, 1871, and No. 12, sch. ii. of the Limitation Act, 1877, the suit was barred by Limitation.—5 Al. 573.

The plaintiff, alleging that certain immoveable property belonging to him had been sold in execution of a decree as the property of another, sued the purchaser to have the sale set aside, and to recover possession of the property. Held, that the suit was one for possession of immoveable property to which the period of limitation of twelve years was applicable.—5 Al. 614.

See I. L. R., 11 Cal. 287, noted under sec. 4; 12 Madr. 168, noted under sec. 6.

Notes.

Held that a suit to set aside a sale by certificated guardians, with the sanction of the District Judge, under sec. 18 of Act XL of 1858, is not a suit to set aside an order of a Civil Court. But it falls under art. 144.—I. L. R., 5 Cal. 363.

In execution of a decree against six persons the plaintiffs had certain property brought to sale, the proceeds of which were brought into Court. The defendants, who held five separate decrees against some of the persons against whom the plaintiff's decree was obtained, applied to have the amount in Court rateably distributed; and in accordance with an order of the Court, dated 13th September 1880, this was done, the proceeds being distributed in proportion to the amounts of the decrees. In a suit brought on 24th August 1883 against the defendants, on the allegation that the plaintiffs were entitled to the whole of the proceeds, or in the alternative for distribution on a different principle:—Held the suit was one to set aside the order, and not having been brought within one year from the date of the order was barred by limitation under Art. 13, Ram Kishan v. Bhawani Das, I. L. R., 1 Al. 333, distinguished.—12 Cal. 159.

See I. L. R., 15 Bom. 438, noted under sec. 295 of the Civil Procedure Code.

14.—To set aside any act or order of an officer of Government in his official capacity, not herein otherwise expressly provided for. | One year ... | The Date of the act or order.

Notes.

The Civil Court has no power to set aside an order passed under the Land Registration Act, and when a prayer for such relief is contained in a plaint which also asks for a declaration of right and title to, and confirmation of possession in property, such prayer may be treated as mere surplusage. When, therefore, a plaint was filed containing separate prayers for the above relief, and when the original Court held that the main object of the suit was to have certain orders made by the revenue authorities set aside, and that the suit was accordingly governed by Art. 14, sch. II of the Limitation Act, and passed a decree dismissing the suit as having been brought more than a year after the date of such orders, held, that such a decree was wrong; that the suit being one simply for the declaration of the plaintiffs' title in respect of the property in dispute, Art. 14 had no application to the case.—I. L. R., 10 Cal. 525.

Plaintiff in 1877 claimed possession of land which had been demarcated as poromboke in 1860, and of which a patta had been granted to defendant in 1875 by the Collector. Held that this suit was not governed by the Article, as it was not necessarily a suit to set aside an official act.—2 Madr. 306.

On the 1st September, 1882, the Collector of Ahmednagar by an order under sec. 37 of the Land Revenue Code (Bombay Act V of 1879) granted a piece of open ground to N. for building purposes. On the 31st March, 1888, S. brought a suit against N. and the Secretary of State for India in Council to recover possession of the ground, and to set aside the Collector's order. Held, that the suit not being brought within one year from the date of the Collector's order, as provided for in sec. 135 of the Land Revenue Code, it was time barred.—15 Bom. 424.

Notes.

On the 26th of July, 1878, A complained to the Magistrate that B committed theft of his grain. The Magistrate, of his own motion, attached the grain on the 10th of August, 1878, pending inquiry into the complaint, then proceeded with the inquiry, and dismissed the complaint, but continued the attachment pending the decision of the Civil Court to which he referred the parties. A in 1879 brought a suit against B to establish his title to the grain, which was finally rejected on the 21st of June 1880, and B recovered his grain on the 30th of September 1880, but in a damaged condition. B on the 13th of November, 1881, sued A for damages for wrongful detention of his grain, and its consequent deterioration in quality and value. Held that the date of the complaint was the date of the wrong, and limitation ran from that date, or, at the latest, from the date of the attachment, and that B's suit was, therefore, barred, whether the period applicable was one year under article 23, or two years under article 36 of schedule II of Act XV of 1877.—l. L. R., 7 Bom. 427.

Notes.

In 1861 B granted a lease of his zemindari to A for 30 years, A undertaking to pay off all debts then due by B. B died in 1882 and his successor sued A and obtained a decree that on payment Rs. 1,20,000 A should give up possession of the zemindari. This sum having been paid into Court, A lost possession of the zemindari. On January 5th, 1875, A had mortgaged the whole zemindari, which consisted of 22 villages, to M to secure a loan of Rs. 1,00,000 borrowed by A to pay off the debts of B which A undertook to pay in 1861. On June 27th, 1879, A being indebted to M in the sum of Rs. 1,78,900 paid M Rs. 1,00,000 and undertook to pay the balance out of the income of the estate, M releasing the 22 villages from the mortgage of January 5th, 1875. On June 28th, 1879, A executed a mortgage of the 22 villages to L to secure repayment of Rs. 1,30,000. Of this sum, Rs. 1,00,000 was borrowed to pay M and Rs. 30,000 was a prior debt due by A to L. Of the Rs. 1,00,000 paid to M, Rs. 2,7000 was specially applied to discharge so much of the charge created by the mortgage of January 5th, 1875. On January 30th, 1875, A borrowed from S Rs. 43,000 and mortgaged to her 10 of the 22 villages of the zemindari. In 1885 S sued L to have her debt declared a first charge on the money paid into Court by the zamindari. The Subordinate Judge held that L had a prior claim on the fund and dismissed the suit:—Held on appeal, following the principle of decision in Gokaldas v. Puranmal (L. R., 11 I.A., 126) that L was entitled to a first charge on the fund to the extent of Rs. 27,000 which had been applied to pay off the mortgage of January 5th, 1875. In the suit brought by B's successor against S to recover the zemindari L was a party, but S was not. In that suit L obtained an order for payment of Rs. 1,00,000 of the sum paid into Court by the zemindar. It was contended by L that S could have no decree for repayment of this sum, and (2) that if the money was wrongly paid under the order of the Court to L it was wrongfully seized within the meaning of art. 29 of sch. II of the Indian Limitation Act:—Held, that the Court had power to order a refund and that art. 29 of sch. II of the Limitation Act was not applicable.—I. L. R., 11 Madr. 345.

A suit to recover money wrongly taken under a decree is a suit for compensation to which the limitation of one year under art. 29 of Act XV of 1877, sch. II, applies. The same limitation under the same provision applies if to the above demand a claim be added to recover damages for the loss of gain or interest upon the money.—8 Bom. 17.

Part V.—Two years.

30.—Against a carrier for compensation for losing or injuring goods.	Two years	When the loss or injury occurs.
--	-----------	---------------------------------

Notes.

Where a plaintiff brings a suit for breach of contract for non-delivery of goods under a bill of lading, it is not open to the defendants, after having denied receipt of the goods, to set up, or for the Court, after finding that the goods had been shipped but not delivered, to assume, without evidence, that the goods were lost in order to bring the case within Art. 30. Per Garth O. J.—Semble, where a plaintiff sues for breach of contract and proves his case, the three years limitation would be applicable, although the defendants were to prove that the breach occurred in consequence of some wrongful act of theirs, to which the shorter limitation would apply. Mohansing Chawan v. Conder I. L. R., 7 Bom. 478, and British India Steam Navigation Co. v. Hajee Mahomed Esack, I. L. R., 3 Madr. 107 approved.—I. L. R., 12 Cal. 477.

Where a suit is brought against a Railway Company by the consignee of goods (not sent on sample or for approval) for compensation for non-delivery, the period of limitation is not two years (Article 30), but three years (Article 115, Schedule II of the Limitation Act, 1877), inasmuch as the consignor contracts with the company as agent for the consignee, and the property in the goods passes to the consignee on delivery to the Company.—5 Madr. 388.

An action against a Railway Company for loss of goods, when there is no contract, is governed by this article.—3 Madr. 240. Also 3 Madr. 107.

563 bags of grain were made over to the defendants at Cawnpur and Nagpur for carriage to Sholapur. All that was proved was that the defendants delivered to the plaintiff, the owner of the grain, 512 bags only, having previously obtained from his agent receipts for the full number as arrived at Sholapur. In a suit by the plaintiff to recover the price of the bags not delivered, brought after more than two, but within three years of the time when the rest of the goods were delivered, the defendants claimed that the suit was barred by the provisions of article 30 of Schedule II of Act XV of 1877, has not having been brought within two years of the time "when the loss occurred." Held that mere non-delivery of the bags was no proof of their loss, the onus of proving which as an affirmative fact lay on the defendants before they could claim the benefit of the special limitation of two years provided in article 30 of Schedule II of Act XV of 1877; and that the suit, therefore, was in time.—7 Bom. 478.

31.—Against a carrier for compensation for delay in delivering goods.	Two years	When the goods ought to be delivered.
32.—Against one who, having a right to use property for specific purposes, perverts it to other purposes.	Ditto.	When the perversion first becomes known to the person injured thereby.

Note.

A suit by a zamindar for removal of trees planted in a certain waste land of his village by persons who have no right to plant them, is governed by art. 120, schedule ii of the Limitation Act, and not by art. 32, schedule ii of the Act. Where a defendant having a right to use property for a specified purpose perverts it to other purposes, and a suit has to be instituted for any relief in respect of any injurious consequences arising from such perversion, such a suit will be governed by art. 32, schedule ii of the Limitation Act. *Gangadhar v. recovery of a wife or for the restitution of conjugal rights, though governed by articles 34 and 35 of Schedule II of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877), are not thereby taken out of the operation of sec. 23 of the Act.—16 Bom. 714.

The texts of the Hindu law relating to conjugal cohabitation and imposing restrictions upon the liberty of the wife, and placing her under the control of her husband, are not merely moral precepts, but rules of law. The rights and duties which they create may be enforced by either party against the other and not exclusively by the husband against the wife. The Civil Courts of British India, as occupying the position in respect of judicial functions formerly occupied in the system of Hindu Law by the king, have undoubtedly jurisdiction in respect of the enforcement of such rights and duties. The Civil Courts of British India can therefore properly entertain a suit between Hindus for the restitution of conjugal rights, or for the recovery of a wife who has deserted her husband. It is not necessary, as a condition precedent to such suits, the parties being Hindus, that there should be any demand by the plaintiff and refusal by the defendant. The provisions of arts. 34 and 35 of the second schedule of the Limitation Act cannot be taken as applicable to suits of this description. To hold that they did apply would be to introduce serious innovations into the personal law of the Hindus (and of the Muhammadans) which could not have been contemplated by a statute of the nature and scope of the Limitation Act. The limitation applicable to suits of the present nature is that of art. 120 of the second schedule, read with sec. 23 of the Limitation Act. Desertion by a wife of her husband is permitted by the Hindu Law under certain circumstances, but the insanity of the husband will not justify his desertion by the wife. In any case desertion does not terminate the relation of husband and wife. A suit for restitution of conjugal rights could in such case only be effectually met by establishing a plea of some matrimonial offence on the part of the complainant such as would entitle the defendant to a separation. Legal cruelty on the part of the complainant may be a ground for refusing restitution of conjugal rights, or for imposing terms on the complainant.—13 Al. 126.

35.—For the restitution of conjugal rights. Two years

When restitution is demanded, and is refused by the husband or wife, being of full age and sound mind.

Note.—See I. L. R., 13 Al. 126 and 16 Bom. 714, noted under art. 34.

Notes.

Suit for the value of crops carried away by the defendant while in possession under his decree afterwards reversed, does not fall under this Article, but under Art. 109.—I. L. R., 4 Cal. 625.

----------------------	-----------------------	---------------------------------------

Plaintiff sued on the 9th of February 1880 for compensation for loss of crops caused by the defendants' taking possession of his well in January 1877. The District Judge on appeal dismissed the suit on the ground that time began to run against the plaintiff from January 1877, and that the claim was barred by sec. 36, 37, 39 or 40 of Schedule II of the Limitation Act, 1877: Held that the plaintiff was entitled to sue for compensation for the trespass within three years from the date on which the defendants' possession ceased, and that the defendants were liable for any loss suffered within three years proceeding the date of the suit.—6 Madr. 176.

Plaintiff was the owner of a house mortgaged to defendants. On the 22nd August 1885 defendants sold the house by auction under a power of sale contained in the mortgage and gave possession to the purchaser. On the 2nd September 1887 plaintiff sued the defendants to recover the value of certain timber which was stored in the house and not mortgaged and which plaintiff alleged the defendants had taken possession of and converted to their own use. It was proved that the timber was in the house when defendants took possession from the plaintiff and defendants did not account for it:—Held, (1) that plaintiff was entitled to recover from the defendants the value of the timber, and (2) that the suit was not barred by art. 36 of sch. II of Indian Limitation Act, 1877.—11 Madr. 333.

A suit to recover damages for the loss of a ship caused by collision at sea is an action of tort founded upon the negligence of the defendant or his servants in the management of his vessel, and must be brought within two years under the provisions of article 36 of Schedule II of the Limitation Act XV of 1877. Article 49 of Schedule II of the Limitation Act XV of 1877 applies only to suits in respect of property in the hands of some other person, and not to suits in respect of property in the plaintiff's own possession, and the injury to property there mentioned, is limited to cases of injury to property while in the custody of some person other than the owner. From the provisions of articles 36 and 115 of Schedule ii. of the Limitation Act XV of 1877, the intention of the Act appears to be that not more than two years should be allowed for bringing a suit founded on tort, except in certain well-defined particular instances.—11 Bom. 133.

41.—To restrain waste.	Three years	When the waste begins.
42.—For compensation for injury caused by an injunction wrongfully obtained.	Ditto.	When the injunction ceases.
43.—Under the Indian Succession Act, 1865, Section 320 or 321, or under the Probate and Administration Act, 1881, sec. 139 or 140,* to compel a refund by a person to whom an executor or administrator has paid a legacy or distributed assets.	Ditto.	The date of the payment or distribution.
44.—By a ward who has attained majority, to set aside a sale by his guardian.	Ditto.	When the ward attains majority.

Notes.

K R died in 1844, leaving a widow O T and a minor son G D. In 1847 O T executed in favor of the defendant a mourasi izara of certain property, but it did not appear whether she so acted as guardian or mother of G D. G D died in 1855 before attaining majority, and, under an anumati patro executed by K R before his death, the plaintiff was adopted in 1858. O T died in 1861. In a suit brought by the plaintiff in 1873 to set aside the alienation by O T in 1847, held that, if the alienation was made by O T as guardian of G D, the suit was not barred, it having been brought within three years after the plaintiff attained his majority; if made by her as a Hindu widow, the suit was still not barred, the cause of action not arising until her death, when the plaintiff was a minor.—I. L. R., 4 Cal. 523.

The plaintiff sued to redeem certain land which he alleged had been mortgaged by his father in 1858 to one Bahirji, the grandfather of the first defendant. The defendants alleged that the mortgage was executed, not to Bahirji, but to the father of the second defendant, and that in 1863 the equity of redemption had been sold to the mortgagee by the widows of the mortgagor, the plaintiff being then a minor. The defendants contended that this suit was really to set aside the sale of 1863, and was barred by article 44 of the Limitation Act XV of 1877. The second defendant also pleaded adverse possession. The plaintiff contended that the second defendant and his father had possession of the land merely as the agents or trustees of the mortgagee. Held, that clause 44 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877) did not apply, and that the suit was not barred. The necessity of impugning the sale of 1863 to the second defendant arose from the second defendant's resisting the plaintiff's claim to redeem the mortgage. Held, also, that the second defendant, having entered into possession as mortgagee, could not afterwards set up an adverse possession as owner so as to defeat the plaintiff's right to redeem.—14 Bom. 279.

Notes.

In a suit brought by the plaintiff in 1880 to recover possession of certain lands from which his predecessor in title had been dispossessed, in which suit the Court of first instance found that the defendant had dispossessed the plaintiff's father in 1860, during the unexpired term of a lease granted by the plaintiff's father to a ticcadar, Held, that the preponderance of authority in India was in favour of the view that limitation ran from the date of the expiry of the ticca, and not from the time when the defendant had been held by the Court of first instance to have dispossessed the plaintiff's father.—I. L. R., 10 Cal. 577.

Where the proceeding of a Settlement officer was not an award under Reg. VII of 1822, he not having acted judicially as required by the Regulation, it was held that the suit was not barred by limitation under this Article.—3 Al. 738.

46.—By a party bound by such award to recover any property comprised therein.	Three years	The date of the final award or order in the case.
47.—By any person bound by an order respecting the possession of property made under the Code of Criminal Procedure, Chapter xii,* or the Bombay Mamlatdars' Courts Act, or by any one claiming under such person, to recover the property comprised in such order.	Ditto.	The date of the final order in the case.

Notes.

In a dispute between A and B concerning the possession of a certain taluq, the Criminal Court made an order under sec. 530 of the Code of Criminal Procedure retaining B in possession; and this order was, in a proceeding under secs. 295 and 296 of the Code of Criminal Procedure confirmed by the Court of Session. Held that a suit by A for the recovery of the land must be brought within three years from the date of the Magistrate's order, and not from the date of the order passed by the Court of Session. Art. 47 of sch. II, Act XV of 1877, refers to immoveable as well as moveable property.—I. L. R., 6 Cal. 709.

A zemindar on the 3rd May 1876 agreed to let lands on lease to A and his co-sharers, who on the zemindar's failure to carry out the terms of the agreement, brought a suit for specific performance and obtained a decree against him in 1879. The zemindar having neglected to perform the agreement, the Court in December 1881 made an order for the execution of a pottah, and directed that the pottah should take effect from the date of the original agreement. The pottah was executed on the 19th December 1881. In 1880 A instituted a proceeding under sec. 530 of the Criminal Procedure Code (X of 1872), which corresponds with sec. 145 of Act X of 1882; but the application was dismissed in December 1880, A having failed to establish possession. B, having purchased the interests of two of the co-sharers, instituted a suit on the 11th May 1888 against certain persons who had been let into possession by the zemindar, the other co-sharers being added as plaintiffs. Held, that Article 47, Schedule II, of the Limitation Act did not apply, no right to sue in ejectment being in existence in December 1880, the right with which A was clothed under the decree not having been perfected till December 1881 when the pottah was executed. Held further, that the suit was not barred under Art. 144, as limitation did not commence to run until the pottah had actually been executed. Article 47 of the Limitation Act contemplates a right to sue in ejectment being in existence at the time of the passing of an order under sec. 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.—19 Cal. 646.

A dispute having arisen between plaintiff and defendant as to the ownership of certain landed property, the Magistrate being informed of the dispute held an enquiry under the provisions of Chapter XXII, Act XXV of 1861, and finding himself unable to "determine who was in actual possession of the lands" placed them in charge of the Sub-Magistrate. Held that this was not an order respecting "the possession of property" but an attachment proceeding recorded because the Magistrate was unable to determine which party was in possession. The limitation of three years prescribed by this article was therefore inapplicable.—1 Madr. 309. See also Al. H. C. R., 1875, page 35.

the former order was cancelled and a certificate was granted to A. On the 19th of August 1873, B was directed to deliver up the property to C, who had purchased it from A. On the 22nd of March 1878, C instituted a suit to recover the property. Held, that the suit was barred under art. 49 of the Limitation Act.—I. L. R., 9 Cal. 79.

After the redemption of a mortgage, the title-deeds of the mortgage premises were left with the mortgagee, who refused to return them on demand made by the mortgagor. The mortgagor now sued to recover possession of them :—Held, the Limitation Act, sched. Where a final decree had been made for specific performance of an agreement of sale, held, that the suit was not time barred, as the right to possession of both the moveable and immoveable property accrued on the date of such final decree, as from the detainer's possession became unlawful.—5 Bom. 554.

Notes.

The manager of A, the proprietress of an indigo factory, on the 20th December 1869, paid into the kothi or bank of B, a banker, the sum of Rs. 1,200 to the credit of A, and from that time on wards sums of money were drawn by A's manager, out of B's bank, and applied to the purposes of A's factory; the balance, though generally against A, fluctuated, A's account being usually overdrawn, but there being sometimes a balance in her favour, created by payments made on her account into B's bank. The 2nd of July 1872 was the last occasion that any balance was due from B to A. Payments continued to be made on behalf of A into B's bank up to the 12th of June 1873, when a sum of Rs. 1083-8 was paid into her account, but, notwithstanding this payment, the balance of account was on that date against her. After the 12th of June 1873, B continued to make payments on behalf of A, and also to render monthly accounts in which he charged A with such payments, and also with the principal of, and interest upon, the balance due on previously rendered accounts. This continued till the month of January 1874, when B for the last time rendered a monthly account to A, the last item in which was a payment made on the 6th January 1874. On the 23rd December 1876, B instituted a suit against A to recover the balance of principal and interest due to him on the footing of the last account rendered by him to A. Held, that the account between A and B was not, and never had been, a mutual, open, and current account, and that the suit was, therefore, barred by limitation; and that the payments made by B on behalf of A within the period of limitation, even if authorised, did not have the effect of keeping alive his previous claim against her. Held also, that even if the dealings and transactions, between A and B could be so construed as to show that there had been at any time a mutual, open, and current account between them, that mutual relation terminated on the 2nd July 1872, or if not, then on the 12th June 1873, when the last payment was made on A's account into B's bank.—I. L. R., 5 Cal. 759.

The plaintiff deposited from time to time with the firm of the defendant, who carried on a banking business, various sums of money, the amounts deposited bearing interest, and at times certain sums being withdrawn by the plaintiff, and an account of the balance of principal and interest being struck at the end of each year and presented to the plaintiff. The date of the first deposit was not known, but it was some time previous to 1282 (1875). A demand was made for the whole amount of the principal and interest in Bhadro 1292 (August—September 1885). and the demand not having been complied with, a suit to recover the money was brought on the 8th March 1886. Held, that sec. 60 and not sec. 59 of the Limitation Act was applicable to the case; the cause of action therefore arose at the date of the demand and the suit was not barred. The dictum of WHITE, J., in the case of Ram Sukh Bhunjo v. Brohmoyi Dasi, 6 C. L. R., 470, that "the word 'deposit' in the Limitation Act as distinct from 'loan' points to cases

61. —For money payable to the plaintiff for money paid for the defendant.	Three years	When the money is paid.
--	-------------	-------------------------

Notes.

In the year 1867 the plaintiff, who was then living jointly with the defendant who was his brother, executed a bond to secure the re-payment of monies advanced to him, which monies were applied by him for the joint benefit of himself and the defendant. In the year 1868 the plaintiff executed another bond for the same purpose. In 1870 the plaintiff and defendant separated, and the lender, thereupon, sued the plaintiff upon the bond executed, in 1867, and obtained a decree. In 1874, the plaintiff executed a fresh bond in favour of the decree-holder, in order to avoid execution of the decree and to retire the bond of 1868. In 1877 (within three years from the date of the fresh bond), the plaintiff sued his brother to recover a moiety of the sum secured thereby,—held, that the date on which money was paid by the plaintiff for the defendant must have been before 1870, and that, therefore, the suit was barred.—I. L. R., 5 Cal. 321.

On the 29th May 1873 one T drew from the hands of a shroff a sum of money which had been deposited by him in the name and to the credit of a third person. On the death of such third person his heirs sued the shroff to recover the sum deposited, and on the 30th January 1878 obtained a decree, in satisfaction of which the shroff paid the decretal money into Court on the 15th January 1883. On the 5th February 1884 the shroff sued T the heirs of the third party and another person (who owned to having received sum of the money from T), to recover the sum he had been compelled to pay under the decree of 1878 :—Held, that the plaintiff's cause of action arose at the time when he actually paid down the money on the 15th January 1883, and that the suit therefore was not barred.—13 Cal. 155.

The plaintiff, a purchasing agent, sued the Secretary of State for India in Council to recover certain sums of money alleged to be due to him for the purchase of stores, etc., for the Second Cabul Campaign. This suit was brought more than three years after the termination of the plaintiff's agency and more than three years after the last supply made by him as purchasing agent, but within a few months after the final refusal of the Commissariat Department to pay him the amount claimed; held, that it was doubtful if art. 61 of the second schedule of the Limitation Act would apply, as against the Secretary of State for Council in India, but even if not the suit was barred by art. 115.—14 Cal. 256.

62.—For money payable by the defendant to the plaintiff for money received by the defendant for the plaintiff's use.	Three years	When the money is received.
--	-------------	-----------------------------

Notes.

The period of limitation for a suit to recover money deposited by the plaintiff with the defendant, upon the understanding that it will be returned in a certain event, should be calculated, not under art. 115, but under art. 62. Such period begins to run on the happening of the event.—I. L. R., 5 Cal. 830.

A, a Hindū widow, granted without legal necessity, a mokurari lease of certain mouzas, portion of her husband's estate, to B. During B's possession part of the lands comprised in the granted mouzas were taken up by Government, and the compensation money was lodged in the Collectorate. A having afterwards died, the next heirs of A's husband, on the 7th October 1871, sued B to recover possession of the mouzas, but not being aware of the facts, did not in that suit claim the compensation money lying in the Collectorate. While this suit was still pending, B, in March, 1872, drew the compensation-money out of the Collectorate. The heirs, after obtaining a decree against B for possession of the mouzas, on the 13th September 1875, instituted a fresh suit against him to recover the compensation money wrongfully drawn out by him from the Collectorate. Held that this art. did not apply, but that under art. 120 the suit was not barred.—5 Cal. 597.

Purchase money paid for a consideration which has wholly failed is money received for the use of the buyer, and a suit to recover back the money is thus governed by art. 62 of the 2nd Schedule to the Limitation Act. A purchased a share of joint property from a member of a Mitakshara family, but his suit to recover possession of it was dismissed on the ground that the sale having been made without the consent of the other coparceners was void under the law. A then brought a suit to recover back the purchase money by reason of failure of consideration. Held, that the failure of consideration, although it did not become apparent until the former suit was brought and failed, was a failure from the beginning, and time ran from the date when the purchase money was paid.—15 Cal. 51.

A sale, which a member of a joint-family (Mithila) had attempted to make, went off upon the objection made by other co-sharers, but not before the purchase-money had been paid. It might have been that the agreement for sale was not void from the beginning, but was only void upon objection being made; and if it was only voidable, the consideration did not fail at once at the time of the receipt of the purchase-money, so as to render it money had and received, to the use of the payer within the meaning of article 62 of schedule II of Act XV of 1877. But it failed, at all events, when the purchaser being opposed found himself unable to obtain possession. He would have had a right to sue at that time to recover his purchase-money upon a failure of consideration. And, therefore, the case peared to fall within article 97. It must fall either within that article or within article 62.—19 Cal. 123.

An inamdar, in a suit against his tenant, established his right to the money value of a fixed quantity of grain to be paid to him yearly by his tenant, and subsequently brought this suit to recover from his tenant the arrears of such payments for ten years at the market rate prevailing in the last month of each of those years. The defendants contended that arrears for only three years were recoverable under the Limitation Act (XV of 1877), and that the rates applicable to ascertain the amount were the Government auction rates. Held that the plaintiff's right would, under the Hindu law, be "nibandha", and would under that law rank for many purposes as immoveable property, but that a different principle applied to sums realized and become payable in the hands of him who realized them to the intended recipient. The interest or jural relation of right of such recipient was nibandha, but the particular sum due to him was either money received to his use, or payable on a contract, and money which would remain due, though the grant constituting the nibandha were cancelled and had ceased to exist after the realization of the money. It being thus distinguishable from the original right which produced it, the claim in this suit was barred by limitation after three years.—8 Bom. 234.

Where a person having previously obtained a decree declaratory of his title sues his co-sharer in a deshpande vatan, who is bound by the decree to recover arrears, his suit is a suit for money had and received by the defendant to the plaintiff's use; and the period of limitation is three years as prescribed by article. 62. Non-participation of profits by the plaintiff for more than twelve years from the date of the previous decree does not extinguish his title and he can recover arrears for three years preceding the date of his suit to recover them.—9 Bom. 111.

Certain immoveable property was attached in execution of a money-decree held by A, dated the 22nd August, 1871, on the 1st April 1872. The same property was subsequently attached in execution of a decree held by B, dated the 19th August, 1871, which directed the sale of the property in satisfaction of a charge declared thereby. The property was sold in execution of this decree. The Munsif directed that the proceeds of the sale should be paid to B. A, who claimed them on the ground that he had first attached the property, appealed against this order. The Judge, declaring that A was entitled to the proceeds, reversed the Munsif's order. A then obtained an order from the Munsif directing B to refund the money, which he did, and it was paid to A. B sued A to recover the money by establishment of his prior right to the same, and for the cancelment of the Judge's order, alleging that the same was made without jurisdiction. Held (by a majority of the Full Bench) that the suit was one for money received by the defendant for the plaintiff's use.—1 Al. 333.

The holder of a decree for money which had been sold in the execution of a decree against him sued the auction-purchaser, the sale having been set aside for the money he had recovered under the decree. Held that the suit was not one of damages but for money payable by the defendant to the plaintiff for money received by the defendant for the plaintiff's use.—2 Al. 354.

C, the proprietor of a certain "mohalla," sued K, who had purchased a house situated in the mohalla at a sale in the execution of his own decree, for one-fourth of the purchase-money, founding his claim upon an ancient custom obtaining in the mohalla, under which the proprietor thereof received one-fourth of the purchase-money of a house situated therein, whether sold privately or in the execution of a decree. Held that the period of limitation applicable to such a suit was that prescribed by article 120, and not by art. 62 or 132.—2 Al. 358.

63.—For money payable for interest upon money due from the defendant to the plaintiff.	Three years	When the interest becomes due.
--	-------------	--------------------------------

Note.

The plaintiff in this suit deposited certain money with the defendants, a firm of bankers, on the 30th August, 1863. On the 2nd January, 1867, an account was stated and a balance found to be due to the plaintiff consisting of the original deposit, and interest on the same, calculated at 6 per cent. per annum. On the 11th February, 1876, the defendants having proposed to pay the plaintiff such balance, together with interest on the original deposit, from the 2nd January 1867 to the 15th February 1876, calculated at 4 per cent. per annum the plaintiff demanded that she should paid such interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum. The defendant refused to accede to this demand on the 14th February, 1876, and on the 17th of the same month they paid the plaintiff such balance with such interest, calculated at the rate they proposed, viz, 4 per cent. On the 11th February, 1879, the plaintiff brought the present suit against the defendants, in which she claimed the sum representing the difference between such interest calculated at 4 per cent. and 6 per cent., alleging that her cause of action arose on the 14th February, 1876. Held that the suit could not be regarded as either one for money deposited under an agreement that it should be payable on demand, but must be regarded as one for a balance of money payable for interest, for money due.—I. L. R., 3 Al. 328.

64.—For money payable to the plaintiff for money found to be due from the defendant to the plaintiff on accounts stated between them.	Three years	When the accounts are stated in writing signed by the defendant or his agent duly authorized in this behalf, unless where the debt is, by a simultaneous agreement in writing signed as aforesaid, made payable at a future time, and then when that time arrives.
---	-------------	--

Notes.

The period of limitation for suits on accounts stated is the same whether the accounts are stated verbally or in writing, and is governed by art. 64.—7 Cal. 256.

A being the holder of a decree against B, B, on the 7th July, 1875, entered into a kistibandi, and filed it in Court, setting out that he would pay off the debt due under the decree by certain instalments, and that, in default of payment of one instalment, the whole amount of the debt might be recovered by taking out execution of a decree. By the kistibandi certain immoveable property was pledged to secure the debt, but the kistibandi was not registered. B failed to pay the first instalment, which fell due on the 14th August, 1875; and A on the 19th June 1878, applied for execution of his decree, but the application was refused, and A referred to a regular suit. In a suit brought by A on the 29th January, 1879, against B for the whole debt due under the decree: Held that, inasmuch as no appeal had been preferred against the order disallowing execution, A was bound by that decision; but that the suit might be taken to be one for an account stated in writing with an agreement for payment at a certain stated period of time as regards the instalments due, which were not barred by limitation; the suit as regards the instalments which had not fallen due being premature, and those previous to the 29th January, 1876, being barred by article 64 of the Limitation Act.—8 Cal. 912.

The plaintiffs claimed on a statement of account in writing dated the 18th October 1877: this statement of account was not signed by the defendant. The date of the institution of the suit was the 30th September 1880. A Division Bench of the High Court held on the appeal on the case coming up before them on the 18th October 1877, that the suit was not based upon any express contract made between the parties; and that the transaction which took place on that date did not constitute an implied contract, and that, therefore, these contentions were not open to the plaintiffs, but the Court referred the question whether the plaintiffs' claim, so far as it was based on the statement of account on the 18th October 1877, fell within article 64 of sch. II of Act XV of 1877. Held, by MITTER, PRINSEP, and McDONELL, JJ.—That the question referred was a matter of limitation arising in the case which had not been decided in the order of reference, and without such a decision the case could not be disposed of, and as to that point, that the statement of account not being signed by the defendant, did not fall within the terms of article 64 of sch. II of Act XV of 1877. Held, by GARTH, C. J., and TOTTENHAM, J.—That the Division Bench having held that the transaction afforded no basis for a suit had disposed of the case, and the question referred was therefore immaterial.—10 Cal. 284.

The plaintiffs and the defendants entered into a partnership agreement, which was registered, whereby it was, among other things, provided expressly that each partner should bear the loss, if any, incurred in the business in proportion to his share. The plaintiffs, alleging that loss had been incurred and borne by them, sued to recover the defendants' share of the loss:—Held, that since the partnership agreement was registered, the suit was governed by Limitation Act, sched. II, art. 116.—14 Madr. 465.

A simultaneous verbal agreement cannot extend the ordinary period of limitation for a suit on an account stated. An agreement to extend the period must be in writing, and signed by the defendant or his agent.—8 Bom. 542.

Money due on an account stated which would, as such, have been barred in three years from the statement, under Act XV of 1877, sch. II. art. 64, becomes, for purposes of limitation, a debt of another character, when, it having been the subject of an arrangement whereby it was to be retained by the debtor as part of the consideration upon a proposed sale of land, that arrangement failed, the sale not being specifically enforceable, and so declared by decree. In contemplation of a sale of land by the debtor to the creditor, it was agreed that the book-debt should be retained by the former in satisfaction of part of the price, but the parties failing to agree as to certain other terms, a suit, brought by the intending vendor for specific performance, was dismissed, on the ground that no effectual agreement had been made. Held that this decree brought about a new state of things, and imposed a new obligation on the debtor, who could no longer allege that he was absolved by the creditors being entitled to the land instead of the money. He became bound to pay that which he had retained in payment of his land, the date of the decree giving the date of the failure of an existing consideration, within the meaning of art. 97. The matter might also be regarded as falling under sec. 65 of the Contract Act, IX of 1872, under which, when the agreement was decreed ineffectual, the debtor, having previously received an advantage under it, was made liable "to restore" that advantage, or "to make compensation for it."—11 Al. 47.

See I. L. R., 3 Al. 148, noted under sec. 2; 5 Cal. 759, noted under Art. 59; 7 Bom. 414, noted under sec. 19.

65. —For compensation for breach of a promise to do anything at a specified time, or upon the happening of a specified contingency.	Three years	When the time specified arrives or the contingency happens.
--	-------------	---

Notes.

The vendor of a certain land agreed in the conveyance, which was registered, that, in case the land actually conveyed proved to be less than that purporting to be conveyed, he should make a refund to the purchaser of the purchase-money in proportion to the value of the quantity of land deficient. The land actually conveyed having proved to be less than that purporting to be conveyed, and the vendor having failed to make a refund of the purchase-money in proportion to the value of the quantity of land deficient, the purchaser sued the vendor for the value of the quantity of land deficient. Held by SPANKIE, J., that the suit was one of the nature described in art. 65, to which, the agreement being in writing registered, the limitation provided by art. 116 was applicable. Held by OLDFIELD, J., that art. 116 was applicable to the suit.—I. L. R., 3 Al. 712.

See I. L. R., 5 Cal. 830, noted under Art. 62.

66. —On a single bond where a day is specified for payment.	Three years	The day so specified.
--	-------------	-----------------------

Notes.

Where a bond, by its terms, stated that money advanced should be repaid on the 30th Pous 1283 B. S., and it so happened that, in the year 1283 the month of Pous consisted only of 29 days (the 29th Pous, answering to the 12th January 1877) held that a suit brought on the 13th January 1880 was in time. See sec. 25.—I. L. R., 239.

The defendant executed a bond, which provided that interest should be payable monthly, and that the principal should become due within 6 months from the date of execution ; the bond contained a clause to the effect that if the interest should not be paid according to the terms of the bond, or if the creditor should feel any doubts as to his being able to realize the principal, he should not be bound to wait until the expiry of the six months in order to bring his suit, but should be at liberty to realize the principal and interest in any manner he might choose. Held that a suit on the bond brought within 3 years from the date of the day specified therein for payment was not barred by limitation, as the case fell under this article and not under 65.—5 Cal. 21.

The defendant, having borrowed money from the plaintiff, gave him a bond, dated the 4th July, 1872, for the payment of such money, with interest, within two years, or on a certain contingencies contemplated and defined in such bond. Such bond did not specify a day for payment. It was duly registered. On the 30th June, 1880, the plaintiff sued the defendant, stating in his plaint that he had lent the defendant such money ; that it was payable on the 4th July, 1874 ; that on that day he had demanded payment ; that the cause of action arose on that day, as the defendant did not pay ; and that he claimed such money accordingly. The plaint did not make any mention of such bond. Held that the suit was not one which fell within the scope of article 66, but one to which art. 116 was applicable, and it might proceed on the plaint without any amendment thereof.—3 Al. 276. See also 6 Cal. 94 ; 6 Bom. 95.

B and S executed a bond, dated the 15th August, 1874, in favor of plaintiff, in consideration of a loan of Rs. 15,000, agreeing to repay the same within 3 years from the above date, and covenanting to pay every half-year interest on the same, at the rate of 8 per cent. per annum, and also to pay the premia on certain policies of insurance made over to plaintiff by way of collateral security. In the event of failure in payment on due date of interest and premia, the obligors made themselves liable to pay the full amount of the bond debt. The bond also contained the stipulation that it should be optional with the obligee to claim, and, if necessary, to sue for the full amount of the bond on the failure of any one or more stipulated payment, or on the full expiry of the period of three years. Held that the bond was not an instalment bond, and, therefore, article 75 was inapplicable. Held by STUART, C. J., that limitation commenced after the expiration of the 3 years allowed by the bond for payment of the debt. Held by SPANKIE, J., that article 80 applied to the suit, and limitation would run from the date when the bond became due ; that, according to the stipulation in the bond, it would become due on failure in payment on date of both the interest and premia, and not on failure in payment of either of them only. Held, further, that arts. 67 and 68 were not applicable to the suit.—2 Al. 322.

On the 3rd February, 1871, the defendants, having borrowed Rs. 1,000 from the plaintiffs, executed in favour of the latter an instrument in which they mortgaged, by way of conditional sale, certain immoveable property as security for the loan, and in which it was provided that they should pay certain interest on such sum annually and should pay such sum on the expiration of five years from the date of such instrument, and in the event of failure in these respects that the plaintiffs might apply for foreclosure. On the 18th January, 1879, the plaintiffs sued the defendants for the balance of such sum and interest, waiving their claim on such property, and suing for such balance as a simple debt, as such instrument was not registered. Held, following Sheo Dial v. Prag Dat Misr, I. L. R., 3 Al. 229, that, inasmuch as such instrument involved a personal obligation of the defendants distinct and severable from the obligation in respect of such property such instrument, notwithstanding it was not registered, was admissible as evidence in support of the claim to enforce the money-obligation; and it was also admissible in proof of the fact that the debt was not exigible from the defendants until on and after the expiration of five years from the date of the loan. Held also that the limitation period in No. 66, sch. ii of Act XV of 1877, was not applicable, as the claim of the plaintiffs was not based on a single bond, that is to say a bill or written engagement for the payment of money, without a penalty.—4 Al. 3.

A bond containing a stipulation “that if the principal and interest is not paid up at the stipulated period, then the obligee will be at liberty to recover the whole of his money, together with the interest fixed, by instituting a suit from my moveable and immoveable property, my own ‘milk,’ does not create a mortgage upon any property of the obligor. To such a bond art. 66 of sch. ii. of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877) is applicable; but where the instrument is registered, art. 116 may be applied to a suit for failure to pay the bond debt.—14 Al. 162.

See I. L. R., 6 Cal. 94, noted under art. 116.

67.—On a single bond where no such day is specified.	Three years	The date of executing the bond.
--	-------------	---------------------------------

Note.—See I. L. R., 2 Al. 322, noted under Art. 66.

68.—On a bond subject to a condition.	Three years	When the condition is broken.
69.—On a bill of exchange or promissory note payable at a fixed time after date.	Ditto.	When the bill or note falls due.
70.—On a bill of exchange payable at sight, or after sight, but not at a fixed time.	Ditto.	When the bill is presented.
71.—On a bill of exchange accepted payable at a particular place.	Ditto.	When the bill is presented at that place.
72.—On a bill of exchange or promissory note payable at a fixed time after sight or after demand.	Three years	When the fixed time expires.
73.—On a bill of exchange or promissory note payable on demand and not accompanied by any writing restraining or postponing the right to sue.	Ditto.	The date of the bill or note.

Notes.

Held, that a suit, brought in March 1881 upon a promissory note, dated the 12th of September 1875, payable at any time within six years upon demand was not barred by limitation, being governed not by article 120 of Schedule II of the Indian Limitation Act of 1877.—I. L. R., 6 Madr. 290.

See I. L. R., 2 Madr. 113, noted under sec. 2.

| 75.—On a promissory note or bond payable by instalments, which provides that, if default be made in payment of one instalment, the whole shall be due. | Three years | When the first default is made, unless where the payee or obligee waives the benefit of the provision, and then when fresh default is made in respect of which there is no such waiver. |
|--|-------------|---|

Notes.

When default was made in payment of several instalments, but subsequently payments were made and accepted on account of them, it was held that limitation ran from the date of first default of which there was no waiver.—Al. H. C. R., 1874, p. 88.

Waiver must be an intentional act with knowledge, and it is incumbent on any party insisting on a verbal agreement in substitution of a written contract to show that both the parties understood the substituted agreement.—L. J. 36 Exch., 404.

A entered into a verbal agreement with B to pay a debt due in monthly instalments, B reserving to himself the right to claim payment of the whole sum due on default of three successive instalments. A failed to pay any instalment. Four years after the first instalment was due, B sued A to recover the sum due on the various instalments not barred by limitation. Held, that B was not bound to sue for the whole amount due directly on A's failure to pay the three successive instalments. Semble.—Art. 75, Sched. II of Act XV of 1877, does not apply according to its strict terms to a suit brought upon a verbal contract.—I. L. R., 3 Cal. 619.

When a debt is made payable by instalments, with a proviso that, on default of payment of any one instalment, the whole debt, or so much of it as may then remain unpaid, shall become due, limitation runs from the time of the first default. A subsequent acceptance of the instalment in arrear operates as a waiver, and suspends the operation of the law of limitation; but merely allowing the default to pass unnoticed does not.—5 Cal. 97.

The mere fact that a creditor has done nothing to enforce a condition in an instrument, under which the whole debt became due on failure in the payment of one instalment, is no evidence of waiver within the meaning of art. 75 of the Limitation Act.—14 Cal. 397.

A bond, payable by instalments, provided that if default was made in paying one instalment the whole debt should become due. The amount of the third instalment was paid five days after it became due. The Lower Court found that this payment was accepted by the obligee as a payment made on account or in satisfaction of the third instalment, and not as a mere part payment on reduction of the whole debt, and that the circumstances indicated an intention to waive the forfeiture though there was no express waiver: Held, that the acceptance of the amount of the third in-instalment constituted a waiver within meaning of art. 75, of sch. II of the Limitation Act, 1877.—12 Madr. 192.

Where a bond is payable by instalments, and expressly stipulates for the payment of the whole debt on failure in the payment of any instalment, the law of limitation runs on the whole amount of the bond against the obligee from the day on which the obligor first makes default in the payment of any instalment, unless the obligee waive the default, and afterwards from the day on which any fresh default is made in respect of which there is no waiver. The obligee may waive the default under Acts IX of 1871 and XV of 1877, sch. II, art. 75, but the Courts have no authority to compel him to waive it. Neither Act VIII of 1859, sec. 194, nor Act X of 1877, sec 210, confers any authority on the Courts to relieve a contracting party from such an express stipulation in a bond payable by instalments as to the consequence of default in punctual payment of the instalments. A debt being presently due, an agreement to pay it by instalments, with a stipulation that, on default, the creditor may demand immediate payment of the whole balance due with interest, is not to be relieved against in equity. Such a stipulation is not in the nature of a penalty, inasmuch as its object is only to secure payment in a particular manner. The defendant executed to the plaintiff a bond payable by instalments, and expressly stipulating for the payment of the whole amount on failure to pay any instalment on the day fixed. He paid the first instalment, but made default in paying the second, which fell due on the 3rd August, 1878. On the 20th August plaintiff sued to recover the whole balance due on the bond. Defendant admitted the bond, but pleaded tender of the amount of the second instalment soon after the due date, and prayed for payment by instalments without any interest. The first Court passed a decree in the plaintiff's favour for the amount claimed with costs, but ordered defendant to pay Rs. 100 and the costs at once, and the balance by yearly instalments of Rs. 100 each, with interest at 6 per cent. till payment. The District Judge, in appeal, affirmed the decree, with a slight variation as to interest, which he directed the defendant to pay on over-due instalments only. Held, by the High Court on second appeal, that neither of the lower Courts had jurisdiction, without the consent of the parties, to substitute, for the contract made by them, terms which the Court preferred. Held also that plaintiff was entitled to sue on the day after that on which the default was made, viz., on the day after that fixed for the payment of the instalment, and that the Subordinate Judge had no power to rule the contrary.—4 Bom. 96.

The mere acceptance by the obligee of a bond payable by instalment, which provides that in case of failure to pay one or more instalments the whole amount of the bond due shall become payable, of instalments after default, does not constitute a "waiver" of the obligee's right to enforce such provision. In the case of such a bond the cause of action arises on the first default, and limitation runs from the date of such default.—2 Al. 857.

L obtained decree against U, dated the 24th September, 1867, for possession of a certain estate subject to this provisions, viz., that if U paid in cash into the treasury of the Court, year by year, for L's maintenance, so long as she might live, an allowance of Rs. 15 per mensem, in three instalments of Rs. 60 each, the decree for possession should not be executed, but if default were made in payment of three such instalments, L should be entitled to delivery of possession of such estate. The first default was made on the 18th January, 1874, but L waived the benefit of the provision. A fresh default was made, and on the 23rd January, 1880, L applied for possession of such estate. Held that the provisions of column 3, art. 75, sch. ii. of Act XV of 1877, were not applicable to this case, but art. 179 (6) of that schedule contained the law which must govern it; and the date upon which such decree become capable of execution for possession being the 18th January, 1874, the date of the first complete default, the application of 23rd January, 1880, was barred by limitation.—I. L. R., 4 Al. 83.

78.—By the payee against the drawer of a bill of exchange which has been dishonoured by non-acceptance.	Ditto.	The date of the refusal to accept.

80.—Suit on a bill of exchange, promissory note or bond not herein expressly provided for.	Ditto.	When the bill, note or bond becomes payable.

Notes.

The defendant executed, in favour of plaintiff, a bond hypothecating certain moveable properties. The bond was not registered. Possession of the moveable properties had not been given to plaintiff. The suit was brought more than three years, but within six years, from the date fixed in the bond for repayment of the loan. It was contended for the defence that the suit was barred by limitation and that the article applicable to the case was art. 80 or art. 115 of the Limitation Act. For the plaintiff it was argued that a suit on a bond hypothecating moveable properties not being otherwise provided for, the suit fell within art. 120, whereby a period of six years is provided. Held, that the suit is governed by art. 80 of the Act. "The power to bring the moveable property to sale is an incident in the nature of an accessory to the right to recover the debt, and, if that right becomes incapable of being enforced owing to the lapse of three years, the power to sell the security must likewise cease to be capable of being exercised. In the absence of a special provision applicable to a suit brought to enforce the sale of the security we must hold that the period of limitation is three years and that the suit is governed by art. 80."—I. L. R., 11 Madr. 153.

| 82. —By a surety against a co-surety. | Three years | When the surety pays anything in excess of his own share. |
| 83. —Upon any other contract to indemnify. | Ditto. | When the plaintiff is actually damaged. |

Notes.

Where defendant executed a bond of indemnity in case of the misbehaviour of a third party, who subsequently embezzled, it was held that the date of embezzlement was the date when the plaintiff was damaged.—12 Bom H. C. R., 238.

In 1864 a lease of a house was granted to A for a term of 10 years. The lease contained a covenant to repair. A died, and B, his administrator, assigned the lease to another, and it ultimately became vested in the plaintiff. In 1872 the plaintiff assigned the lease to the defendants, "under and subject to the covenants" therein contained. The defendants failed to repair, and after the term had expired, C, the representative of the lessor, sued B for arrears of rent and damages for non-repair. B defended the suit, but C obtained a decree against him for Rs. 6,167-3 and costs, amounting in all to Rs. 8,328-3. His own costs amounted to Rs. 1,491-1. In 1876 B paid C the Rs. 8,328-3. In 1877 B sued the plaintiff for the amount which he had been compelled to pay C, and for the amount of his own costs. The plaintiff gave notice to the defendants to intervene and defend, if they desired; but they did not reply, and the plaintiff consented to a decree for Rs. 6,932-12-11 with costs. Thereupon the plaintiff instituted the present suit to recover from the defendants the sum recovered from him by B, together with his own costs of defence. Held that the suit was not barred under art. 83, as the time when the plaintiff was actually damaged was when B recovered against him.—I. L. R., 5 Cal. 811.

|---|-------------|---|

Notes.

The termination of the suit means the date when judgment is given.—I. L. R., 7 Bom. 518.

A solicitor was retained in July 1871 to execute a decree. In November 1871 a prohibitory order was made in the cause, after which the solicitor did nothing more in the matter. In June 1872 the decree-holder and judgment-debtor settled the matters in dispute between them without the knowledge of the solicitor, but this compromise was not made through, or certified to, the Court which passed the decree. In a suit brought in December 1875 by the solicitor against the decree-holder to recover the amount of his bill of costs, held that the plaintiff's claim was not barred, because there was no discontinuance by the solicitor of the business which he was conducting for the defendant, nor was that business terminated. The compromise between the defendant and her judgment-debtor cannot be recognized by the Court and therefore the Court cannot hold that that com-

Notes.

There must be cross-demands, the striking of the balance between which constitutes a new consideration for the promise on the part of the person against whom the balance is found to pay it.—9 Bom. H. C. R., 429.

The article 85 is intended to apply to cases where an account has been going on between two parties, and balances have been struck from time to time, showing the amount due from one of such parties to the other; and the suit to which that article is intended to apply is a suit brought by one of those parties against the other for the balance found to be due on that account. A creditor who does not openly assent to an amount acknowledged by his debtor to be due to him, is nevertheless entitled to take advantage of such acknowledgment so long as it remains uncontradicted and unexplained by his debtor. See sec. 19.—I. L. R., 6 Cal. 447.

A employed B as his agent. B alone kept written debit and credit accounts. A sued B for a balance due on the account between them:—Held, that the debit and credit account showed reciprocal demands between plaintiff and defendants, and that the account was a mutual open and current account within the meaning of Limitation Act, 1877, sch. II. art. 85.—10 Madr. 199.

From the month of September, 1873, until the month of May, 1874, the plaintiffs at Bombay and the defendant at Karachi had dealings with one another. It was the practice for the defendant at Karachi to draw hundis upon the plaintiffs at Bombay; which the plaintiffs duly accepted and paid at Bombay; and, in order to put the plaintiffs in funds, the defendant was in the habit of drawing hundis upon other firms in Bombay in favour of the plaintiffs, the amount of which hundis the plaintiffs realised from time to time at Bombay. Until the 8th January, 1874, the balance of the account was sometimes in favour of the plaintiffs and sometimes in favour of the defendants. After that date the balance of the account was always in favour of the plaintiffs, who continued to make advances up to the 10th May 1874. The last payment made by the defendant was on the 27th April, 1874. The last advance made by the plaintiffs was on the 10th May, 1874. On the 10th May, 1874, the total balance due by the defendant was Rs. 8,514 12 2. The plaintiffs calculated interest on this sum up to the 9th April, 1877, and on the 19th April, 1877, filed the plaint in this suit to recover the said amount. The defendant pleaded limitation. The plaintiffs contended that the account between them and the defendant was a mutual account, and that, under clause 87 of Schedule II of the Limitation Act, XV of 1877, the period of limitation dated from the day of the last advance made by them to the defendant, viz., 10th May 1874. Held on the authority of Ghaseeram v. Manohar Doss, that the account between the plaintiffs and the defendant was a mutual, current and upon account within the meaning of clause 87 and that the suit was not barred. Literally construed, clause 87, would apply only to those cases in which both parties have in the course of their dealings made actual demands on one another. The more reasonable and more probable intention of the framers of the clause appears to have been that it should apply to cases where the course of business has been of such a nature as to give rise to reciprocal demands between the parties; in other words, where the dealings between the parties are such that sometimes the balance may be in favour of one party and sometimes of the other.—6 Bom. 134. -

In the year 1857, A died, leaving a son, the plaintiff B, and the defendants C and D, his widows, surviving him. C took possession of all A's property. The plaintiff B was the son of D, and shortly after A's death, D gave birth to another son, the plaintiff E. In 1865 D instituted a suit against C, and B and E, alleging that A had left a will. In this suit, C claimed to be the heiress of A. No decree was made in the suit, which was compromised. In November, 1877, B and E entered into possession of a shop, which had belonged to their father, and which had been managed, during their minority, by the defendant C. In 1879 the plaintiffs instituted the present suit, claiming to recover from C the property of A come to her hands. Held that, so far as the immoveable property was concerned, the case fell either under art. 120 or art. 144; and as to the moveable property, under art. 89 or 90.—I. L. R., 5 Cal. 692.

ployed is contained in a duly registered instrument. In a suit for compensation for breach of a contract in writing and registered, whether such compensation be for a liquidated or unliquidated sum, the limitation applicable is six years as prescribed by art. 116.—12 Cal. 357.

Where an agent for the sale of goods receives the price thereof, the agency does not terminate, with reference to secs. 201 and 218 of the Contract Act (IX of 1872), until he has paid the price to the principal: and a demand made by the principal for an account of the price is made "during the continuance of the agency" within the meaning of sch. ii, art. 89 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877): and a suit by the principal to recover the price is therefore within time if brought within three years from the date of such demand. The agency does not terminate immediately on the sale of the goods. It does not terminate at the time when the plaintiff obtained knowledge of the defendant's breach of duty.—12 Al. 541.

A Hindu family being heavily oppressed with debts, ancestral and otherwise, the two elder brothers of the family, for themselves and as guardians of their minor brother, under Act XL 1858, applied to and obtained from the District Judge an order, under sec. 18 of the Act, for the sale of several portions of the ancestral estate, and sold the same under registered, deeds signed by the Judge. Within twelve years after the registration the adopted son of the minor brother brought several suits against the purchasers to set aside the sales and recover back his share of the property, alleging that the two elder brothers had made the sale fraudulently and illegally to satisfy personal debts of their own. Held, that a suit of this nature is not a suit "to set aside an order of a Civil Court" under art. 15, sched. ii. of Act IX of 1871 (art. 13 of Act XV of 1877); nor is it a suit "to cancel or set aside an instrument not otherwise provided for" under art. 92 (91 of Act XV of 1877), but that it is governed by art. 145 (144 of Act XV of 1877).—I. L. R., 5 Cal. 363.

In a suit instituted in 1884 by a husband and wife to have a deed, granting land, which was executed by the husband in 1872, set aside on the ground that it had been obtained from the latter by fraud and undue influence, the facts relied upon were known to the co-plaintiff husband from the date of the deed. Although in another suit a sale by the husband, effected in 1879, was set aside in 1882, on the ground of his having been unduly influenced, he was not at the time of the previous transaction, nor for some years after it, mentally incompetent or unable to allow that knowledge to operate on his mind. Held that, therefore, the suit, falling within sec. 91 of Schedule II of Act XV of 1877, was not maintainable by either of the plaintiffs.—15 Cal. 58.

One D died in 1849, leaving an ikrarnamah or will. His widows entered into possession of his property, and the survivor died on the 23rd April 1886. The predecessors in estate of the plaintiffs brought a suit to set aside the ikrarnamah, which suit was dismissed in 1864, on the ground that they had no cause of action during the lifetime of the surviving widow. On the 29th June 1889 the plaintiffs, as the heirs of D after the death of the surviving widow, instituted a suit to recover possession of the property of D from the defendants, who claimed to have come into possession thereof under the ikrarnamah upon the death of the widow. Held, that the suit was governed by the limitation of three years for a suit to set aside an instrument, and not by the general limitation prescribed for suits to recover immoveable property, as after the widow's death the parties in possession were those claiming under the ikrarnamah, who could not be displaced except by setting it aside. Raghubar Dyal Sahu v. Bhikya Lal-Miseer approved. Jagadamba Chaodhrani v. Dakhina Mohum Roy Chaodhri & Janki Kunwar v. Ajit Singh referred to.—19 Cal. 629.

The period of limitation for suits to declare title is six years from the date when the right accrued, under Indian Limitation Act, 1877, sch. II, art. 120; and this period is not affected by art. 91, though the effect of the declaration is to set aside an instrument as against the plaintiff.—10 Madr. 213.

On 23rd March 1878 plaintiff executed to defendant a document purporting to be a deed of gift. In 1886 plaintiff sued to cancel the document alleging that defendant on 11th May 1881 had agreed to execute a release but had not done so: that suit was dismissed for non-payment of duty due under the Court Fees Act. The plaintiff now sued in 1887 for a declaration that the document "was executed for nominal purposes and was not intended to take effect":—Held, (1) that since the cause of action in the suits of 1886 and 1887 were not the same, the claim in the latter suit was not res judicata; (2) that the suit was not barred by limitation.—13 Madr. 44.

Articles 91, 92, and 93 of schedule II of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877) apply only to suits brought expressly to cancel, set aside, or declare the forgery of, an instrument; but they do not apply to suits where substantial relief is prayed, and where the cancellation or declaration is merely ancillary and not necessary to the granting of such relief.—16 Bom. 186.

K, to whom B had given a usufructuary mortgage of certain land, promising to put him in possession, sued B for the mortgage-money, B having failed to put him in possession. The suit was instituted on the 22nd November, 1875. On the 25th of the same month K, learning that B was about to dispose of his property, caused a notice to issue to him directing him not to transfer any of his property. This notice was served on B on the 29th November. On the 1st December, 1875, B transferred certain land to T by way of sale. K's suit was dismissed by the lower Courts, but the High Court, on the 7th August, 1876, gave him a decree. Certain property belonging to B was sold in execution of this decree, but the sale-proceeds were not sufficient to satisfy the amount due on the decree. Kheret-upon, on the 1st July, 1879, sued T to cancel the conveyance to him by B on the ground that it was fraudulent and without consideration. Held that the words in No. 91, sch. ii. Act XV of 1877, "when the facts entitling the plaintiff to have the instrument cancelled or set aside became known to him," must be construed to mean "when, having knowledge of such facts, a cause of action has accrued to him, and he is in a position to maintain a suit," and consequently the period of limitation for K's suit began to run, not merely when he had knowledge of the fraudulent character of the conveyance to T, but when, having such knowledge, it had become apparent to him that there was no other property than that conveyed to T available for the realization of the unsatisfied balance of his decree, and the suit was within time.—3 Al. 394.

The plaintiff sued to set aside a mortgage by conditional sale of certain immoveable property belonging to him, made on his behalf during his minority, and for possession of the property. Held that the suit was one described in No. 142, sch. ii. Limitation Act, 1877, and not in No. 91 of that sch.—5 Al. 490.

The plaintiffs sued for possession of certain immoveable property, "by avoidance of a spurious deed of gift" executed by one N, deceased, in favour of the defendant. H, one, of the plaintiffs, joined in the suit under an agreement with the other plaintiffs that he should defray the costs of the suit from the Court of first instance up to the Privy Council, and that he should then become proprietor of one-half of the property in suit and be entitled to half the costs. Per STRAIGHT, J.—That the suit was governed by No. 144, and not No. 91, sch. ii. of the Limitation Act of 1877. Per STUART, C. J.—That the suit was governed by No. 91, and not No. 144, sch. ii. of that Act. Sikher Chund v. Dulputty Singh, I. L. R., 5 Cal. 363, distinguished.—5 Al. 76.

The plaintiff, alleging that he was the proprietor of certain land, that defendant No. 2 had wrongfully and fraudulently mortgaged it to defendant No. 1, and that defendant No. 1 had applied for foreclosure of the mortgage, and notice of foreclosure had issued, claimed "that, the mortgage-deed being set aside, the land be protected from the illegal foreclosure by cancelment of the foreclosure proceedings." Held that the suit was not strictly one for the cancelment or setting aside of an instrument to which the limitation in No. 91, sch. ii. of the Limitation Act, 1877, would apply, (which relates to suits of the nature of those referred to in sec. 39 of the Specific Relief Act), but rather one for a declaratory decree.—5 Al. 322.

One of the heirs of a deceased Muhammadan sued for her share under the Muhammadan Law of the estate of the deceased, and to set aside a gift of his estate by the deceased, as invalid under that law, by reason that possession of the property transferred by the gift had not been delivered by the donor to the donee. Held that, because the suit was not brought within three years from the date of the gift, it did not necessarily follow that the suit was barred by art. 91 of the Limitation Act, 1877, inasmuch as the plaintiffs title to impeach the gift could only accrue from the moment when, by receipt of possession, the gift had become operative by law.—6 Al. 207.

The plaintiff in a suit claimed possession of villages said in the plaint to be "detailed below." No details of the villages were given in the plaint itself, but a separate paper containing a list of villages was filed with the plaint. The plaintiff obtained a decree for possession of "all the villages claimed," but there was no indication in the decree what those villages were. Held that the Court executing the decree was not justified in reading the contents of the list of villages attached to the plaint into the decree, and awarding the decree-holder possession of the villages named in such list. S. A. No. 310 of 1882, decided the 11th August, 1882, followed.—6 Al. 30.

A Muhammadan who in October, 1875, executed a deed of gift of his property, under which possession was taken by the donees, died in June, 1885, never having taken any steps to have the deed of gift set aside. In February, 1886, a suit was brought by his nephew, claiming a share in the donor's estate by right of inheritance, and by having it declared that the deed was procured from the donor by fraud and undue influence. It was found that the plaintiff was aware of the existence of the deed soon after its execution, and that if there were any facts entitling him to have it cancelled, those facts were known to him more than three years before the institution of the suit. Held that the plaintiff had, during the donor's lifetime, no reversionary or vested interest in the estate, but a mere possibility of inheritance, and consequently the donor, when he executed the deed, had full disposing power over his property, and the right which, at his death, accrued to the plaintiff, came to the latter affected by the donor's acts and dispositions; and that as a suit by the donor to set aside the deed would, at the time of his death, be barred by art. 91 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877), such a suit was also barred against the plaintiff who claimed through him, the cancelment of the deed being a substantial and necessary incident of the claim, and the necessity which rested upon the plaintiff for obtaining such cancelment before he could dislodge the donees not being obviated by his choosing to call the suit one for possession of immoveable property. Abdul Wahid Khan v. Nuran Bibee and Jagadamba Chaodhrain v. Dakhina Mohun referred to.—11 Al. 456.

Notes.

In a suit in which the plaintiff had obtained a decree and the defendant had appealed to her Majesty in Council, a third party applied to be added as a respondent, on the ground that, by registered deed, the plaintiff had conveyed to him a share of the property decreed. The defendant objected that the deed was a forgery, but an order was made that the applicant should be joined as a respondent, without deciding whether the deed was or was not genuine, and "without prejudice," in the words of the order, "to any action or proceeding by the defendant." Held, that the setting up the deed and insisting upon it for this purpose constituted "an attempt to enforce" it, and that a suit brought, more than three years after the making of that order, by the appellant against the party so joined as a respondent, to have the deed set aside as being false and fabricated was barred by limitation.—I. L. R., 8 Cal. 178.

See I. L. R., 19 Cal. 629, noted under art. 91.

94. —For property which the plaintiff has conveyed while insane.	Three years	When the plaintiff is restored to sanity, and has knowledge of the conveyance.
95. —To set aside a decree obtained by fraud, or for other relief on the ground of fraud.	Ditto.	When the fraud becomes known to the party wronged.

Notes.

Art. 95 was not intended to apply to suits for possession of immovable property when fraud is merely a part of the Machinery by which the defendant has kept the plaintiff out of possession. That article has reference to cases where a party has been fraudulently induced to enter into some transaction, execute some deed, or do some other act, and desires to be relieved from the consequences of such act.—I. L. R., 3 Cal. 504.

Certain of the grantees of lands, granted for the maintenance of the grantees and the support of a mosque and other religious purposes, sued for the removal of the superintendant of the property from his office. The parties to this suit entered into a compromise, which made certain arrangements for the management of the property, and a decree was made in accordance with the compromise. The grantees who were not parties to this suit then sued the grantees who were to set aside the compromise and decree on the ground of fraud. Held that the suit fell within the terms of No. 95, sch. ii. of the Limitation Act, 1877, and there was nothing about it which made the exemption of sec. 10 of that Act applicable to it.—5 Al. 294.

Certain members of a joint Hindu family partitioned the family property among them in such a way as to give one member of the family, who at the time of the partition was a minor, less than the share to which he was entitled. The minor was represented in the partition by his uncle, though the uncle was not the natural guardian of the minor, nor in any other way entitled to deal with the minor's property. The minor on attaining majority brought a suit for recovery of the full share to which he was entitled. Held that this was not a suit for relief on the ground of fraud or mistake, inasmuch as the partition could not under the circumstances affect in any way the rights of the minor. The suit was therefore not subject to the limitation of three years prescribed by Arts. 95 and 96 of the second schedule of Act No. XV of 1877.—14 Al. 498.

98. —To make good out of the general estate of a deceased trustee the loss occasioned by a breach of trust.	Three years	The date of the trustee's death, or, if the loss has not then resulted, the date of the loss.
99. —For contribution by a party who has paid the whole amount due under a joint decree, or by a sharer in a joint estate who has paid the whole amount of revenue due from himself and his co-sharers.	Ditto.	The date of the plaintiff's advance in excess of his own share.

Notes.

A suit for recovery of Government revenue, which the defendant was bound to pay, but which has been paid by the plaintiff to save the whole estate from sale, where the plaintiff asks to have the amount so paid made a charge on the portion for which he paid it, is governed by art. 132, and not by art. 99.—I. L. R., 6 Cal. 549.

The plaintiffs and defendants were the proprietors of two separate plots of land, separately assessed with Government revenue, but covered by the same towzi number. Plaintiffs paid the Government revenue, due from the defendants in respect of their plot from September 1873 to June 1885, in order to prevent the two plots being brought to sale, and on the 28th September 1885 instituted a suit to recover the amount. It was contended on behalf of the plaintiff, that art. 132 of sch. II of Act XV of 1877 applied to the facts of the case, and that the plaintiffs were therefore entitled to recover all amounts so paid within twelve years of date of suit. Held that, as on the authority of Kinu Ram Doss v. Muzaffer Hosain Shaha, I. L. R., 14 Cal., 809, the plaintiffs had no charge upon the property in respect of which the payment had been made, and as on the authority of Ramdin v. Kalka Pershad, L. R., 12 I. A., 12; I. L. R., 7 Al. 502, art. 132 only applied to cases where the money sought to be recovered is a charge upon the property, the limitation applicable to the case was that provided by art. 99, and the plaintiffs' claim in respect of all payments made more than three years before suit was barred.—I. L. R., 15 Cal. 542.

One of two persons, having a joint holding from a mittadar, paid the whole of the mittadar's dues for one year, and more than three years after the date of payment he sued the other for contribution :—Held, the payment did not create a charge on the land, and the suit was consequently barred by limitation.—15 Madr. 258.

In 1868, the uncle of the plaintiff brought a suit, (No. 176 of 1868), against five members of the undivided family, to which the defendants in the present suit belonged, and obtained a money-decree. In execution of that decree, he attached and sold certain land, in which all the members of the defendants' family were interested. At the sale he purchased the land himself, and was put into possession. In 1873, he began to pay the assessment upon the whole property. Subsequent litigation took place between him and the defendants' family, pending which the plaintiff separated from his uncle, and obtained the property in question as his share. The result of that litigation was a decree by the High Court, on the 23rd September, 1879, declaring that the plaintiff's uncle was only entitled to the interest of the five members of the family who had been defendant in his suit (No. 176 of 1868) in execution of the decree in which the property had been sold. The plaintiff brought the present suit, in 1883, against the other members of the family to recover their proportionate share of the assessment for the years 1875-1878, during which period he had paid the whole assessment. He prayed for a sale of their interest in the land. Both the lower Courts held that the payment of assessment did not create a charge on the property, and that the plaintiff having omitted to sue within three years from the date of the payments made by him, the present suit was barred. On appeal by the plaintiff to the High Court. Held, confirming the lower Court's decree, that the suit was barred. The plaintiff paid the assessment as full owner of the property, and it was entirely by his own action that the defendants had been excluded from the property, and did not pay their quotas of the assessment. Under those circumstances, the payments could not be regarded as salvage payments so as to make them a charge, according to equity, justice, and good conscience, upon the shares of the other co-owners.—11 Bom. 313.

Notes.

A claim for mesne profits during a period preceding the three years next before the filing of the plaint is barred by Act XV of 1877, Sch. II, Art. 109. An under-proprietor having been dispossessed by a manager of the superior estate, appointed under the Oudh Taluqdars' Relief Act, 1870, recovered possession under a decree, and afterwards sued for mesne profits. Held, that a person who had not himself received the mesne profits having come into possession of the taluq upon its being released from management under the above Act, would not be chargeable with sums, which, as it was alleged, might have been received by way of mesne profits, but had not been received in consequence of the manager's wilful default; there being nothing to show that such taluqdar could be charged with anything more than was actually received by him. There being no rule of law obliging the Court to allow interest upon mesne profits, it is a matter for the discretion of the Court, upon consideration of the facts, whether to allow interest or not.—I. Notes.

In a suit for the specific performance of an agreement entered into in 1858, to grant a putta when required, it appeared that the plaintiffs applied to the defendants for a putta in 1874, and in March, 1875, the defendants finally refused to make the grant, and the plaintiffs thereupon instituted their suit for specific performance. Held that they were not barred by limitation.—I. L. R., 5 Cal. 175.

Two brothers, V and R, in 1861 agreed together that part of their house should be divided and part enjoyed in common. Each brother was to occupy an assigned division, and have the use in common of the rest. If either wished to leave the house, he was bound to offer his share to the other at a fixed price; or, if he wished to purchase the share of the other, and the other refused to sell, then the party refusing to sell at a fixed price was bound to buy the share of the other brothers who wished to purchase. V called upon R in 1877 either to pay Rs. 418 or give up the house. Held that this was an agreement enforceable by law; that until demand no cause of action arose and limitation only began to run from the demand; that specific performance should be granted in the alternative.—3 Madr. 87.

On the 27th October, 1865, the vendor of some immoveable property executed a conveyance of such property to the purchasers. On that date, the vendor was not in possession of the property, although his title to it had been adjudged by a decree against which an appeal was pending. The conveyance did not contain any express promise or undertaking on the vendor's part to put the purchasers into possession. On the 24th February, 1870, the vendor obtained possession of the larger portion of the property, and, on the 23rd August, 1872, of the remainder. On the 5th October, 1877, the purchasers sued the vendor for the possession of the property, stating that "possession was agreed to be delivered on the receipt of possession by the vendor," and that the cause of action was that the vendor had not put them into possession. Held that the suit was not one for the specific performance of a contract to deliver possession to which Art. 113 was applicable, but one to obtain possession in virtue of the right and title conveyed to the purchasers to which either Art. 136 or 144 was applicable, and that whichever of them was applicable, the suit was within time.—2 Al. 718.

A suit for money based on an award which directs, its payment by the defendant to the plaintiff, is virtually a suit to have the award specifically enforced; and, as by sec. 30 of the Specific Relief Act, 1877, awards are placed on the same footing as contracts, No. 113, sch. ii of the Limitation Act, 1877, is applicable to such a suit.—5 Al. 263.

A contract was made for the sale of certain immoveable property, in the event of the vendor obtaining a decree establishing his title to the property, in a suit which had been brought for that purpose. The vendor obtained such decree in that suit. The purchaser subsequently brought a suit "to have a sale-deed executed and completed," and for the possession of the property. It was contended that the limitation applicable to the suit was that provided by art. 144 of the Limitation Act, 1877, and not art. 113. Held that the suit was essentially one for specific performance of contract, and the limitation applicable was art. 113. The contention that, so far as the suit was for possession of immoveable property, it should be governed by art. 144 was invalid. The right to possession sprang out of the contract of sale, and the relief by giving possession was comprised in the relief by specific performance of the contract of sale, and could not be governed in this suit by any but art. 113. But assuming the suit might, so far as limitation was concerned, be entertained, still as the right to possession was dependent on the contract of sale, if the suit could not be maintained for specific performance of the contract, it could not be maintained for possession of the property sold under the contract.—6 Al. 231.

In 1871, the plaintiffs and the defendants executed a deed whereby they effected an exchange of certain lands, and each party agreed to resist by legal process or by bringing an action any claim or interference with the other in respect of the property exchanged, and to bear the costs which might be incurred in such legal proceedings in certain proportions, and that if as a result of such proceedings either of the parties were deprived of the lands exchanged or any part of them, the other should make it up out of certain of his own land. In 1881 the plaintiffs brought an action against a third party who claimed title to some of the exchanged lands, and joined the defendants as defendants, the latter admitting the plaintiffs' title. The plaintiffs were defeated in that suit in 1882. In 1885 (within three years from the time the defendants refused to give them other land) they sued on the deed of 1871 to have the exchange therein provided for carried out. Held by the Full Bench that the cause of action arose in 1882, when there was a loss to the plaintiffs in the sense contemplated in the deed, and the defendants were called upon specifically to perform their covenant, and that the present suit having been brought within three years after their refusal to perform it, was within the time fixed by art. 113, sch. ii of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877).—11 Al. 27.

A suit by a mortgagor to recover money due on a registered mortgage-deed, together with damages for non-payment, is not a suit to which the period of limitation prescribed by the Limitation Act (Act XV of 1877, sch. ii, No. 113 (for specific performance of a contract) is applicable. The period of limitation applicable to such a suit is that prescribed by No. 116 of sch. ii. of the said Act (for compensation for the breach of a contract in writing registered); and the time from which limitation will run against the mortgagor is, in the absence of any specific provision to the contrary, the date of the execution of the mortgage-deed. *Gauri Shankar v. loan, is governed by art. 115 of Sch. II. of Act XV of 1877, which virtually provides for all contracts, which are not in writing, registered, and not otherwise specifically provided for.—I. L. R., 10 Cal. 1033.

A suit for loss and damaged goods based on breach of contract to deliver is governed by this article.—3 Madr. 107.

The plaintiff sued the defendant who had married the plaintiff's deceased brother's widow, to recover, by way of compensation, the money expended by his deceased brother's family on his marriage founding his claim upon a custom prevailing among the Jats of Ajmere, whereby a member of that community marrying a widow was bound to recoup the expenses incurred by her deceased husband's family on his marriage. Held that the suit was one of the character described in art. 115 and not in art. 120.—3 Al 385.

Upon failure to pay the principal and interest secured by a bond upon the day appointed for such payment, breach of the contract to pay is committed, and there is no "continuing breach" within the meaning of sec. 23 nor "successive breaches" within the meaning of art. 115 of the Limitation (Act XV of 1877).—10 Al. 85.

See I. L. R., 15 Madr. 380, noted under sec. 19; 12 Cal. 477, noted under art. 30; 5 Madr. 388, noted under art. 30; 7 Bom. 478, noted under art. 30; 8 Bom. 234, noted under art. 62; 5 Cal. 830, noted under art. 62; 13 Cal. 155, noted under art. 61.

116.—For compensation for the breach of a contract in writing registered.

Six years

When the period of limitation would begin to run against a suit brought on a similar contract not registered.

Notes.

A suit to recover money due upon a registered bond is a suit for compensation for breach of contract in writing registered, within the meaning of art. 116 and must be brought within 6 years from the time when the period of limitation would begin to run against a suit brought on a similar contract not registered.—I. L. R., 6 Cal. 94.

The suit was for recovery of arrears of rent due under a lease deed in writing registered. The suit was instituted more than three years, but within 6 years, from the date on which the rent was due. It was argued for the defence that the suit was not one for compensation so as to fall under art. 116 but one for rent due and that, as such it fell under art. 110. The High Court, on a reference to all the decisions on the point, held that a suit of this kind was covered by art. 116 of the Act and not by art. 110.—15 Cal. 221.

Article 116 of the limitation Act is applicable to a suit on a registered instalment bond, notwithstanding the express provisions of Article 74. That Article (116) is intended to apply to all contracts in writing registered, whether there is or is not an express provision in the Limitation Act for similar contracts not registered.—18 Cal. 506.

After the date fixed for payment of principal and interest, how claimable when not expressed to be payable under deed.—19 Cal. 19.

Suits for rent, founded on contracts in respect of lands subject to the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act, are governed by the limitation provided in that Act.—19 Cal. 1.

Where there is no stipulation in a deed of conditional sale to pay interest after the day fixed for the repayment of principal and interest, a claim for interest after due date is a claim for compensation for breach of contract, and a suit for the recovery of such compensation must be brought within six years from the date of the breach.—19 Cal. 19.

A registered lease granted for building purposes and for establishing a coal depot does not come within the purview of the Bengal Tenancy Act, not being a lease for agricultural or horticultural purposes. The limitation applicable to a suit for the rent reserved in such a lease is that prescribed by Art. 116 of the Limitation Act.—19 Cal. 489.

A suit to recover arrears of rent upon a registered contract is governed by art. 116. Compensation is used in the same sense in that article as in the Contract Act, sec. 73.—3 Madr. 76.

In a suit upon a registered bond payable in eleven yearly instalments, to recover instalments 5-10 from the representatives of two deceased co-debtors, (who, as managing members of an undivided Hindu family, had contracted the debt for family purposes) the plaintiff impleaded G, the son-in-law of one of the deceased co-debtors and his two brothers on the ground that they, in collusion with the widow of such deceased co-debtor had, as volunteers, intermeddled with, and possessed themselves of, substantially, the whole property of the family of the deceased co-debtor: Held that G and his brothers were properly joined as co-defendants and were liable for the debt of the deceased to the extent of the assets received by them. Held also that even if there had been a misjoinder the plea could not be allowed in second appeal as the defendants had not been prejudiced. Held also that, as the plaintiff had shown that some property of the deceased co-debtors had passed to G and his brothers, the burden of proof lay on G and his brothers to show that they had not received so much of the deceased debtors property as would satisfy the debt. Held also that as the bond was a registered bond and the property had been misappropriated within three years of the date of the suit, the suit was not barred by Limitation. Held also that interest, in the nature of damages, from the date of suit was properly awarded.—3 Madr. 359.

A sued as assignee of a bond (payable in 1872), hypothecating land in the mofussil. B, A's assignor, was a vakil practising in the High Court. B had obtained an assignment of the obligee's interest in the bond sued on, and also another bond for Rs. 3,000 between the same parties after the 1st July 1882, for Rs. 4,500. B had previously purchased the two bonds at a sale in execution of the decree of a Mofussil Court for Rs. 5 each. A's assignment from B purported to be made to A in payment of certain debts owed to him by B. No interest has been paid on the bond and no tender had been made to the plaintiff:—Held that the creditor's personal remedy was passed by art. 116 and on the evidence, that there was no consideration for the bond sued on or that it had failed.—11 Madr. 56.

A suit to recover a specific sum of money due upon a registered bond or other written contract is a suit for compensation for breach of contract in writing registered, within the meaning of article 116 of Schedule II of Act XV of 1877, and may be brought within six years from the time when the period of limitation would begin to run against a suit brought on a similar contract which is not registered.—6 Bom. 75.

Held that No. 116, sch. ii. of Act XV of 1877, is applicable to a suit on a registered bond for the payment of money.—3 Al. 600.

The defendant, having borrowed money from the plaintiff, gave him a bond, dated the 4th July, 1872, for the payment of such money, with interest, within two years or on certain contingencies contemplated and defined in such bond. Such bond did not specify a day for payment. It was duly registered. On the 30th June, 1880, the plaintiff sued the defendant, stating in his plaint that he had lent the defendant such money; that it was payable on the 4th July, 1874; that on that day he had demanded payment; that the cause of action arose on that day, as the defendant did not pay; and that he claimed such money accordingly. The plaint did not make any mention of such bond. Held that the suit was not one which fell within the scope of No. 66 of sch. ii. of Act XV of 1877, but one to which No. 116 of that schedule was applicable, and it might proceed on the plaint without any amendment thereof.—3 Al. 276.

A suit on a registered bond for the payment of money, which has not been paid on the one date, is a suit for compensation for the breach of a contract in writing registered, and therefore the limitation applicable to such a suit is that provided by art. 116.—4 Al. 255.

A contract to pay interest post diem on a mortgage ought not to be implied when the parties to the written contract have not expressed therein any such intention. This is particularly the case where the written contract does in clear terms provide for the payment of interest and compound interest during the term of the mortgage. Narain Lal v. Chajmal Das followed. Chhab Nath v. Kamta Prasad and Baldeo Panday v. Gokal Rai referred to. Damages given after the due date of a mortgage for non-payment of the principal money upon the due date, are damages for breach of contract, and not interest payable in performance of a contract; and under art. 116, sch ii., of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877), a suit to recover such damages must be brought within six years from the time when the contract for the breach of which they are claimed was broken. It cannot be said that such damages are, from the date when the contract was broken, and even before they have been ascertained or decreed, a charge upon the property hypothecated, so as to make art. 116 inapplicable. Price v. The Great Western Railway Co., Morgan v. Jones, Cordillo v. Waguelin, in re Kerr's Policy, Lippard v. Ricketts, Cook v. Fowler, and Bishen Dyal v. Udit Narayan distinguished. In such cases there is one breach of the contract, namely, the nonpayment on the date agreed upon; and there is no question of continuing or successive breaches. Mansab Ali v. Gulab Chand referred to.—11 Al. 416.

See I. L. R., 12 Cal. 357, noted under art. 89; 10 Al. 85, noted under art. 115; 14 Madr. 465, noted under art. 64; 14 Al. 162, noted under art. 66; 3 Al. 712, noted under art. 65; 13 Al. 200, noted under art. 113; 15 Madr. 157, noted under art. 49.

Notes.

A purchaser at an execution sale is not as such the representative of the judgment-debtor within the meaning of sec. 115 of the Evidence Act. A Hindu, governed by the Mitakshara School of Law, died on the 12th May, 1867, leaving him surviving a widow B and A brought R, who was admittedly the next reversioner. In July, 1867, B purported to adopt a son D to A, and subsequently in September, 1867, obtained a certificate under Act XL of 1858. In 1872 B obtained a loan from the plaintiff M of Rs. 9,000, and to secure its repayment executed a mortgage of seven mouzahs in favor of M as guardian of D. The money was advanced and mortgage executed at the instigation of R and with his consent, and upon his representation that D was the duly adopted son of A, and it was admitted that the money was specifically advanced for, as well as applied towards, the payment of decrees obtained against A in his lifetime and against his estate after his death. B died in 1878. On the 14th August, 1880, M instituted a suit against D upon his mortgage, and in that suit he made S a party defendant as being the purchaser of the mortgagor's interest in one of the mouzahs included in his mortgage. On the 26th June, 1882, M obtained a decree declaring that he was entitled to recover the amount due by sale of the mortgaged mouzahs. In the proceedings taken in execution of that decree M as opposed by L, who was afterwards held to be a benamidar for S, who claimed that he had on the 8th November, 1880, purchased five out of the seven mouzahs at a sale in execution of certain decrees against R. On the 29th February, 1884, L's claim was allowed, and on the 11th Aug., 1884, M brought this suit against L, S, R and D, and the decree-holders in the suits against R, for a declaration of his right to follow the mortgaged property in the hands of S. It was found as a fact that the adoption of D was invalid; that the advance by M to B was justified by legal necessity; and that L was the benamidar of S. It also appeared that M had himself become the purchaser of one of the mortgaged mouzahs. The Lower Court gave M a decree declaring him to be entitled to recover the full amount of the mortgage money from the five mouzahs in the hands of S. L and S appealed, and M filed a cross appeal, alleging the adoption to be valid and binding on S. It was contended that S as the representative of R was estopped from denying the validity of D's adoption, and thus having been a party to M's first suit the question as to the liability of the mouzahs to satisfy the mortgage lien was res judicata as against him. It was also contended that the five mouzahs should not be saddled with the whole of the mortgage debt, but that the mouzah in the hands of M should bear its proportionate part thereof. Held that, as S was merely a party to M's original suit as purchaser of one mouzah, and has he, subsequently to the institution of that suit, acquired R's interest in the five mouzahs, and as R was not a party to that suit nor was his interest represented in any way, the decree was in no way binding against R, and therefore S was not barred by res judicata from setting up the interest of R in the five mouzahs so acquired by him. Held, further, that, though R was estopped by his conduct from disputing the validity of the adoption, or of M's right as mortgagee, S being an auction-purchaser was not bound by R's acts, and was not estopped from disputing the adoption, as he derived his title by operation of law adversely to R, and was thus in a different position from a person claiming under a voluntary alienation. Held, also, that, though B purported to execute the mortgage as guardian for D, though D was not the adopted son of A, the substance of the transaction and not the form had to be looked at, and as B had full power to alienate for legal necessity the mortgage was still binding on the estate of A; and further that even if there had been no legal necessity having regard to the fact that it was made with the consent of R, the next reversioner, it equally created a valid charge upon the property, but that the mouzah in the hands of M must bear its share of the mortgage debt, and that the decree of the lower Court was wrong in declaring that the five mouzahs in suit were to bear the whole amount of the debt. It was further contended that D had acquired an absolute title by more than twelve years' adverse possession from the date of his adoption in 1867 before the purchase by S in 1880. Held that, as B died within twelve years of the alleged adoption, although under art. 118, Sch. II Act XV of 1877 (which came into force before the adoption could become perfected by efflux of time), a suit for a declaration that an adoption was invalid should be brought within six years from the date when the adoption becomes known to the plaintiff, still having regard to the provisions of arts. 140 and 141, the next reversioner was not thereby prevented from suing to obtain possession within twelve years from the date of the widow's death or when the estate fell into possession, and therefore that S was not barred by limitation from disputing D's title. Quære.—Whether the ruling in the Collector of Madura v. Moothoo Ramalinga Sathupathy, 12 Moore's I. A., 397, applies to cases governed by the Mitakshara Law in Northern India, and whether an adoption made by a widow after the death of the husband without his express consent, but with the consent of his near kindred, is valid, or whether the recognition of the adopted son by the next reversioner would likewise render the adoption valid.—I. L. R., 14 Cal. 401.

Where, in a suit brought in 1885, for a declaration that an adoption alleged to have taken place in 1871 was null and void, the factum of an adoption was disputed, and it was not shown that the alleged adoption became known to the plaintiff before 1881, held, with reference to art. 118 of sch. ii. of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877), that the suit was within time. Jagadamba Chaodhrani v. Dahhtna Mohun Roy Chaodhri distinguished.—9 Al. 253.

119.—To obtain a declaration that an adoption is valid.	Six years	... When the rights of the adopted son as such are interfered with.

Notes.

In a suit brought in 1875, in which the plaintiff claimed, as heir of her husband, a share in a certain taluq, together with exclusive right of worship of an idol A, and the right to the worship of an idol B, for one-sixth of every year, from the possession and enjoyment of which she alleged she had been dispossessed by the defendants in 1866 : Held that her claim, as to the idol B, came under the provisions of art. 131 and was not barred ; but as to A the claim was governed by art. 120.—4 Cal. 683.

The defendant took certain land from the plaintiff under a registered lease, which contained a clause prohibiting the defendant from digging a tank on the land without the plaintiff's permission. The defendant having, nevertheless, constructed a tank without such permission, the plaintiff brought a suit to compel him to fill up the tank, or in case he should fail to do so, for compensation. Held that art. 120 was applicable.—6 Cal. 34.

Sec. 27 of the Bengal Act (VIII of 1869) only relates to such suits as could be brought either by the landlord or tenant under Act X of 1859, and will not apply to an alternative claim, put forward in a suit for ejectment, to compel the defendant to remove trees from certain lands leased to him for agricultural purposes. Art. 120 applies to such claims.—9 Cal. 147.

Previous to 1825 dearah X accreted to mouzah Y, and sometime before 1860 the malik of Y executed two conveyances in favour of A and B respectively. In 1860 A sued B in the Munsiff's Court for possession of a share in X which B claimed under his conveyance. In that suit A succeeded on the ground that B's conveyance did not cover the share claimed by him in X, but merely covered the share in the mouzah itself, whereas by his conveyance A had acquired the right to the share in X which he claimed. In 1866 the Collector refused to recognize B's right to malikana payable in respect of the share in X, which had been the subject of the suit in 1860, or to register his name in respect thereof, but acknowledged A's right thereto, relying on the decision of the Civil Court in the suit between A and B. Subsequently B's representatives, C and D, in 1876, sought to have their names registered in respect of the same malikana, but they were opposed by E, who alleged that A had been acting throughout as his benamidar. The Collector referred the case under sec. 55 of Act VII of 1876 to the Civil Court, and the application of C and D was eventually disallowed. C and D thereupon, on the 5th November 1880, instituted the present suit against E, in the Court of the Subordinate Judge, for a declaration of their right to the malikana, and for a reversal of the order refusing to allow their names to be registered in respect thereof. Held, that, inasmuch as the allegation made by E, in the proceedings held in 1876 on the application by C and D before the Collector, and afterwards upon the reference before the Civil Court, that A had been acting in the matter merely as his benamidar, was uncontradicted by C and D in their plaint in the present suit, there was sufficient evidence upon which to hold that that fact was true. Held, also, that the suit was barred as res judicata on the ground that the right to malikana was substantially the same question as the proprietary right to the share in the dearah, and that this issue had been tried and decided in the suit in 1860 in favour of A, who must be taken to be E ; that the fact that the previous suit had been brought in a Munsiff's Court, whereas the present suit was brought before a Subordinate Judge, did not affect the question, inasmuch as the property was the same, and it was not shown that the present suit, if brought in 1860, would not have been within the jurisdiction of the Munsiff, nor was it alleged that the suit in 1860 was beyond his jurisdiction. Held, further, that the suit was barred by limitation, being governed either by arts. 120, 131, or 144 of the Limitation Act (Act XV of 1877), because—(1) there being no allegation of dispossession if it were contended that the suit was one for possession of an interest in immoveable property, art. 144 would apply; (2) if it were contended that the suit was for the purpose of establishing a periodically recurring right, pure and simple, art. 131 would apply, and the period must be reckoned from 1866, when the plaintiff was first refused the enjoyment of the right; (3) if, however, it were said to be a suit to establish a periodically recurring right, and something in addition, inasmuch as the right carried with it a right to the property itself, if the parties consented to take a settlement when the time for concluding the next temporary or permanent settlement came, art. 120 must be held to apply. But that, in any event inasmuch as in the year 1866 the Collector refused to recognise B's right to the malikana and adverse possession, so far as possession could be taken of such an interest in immoveable property, was then taken by A, or in other words by E, because it must be taken that the Collector since that date had been holding for A, whose right he had then recognised, after refusing to recognise the right claimed by B, the present suit having been instituted in 1880 was equally barred which ever of the above articles was held to apply. Rao Karan Singh v. Rajah Bakur Ali Khan, L. R., 9 I. A. 99, referred to and distinguished.—10 Cal. 697.

Where A made a deposit as security for the discharge of his duties as Manager of an estate under the Court of Wards, which deposit was liable for all sums not accounted for by A; and a suit was, after his dismissal from his appointment, brought for the recovery of the deposit:—Held, that the period of limitation allowed was certainly not less than six years, and began to run not from the date of his dismissal, but from the time when the account of charges due against the deposit was made and sent in to him.—12 Cal. 113.

A suit to oust a shebait from his office, the appointment to which has been made by nomination, is one for which no period of limitation is specially provided, and is therefore governed by article 120 of Schedule II of the Limitation Act. The plaintiff, as shebait of a certain Hindu endowment, instituted a suit to set aside to certain leases and alienations created by one who had formerly been shebait, but who it was alleged had relinquished and abandoned the office, on the ground that such leases and alienations were void and not binding on the endowment, and he sought to obtain khas possession of the lands occupied by the defendants under such leases and alienations. Although it was admitted that the plaintiff had held possession as shebait, and managed the properties connected with the endowment for more than ten years, on the nomination of the Hindu residents of the locality, the defendants put the plaintiff to proof of his title, as shebait. The lower Courts found that the plaintiff had failed to prove his title, and holding that on this ground he had no locus standi, dismissed the suit. Held, that as a suit to oust the plaintiff from his office would have been barred by limitation, by reason of his having held the office for a period exceeding that provided by the law of limitation, he had acquired a complete title for the purposes of any litigation connected with the affairs of the endowment, and that the suit had been wrongly dismissed on the ground that the plaintiff had failed to prove his title.—19 Cal. 776.

A suit for recovery of instalments of profession tax under the provisions of the Towns' Improvement Act, 1871, is governed by art. 120.—3

Suit in 1887 by a daughter to recover her share of Government promissory notes, being stridhanam of her mother who died in 1880. The property in question had been in the possession of a son of the deceased since her death. He claimed the property under a will, but the will was set aside by the Court as false in 1884:—Held, that Limitation Act, sch. II. art. 123, is applicable only to cases in which the defendant lawfully represents the estate of the deceased, and that the suit was accordingly barred by limitation.—I. L. R., 12 Madr. 487.

In a suit by the holder of one share against the holders of other shares in inam land, included in a single patta and assessed in an entire sum, for apportionment of the assessment, it appeared that the plaintiff had asked for the apportionment to be made more than six years before suit:—Held, that the suit was not barred by limitation.—15 Madr. 492.

The directors of the P. Company made a call of Rs. 100 per share upon its shareholders on the 1st October 1882. On the 8th March, 1886, the company was ordered to be wound up by the Court, and an official liquidator was appointed. On the 7th March, 1886, the official liquidator filed this suit against the defendant, who was a holder of twenty-one shares in the company, to recover (along with other calls) the amount of the said call of 1st October, 1882. As to this part of the claim, the defendant pleaded limitation:—Held that the suit being brought, not by the company, but by the liquidator, article 120 applied, and that the claim was, therefore, not barred.—10 Bom. 483.

D died leaving him surviving a widow and a daughter who was plaintiff's mother. Defendant No. 2 obtained a decree against the widow, and in execution put up D's property to sale. Defendants 3, 4 and 5 purchased the property and took possession in 1869. In 1883 the plaintiffs sued as D's reversionary heirs for a declaration that they were entitled to the property in dispute on the widow's death, alleging that the decree, in execution of which the property was sold, was a collusive and fraudulent decree, and that they were not bound by the sale in execution. They further alleged that the cause of action arose in 1879, when their mother died. Held, that the suit was barred by limitation. The cause of action giving any reversioner the right to sue for a declaration was that given to the plaintiff's mother in 1869, both by the sale and the dispossession, and it was not revived in favour of the plaintiffs on her death in 1879. All right to sue for a declaration was, therefore, barred in 1875 under article 120 of Schedule II of the Limitation Act (XV of 1887).—14 Bom. 512.

A, sued for a declaration that she was the daughter of B, who died in 1870. On B's death his kulkarni vatan was attached, and C. was appointed to officiate on behalf of Government. In 1882 A. applied for a certificate of heirship to B., with a view to get her name entered as a vatandar in place of her deceased father's. C. opposed her application, denying that she was the daughter and heiress of B. Her application being rejected, A. filed the present suit against C., in 1877, to obtain a declaration that she was the daughter and heiress of B. The Court of first instance granted the declaration sought. The appellate Court rejected the claim as barred under article 120 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1887), holding that time should be computed from the date of B's death. Held, that A.'s cause of action accrued, not on B's death, but on the denial of her status by C. in the certificate proceedings. The suit, having been brought within six years from that time, was not barred under article 120 of Limitation Act (XV of 1887).—15 Bom 422.

The Bombay Land Revenue Code (Bombay Act V of 1879) applies to talukdari villages in the Ahmedabad district. Such villages fall within the description of "alienated holdings" as defined by the Code. When a talukdari village is attached under sec. 159 of the Code for arrears of land revenue, so long as the attachment subsists, an order of forfeiture under sec. 153 is illegal. The plaintiff was the talukdar of the village of Kathini Aniali. At the end of the revenue year 1878-79, i.e., on 31st July, 1879, the plaintiff was a defaulter in respect of the assessment payable to Government for that year. In November, 1879, a punitive police post was established in the village, under sec. 16 of Bombay Act VII of 1867, on account of the turbulent conduct of the inhabitants. Between January and April, 1880, the Collector sold certain property of the talukdar for arrears of revenue, and realized by the sale a sum of Rs. 1,608-12-8. This sum was more than sufficient to cover the arrears due for 1878-79 as well as the assessment payable for 1879-80. But the Collector, after deducting the arrears due for 1878-79, applied the rest of the sale-proceeds towards the payment of the cost of the punitive post. The assessment for 1879-80 having remained unpaid, the village was attached on the 1st of July, 1880, under sec. 159 of the Bombay Land Revenue Code (Act V of 1879). The attachment was followed on the 6th January, 1881, by an order declaring the village to be forfeited under section 153 of the Code. In 1886 the plaintiff filed the present suit against Government to recover possession of the village, and for a declaration that the order of forfeiture was illegal and ultra vires. The defendant pleaded (inter alia) that the suit was barred under sec. 4, clause (c) of the Bombay Revenue Jurisdiction Act X of 1876, that it was also barred by limitation, and that the order of forfeiture was legal and valid. Held, that the village having been attached for arrears of land revenue under sec. 159 of Bombay Act V of 1879 on the 1st July, 1880, the plaintiff had twelve years' time from the date of the attachment within which he could apply for the restoration of the village, under sec. 162 of the Act. The order of forfeiture of the 6th January, 1881, was, therefore, null and void. Held, also, that the plaintiff's claim for a declaration that the order of forfeiture was illegal was not barred by sec. 4, clause (c) of Act X of 1876, as the order of forfeiture could not be considered "a proceeding for the realization of land revenue." The proceeding authorized by law for the realization of land revenue, i.e., the attachment of the village, having been taken, no other proceeding could legally be taken, as against the plaintiff, till the expiration of twelve years from the date of the attachment. Held, further, that the claim for a declaration that the order of forfeiture was illegal was not time-barred, as it was governed by article 120 of Limitation Act (XV of 1877). Held, (per Birdwood, J.) that the Collector had no power, under section 16 of Bombay Act VII 1867, to recover the cost of the punitive post from the talukdar, (1) as he was not an inhabitant of the village, and (2) because the cost could only be defrayed by a local rate imposed on the inhabitants of the district in which the punitive post was established.—16 Bom 455.

The limitation for a suit to enforce a right of pre-emption in respect of a mortgage by conditional sale is that provided by art. 120. Where the mortgagee by conditional sale is not in possession under the mortgage, and after foreclosure had to sue for possession, the right to sue to enforce a right of pre-emption accrues when he obtains a decree for possession.—

The decree-holder sold his rights under the decree in respect of the moneys in the hands of A L to the plaintiffs, who sued to obtain the same from A L. Held that the period of limitation applicable to such a suit was that prescribed by art. 120 of the second schedule of the Indian Limitation Act (Act XV of 1877). *Gurudas Pyne v. The plaintiff's father obtained a decree in the Court of the agent for Sirdars in 1848 against the defendant's grand father, a third class Sirdar. The decree gave an option to the Sirdar to pay up the debt at once, or year by year, out of the revenues of a village. The Sirdars choose the latter alternative and execution proceeded accordingly on that footing till his death in 1862. His son survived him, and died in 1867, when the defendant, who was not himself a Sirdar, succeeded. The Subordinate Judge of Khed to whom, on the cessation of the Sirdarship in the defendant's family, the Agent referred the decree for further execution, proceeded with the execution up to the year 1876, when these proceedings were pronounced to be irregular. The plaintiff thereupon, in the year 1877, filed the present suit on the strength of his decree in 1848. Held that the period of limitation applicable was that of twelve years from the date of the decree, but that the decree should be viewed as analogous to an instalment decree, and made as against the Defendant in 1867—down to which time the proceeds were regularly realised,—because it then on his father's death became first operative against him. In the case of a decree payable by instalments, as the command of the Judge prescribes a term for the performance of the several parts of his order, it is to be construed as becoming a judgment for purposes of limitation as to each instalment only on the day when payment is to be made.—I. L. R., 3 Bom. 193.

A by his last will and testament gave his property to trustees, partly in trust for religious and other purposes, and partly to pay thereout to certain persons and their heirs for ever certain annuities, being fixed portions of the net profits of a certain estate called the Hurro estate, which amounted to Rs. 3,150. A died in November 1863. On the 11th of August 1879, the heir of one of the annuitants instituted a suit claiming a share under the will, and asking for a partition of that share. The plaintiff alleged besides, that certain of the trusts and provisions in the will were invalid in law; that, consequently, a large portion of the testator's property remained undisposed of at his death, and she claimed a share of this residue as one of the heirs of the testator. Held that, under the circumstances, the gift of the share of the rents and profits amounted to a gift of a share in the corpus of the estate; and that, in respect of that portion of the plaintiff's claim, the suit was not barred by limitation. *Kherodemoney Dossee v. mitation from recovering the portion undisposed off, though they might still bring a suit against the trustees to compel them to properly administer the trusts which had not failed.—I. L. R., 8 Cal. 788.

Article 123 of the Limitation Act only applies to cases in which the property sought to be recovered is not only a legacy but is also sought to be recovered as such from a person who is bound by law to pay such legacy, either because he is the executor of the will or otherwise represents the estate of the testator.—9 Cal. 79.

The widow of a Mapilla, who had died intestate more than fourteen years before suit, sued to recover a one-sixteenth share of the property left by him and his brother :—Held, that although the parties were Mapillas the suit was governed by art. 123 of the Limitation Act and was accordingly barred.—15 Madr. 60.

A certificate of administration granted under Regulation VIII of 1827 only indicates the person who for the time being is in the legal management of the property in respect of which it is granted, but does not constitute the holder of the certificate a representative of the estate for the purpose of distributing it amongst his co-sharers. In 1864, Narayan, the owner of a share in a deshpande vatan, died childless and intestate. A certificate of administration under Regulation VII of 1827 was granted to one Gangadhar, a distant relation, who received Narayan's share in the vatan up to and including the year 1871. In the meantime, viz., on the 19th November, 1870, two nearer relations, viz., Dhondu and Balaji, succeeded in getting Gangadhar's certificate cancelled, and obtained a certificate to themselves jointly. In 1876 the Collector recognized Dhondu alone as the heir of Narayan Baburav, and paid Dhondu's son Sakharam the share of the deceased Narayan Baburav with arrears from 1872. After Sakharam's death his son Narayan, (defendant No. 1), received it down to the year 1884. In 1883 Keshav, (father of plaintiff No. 1), got the certificate of 1870 cancelled and obtained a certificate to himself jointly, with defendant No. 1. Keshav died, and the plaintiffs, (his son and nephew), brought this suit claiming to be co-sharers in the one anna and four pies share of Narayan Baburav. The defendants contended (inter alia) that the suit was barred. The Court of first instance awarded the plaintiffs claim for the three years previous to the suit, and rejected the rest of the claim. The defendants appealed to the District Judge, who held that the plaintiffs claimed was totally barred, under article 123 of the Limitation Act XV of 1877. On appeal by the plaintiffs to the High Court, held, reversing the decree of the lower appellate Court, that article 123 did not apply, and that the suit was not barred. There was no cause of action until Narayan and his successors Dhondu and Sakharam in title were recognized by the Collector and paid the arrears of the hak. Gangadhar was quite independent of them, and this recognition did not take place until 1876—less than twelve years before the institution of the plaintiffs suit.—14 Bom. 236.

125.—Suit during the life of a Hindu or Mohammadan female by a Hindu or Mohammadan who, if the female died at the date of instituting the suit, would be entitled to the possession of land, to have an alienation of such land made by the female declared to be void except for her life or until her remarriage.	Twelve years	The date of the alienation.
126.—By a Hindu Governed by the law of the Mitakshara to set aside his father's alienation of ancestral property.	Ditto.	When the alienee takes possession of the property.
127.—By a person excluded from joint family property to enforce a right to share therein.	Ditto.	When the exclusion becomes known to the plaintiff.

Notes.

In a suit to obtain a share by partition of a joint family property, the interest of the plaintiffs' father having been sold in execution of a decree, limitation is to be computed from the time when exclusion from his share first becomes known to the plaintiffs.—I. L. R., 3 Cal. 653.

Art. 127 presupposes the existence of joint family property, and that there has been an exclusion from participation in the enjoyment of such property. Semble.—The word "excluded" in that article implies previous inclusion. The right of a Hindu to the possession of immoveable property on the death of a Hindu widow to which art. 141 refers, must be one in esse at the time of the death of the widow. The determination, therefore, of such right during her lifetime extinguishes also the right of the reversioner on the death.—5 Cal. 938.

Art. 127 of Sch. II of Act XV of 1877 does not apply to a suit where the plaintiff is a stranger who has purchased a share in joint family property from one of the members thereof.—14 Cal. 544.

A member of a joint Hindu family cannot sue for a share of the profits of the joint family estate as he has no definite share until partition. He may sue for a partition of such estate unless by a family usage or special law it is impartible, and then is entitled to an account. A talukdari estate, though entered in the name of one member of a joint family in the list prepared in conformity with the Oudh Estates Act, I of 1869, may be subject to a trust, implied from the acts and declarations of the taluqdar, for the joint family as a joint estate. Hardeo Baksh v. Jowahir Singh, I. L. R., 3 Cal. 522; L. R., 4 Ind. Ap. 178. In that suit, commenced in 1865 by a member of a joint family for the declaration of his rights, partition not being claimed the order of Her Majesty in Council (1879) directed that the taluqdar should cause and allow the villages forming the taluqdari estate and the proceeds thereof to be managed and applied according to the trust declared in favor of the members of the family. The plaintiff in that suit afterwards obtained entry of his name as a co-sharer in the villages in the register kept under Act XVII of 1876, sec. 56; and then brought the first of the present suits for his share upon partition, both in that estate as it stood in 1865, and also with the addition of villages since acquired out of profits, claiming an account against the taluqdar. The latter alleged, among other defences, that the taluqdari estate was impartible, and brought a cross suit to establish this, and also that it was held by him according to the rule of primogeniture, the right of other members of the family being only to the profits. Held that, in regard to the order of Her Majesty above mentioned, which was applicable to an estate held subject to the law of the Mitakshara, the talukdari estate could not be declared to be impartible; also that a declaration in the Judicial Commissioner's decree that a member of the family entitled to a share upon partition should hold it as an under-proprietor under the talukdar could not be allowed to stand. Held, also, (a) that the first suit, as one for partition and an account, was not barred by limitation under Act XV of 1877, sec. 120, and must be decreed; (b) that the provisions of the Oudh Rent Act, XIX of 1868, sec. 8, cl. 15, and sec. 106, precluding proceedings in the Civil Court, might be applicable to the proceeds of the villages forming the original estate, the claimant having been recorded in the revenue records as a shareholder therein, but could not be applied to the rest of the joint estate; and (c) that the sections of the Code of Civil Procedure relating to mesne profits were not applicable to a suit for partition or for an account of the proceeds of family estate in which a plaintiff has no specific interest until decree.—14 Cal. 493.

The principle of survivorship under Mitakshara Law is limited to two descriptions of property, viz: (1) That which is taken as unobstructed heritage, and property acquired by means of it; and (2) that which forms the joint property of re-united co-parceners. Property inherited by brothers from their maternal grandfather is not of those descriptions.—17 Cal. 33.

The word 'person' mentioned in Article 127 of Schedule Second to the Limitation Act means some person claiming a right to share in joint family property, upon the ground that he is a member of the family to which the property belongs.—18 Cal. 642.

In 1803 G being in possession of the zamindari of M, the permanent settlement was made with him and a sanad was granted to him as prescribed by Regulation XXV of 1802. In 1827 C, the only son of G, being in possession of the zamindari, got into debt and the zamindari was sold in execution of a decree and bought by Government. In 1835 the zamindari was granted to J, the son of C, by Government and sanad issued in the usual terms as prescribed by Regulation XXV of 1802. J died in 1864 leaving four sons, the three plaintiffs and C, his eldest son. C died in 1869 leaving an only son, J, the defendant. In 1869 the Court of Wards took charge of the estate on behalf of the infant defendant and allowed his uncle, plaintiff No. 1, to receive the rents of the zamindari as renter J and his three uncles lived in the same house and participated in the joint family property until 1872, when the plaintiffs claimed to have the zamindari divided. By an agreement between the plaintiffs and the Court of Wards all the moveable and immoveable property, except the zamindari taluq, was divided into four shares and distributed in 1874 between the plaintiffs and defendants. In 1884 the plaintiffs sued for partition of the zamindari, alleging that their cause of action arose in 1872, when the Court of Wards denied their right to a partition of the zamindari taluk. The defendant pleaded (1) that the estate was not partible; (2) that the suit was barred by limitation:—Held (1) distinguished the Hunsapore case (12 M. L. A., 1) and the Sivaganga case (I. L. R., 3 Madr. 290), and following the principle laid down in the Nuzvid case (I. L. R., 2 Madr. 128) that the zamindari was partible; (2) that the suit was not barred by limitation.—11 Madr. 380.

The words “joint family property” in Limitation Act, 1877, sched. II, art. 127, are intended to refer to joint family property in the Hindu sense of the term. A Muhammadan sued, as heir in 1888, to recover his share in the property of his grandfather, which had been enjoyed jointly by his descendants from his death, which occurred in 1840, up to a recent date. It did not appear that the family was governed by any special custom:—Held, that the suit was not governed by Limitation Act, 1877, sched. II, art. 127, and was barred by limitation.—15 Madr. 57.

Where in a suit for partition a District Judge held the plaintiff's claim barred, on the ground that the defendant had been in possession of the property in dispute for more than fifteen years without any claim having been made by the plaintiff: Held that under the Limitation Act XV of 1877, article 127, time would not run against the plaintiff until his exclusion (if he was excluded) from the property had become known to him.—6 Bom. 741.

The plaintiff and his four brothers (Gane, Shive, Rama, and Balo) were members of a joint Hindu family. The only one of them who lived at home was Shive. In 1854 the family property, which had been mortgaged, was redeemed by the brothers, and after redemption it was placed under the management of Shive by the eldest brother, Gane. Subsequently, two of the brothers died while absent from the village; and the plaintiff, who was twenty years of age in 1854, joined the army in 1855. He did not return until 1876; but, during the interval, his wife used occasionally to visit her husband's native place, and during these visits resided in the family house with Shive and Gane. In 1872 Gane died. The plaintiff alleged that in 1876 he demanded his share, but was refused. In 1883 he filed this suit for partition. It was contended that the right of the plaintiff had become barred by the Limitation Act XIV of 1859, and was not revived by Act XV of 1877, which was in force at the date the suit was brought. The Court of first instance awarded the plaintiff's claim. On appeal, the Assistant Judge reversed the decree of the Court below, holding that under clause 13 of sec. 1 of the Limitation Act XIV of 1859 the plaintiff had lost his right to sue, and that such right could not be revived by the passing of the subsequent Limitation Acts IX of 1871 and XV of 1877. He was of opinion that the fact that the plaintiff's wife “had put up at Shive's house for a few days, if it were a fact, did not help the plaintiff's title.” Held, by the High Court that the occasional residence of the plaintiff's wife with Shive, who was in possession of the property, might be a benefit out of the estate equivalent to a payment so as to satisfy the requirement of clause 13 of sec. 1 of Limitation Act XIV of 1859. If such a benefit had been received by the plaintiff within twelve years previously to the repeal of that Act, the plaintiff had not lost his right to sue at the date of the passing of Act IX of 1871; and that Act would, therefore, have applied to any suit brought by him while it was in force. By article 127 of Schedule II of Limitation Act IX of 1871 the period of limitation dated from the time when the plaintiff claimed and was refused his share which, according to the plaintiff's allegation, was in 1876. Act IX of 1871 was repealed by Act XV of 1877, which governed the present suit, unless the right to sue had expired under Act XIV of 1859. The Court remanded the case for a fresh decision on the question of limitation, having regard to the above observations.—11 Bom 445.

The plaintiffs sued for part of a house as a portion of joint-family, property left undivided on the occasion of a general partition which had taken place about thirty-five years before the suit. The defendant had since then been in sole possession and enjoyment of the house in dispute. The Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit as barred by limitation, on the ground that the plaintiffs had failed to prove participation in possession or enjoyment within twelve years. On appeal, the Assistant Judge held that as no share had been demanded or refused, the defendant's possession was not adverse to the plaintiffs, and as the house in dispute had been admittedly reserved from partition, article 127 of the Limitation Act XV of 1877 did not apply. He, therefore, reversed the decree of the Subordinate Judge, and remanded the case for retrial on the merits. On appeal to the High Court, Held, that the suit was barred. The fact that the house in question had admittedly remained undivided, did not prevent the operation of the Limitation Act, and article 127 of Act XV of 1877 applied. That article applies equally to a portion of joint-family property left undivided as to the whole estate, and a twelve-years' exclusion, known to the excluded sharer, binds him in the one case as in the other. What would bar the operation of the article in question would be a reserve of a part of the joint estate from partition, and a possession of that portion conceded to, and taken by, one of the sharers as the common property of himself and the other sharers.

2. Possession is evidence of title, and is primarily exclusive. It is for him, who impugns this exclusive title, to show that the possession arose in some way which has preserved his own right.

In every case the person who has been out of possession for more than twelve years must make out some prima-facie title, and some agreement or acknowledgment of that title, such that possession is deprived of its ordinary effect through being held on a joint right, or a subordinate right.

3. Where an adjudication between the defendants is necessary to give the appropriate relief to the plaintiff, the adjudication will be res judicata between the defendants as well as between the plaintiff and defendants. But for this effect to arise, there must be a conflict of interests between the defendants and a judgment defining the real rights and obligations of the defendants inter se. Without necessity a judgment will not be res judicata amongst defendants, nor will it be res judicata amongst them by mere inference from the fact that they have been collectively defeated in resisting a claim to a share made against them as a group.—11 Bom. 216.

Article 127 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877) applies to a suit by a Mahomedan by partition of joint family property.—14 Bom. 70.

The possession by a Mahomedan co-sharer of property which he has redeemed from a mortgage does not become adverse to the other co-sharers until some exclusive title is set up. Ramchandra Yashvant v. Sadashiv A'baji, I. L. R., 11 Bom. 422, and Bhadin v. Shekh Ismail, I. L. R., 11 Bom. 425, referred to.—16 Bom 191.

A Muhammadan family consisting of three brothers and their uncle jointly owned certain immoveable property which the uncle managed. Two of the brothers effected a settlement of accounts with the uncle, with reference to the profits of the estate; the share of the three brothers was appropriated; and the money representing that share was deposited with the uncle. Subsequently the two who had effected the settlement withdrew their portion of the common share, and the third brothers sued the uncle to recover a sum of money as his one-third portion. He alleged that he had been deceived by the defendant into supposing that his portion was included in the amount withdrawn by his brothers; but he did not base his suit upon any allegation of fraud. It was contended that art. 127, sch. ii, of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877) applied to the suit, limitation running from a date whereon the defendant had denied all liability in respect of the plaintiff's demand. Held that the amount claimed could not, under the circumstances, be regarded as joint family property, that the defendant's denial of the plaintiff's right to recover that amount was not an exclusion of the plaintiff from such property, and that, consequently, art. 127 did not apply to the suit.—10 Al. 109.

The words "joint family property" in No. 127 of sch. ii of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877) mean "the property of a joint family." Hence the period of limitation prescribed by No. 127 of sch. ii of the Limitation Act will not apply to a case in which members of a Muhammadan family are suing for possession by right of inheritance of shares in immoveable property alleged to have been that of the deceased common ancestor of themselves and some of the defendants, and of which they allege they had been dispossessed by the defendants. Bavasha v. Masumsha dissented. from.—13 Al. 282.

See I. L. R., 7 Cal. 461, noted under sec. 2; 15 Madr. 60, noted under art. 123; 15 Madr. 186, noted under sec. 42 of the Specific Relief Act.

128.—By a Hindu for arrears of maintenance. | Twelve years ... | When the arrears are payable.

129.—By a Hindu for a declaration of his right to maintenance. | Ditto. ... | When the right is denied.

Notes.

Art. 129 of Sch. II of Act IX of 1871, the Indian Limitation Act using the expression "suit to set aside an adoption," denoted a suit bringing the validity of an adoption into question; and the rule of limitation, given by that Article, applied to all suits in which the suitor could not succeed without displacing an apparent adoption, in virtue of which the opposite party was in possession. The plaintiffs, as collateral heirs of a childless Hindu, questioned the adoptions purporting to have been made by his widows, in prusuanee of authority from him; such adoptions having been followed by continuous possession, and having been recognized in formal instruments, proceedings, and decrees to which the plaintiffs were parties:—Held, on the ground that the adoptions were brought into question more than twelve years after their date, though less than twelve years after the plaintiffs' titles (if any) had accrued at the death of the surviving widow, that the suits were barred under art. 129 of Sch. II of Act IX of 1871. Part of the language of the judgment in Raja Bahadar Singh v. Achumbit Lall, L. R., 6 Ind. Ap., 110, referred to, and that case, in which the plaintiffs' claim was not affected by the widow's adoption, distinguished from the present.—I. L. R., 13 Cal. 308.

130.—For the resumption or assessment of rent-free land.	Twelve years	When the right to resume or assess the land first accrues.
--	--------------	--

Notes.

Although a grant of a mokarary lease in lieu of maintenance may be resumable by the grantor and his heirs, yet, if the grantor or any of his successors receives distinct notice of a claim on the part of the grantee to hold in perpetuity and not subject to resumption and allows 12 years to go by without contesting such claims, he (such grantor or successor) will be barred for the time of his own enjoyment.—I. L. R., 3 Cal. 793. See also 9 Bom. H. C. R., 260. Al. H. C. Rep. 1870, p. 106

The plaintiff in 1862 obtained a decree for resumption of land held under an invalid lakheraj title created before 1790, the decree declaring the land liable to assessment. In a suit brought more than twelve years after the decree against the representatives of the defendant in the suit of 1862 to assess the land: Held, that the decree of 1862 did not create the relationship of landlord and tenant between the parties, and that the suit was therefore, barred under art. 130 of the Limitation Act XV of 1877.—16 Cal. 450 note.

The plaintiff brought a suit in 1861 against C for resumption of, and for declaration of his right to assess rent upon, C's lands within his zemin-dari which C held as lakheraj. That suit was presumably instituted under Regulation II of 1819, sec. 30, which related only to resumption of lakheraj lands existing prior to 1790, but there was nothing to show conclusively under what law it was instituted, or whether the lakheraj grant was one subsequent or anterior to 1790. In that suit an ex parte decree was passed in 1863 that "the suit be decreed, and the land in dispute be declared to be shukur, i. e., liable to assessment. In a suit brought in 1886 against the representatives of C, after serving a notice upon them to pay rent for the land at a certain rate, to assess the land at the rate mentioned in the notice, and for the recovery of rent at that rate: Held, that the decree of 1863 had not the effect of creating the relationship of landlord and tenant between the parties, and therefore the suit, not having been brought within 12 years from the date of that decree, was barred by art. 130 of the Limitation Act XV of 1877.—16 Cal. 449 note.

- 181.—To establish a periodically recurring right. Twelve years ... | When the plaintiff is first refused the enjoyment of the right.

Notes.

A suit for patta, or right to worship an idol in turn, is a periodically recurring right within the meaning of Art. 131.—I. L. R., 8 Cal. 807.

S, being entitled to a monthly allowance from a zemindari under an agreement, dated 1861, died in that year. In 1867 K, his senior widow, claimed the allowance; the zemindar contended that the allowance was personal to S, and did not descend to his heirs. K obtained a decree. In 1864 R, the junior widow of S, sued K to establish the right of her son M to succeed to the estate of S as his son and sole heir, and obtained a decree from the Privy Council in 1871. In 1872 M demanded and was refused the allowance from the zemindari. In 1875 M came of age, and in 1879 brought a suit against the zemindar to establish his right to the allowance :—Held, that the claim by M was not barred by limitation.—7 Madr. 341.

The right to the revenue on certain land having been granted to the trustees of a mosque, the said grant was confirmed by Government in 1866. In 1883, a suit was brought to recover arrears of revenue from the owners of the land. It was found that no payment of revenue had ever been made by the defendants to the plaintiff and the suit was dismissed as barred by limitation under art. 144, sch. II of the Limitation Act:—Held, that the suit was not barred and that the plaintiff was entitled to recover 12 years' arrears of revenue.—10 Madr. 115.

In a suit by zemindar against the grantee of an inam to recover arrears of kattubadi, it appeared that no payment had been made in respect of kattubadi, for a period of twelve years before suit. The suit was dismissed in the Court of first appeal on the findings (1) that no exchange of patta and muchalka had been proved, (2) that the plaintiff had not proved his right to the kattubadi, and (3) that his right to it, if any, was barred by limitation. On second appeal by the plaintiff:—Held, that the second and third of the above findings should be accepted and the second appeal dismissed Alubi v. Kunhi Bi (I. L. R., 10 Madr. 115) distinguished. Per cur: We do not think it necessary to consider whether if there had been a grant subject to kattubadi, patta and muchalka ought to have been exchanged.—15 Madr. 161.

A suit by a co-sharer to establish his title to a share in an annual allowance received by the defendant from Government is one falling under article 131, and not 144, of the second Schedule of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877). The plaintiffs sued to establish their title to a half share in the deshmukhi allowance annually received by the defendant from the Mamlatdar's treasury, and also to recover six years' arrears. Both the lower Courts found that the plaintiffs had not received their share of the allowance at any time within twelve years before suit, and, therefore, rejected the plaintiffs' claim as time-barred. Held, in second appeal, that the plaintiffs' claim for a declaration of their title to the allowance was governed by article 131 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877), under which article it would not be barred by the mere fact of the plaintiffs' exclusion from enjoyment of their share for twelve years before suit, unless it were shown that such exclusion was the result of refusal made upon a demand. The period of twelve years provided by that article would run from the time when the plaintiffs were first refused the enjoyment of the right. Held, further, that the claim for arrears of the allowance fell under article 62 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877). Held, also, that if the claim for a declaration of title to the allowance were barred, the claim for arrears would also be barred.—15 Bom. 135.

132. -To enforce payment of money charged upon immoveable property. Twelve years When the money sued for becomes due.

Explanation.—The allowance and fees respectively called malikana and haqqas shall, for the purpose of this clause, be deemed to be money charged upon immoveable property.

Notes.

Malikana is an annual recurring charge on immoveable property and may be sued for within 12 years from the time when the money sued for becomes due.—I. L. R., 5 Cal. 921.

An allowance for the maintenance of a younger member of a family, was charged upon the inheritance to which the eldest male member alone succeeded. In a suit for such an allowance brought by a younger brother against the elder, who had succeeded their deceased father in the possession of the estate, held that an order made dismissing a claim for maintenance preferred by such younger brother against their father in his life time, founded on an ekrarnama, did not afford a defence under sec. 3 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Held, also, that the brothers having made an agreement, fixing the allowance for maintenance at a certain sum, the younger brother agreeing to receive a less sum for a defined period, he could only obtain a decree for the allowance so reduced. An objection taken on this appeal, that this suit should have been brought on that agreement, held taken too late ; the defendant having been made aware of the agreement at the hearing, and not having objected on this ground in the first Appellate Court. A suit for arrears of such maintenance, within twelve years, is within under Act XV of 1877.—9 Cal. 945.

A mortgaged his property to B, in 1867, by a simple mortgage. In 1868 A sold the property to C. In 1870 B brought a suit on his mortgage against A only and obtained a mortgage decree. In 1883 A brought a suit against C to enforce his lien against the mortgaged property. C pleaded that the suit was barred by limitation, under cl. 132. :—Held, that the suit was governed by art. 147, and therefore was not barred by limitation.—12 Cal. 111.

By a mortgage bond, dated the 28th Magh 1281 B. S. (9th February 1875), it was provided that, if the mortgagors should fail to pay the money secured thereby according to the terms thereof, the mortgagees should immediately institute a suit and realize the amount due by sale of the mortgaged property, and that if the proceeds of such sale should not be sufficient to liquidate the debt, the mortgagees should realize the balance from the persons and other properties of the mortgagors. It was further agreed that the principal and interest secured by the bond should be repaid in the month of Magh 1282 (January-February 1876). In a suit instituted on the 9th October 1882 upon the mortgage to recover the amount due by the sale of the mortgaged property and the balance, if any, from the persons of the mortgagors :—Held, that the bond in question provided for two remedies in one suit and did not contemplate a second suit being instituted to recover the balance from the persons of the mortgagors in the event of the first remedy against the mortgaged property proving insufficient to pay the debt in full, and consequently that the cause of action against the persons of the mortgagors accrued upon the date on which the mortgage money became due, and as the suit was instituted more than six years after that date, the plaintiff's claim was barred by limitation, so far as the personal liability of the mortgagors was concerned :—Held, also, that art. 132, only refers to suits to enforce payment of money charged upon immoveable property by the sale of such property.—12 Cal. 389.

A suit on a mortgage bond to enforce payment by sale of premises hypothecated is governed by art. 132 of the Limitation Act. Brojo Lal Sing v. Gour Charan Sen, I. L. R., 12 Cal., 111, overruled ; Shib Lal v. Ganga Pershad, I. L. R., 6 Al., 551, dissented from. The clear distinction drawn for the first time between “mortgage” and “charge” in the Transfer of Property Act is not observed in the Limitation Act. Article 147 of the Limitation Act relates to a special kind of mortgage known as English mortgage, and includes only that class of suits in which the remedy is either foreclosure or sale in the alternative.—14 Cal. 730.

A will devising immoveables stated that the father of the devisee had lent a sum of money to the testator, and directed the devisee to repay the debt with interest. This was construed to be a charge on immoveables, and it was held that a suit, brought by the auction-purchaser of the creditor's claim, to recover the above-mentioned debt, was within art. 132 of the second Schedule of Act XV of 1877 ; and having been brought within twelve years from the date when the debt was so charged was not barred by time.—15 Cal. 66.

In suits to recover the principal and interest of a loan secured by a mortgage of immoveable property, interest for twelve years is recoverable by virtue of Article 132 of Schedule II of the Indian Limitation Act, 1877.—6 Madr. 417.

In 1884 N sued A to recover the principal and interest due on a registered bond executed in 1870. It was stipulated that the amount should be repaid with interest in 1871 and certain immoveable property was hypothecated as security for repayment of the debt :—Held, that the suit did not fall under art. 147 which allows sixty years to a mortgagee to sue for foreclosure or sale from the date the money becomes due, but under art. 132 of the same schedule which allows twelve years to enforce a payment of money charged on immoveable property.—9 Madr. 218.

Article 132 of sch. II of the Indian Limitation Act, 1877, by which a period of 12 years is allowed to enforce payment of money charged on immoveable property, refers only to suits to enforce payment by sale of the property charged and not to a claim to enforce the personal remedy on a registered bond by which immoveable property is pledged as security for the debt.—10 Madr. 100.

The period of limitation for suits upon hypothecation bonds, which contain no power of sale, or effect no transfer of property, executed before the Transfer of property Act came into operation, is 12 years under sch. II, art. 132, of the Limitation Act of 1877—Aliba v. Nanu (I. L. R. 9 Madr. 218) followed. Per Muttusawmi Ayyar, J.—"The transaction in suit appears to be of the kind described in sec. 100 of the Transfer of Property Act, which defines how a charge is created ;" but "it seems to me that the Transfer of Property Act does not invest all prior hypothecations with the rights and liabilities arising from simple mortgages, whether or not those transactions satisfy the requirements of the definition it contains of simple mortgages."—10 Madr. 509.

The plaintiff held a mortgage of certain immoveable property given to him by the defendant to secure the repayment of a loan of money with interest. The plaint stated the fact of the mortgage, but prayed only for a money decree. The mortgage contained a personal undertaking to repay. Plaintiff's counsel, directly upon the case being called on for hearing and before the case had in any way been gone into applied (under sec. 43 of Act X of 1877, Civil Procedure Code,) for leave to reserve his remedies under the mortgage, taking then only a money decree, an application which, it is provided by that section, must be made "before the first hearing". Held that the application was not too late. The said mortgage was dated 16th February, 1870, and the plaint in this suit was filed on the 28th April, 1881. The plaintiff maintained that he was not time-barred, as he had twelve years within which to bring the suit under article 132 of Sched. II of Act XV of 1877. Held that plaintiff was too late in bringing a suit for a money decree on the promise to pay in the mortgage, inasmuch as the article referred to was meant to apply to suits brought to enforce against the property payment of "money charged upon immoveable property," and not, under any circumstances whatever, to a suit for a mere money decree.—5 Bom. 463.

Art. 132 applies to a suit by a mortgagee to obtain a mere money decree, to which suit, therefore, the limitation of 12 years, from the time the money sued for becomes due is applicable.—6 Bom. (F. B.) 719.

The special provision of article 147 applies to all suits properly brought by a mortgagee for foreclosure or sale, while the general provision of article 132 applies to suits for sale by a creditor having a right to realise a charge not amounting to a mortgage. Where immoveable property is made by act parties security for the payment of a debt, but no power of sale, without the intervention of a Court, is given to the creditor, there is no transfer to him of an interest in the property until a decree for sale has been made in his favour and the transaction does not amount to a mortgage. When immoveable property has been so made security for the payment of a debt, there can be no foreclosure by the creditor, unless the terms of the contract admit of it.—10 Bom. 519.

In 1867 the defendant borrowed Rs. 125 from the plaintiff and gave him a bond agreeing to pay interest at two per cent. per month. The bond provided that the whole debt, including principal and interest, was to be repaid within four years from the date of its execution. It further stated that certain property had been mortgaged to the plaintiff as security for the loan, and that if the principal and interest were not paid within the time fixed, the plaintiff was to take up the management of the property.

It also contained the following clause: "We will redeem the mortgaged property on the day on which we shall pay the amount of the principal and the amount of the interest that may be found due on making up the account." In 1886 the plaintiff sued the defendants to recover, by sale of the property, the sum of Rs. 250 as principal and interest due on the bond. It was contended that the bond created merely a charge upon the property in question, and was not a mortgage, and that the suit was barred by article 132 of Schedule II of the Limitation Act XV of 1877. Held, that the document was a mortgage, and that the suit was not barred, being governed by article 147 and not by article 123 of Schedule II of the Limitation Act.—13 Bom. 90.

In a suit by a mortgagee to enforce the mortgage No. 132, sch. ii, of the Limitation Act, 1877, is not applicable, so far as relief against the mortgagor personally is claimed. Lallubhai v. Naran, I. L. R., 6 Bom. 719, dissented from.—5 Al. 461.

A suit upon a bond for money payable on demand, by which immoveable property is hypothecated as security for the debt, wherein the relief prayed is recovery of the amount with interest by establishment of the right to enforce the hypothecation by auction-sale of the interest of the obligor in such property, is governed by art. 147, and not by art. 132 of Act XV of 1877 (Limitation Act).—6 Al. 551.

K borrowed from C a sum of Rs. 571, and at the same time executed a bond whereby he mortgaged usufructually to his creditor his "entire right and share" in a particular estate, in lieu of the above mentioned sum; and it was agreed that C might realise the debt from the rents and profits of two years, and that, as soon as it had been realised, his possession should cease:—Held that the money borrowed by K was "money charged upon immoveable property," it being charged upon rents and profits in alieno solo which, in English law would be classed as "incorporeal hereditaments," but which by the law of India are included in immoveable property; and that therefore the limitation applicable to a suit for the recovery of the money was that provided in No. 132. Dulbi v. Bahadur and Pestouji Bezouji v. Abdoul Ruhiman dissented from. Maharana Fetchsangji Jasmantsanji v. Desai Kullionraiji Hakoonathraji referred to. Lallubhai v. Naran followed.—7 Al. 120.*

That there is a personal liability upon an instrument charging a debt upon immoveable property, does not carry with it the effect that the period of limitation fixed for personal demands by Act IX of 1871 is extended; by reason of this demand being, thereby, brought within the meaning of art. 132 which applies to claims "for money charged upon immoveable property." A mortgagee of lands sought, after the lapse of more than six years from the date when the mortgage-money was payable, to enforce two distinct remedies, the one against the property mortgaged, and the other against the mortgagor personally, on the contract to repay the mortgage-money:—Held that art. 132, above-mentioned, applied only to suits to raise money charged on immoveable property, out of that property; and the twelve years, bar did not apply to the personal remedy, as to which the shorter period prescribed in art. 65 of the same schedule applied.—7 Al. 502.

See I. L. R., 10 Madr. 115, & 15 Madr. 161, noted under art. 131; 11 Bom. 313, 15 Cal. 542, 6 Cal. 549, & 15 Madr. 258, noted under art. 99; 8 Bom. 234, noted under art. 62; 9 Al. 158, noted under sec. 98 of the Transfer of Property Act.

Notes.

Suit, in 1885, by the assignee of the equity of redemption to redeem a mortgage of 1826. The mortgagees were put into possession under the mortgage and no interest was paid. In 1885, the mortgage premises were sold at a Court sale in execution of a decree against the mortgagees as if they formed part of their family property, and the defendant derived title from the execution purchaser who had dealt with it as absolute owner:—Held, that the suit was barred under Limitation Act, 1877, sch. II, art. 134.—I. L. R., 12 Madr. 316.

Held, that the expression “purchaser for valuable consideration,” in article 134 of the Limitation Acts IX of 1871 and XV of 1877, includes a mortgagee as well as a purchaser properly so called. Semble.—The words “bona fide,” which appeared in article 134, Schedule II of the Limitation Act (IX of 1871), were advisedly omitted from article 134, Schedule II of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877), to exclude the possible inference that absence of notice of the real owner’s claim was necessary to enable a purchaser to avail himself of the article.—15 Bom. 583.

It was not intended that property which would pass on the sale by a mortgagee of his interest should come within the scope of art. 134, schedule ii. of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877). That article was intended to protect, after the expiration of twelve years from the date of a purchase, a person who, happening to purchase from a mortgagee, had reasonable grounds for believing, and did believe, that his vendor had the power to convey and was conveying to him an absolute interest, and not merely the interest of a mortgagee. Radanath Doss v. Gisborne and Co., Piary Lal v. Saliga, and Kamal Singh v. Butal Fatima, referred to. Contemporaneously with the execution of a registered deed of sale of zemindari property in 1835 for Rs. 4,000, the vendee executed a deed in favour of the vendors, which also was registered, and by which he agreed that if within ten years the vendors should pay Rs. 4,000 in a lump sum without interest, he would accept the same and cancel the sale, and that he should be in possession during that period. This transaction admittedly amounted to a mortgage by conditional sale. The mortgagee remained in possession, and his name was entered as that of proprietor in the Collector’s register, in which no allusion was made to a mortgage. In 1840 his rights in this property were sold by auction for arrears of Government revenue due by him on account of other land and apparently no notice was given by any one at or prior to the sale that it was the mortgagee's interest only which was about to be or was being sold. The property was purchased for Rs. 3,000 by S who took possession, and in 1845 sold it for Rs. 3,000 to T, who took possession and in 1847 sold it for the same sum to C. On the occasion of each transfer, the name of the transferee was entered in the Collector's register as that of proprietor. No application for foreclosure was made at any time. In 1885, the representatives of the mortgagors brought a suit against the representative of C for redemption of the mortgage, and for mesne profits. The defendant pleaded (i) that the suit was barred by limitation under art. 134, sch. II of Act XV of 1877, (ii) that the several transferees were innocent purchasers for valuable consideration without notice, who had purchased in each case from the person who was, with the consent, express or implied, of the person for the time being interested the ostensible owner and had in each case, prior to the purchase, taken reasonable care to ascertain that the transferor had power to make the transfer, and had acted in good faith. Held that art. 134 of the Limitation Act did not apply to the case, inasmuch as that article referred only to persons purchasing what was de facto a mortgage, having reasonable grounds for the belief and believing that it was an absolute title; and that, having regard to sec. 29 of Regulation XI of 1822, to the presumption that the several transferees knew the law and made inquiries as to the interest they were purchasing, and examined the register in which the deed constituting the transaction of 1835 a mortgage was registered, and also having regard to the fact that Rs. 3,000 only were paid as purchase money in each case, and to the circumstance that it was doubtful whether a purchaser at a formal auction-sale such as that in question could be said to have purchased without notice an absolute interest from the mortgagee, it must be inferred that the transferees knew, or might or ought to, have known, unless they wilfully abstained from inquiry, that the interest which they respectively were purchasing was merely that of a mortgagee. Sobhag Chand Gulab Chand v. Bhai Chand referred to. Held that as by Regulation XVII of 1866 mortgagors in such a case as the present were entitled to redeem within sixty years, the plaintiffs were entitled to a decree for redemption.—9 Al. 97.

135.—Suit instituted in a Court not established by Royal Charter by a mortgagee for possession of immovable property mortgaged.	Twelve years	When the mortgagor's right to possession determines.
---	--------------	--

Notes.

Under a mortgage deed, which by its express terms allows the mortgagee a right to take possession upon default by the mortgagor in payment of the mortgage money, the mortgagee, as absolute owner of the property, has twelve years from the time at which his right to possession commences, in which he may bring his suit for possession. But where there is no such stipulation in the mortgage, the right of the mortgagee to take possession does not accrue until after the expiration of the year of grace.—I. L. R., 10 Cal. 68.

Under Act XIV of 1859, a mortgagee was ordinarily bound to bring his suit within 12 years from the date of default, and was barred thereafter, unless it could be shown (or might properly be inferred) that the mortgagor or the person in possession held by permission of the mortgagee after the date of default. On the 17th of November 1865 certain property situate in the district of the 24 Pergunnahs was mortgaged by the owner thereof to secure the repayment of Rs. 15,785, with interest at 18 per cent. on the 17th February 1866. The mortgagor and mortgagee were Hindus, and the mortgage was in the ordinary form of an English mortgage, of real property. After the date of the mortgage, and before the 15th February 1872, the mortgagor sold various portions of the mortgaged property. On the 15th February 1872 the mortgagee filed a foreclosure petition in the court of the judge of the district of the 24 Pergunnahs under Regulation XVII of 1806. Notice of the petition was served on the mortgagor alone. Neither principal nor interest was paid by the mortgagor, and on the 6th of September 1882, the assignee of the mortgagee filed a suit for foreclosure against the mortgagor, and the purchasers of the various portions of the property, under the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act, praying for foreclosure and sale :—Held, that as against the purchasers from the mortgagor the suit was barred by limitation under art. 135.—12 Cal. 614.

A mortgage by conditional sale, before the operation of the Transfer of Property Act 1882, on default made in payment, proceedings having been taken by the mortgagee under Regulation XVII of 1806, entitled the mortgagee to possession after the year of grace. On the mortgagor's right of possession being thus brought to an end without a suit for foreclosure, a right of entry accrued to the mortgagee whose suit for possession, unless brought within twelve years from the date "when the mortgagor's right to possession determined," was barred by art. 135 of sch. ii of Act XV of 1877. This Regulation foreclosure was applied to a mortgage, dated 17th November 1865, between Hindus, with power of entry and sale, in the English form, of land in the 24 Pergunnahs District (which mortgage, therefore, received the same effect as a mortgage by conditional sale), and the proceedings were perfect on or before 31st March 1873 as against the mortgagor, whose right of possession determined on the 17th February 1866. Parcels of the mortgaged land had been sold by the mortgagor down to August 1866, and the purchasers, not having been served with notice of the above proceedings under the regulation, were not parties thereto, so that the relation of mortgagee and mortgagor continued to subsist, as between them and the mortgagee, notwithstanding the determination of the mortgagor's right of possession. In a suit brought in 1882 against these purchasers, as also against the mortgagor, for foreclosure and possession, by a transferee who had acquired the mortgagee's interest in 1879 : Held, that the mortgagor's right of possession determined on the above date, and that the mortgagee's right of suing for possession having been extinguished on the expiration of twelve years from that time, viz., on the 17th February 1878, such right was not revived by the subsequent creation of suits for foreclosure, on the coming into operation of the Transfer of Property Act 1882 ; and that the title of the plaintiff, made through the mortgagee, to sue the purchasers for possession of the mortgaged land, was barred by time under art. 135, as against them. The suit therefore was dismissed as against the purchasers ; but as against the mortgagor, who made no defence, the right of possession in the mortgagee consequent on the proceedings under the Regulation in force till its repeal in 1882 supported the decree made against him by the Courts below, from which he had not appealed.—16 Cal. 693.

On the 26th of September 1867, A executed a conveyance of certain land to B for valuable consideration. On the same day A acknowledged the execution of the deed before the Registrar, who afterwards registered the same on the 19th of October 1867; B never entered into possession of the land. On the 14th November 1874, C purchased this land at a sale in execution of a decree which he had obtained against B; C did not enter into possession of the land, but on the 26th of September 1879, brought a suit for the recovery thereof against A, who had all along remained in possession:—Held that the suit was barred by limitation, under arts. 136, 137.—I. Notes.

A purchased the right, title, and interest of B, a judgment-debtor, in certain lands, at an auction-sale, in execution of a decree in October, 1863; was put in formal possession in January, 1865; and died without ever having obtained actual possession. After his decease, a suit was filed in September, 1875, on behalf of his minor son C, against the defendants, who obstructed his taking actual possession. Held that, if B was in possession at the time of the sale, that is to say, within twelve years before the institution of the suit, C was not barred by limitation.—I. L. R., 4 Cal. 216.

Where it was shown in a suit by an auction-purchaser at an execution sale that the formal possession obtained by him through the Court had not been followed by any act of possession, and consequently that it had been infructuous. Held, that the purchaser was entitled to bring a suit to obtain actual possession, but was bound to bring it within twelve years from the date of the sale, the period prescribed by art. 138, Sch. II of the Limitation Act (Act XV of 1877). The decisions in Kristo Gobindo Kur v. Gunga Pershad Surmah, 25 W. R. 372, and Lolit Coomar Bose v. Ishan Chunder Chuckerbutty, 10 C. L. R., 258, require such purchaser to obtain possession through the Court before bringing his suit, but they do not preclude him from enforcing his right by suit, when the formal possession given by the Court has failed to put him in actual possession.—10 Cal. 402.

A purchaser at a sale in execution not having applied to the Court for possession under sec. 318 of the Code of Civil Procedure, brought a regular suit to obtain possession of the property purchased : Held, that, although a remedy might be open to the plaintiff under sec. 318, still he was not precluded from bringing a regular suit, the remedies being concurrent. The words “the date of the sale,” in the third column of art. 138, Sch. II of the Limitation Act, 1877, signify the date of the actual sale, and not that of the confirmation of such sale.—I. L. R., 14 Cal. 644.

139.—By a landlord to recover possession from a tenant. | Twelve years ... | When the tenancy is determined.

Notes.

In a suit to recover possession of a house, the plaintiffs alleged that their predecessor in title had permitted A, the father of the defendants, to occupy the house in question without paying any rent for it, and that since A's death which took place about twenty years before the institution of the suit, the defendants had been permitted to reside therein without paying rent. The defendants contended, that the plaintiffs' predecessor in title had made a gift of the house to A; that he had remained in possession of it until his death; and that since then they had been in possession of the house by virtue of the gift. Held that the suit was barred by limitation under Act XV of 1877, sched. ii., art. 142. The meaning of art. 143 is, that where there has been possession followed by a discontinuance of possession, time runs from the moment of its discontinuance, whether there has or has not been any adverse possession, and without regard to the intention with which, or the circumstances under which, possession was discontinued. Articles 139, 142, and 144 of Act XV of 1877 considered.—I. L. R., 5 Cal. 579.

Where a permanent tenure has been granted by a ghatwal, if the successor of such ghatwal, being one of the ghatwals, to whom Regulation XXIX of 1814 applies, wishes to resume that tenure, he must bring his suit within twelve years after succeeding to the ghatwali estate. The possession of the tenant is adverse to him from the time of the decease of his immediate predecessor. Article 193, Sch. II of Act XV of 1877, regarding suits by landlords to recover possession from tenants giving twelve years time from the determination of the tenancy, does not apply to cases in which the plaintiff seeks to recover a tenure permanent in its nature and not determinable by notice.—9 Cal. 411.

The plaintiff stated that in the year 1862 he purchased a talook in some of the defendants then held an ijara for a term of years expiring in 1868. The talook had previously been a khas mehal in the possession of the Government, and was bought by the plaintiff at an auction-sale held by the Collector. The plaintiff also stated that the ijaradar defendants, in collusion with the other defendants, had continued in possession of the lands held in ijara after the term of the ijara had expired, and had refused to give up possession thereof to the plaintiff. The Judge of the lower Appellate Court found that the defendants (other than the ijaradars) had been in possession previously to the sale in 1862, and he also found that there was no evidence to support the charge of collusion with the ijaradar defendants. He therefore dismissed the suit, (which was brought in 1880) on the ground of limitation. Held, on second appeal, that the plaintiff's cause of action arose on the expiration of the ijara, and that the suit, whether governed by Articles 139 or 144 of the Limitation Act, Act XV of 1877, was not barred on the ground of limitation. Woomesh Chunder Goopto v. Raj Narain Roy, 10 W. R., 15, cited.—9 Cal. 367.

Although the English rule of law as to the nature of the possession of a tenant for a term of years, who holds over, has been adopted in British India, the rule of limitation prescribed by 3 & 4 Will. IV, C 27, by which time begins to run against the landlord from the date of his right of entry, has not been adopted in Indian Limitation Act, 1877. If a tenant for years holds over in British India, time does not begin to run against the landlord until the tenancy on sufferance has been determined.—8 Madr. 424.

Seemle, that, in Hindu law, where a mother succeeds to property as heir of her son, and her right thereto becomes barred by adverse possession, the next heirs of her son on her death will have twelve years therefrom in which to sue for possession of the property.—I. L. R., 11 Cal. 791.

141.—Like suit by a Hindu or Muhammadan entitled to the possession of immoveable property on the death of a Hindu or Muhammadan female. Twelve years ... When the female dies.

Notes.

In 1846, a widow, under an ikrarnama, made over to her brother-in-law certain properties formerly belonging to the estate of one Luchmi Narain, her late husband. The widow died in 1878. In March 1879, a suit was brought by the daughters of Lutchmi Narain to recover the properties formerly belonging to their father, from the hands of certain vendees. Held, that the suit by the reversioners was not barred under art. 141 of Act XV of 1877, there having been no possession adverse to the widow, by dispossession for more than twelve years, the widow's cause of action having ceased when she entered into the ikrarnama in 1846, and gave up her right to the property ; nor, under sched. ii of Act XV of 1877, could the right of the plaintiffs be said to be barred by any Act repealed thereby, inasmuch as art. 142 of Act IX of 1871 prescribes the same period of limitation as is prescribed in art. 141 of Act XV of 1877 ; and that although, under Act XIV of 1859, repealed by Act IX of 1871, it was decided in Nobin Chunder Chuckerbutty v. Guru Persad Doss, B. L. R., Sup. Vol., 1008 ; S. C. , 9 W. R. , 505, that adverse possession which bars a widow also bars the reversionary heirs, yet the exception laid down in that case would be applicable, and would save limitation.—I. L. R., 8 Cal. 442.

Under Article 141 of Schedule II, Act XV of 1877, a reversioner who succeeds to immoveable property has twelve years to bring his suit for possession from the time when his estate falls into possession.—9 Cal. 934.

A title by adverse possession for more than twelve years accrues even during the lifetime of a Hindu widow, but if possession arises directly from any invalid alienation on her part, special provision is made for the right to sue on the parts of the reversioners within twelve years from her death and the accrual of their title.—9 Cal. 93.

N, a Mahomedan, died in 1849 leaving immoveable property which was inherited by his mother B, his brother E, and his sister A. It was found that A was never in possession of the share inherited by her, and that she died in 1878 :—Held, in a suit against E and his son, brought in 1884 by A's heirs for possession of that share, that art. 141 did not apply, and that the suit as to that share was barred. Per WILSON, J.—Art. 141 of Sch. II of Act XV of 1877 refers to suits by persons claiming on the death of a Hindu or Mahomedan female, under an independent title, in the same way as in respect of suit by remaindermen, reversioners, and others, Art. 140 does not apply to the case of a person suing on the very same cause of action which accrued to a female, and suing by right of being her heir. Ahamed.—12 Cal. 594.

Plaintiff sued in 1887 to recover property as part of the estate of his maternal grandfather, who died about 1845, leaving (1) a widow, who inherited the property and died in 1846, (2) his daughter by her, who took the property on her mother's death and alienated it to the defendants about 1850 and died before suit, and (3) the plaintiff's mother, who was his daughter by another wife. The plaintiff's mother made no claim on the property and died in 1883.—Held, the suit was not barred by limitation.—13 Madr. 512.

K died childless in 1869, leaving two widows, C and N, him surviving. By his will he bequeathed certain legacies and gave four immoveable properties to his widows for their lives. The rest of his estate and, on the death of his widows, these four properties also, he left to dharma. C died in 1871. N died in 1888. The plaintiff was the son of the testator's brother Govindji, who died in 1884. In December, 1888, he filed this suit, claiming to be entitled, as heir of his uncle the testator, to the said immoveable properties and to such portion of the moveable property as had not been disposed of by the widows. He contended that the bequest in the will to dharma was void, and that the residue consequently came to him as heir. The defendants (inter alia) pleaded limitation. Held—(1) that the bequest to dharma was void ; and that there was an intestacy as regards the four immoveable properties after the widows' death ; and as to the residue ; (2) That the suit was not barred by limitation. The article of the Limitation Act XV of 1877 applicable was article 141. Under that article the plaintiff had twelve years from the death of N, which took place in 1888. As long as either C or N lived, the plaintiff had no right of action. He could not sue for possession, and he had no right whatever to interfere in the management or disposition of the income of the property.—14 Bom. 482.

In a suit by a person who had objected to an attachment of immoveable property in execution of a decree, and whose objection, had been disallowed, to set aside the order disallowing the objection, for removal of the attachment, and for possession of the property, the defendants, at whose instance the attachment had been made, set up a title based on the adoption of the judgment-debtor by the widow of the person whom the plaintiff claimed to succeed by right of inheritance :—Held that the limitation applicable to the suit was art. 141 and not art. 118 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877), the suit being not to obtain any declaration that the alleged adoption was invalid, but for recovery of possession of immoveable property for which there was a special limitation.—8 Al. 644.

The plaintiffs sued for possession of certain zemindari property as reversioners to the estate of one C, their right to sue having, accrued as alleged, by them on the death of the widow of C, which took place on 14th Oct., 1884. The defendant, alleging himself to be the adopted son of C, and being in possession of the property in dispute since the death, contended that the claim was barred. The Court of first instance dismissed the claim as barred by art. 118 of the Limitation Act, and in appeal the District Judge held the claim was barred by defendants adverse possession over the property for more than twelve years. On second appeal it was contended that the suit being by a Hindu entitled to possession as a reversioner on the death of a female, was governed by art. 141 of the Act and therefore not barred. Held, that as on the facts found the adopted son held adversely to the widow, adverse possession which barred the widow barred also the reversioners and therefore the claim was barred. The Shiva Ganga Case was referred to. The following cases were cited in the course of the argument, Raj Bahadoor Singh v. Achambit Lal Jagadamba, Chowdhrani v. Dakhina Mohun, Rajendranath Holder v. Jogendro Nath Banerjee.—10 Al. 485.

Plaintiffs sued for their share in the estate of their deceased father and mother. The defendants were the brother and a sister and a step-mother of the plaintiffs. As regards the claim of the plaintiffs to their shares in the estate of their mother, the defendants pleaded that the same was barred by limitation, inasmuch as their mother died on the 22nd Jan. 1873, and the suit was not instituted till the 29th of January, 1885. The Court below finding that the mother died on the 22nd January, 1873, held that art. 141, sch. ii. Limitation Act, barred the claim and dismissed the suit. Held that art. 141 of the Limitation Act does not apply to a suit by an heir at-law for possession of immoveable property in that character, but to a suit by a Hindu or Muhammadan who, prior to the death of a female, occupied the position of a remainder-man, or reversioner or a devisee; and on the death of the female sues on the basis of that character.—10 Al. 343.

The daughter of a separated Hindu, who was entitled to succeed to her father's immoveable property upon his widow's death, instituted, after the widow's death, a suit for possession of such property against certain persons who, upon the Hindu's death, had obtained possession and held it adversely to the widow. Held by the Full Bench that art. 141 of sch. ii of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877) was applicable, and that limitation ran from the date of the widow's death. Srinath Kur v. Prosunno Kumar Ghose, followed.—14 Al. 156.

142. —For possession of immovable property, when the plaintiff, while in possession of the property, has been dispossessed or has discontinued the possession.	Twelve years	The date of the dispossession or discontinuance.
---	--------------	--

Notes.

A suit for the recovery of immovable property against a person who had originally been in mere permissive occupation or possession accorded on the ground of charity or relationship, is governed by Act XV. of 1877, sch. ii., cl. 144, and not by cl. 144 of the same schedule. In such a case the owner of the property, who has accorded the permissive occupation, cannot be said to have “discontinued” the possession.—I.L.R., 6 Cal. 311.

On the 7th November 1868, certain property was purchased by by one Gopal Doss Banerjee at a sale held in execution of a decree obtained against one Jogodanund Gossami. On the 8th January 1873, the purchaser obtained a sale certificate, and, on the 10th August 1873, was put into symbolical possession of the property through the Court. On the 3rd March 1875 the plaintiff in execution of a decree obtained against Gopal Doss Banerjee purchased this property, symbolical possession of the property being given to him by the Court on the 31st March 1875. On the 7th August 1885, the plaintiff brought this suit to recover possession of this property, alleging that he had been dispossessed therefrom on the 13th July 1885 by the defendant No. 2, who had taken an izara of the property from the son of Jogodanund. The defence set up was limitation. Held, that on the principle laid down in Juggobundhu Mukerjee v. Ram Chunder Bysack, I. L. R., 5 Cal. 584, the suit was not barred. Krishna Lall Dutt v. Radha Krishna Surkhel, I. L. R., 10 Cal. 402, overruled.—16 Cal. 530.

The claimants had shown that they formerly were proprietors of the land to which they alleged title, and from which they claimed to oust the defendants; but they had been dispossessed, or their possession had been discontinued, some years before this suit was brought by them, and the land was occupied by the defendants who denied their title. That being so, the burden of proof was on the claimants to prove their possession at some time within the twelve years (prescribed by Art. 142 of Sched. ii. of Act XV of 1877) next preceding the suit. That the claimants certainly showed an anterior title was not enough, without proof of their possession within twelve years, to shift the burden of proof on to the defence to show that the defendants were entitled to retain possession.—16 Cal. 473.

Article 144 of sched. ii of Act XV of 1877, as to adverse possession, only gives the rule of limitation where there is no other article in the schedule specially providing for the case. The proprietary right would continue to exist until, by the operation of the law of limitation, it has become extinguished; but if a claim comes within the terms of Art. 142 (enacting that when the plaintiff, while in possession of the property, has been dispossessed, or has discontinued possession, limitation shall run from the date of the dispossession or discontinuance), in such a case, by the law of Act XV of 1877, and previously of Act IX of 1871, adverse possession is not required to be proved in order to maintain a defence. At the regular settlement in the Delhi District (1843) the plaintiffs' ancestors ex-majidars of a plot on which the rent-free tenure had been resumed in 1838, declined to engage for the revenue; and the plot was assessed along with the village in which it was; the village-proprietors through the lambardars engaging for and obtaining the land. At the revision of settlement, more than thirty years after, the plaintiffs claimed possession, alleging their title, and that the village co-parceners held only in farm from the Collector for the period of settlement: Held, that there had been a dispossession, or discontinuance of possession, within the meaning of Art. 142; and that whether any proprietary right had existed or not in the plaintiff's ancestors, the twelve years limitation ran from the date of the dispossession or discontinuance.—17 Cal. 137.

In suits relating to disputed boundaries where the decision of the lower Court as to the ownership involves questions of the correctness of surveys, maps, recorded description, and other such evidence, the appellant should do more than show points requiring explanation. He should be prepared to show in what respect the decision has been wrong in regard to the evidence, and what other course would be right. The question was as to the ownership of land reclaimed from a bhil within the confines of one or other of two adjoining revenue mehals, the one belonging to the plaintiff, the other to the defendants, and involved the identification of the land in suit with some that had been covered with water, but of which the plaintiff's possession, with title, had been affirmed in proceedings of the revenue survey in 1857. In consequence of the nature and condition of the land there was no evidence of any act of possession done by either party during the first two years of the twelve immediately preceding the date of the institution of the suit, and during the last ten years the defendants had been in possession. The latter having tried and failed to establish adverse possession in themselves, contended that even if the plaintiff's possession had been shown to have existed in 1857, he could not succeed without his showing that his possession remained till later than the 9th April 1869, the suit having been filed on 9th April 1881, or unless he proved some act of dispossession by the defendants within that period. Held, that the presumption was in favour of the plaintiff's possession, which had been with apparent title, having in fact continued over the two years in question, as to which continuance there was no evidence to the contrary. If the burden was on the plaintiff to show possession down to within twelve years of suit, it had been discharged.—19 Cal. 660.

The plaintiff, who was the sister of the defendant, sued in 1888 to recover from him a moiety of a paramba purchased by them jointly in 1877. In 1878 the plaintiff went to live elsewhere, but, from time to time, returned and spent a few days with the defendant on the land in suit. The defendant pleaded limitation:—Held, that Limitation Act, sch. II, art. 144, applied to the suit, and the burden of proving adverse possession lay on the defendant.—14 Madr. 96.

In cases falling under article 142 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877) the plaintiff must at the outset show possession within twelve years, and cannot rest merely on a proof of title, while in cases falling under article 144 the plaintiff may not rest content with proof of title only in the first instance, and the burden lies on the defendants to show that they have had a possession inconsistent with the title of the plaintiff for more than twelve years before suit. The plaintiff sued to recover possession of certain land, together with mesne profits, until recovery of possession, alleging that he had obtained possession under his sale, and that his possession was obstructed by the defendants. Held, that the suit fell under article 142, and not 144, of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877), and that it was for the plaintiff to show that he, or those under whom he claimed, had been in possession within twelve years before suit.—14 Bom. 458.

In a suit brought by a vendee to recover possession of immoveable property which was not in the possession of his vendor at the time of the sale, the defence having raised the point of adverse possession for more than twelve years, held that the onus lay upon the plaintiff to show that the claim was not barred by the defendant's adverse possession by proving that his vendor had been in possession within twelve years before the date of sale under article 142, Schedule II of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877).—16 Bom. 343.

The plaintiff sued to set aside a mortgage by conditional sale of certain immoveable property belonging to him, made on his behalf during his minority, and for possession of the property. Held that the suit was one described in No. 142, sch. ii, Limitation Act, 1877, and not in No. 91 of that schedule.—5 Al. 490.

See I.L.R., 5 Al. 490, noted under art. 91; 5 Cal. 579, noted under art. 139; 14 Bom. 279, noted under art. 44; 18 Cal. 642, noted under art. 127.

143.—Like suit, when the plaintiff has become entitled by reason of any forfeiture or breach of condition.	Twelve years	When the forfeiture is incurred or the condition is broken.
144.—For possession of immoveable property or any interest therein not hereby otherwise specially provided for.	Ditto.	When the possession of the defendant becomes adverse to the plaintiff.

Notes.

Where a certain period is allowed by the law of Limitation, within which an instrument affecting a person's rights or immoveable property must be impugned, and the person whose rights or property are affected fails to impugn such instrument within that period:—Held, that he will not be precluded from availing himself of the longer period allowed for the recovery of immoveable property, provided that he can prove that such instrument is null and void so far as his interests are concerned.—I. L. R., 12 Cal. 69.

Possession taken by a trespasser during the currency of an Ijara lease does not become adverse to the zemindar (lessor) until upon the expiration of the term, and a suit for possession may be brought within 12 years of that date under the provisions of art. 144 of the Limitation Act. Krishna Gobind Dhur v. Hari Churn Dhur, I. L. R., 9 Cal. 367, followed.—13 Cal. 101.

After the sale of a share in an estate under the provisions of Act XI of 1859, a suit was brought to establish a mokurari lease, as an incumbrance under sec. 54, upon the share in the hands of the purchaser. This share having been held by several successive benami holders, the main question was whether those who had granted the mokurari were entitled to all or to any, and what part, of the land comprised in their grant; and as to this point the most important fact was the actual possession or receipt of the rents; this being also material in regard to limitation under Act XV of 1877, sch. II, Art. 144, the twelve years' bar commencing from the date of possession first held adversely. The mokuraridar having granted a dur-mokurari lease of part of his holding, which was afterwards surrendered for good consideration, ikrarnamas to this effect were executed, but not being registered were not receivable in evidence. Held, that to prove a formal deed of reconveyance was not necessary—the receipt of the money and the relinquishment of possession sufficiently showing what had become of the dur-mokurari interest. The mokurari lease having been established as to so much only of the lands as were covered by the title proved, the decree below, although no question of apportionment had been raised, was conditional that the whole rent reserved should be paid: Held, that this condition should have been omitted, the amount of rent being determinable by a future proceeding if necessary.—14 Cal. 109.

The plaintiff Gossain Dalmar Puri's predecessor in title, one Gossain Lachmi Narain Puri, acquired the share of 2 annas and 8 pies in certain mouzabs by purchase at a sale held in execution of his own decree against one Het Narain Singh, and in September 1874 obtained symbolical possession. In December 1874, Het Narain Singh, and his co-sharers, granted a perpetual lease to one Gokulanund, reserving a nominal rent. Subsequently Gossain Lachmi Narain Puri brought a suit for possession of the 2 annas and 8 pies share against Het Narain Singh and his co-sharers, and after the death of Gossain Lachmi Narain Puri, Gossain Dalmar Puri obtained a decree. In March 1882, Gossain Dalmar Puri obtained symbolical possession in execution of that decree. On the 29th January 1887, Bepin Behari Mitter purchased at a sale in execution of a decree against Gokulanund, the right of the latter as lessee, and obtained, through the Court, symbolical possession of the same. Gossain Dalmar Puri then instituted this suit to recover possession of the said 2 annas and 8 pies share against Bepin Behari Mitter, and Gokulanund in December 1887, that is, 13 years after the grant of the lease by Het Narain Singh and his co-sharers to Gokulanund. The defence set up was limitation. Held, that the suit was barred by limitation. Held also, that when the lease purports to be a perpetual lease without reversion to the grantors, and no rights reserved to them, but only a nominal rent, symbolical possession as against the grantors would not be effective against the lessee, and thus save the bar in limitation.—18 Cal. 520.

The manager of a Nambudri family in Malabar having demised certain land on kanam in 1868, was removed from his position as manager in 1875. In 1883 his successor sued to eject the kanam-holders:—Held, that the suit was barred by limitation.—9 Madr. 244 and 482.

In a family of three undivided brothers, an estate was purchased by the eldest as manager, on whose application a fourth party, a sister's husband, was recorded in the revenue records as a co-proprietor with them. The latter, even if he by joining in the purchase had become entitled to an undivided fourth share in the estate, did not thereby become a member of the undivided family; and the members of it would not have had a right to succeed to his fourth share, which would have descended to his own heirs; the other three-fourths which he would not have inherited going by survivorship among the members of the family. A son of the eldest brother obtained, by the deaths of his father and uncles, sole possession of the whole estate:—Held that he did not take the one-fourth share above mentioned by any right of inheritance, and that, in the absence of proof that his possession of it was by authority of the fourth recorded co-proprietor, his possession must be presumed to have been adverse to the latter and to any one claiming through him. It followed that a suit to obtain from those claiming through the son who was now dead, the one-fourth share, brought more than twelve years after possession taken by the son, by a purchase relying on a title through the fourth co-proprietor was barred by limitation under article 144 of the second schedule of Act XV of 1877.—9 Madr. 482.

A defendant has a right to set up the plea of tenancy, and at the same time to rely on the statute of limitations. The plaintiff sued to recover possession of certain land. The defendant pleaded that it was included in a permanent lease granted to him in 1849 by the plaintiff's predecessor in title, and that the suit was barred by the law of limitation. It was found that the land was not included in the lease. It appeared that there were disputes between the parties about the land since 1856, each asserting his own right to it. It was contended for the plaintiff that inasmuch as the defendant had claimed the land as a tenant, his possession was not adverse under article 144 of the Limitation Act XV of 1877. Held that under the circumstances the defendant's possession was adverse. The defendant was a trespasser, setting up a pretended tenancy which the plaintiff denied throughout. The case, therefore, was to be regarded as one against a trespasser and not as one between landlord and tenant. Dionmoney Dabea v. Doorgapersad Mozoomdar 12 Beng. L. R., 274, followed. Tekætni Gowra Kumari v. The Bengal Coal Company and others 12 Bom. L. R., 282 distinguished.—7 Bom. 96.

In 1877 the plaintiff applied for a certificate of heirship to one T, her husband's uncle, who had died in 1876. The defendant opposed the application, and alleged that T had left a will in her favour. On the 28th July, 1877, the District Judge made an order rejecting the plaintiff's application, and granting a certificate to the defendant. In 1879 the plaintiff brought the present suit, claiming to be entitled to the property left by T. It was contended (inter alia) for the defendant that the plaintiff's suit was barred, she having failed to apply to set aside the order granting the certificate to defendant within one year from the date of that order. The Court of first instance overruled the objection, and awarded plaintiff most of her claim. The defendant appealed, and the lower Appellate Court reversed the lower Court's decree, holding the suit barred. On appeal to the High Court:—Held, restoring the decree of the Court of first instance, that the plaintiff's suit was not barred. A certificate of heirship confers only the right of management of the property of the deceased, and is intended to give security to third persons in dealing with the person who claims to be the heir. Where the right of the person, to whom the certificate is granted to be the heir of the deceased, is in controversy, there is no necessity to have the order granting him the certificate set aside; and the question, whether the suit to determine the right claimed is in time, is to be determined by the sections of the Limitation Act relating to suits for the possession of property.—10 Bom. 449.

Under sec. 39 of the Dekkhan Agriculturist's Relief Act (XVII of 1879) the conciliator to whom application is to be made for an amicable settlement of a dispute must be the one appointed for the local area in which the agriculturist is residing, and not for the district in which the land in dispute is situated. The plaintiff was an agriculturist residing in the Korpargaon Taluka. He purchased the house in dispute from the defendant on the 30th January, 1872, but did not get possession. On the 12th December, 1883, the plaintiff applied to be put into possession under sec. 39 of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act (XVII of 1879) to the conciliator appointed for the Khatav Taluka where the house in dispute was situated. The proceedings before the conciliator lasted until the 19th February, 1884, on which day a certificate under section 46 of the Act was granted to the plaintiff. On the 20th February, 1884, the plaintiff brought this suit to recover possession of the house. The defendant pleaded limitation. The plaintiff contended that under section 48 of Act XVII of 1879 the time occupied in the proceedings before the conciliator should be deducted in computing the period of limitation. Held, that the plaintiff was not entitled to such deduction, as the conciliator, before whom the proceedings had been instituted, was not the one appointed for the local area in which the plaintiff was residing, as required by sec. 39 of Act XVII of 1879, and had, therefore, no jurisdiction to deal with plaintiff's application. Held, also, that the certificate obtained by the plaintiff was not such a certificate as is required by sec. 47 of the Act. Held, also, that the want of a proper certificate was not fatal to the suit. As soon as a defect in a certificate becomes apparent, the proper course is for a Court to stay proceedings to enable the plaintiff to make good the defect by producing the requisite certificate. Held, further, that the objection to the suit, on the ground that a proper certificate had not been obtained, could be taken for the first time in second appeal, as it was an objection affecting the jurisdiction of the Courts below. Held, further, that under article 144 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877) it is not for the plaintiff to prove that he has been in possession within twelve years before suit, but it is for the defendant to show that he has held adversely to the plaintiff for twelve years.—13 Bom. 424.

The plaintiff having brought a suit to recover possession of mango trees growing on his own land, and the lower Courts having found that the defendant had, during twelve years preceding the suit, adverse possession by taking fruits thereof. Held, that the claim was for possession of an interest in immoveable property and was governed by the limitation of twelve years prescribed by article 144 of the Limitation Act XV of 1877.—16 Bom. 353.

The plaintiff purchased the land in dispute on 20th April, 1876, at a Court sale held in execution of a decree against defendant's father and obtained symbolical possession through the Court on 7th September, 1876. At the date of the sale, and subsequently thereto, the defendant was in actual possession of the land in question. On 5th September, 1888, the plaintiff filed the present suit to recover possession of the land. Held, that the suit was time-barred, the defendant's possession having been adverse to the plaintiff for more than twelve years.—16 Bom. 722.

Where under an instrument a debtor allotted to his creditor his "aivaj" on account of Deshpande Hak and Inam recoverable from the villages and undertook not to meddle till the "aivaj" was paid, and the instrument did not describe the lands mentioned therein by metes and bounds, but only as being in the occupation of certain persons paying so much rent, and contained a clause that the "aivaj" of 63 rupees (the sum total of rents) had been allotted and that the creditor might take kabulayats from the occupants and make the recoveries, held, that the term "aivaj," although capable of meaning property generally, must from the context of the document mean monies or sums. Held, further, that the language of the instrument showed a clear intention to appropriate rents as distinguished from the lands themselves. Held, also, that even if the transaction were regarded as a mortgage, it could only be a usufructuary mortgage, which would confer no right to have the property sold. Article 144, schedule II, of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877) applies to the creditor's right of possession, and the defendant not being in adverse possession for 12 years prior to the institution of the suit, his claim was held not barred. It being obligatory upon the lower Court to take accounts in the mode directed in the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act (XVII of 1879), which requires annual rests, and that not having been done, the decree was reversed and the case sent back to the lower Court to take accounts according to the Act.—16 Bom. 172.

I died in 1861, leaving a zemindari estate, a moiety of which, at the time of his death, was in the possession of a mortgagee. On the death of I the defendants in this suit, who were among his heirs, caused their names to be recorded, as his heirs, as the proprietors of such estate, to the exclusion of the plaintiff in this suit, who was his remaining heir; and they appropriated to their own use continuously for more than twelve years the profits of the unmortgaged moiety of such estate, and the malikana paid by the mortgagee of the mortgaged property. In 1877 the defendants redeemed the mortgage of the mortgaged moiety of such estate from their own moneys. In 1878 the plaintiff sued for the possession of her share by inheritance of such estate. Held (SPANKIE, J., doubting), with reference to the mortgaged moiety of such estate, that the possession of the defendants in respect of such moiety did not become adverse, within the meaning of art. 144 of sch. ii of Act XV of 1877, on the death of I in 1861, but on the redemption of such moiety in 1877, "adverse possession" under that article meaning the same sort of possession as is claimed, that is to say, in this case, full proprietary possession which was not the nature of the possession of the defendants until the redemption of the mortgage, and the suit, therefore, in respect of such moiety, was within time.—3 Al. 24.

Property sold in execution of a decree of a Revenue Court vests in the purchaser on completion of the sale and payment of the full price. In order to perfect his title it is not necessary that he should obtain a sale-certificate or should be put into possession by the Collector. Held, therefore, that a suit by a purchaser at a sale in execution of a decree of a Revenue Court for possession of the property was maintainable, although his sale-certificate might be an invalid document, and the Collector had not put him into possession.—5 Al. 297.

Under a registered deed of mortgage dated in May, 1869, the mortgagee had a right to immediate possession; but by arrangement between the parties the mortgagors remained in possession, the right of the mortgagee to obtain possession as against them being, however, kept alive. In October, 1869 the mortgagors sold the property, and, thereupon, one R brought a suit to enforce the right of pre-emption in respect of the sale and obtained a decree, and got the property and sold it in 1871 to D. In 1883, the mortgagee brought a suit against D to obtain possession under his mortgage:—Held, with reference to a plea of adverse possession for more than twelve years set up by the defendant that the possession of a person who purchased property by asserting a right of pre-emption was not analogous to that of an auction-purchaser in execution of a decree, but that such person merely took the place of the original purchaser and entered into the same contract of sale with the vendor that the purchaser was making. There was privity between him and the vendor, and he came in under the vendor, and his holding must be taken to be in acknowledgment of all obligations created by his vendor. Anundoo Moyee Dossee v. Dhonendro Chunder Mookerjee distinguished:—Held, also, that although it would be material to show that the defendant had in any way by fraud been kept out of knowledge of the mortgage, his not having notice of it would not otherwise affect his liability, inasmuch as the principle on which Courts of Equity in England refuse to interfere against bona-fide purchasers for a valuable consideration, without notice, when clothed with the legal title, had no applicability in the Courts of British India:—Held, under these circumstances that there was no equitable ground why the plaintiff's right under the mortgage, which had priority, should be defeated by the defendant's purchase.—8 Al. 86.

In 1828 one of several co-mortgagors redeemed an usufructuary mortgage executed in 1822 and obtained possession. The other mortgagors brought a suit against the heir of the redeeming mortgagor in 1886, for redemption of their shares in the mortgaged property. Held that the limitation applicable to the suit was that provided by art. 148 sch. ii. of the Limitation Act (XX of 1877); that time ran not from the date of the redemption in 1828, but from the time when it would have run against the original mortgagee if he had been a defendant, i. e., the date of the original mortgage of 1822; and that the suit was therefore barred by limitation. Umr-un-nissa v. Muhammad Yar Khan explained. Nura Bibi v. Jagat Narain and Ram Singh v. Baldeo Singh, referred to.—11 Al. 423.

Part X.—Sixty years.

147.—By a mortgagee for foreclosure or sale. Sixty years

When the money secured by the mortgage becomes due.

Notes.

By a mortgage bond the first defendant mortgaged on the 1st January 1864, certain property to plaintiffs' deceased father, with an implied power to sell the same if the debt was not satisfied at the expiration of seven years from that date. On the 2nd January, 1883, the first plaintiff filed a suit in his own name, as manager of the family, to have the debt realized by the sale of the mortgaged property. The third defendant insisted upon plaintiff's other two brothers being joined as co-plaintiffs, and they were so joined on the 1st March, 1883, at which date both the lower Courts were of opinion that the suit was barred under sec. 22 and article 132 of the Limitation Act. On appeal by the plaintiffs to the High Court :—Held, reversing the lower Court's decrees, that plaintiffs' suit was governed by article 147 and, therefore, not barred. By the instrument sued on, the property in question was mortgaged to the plaintiffs' father with an implied, if not express, power to sell the same in the event of the mortgage debt not being paid at the expiration of seven years from the date of the mortgage. The period of limitation was sixty years from the 1st January 1871.—I.L.R., 10 Bom. 592.

An equitable mortgagee by deposit of title-deeds is a mortgagee within the meaning of article 147, Schedule II of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877), and the period of limitation for a suit by such a mortgagee is sixty years, as therein prescribed. A mortgagee by deposit of title-deeds has the right to sue for foreclosure or sale.—14 Bom. 269.

Where certain land was given as security for repayment of a loan under an instalment bond which contained an express provision for sale of the property in case of default, it was, Held, that the bond was a mortgage-bond, and that art. 147 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877) applied to a suit to recover the instalments due under the bond by sale of the mortgaged property. Held, also, that the limitation for the personal remedy against the mortgagor was three years.—14 Bom. 377.

A bond contained the following stipulation as regards the liabilities of the sureties :—"In respect of this we have given to you, in writing, as a nazar gahan (i. e., sight mortgage), the fields which belong to ourselves and which we ourselves are enjoying.....If we do not pay according to contract, you may sell the said fields through the Court and recover the amount. If any balance remains, we will pay it off personally or by means of our other property." Held, that the above stipulation created a mortgage and not a mere charge on the fields in question, and that article 147 of Schedule II of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877) applied to a suit by the obligee against the surety under the bond to enforce his lien by sale of the property mortgaged.—14 Bom. 578.

mortgage of immoveable property situate in British Burma, which have been executed before the first day of May 1863, shall be governed by the rules of limitation in force in that province immediately before the same day.

Notes.

A right to officiate as priest at funeral ceremonies of Hindus is in the nature of immoveable property, and a suit to establish such right therefore falls under art. 148 and not under art. 145 of the Limitation Act.—I. L. R., 10 Cal. 73.

There is a clear distinction as to the onus of proof between cases where a plaintiff sues for possession of land by redemption of mortgage and cases where the defence to a suit for possession of land is twelve years adverse possession by the defendant. In each case the plaintiff must plead his title, and if that title is in issue, he must make it out by at least prima facie evidence before the defendant can be put to proof of his defence. Where the defence is twelve years adverse possession, the defendant must plead and make out the title he alleges, and thus show that the title of the plaintiff, which otherwise had been proved or admitted, was lost. In a suit for possession of land by redemption of mortgage, the very nature of which presupposes that the possession of the defendant or his predecessor was lawful, the plaintiff must in his plaint show the title upon which he relies, and therefore a title subsisting at the date of suit. Unless he gives prima facie evidence to show that his suit is within time, he fails to prove his title or subsisting right to the property. Philipps v. Philipps, Dawkins v. Lord Penrhyn, Radha Gobind Roy Sahab v. Inglis, Rao Karan Singh v. Rajah Bakar Ali Khan, Rajah Kishen Dutt Panday v. Narendar Bahadur Singh, Ram Chandra Apaji v. Balaji Bhaurav, and other cases referred to. Al. 438.

Where one of several co-mortgagors redeems the whole mortgage he thereby puts himself into the position of the mortgagee as regards that portion of the mortgaged property which represents the interests of the other co-mortgagors, and the period of limitation applicable to a suit for redemption brought by the other co-mortgagors is that provided for by Art. 148 of Sch. ii of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877). Such period begins to run from the date when the original mortgage was redeemable and not from the date of its redemption by the aforesaid co-mortgagor. Nura Bibi v. Jagat Narain and Raghubir Sahai v. Bunyad Ali followed: Umr-un-nissa v. Muhammad Yar Khan distinguished: Ram Singh v. Baldeo Singh referred to.—14 Al. 1.

149.—Any suit by or on behalf of the Secretary of State for India in Council.

cation was made more than thirty days from the date of attaching the defendant's property in execution of the decree, but within thirty days of the service of the sale proclamation. Held, that the application was barred by limitation under art. 164, Sch. II, Act XV of 1877.—I. L. R., 9 Cal. 869.

An ex parte order was made against S, to whom a certificate under Act XL of 1858 had been granted, revoking such certificate, and granting it to A, and directing S to deliver the property of the minor to A and to render an account of all moneys received and disbursed within thirty days. In pursuance of this order a precept or injunction was served on S informing her that the certificate granted to her had been revoked, and had been granted to A, and directing her to deliver the property of the minor to A and to render him accounts of all moneys realized and expended within one month. Held that such precept or injunction was a "process for enforcing" such ex parte order, and that it was "executed" when it was served on S, within the meaning of art. 164 of the Limitation Act, 1877.—6 Al. 14.

165. —Under the Code of Civil Procedure,* by a person dispossessed of immoveable property, and disputing the right of the decree-holder or purchaser at a sale in execution of a decree to be put into possession.	Thirty days	The date of the dispossession.
---	-------------	--------------------------------

Notes.

Symbolical possession—such as may be given by the Nazir of a Court by sticking a bamboo into the ground, or the like—of a dwelling-house, or of a share in a dwelling-house, of which actual possession might have been granted, is not such a bona fide possession as will save limitation. A purchaser of immoveable property, sold in execution of a decree, must, under Act XV of 1877, sch. ii., art. 165, if obstructed or resisted in endeavouring to obtain possession, apply, within thirty days, to the Court under the directions of which the execution-sale was held, to be put into actual possession; and if he omits to do so within thirty days from the time when his taking possession was first obstructed or resisted, his only remedy is by a civil suit. The plaintiffs, on the 31st January, 1863, purchased a half-share in a certain house at sale in execution of a decree, but took no steps at the time to take possession of it. In 1869, the Nazir of the Court was directed to put them into possession, and gave them symbolical possession. Afterwards, in 1871, the plaintiffs, again with the assistance of the Nazir, entered upon, and for the space of about a minute remained in possession of one of the rooms in the house, until they were turned out by the defendants. On the 18th November, 1876, the plaintiff filed a suit, praying for a declaration of right, and for a partition and to be put into separate possession of the share that might be allowed to them on such partition. Held, that neither the symbolical possession given to them in 1869 by the Nazir, nor the momentary and partial possession which they had obtained in 1871, was sufficient to save limitation ; and that, as their suit was brought on the 18th Nov. 1876, more than twelve years after the 31st January 1863, when they first became entitled to possession, it was now barred by limitation.—I. L. R., 5 Cal. 331.

A person purchased certain property at a sale in execution of a decree in November, 1878 ; his purchase was confirmed, and he obtained a certificate of sale on the 23rd May, 1879, from which date he remained in possession. The Judgment-debtor applied to have the sale set aside for irregularity, but his application was dismissed both at the hearing and on appeal. He had applied, before the sale took place, to stay the sale, on the ground that the right to apply for execution was barred. This application was dismissed, but was allowed on appeal. It did not appear that the auction-purchaser was a party to the proceeding, or that he was cognizant of the application. Two years from the date of the sale, and one and-a-half year from its confirmation, the judgment-debtor, on a summary application, obtained an order setting aside the sale, and putting the auction-purchaser out of possession. Held that the order was erroneous, the Subordinate Judge having no power, after the sale had been confirmed, to set aside the sale by a summary order ; and that, under art. 165, sch. ii., of Act XV of 1877, the application for such an order was barred.—7 Cal. 91.

166. —To set aside a sale in execution of a decree, on the ground of irregularity in publishing or conducting the sale, “or on the ground that the decree-holder has purchased without the permission of the Court.”*	Thirty days	The date of the sale.
--	-------------	-----------------------

Note.

In 1879 D obtained a decree against S. S gave security for the satisfaction of the decree, where upon D agreed not to take proceedings in execution. In breach of this agreement, D in the same year applied for execution and sold certain immoveable property belonging to S, of which K became the purchaser. K did not apply for possession until 1883, in which year he applied for and obtained possession of the property. S alleged that he then for the first time became aware of the sale and that by the fraud of D & K he had been kept in ignorance of the execution proceedings taken by D in breach of the above-mentioned agreement, and within thirty days after K obtained possession, he (S) applied for a reversal of the orders which had been passed in the aforesaid fraudulent proceedings. The Subordinate Judge held that the application was barred by article 166 and referred the applicant to a separate suit to set aside the sale. On application to the High Court :—Held, on the authority of Paranjpe v. Kanade, that a separate suit would not lie, and that the relief sought by S could only be obtained, at all events as against D, by an application under sec. 244 of the Civil Procedure Code:—Held, also that article 166 did not apply. That article as amended by sec. 108 of Act XII of 1879 only applies to applications made under sec. 311 or sec. 294 of the Civil Procedure Code seeking to set aside a sale on the ground of a material irregularity in publishing or conducting the sale, or on the ground that the decree-holder has purchased without the permission of the Court.—I. L. R., 9 Bom. 468.

167. —Complaining of resistance or obstruction to delivery of possession of immovable property decreed or sold in execution of a decree or of dispossession in the delivery of possession to the decree-holder or the purchaser of such property.	Thirty days	The date of the resistance, obstruction, or dispossession.
--	-------------	--

Notes.

Where a warrant for possession of land in execution of a decree was not executed owing to the resistance of the judgment-debtors in September 1880 and no complaint was made under sec. 328 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1877, but a fresh warrant for possession was applied for by and granted to the decree-holders, and resistance was again made in January, 1881. Held that a complaint by the decree-holders as to the second obstruction made within thirty days of the second obstruction was not barred by reason of art. 167 of Schedule II of the Limitation Act.—I. L. R., 5 Madr. 113.

In 1877, at a sale held in execution of a decree, certain property was purchased on behalf of the applicant, who was then a minor, by the agent nominated by his guardian. An order for delivery of possession was made; but a third party having obstructed, the order was returned unexecuted. No further proceedings were taken by the agent. The applicant having come of age, applied for delivery of possession within three years from the date of his attaining majority, but more than thirty days after the date of the obstruction and more than thirty days after he came of age. The Subordinate Judge rejected the application as barred, being of opinion that the omission to apply, within thirty days from the date of the obstruction, on the part of the applicant's agent, as well as the applicant's omission to do so within a similar period after he came of age, barred the applicant, whose remedy lay in a fresh suit. Held, by the High Court that the application was rightly rejected. It was virtually an attempt to renew the old proceedings, and was barred by article 167 of Schedule II of the Limitation Act. If the applicant intended to proceed summarily under the Civil Procedure Code, he should have taken proceedings within a month after he came of age.—11 Bom. 473.

169. —For a re-hearing of an appeal heard ex-parte in the absence of the respondent.	Thirty days ...	The date of the decree in appeal.
170. —For leave to appeal as a pauper.	Ditto. ...	The date of the decree appealed against.

Note.

Judgment was pronounced by the lower appellate Court, dismissing the appeal of the plaintiff, on the 29th March, 1887. The decree was signed by the Judge on the 1st April, but, in accordance with sec. 579 of the Civil Procedure Code, it bore date the day on which the Judgment was pronounced. On the 15th April the plaintiff applied for a copy of the decree; on the 16th she received notice that the estimate of the costs of preparing the copy was prepared; on the 19th she paid into Court the amount required by the estimate. She had notice to attend on the 23rd for delivery to her of the copy, and on the 25th she attended and received the copy. On the 12th May she presented in the High Court, to the proper officer, an application, under sec. 592 of the Code, for leave to appeal as a pauper. Held that the application was barred by limitation under art. 170, sch. ii., of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877), and that sec. 5 of the Act did not apply. Per EDGE, C. J.—In computing the period of limitation prescribed for an appeal or for an application for leave to appeal as a pauper, where the decree appealed against is not signed until a date subsequent to the date of delivery of judgment, the intermediate period should, under sec. 12 of the Limitation Act, be excluded if the delay in signing the decree has delayed the appellant or applicant in obtaining a copy of the decree, and not otherwise. Bani Madhub Mitter v. Matungini Dassi referred to. A delay caused by the carelessness or negligence of a party applying for copy of decree, such as negligence in coming forward to pay the money required, cannot be taken into consideration or allowed for in computing the time requisite for obtaining the copy. The time requisite, within the meaning of sec. 12 of the Limitation Act, does not mean requisite by reason of the carelessness or negligence of the applicant: it means the time occupied by the officer who has got to provide the copy, in making the copy. The important date, with reference to sec. 12 and art. 170, is not the date when the copy of the decree is delivered, but the date when it is ready for delivery to the applicant if the applicant chooses to apply, where he has had notice that the copy will be ready on that date.—I. L. R., 12 Al. 79.

Nos. 171, 171A, and 171B, as amended by Act XII. of 1879, have been repealed by Act VII. of 1888; and in place of No. 171C, as amended by Act XII. of 1879, the present No. 171 has been inserted.

172. —By a purchaser at an execution-sale to set aside the sale on the ground that the person whose interest in the property purported to be sold had no saleable interest therein.	Sixty days	The date of the sale.

173A. —For the issue of a notice under section 258 of the same Code to shew cause why the payment or adjustment therein mentioned should not be recorded as certified.*	Ditto	When the payment or adjustment is made.
174. —By a creditor of an insolvent judgment-debtor under section 353 of the Code of Civil Procedure.†	Ditto	The date of the publication of the schedule.
175. —For payment of the amount of a decree by instalments.	Six months	The date of the decree.

Notes.

A proviso in a decree made payable by instalments, by which the whole amount of the decree is to become due upon default in payment of any instalment, is a proviso enuring for the benefit of the decree-holder alone, and he is at liberty to take advantage of it or to waive it as he thinks fit.—I. L. R., 14 Cal. 352.

An application to execute a decree, dated 30th August, 1880, was made on 25th May, 1881. While the application was pending, the judgment-debtor presented a petition to be allowed to pay the debt by instalments, and the decree-holder consenting to this, the Court made the following orders : “According to the application of both parties it is ordered that the case be struck off, and the decree be returned.” The details of the instalments mentioned in the petition were endorsed on the decree by one of the Amlahs of the Court, but it did not appear when or by whose order this was done. In an application for execution in accordance with this arrangement made on 7th March, 1885 : Held, that the order was not one recognising or sanctioning the arrangement within the meaning of sec. 210 of the Civil Procedure Code, inasmuch as the Court at the time it made the order had no power to make any order for instalments, any application for that purpose being then barred by art. 175 of Act XV of 1877. The application for execution was, therefore, barred under art. 179 as not having been made within three years of 25th May, 1881. Jhoti Sahu v. Bhubun Gir, I. L. A plaint was filed on 12th March 1875, and the summons to the defendant to appear and answer issued on 13th March 1875. With the exception of an application for substituted service made on 20th March 1875, and which was refused, no further steps were taken in the matter until 21st March 1878, when the plaintiff applied for a fresh summons to issue, the time for the return of the first summons having long since expired. Held, that the mere filing of a plaint, or the naked fact that a plaint is on the file, will not of itself prevent the operation of the law of limitation, and that as no steps had been taken to renew the summons for three years, and as no sufficient case to excuse the delay had been made out, the application was out of time, and should be refused.—I. L. R., 3 Cal. 312.

When a decree or order makes a sum of money payable by instalments on certain dates, and provides that, in default of payment of any instalment, the whole of the money shall become due and payable and be recoverable in execution, by art. 178, sch. II of the Limitation Act, limitation begins to run from the date of the first default, unless the right to enforce payment in default has been waived by subsequent payment of the overdue instalment on the one hand and receipt on the other. R obtained a decree against D C and K G for a sum of money on 21st June 1880. On 25th May, 1882, an order was made in terms of the petition of both parties, providing that the amount of the decree should be paid by five instalments, the first instalment being due in July 1882, and that in default of payment of any instalment the whole amount should be due and recoverable in execution. Default was made in payment of the first instalment, nor was there any subsequent payment of that or any other instalment. On 30th July, 1886, R applied for execution of the four last instalments, alleging that the first had been paid. Held, that the application was barred by limitation under art. 178, sch. II, Limitation Act, 1877. Hurronath Roy v. Maheroollah Mollah, B. L. R., Sup. Vol., 618; 7 W. R., 21; Dalshook Ruttan Chand v. Chugan Narrun, I. L. R., 2 Bom., 356; Ship Dat v. Kalka Persad, I. Applications for probate or letters or certificates of administration do not fall within the provisions of article 178 of the Limitation Act.—19 Cal. 48.

Neither article 178 nor article 179 of the Limitation Act applies to an application to ascertain the amount of mesne profits awarded by a decree in accordance with the provisions of sections 211 or 212 of the Code of Civil Procedure.—19 Cal. 132.

Government is not entitled to any exemption from the provisions of the Indian Limitation Act, 1877, relating to applications. Held, therefore, that an application by Government under sec. 411 of the Code of Civil Procedure to recover the amount of Court fees from a party ordered by the decree to pay the same was subject to the provisions of art. 178 of the Indian Limitation Act, 1877.—4 Madr. 155.

Article 178 does not affect an application under Act XXVII of 1860 for a certificate to collect debts due to the estate of a deceased person.—8 Madr. 207.

An application by an appellant to make the representative of a deceased respondent party to the appeal does not fall under art. 171B, but under art. 178.—9 Madr. 7.

Where a review of judgment has been applied for, and, after notice to the other side, refused, the period during which such application was pending cannot be excluded in computing the period of limitation for execution of the decree under art. 179 (3) of sch. II of the Indian Limitation Act. Seemle.—An application for refund of moneys levied in execution of a decree subsequently reversed on appeal is not governed by art. 179 but by art. 178 of sch. II of the Limitation Act.—10 Madr. 66.

An application for execution of a decree having been made in 1880, certain land was attached as being the property of the judgment-debtor (deceased). His children thereupon claimed the land and the attachment was raised. Upon this, the judgment-creditor sued to establish his right to sell the land in execution and obtained a decree in 1882, which was confirmed on appeal in 1883. In 1885, the judgment-creditor again applied for attachment and sale of the same land :—Held, that the application was barred by limitation.—Paras Ram v. Gardner, I. L. R., Al. 355, dissented from.—10 Madr. 22.

A obtained a money decree against B on the 25th January 1872, in execution of which, property belonging to B was sold on the 9th of September 1874, A himself becoming the purchaser. The sale was confirmed on the 9th of October 1874, but the certificate of sale was not issued till the 23rd January 1878. A applied for possession on the 2nd of April 1879. Held that the right to apply for possession contemplated in secs. 263 and 264 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act VIII of 1850) corresponding with secs. 318 and 319 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877) accrued on the date the certificate of sale was issued, and not on that on which the sale was confirmed, and that, therefore, the period of limitation against the purchaser counted from the former date.—3 Bom. 433.

Where an application for a certificate of sale was made five years and a half after the confirmation of the sale : Held that it was barred by Art. 178 of sch. II of Act XV of 1877.—5 Bom. 206.

The applicant purchased certain land at a Court-sale on the 17th February, 1876. The sale was confirmed on the 20th March of the same year. The purchaser did not apply for a certificate of sale until the 10th March, 1880. Held that the application was barred by Limitation Act XV of 1877, sch. II, art. 178. Held also that the purchaser's right to a certificate of sale accrued to him under secs. 256, 257 and 259 of the Civil Procedure Code, Act VIII of 1859, on the 20th March, 1876, when the sale was confirmed.—5 Bom. 202.

Cl. 178, sch. II of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877) is not applicable to applications for certificates of sale. The provisions of the Indian Limitation Act (XV of 1877) do not apply to applications to a Court to do what it has no discretion to refuse, not to applications for the exercise of functions of a ministerial character.—6 Bom. 586.

An application to amend a decree, which is found to be at variance with the judgment, in accordance with the provisions of sec. 206 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877) is an application of the kind mentioned in No. 178 of sch. II of Act XV of 1877, and as such subject to the limitation of three years.—4 Al. 23.

The judgment-debtors against whom a decree had been executed applied for a refund of money which they alleged had been recovered in execution by the decree-holders in excess of what was actually due under the decree. Upon this application, an account was taken by order of the Court:—Held, that the limitation applicable to the case was that provided by art. 178, and that the right to apply for the refund of the excess amount paid in execution accrued at the time when the account was taken and stated on the application of the judgment-debtors in the course of the proceedings in execution.—7 Al. 371.

A decree, which was passed on the 8th December, 1881, in a suit on a simple mortgage-bond contained the following provision:—"If the judgment-debt is not paid within four months, the decree-holder shall have the power to recover it by a sale of the mortgaged property," On the 17th February, 1885, the decree-holder applied for execution of the decree:—Held that, inasmuch as the decree provided expressly that the decree-holder might not apply for its execution till after the expiry of four months from its date, the limitation of art. 178, and not of art. 179, should be applied to the case; and the application for execution having been made within three years from the 8th April 1882, when the right to ask for execution accrued, was not barred.—8 Al. 56

Art. 178 of schedule ii of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877) applies only to applications made to a Court to exercise powers which, without being moved by such application, it is not bound to exercise, and not to applications made to a Court to do acts which it has no discretion to refuse to do. It does not govern an application under sec. 206 of the Civil Procedure Code, for amendment of a decree so as to bring it into conformity with the judgment, it being the bounden duty of a Court, of its own motion, to see that its decrees are in accordance with the judgments and to correct them if necessary. Goya Prasad v. Sikri Prasad dissented from. The petition of Kishan Singh, Kylasa Goundan v. Ramasami Ayyan, and Vithal Janardan v. Vithojirav Putlajirav referred to.—9 Al. 364.

Rules of limitation are foreign to the administration of criminal justice, and it is only by express statutory provision that any rule of limitation could be made applicable to criminal cases. Article 178, sch. ii., Limitation Act (XV of 1877), must be construed with reference to the wording of the other articles, and can relate only to applications ejusdem generis. A suit was instituted for possession of certain land on which stood a factory. In proof of the claim the plaintiffs filed in Court a sarkhat or lease, which was pronounced by the Munsif to be a forgery. Plaintiffs appealed up to the High Court, where on the 24th June, 1886, the Munsif's decree was affirmed. Defendants then applied to the Munsif for sanction to prosecute the plaintiffs for the offence or using a forged document knowing the same to be forged. Munsif refused to sanction the prosecution prayed for; but on application to the Sessions Judge, such sanction was granted. On application to revise the Sessions Judge's order granting sanction it was contended that, after the lapse of nearly three years, sanction to prosecute should not have been granted. Held; that there is no fixed period of limitation for making applications for sanctions under section 195 of the Criminal Procedure Code.—10 Al. 350.

representatives as it may be made against. But where the decree or order has been passed jointly against more persons than one, the application, if made against any one or more of them, or against his or their representatives, shall take effect against them all.

Explanation II.—“Proper Court” means the Court whose duty it is (whether under section 226 or 227 of the Code of Civil Procedure* or otherwise) to execute the decree or order.

Notes.

An order dismissing an appeal for default is not a new decree from the date of which limitation runs—4. M. H. C. R. 32.

Per GARTH, C. J., and Markby and Ainslie, JJ. (Kemp and MACPHERSON, JJ. dissenting).—The periods of limitation prescribed in Sched. II of Act IX of 1871 are to be computed subject to the provisions contained in the body of the Act. An application made on the 8th January, 1875, to execute a decree, the last preceding application having been made on the 8th January, 1872, was held to be within the time allowed by Art. 167, Sched. II, Act IX of 1871. Per Curiam.—The word ‘suit,’ as used in the Act, does not include ‘applications’.—I. L. R., 2 Cal. 336.

The words “applying to enforce the decree,” in Act IX of 1871, Sch. II, Art. 167, mean the application (under sec. 212, Act VIII of 1859, or otherwise) by which proceedings in execution are commenced, and not applications of an incidental kind made during the pendency of such proceedings. In cases governed by Act IX of 1871, a decree-holder who has applied to the Court simpliciter “to keep the decree in force” may within three years from the date of such last named application, obtain execution of his decree.—3 Cal. 235.

On the presentation of the last of a series of applications made for the execution of a decree, the Court is competent to consider the question whether, on the date of making a prior application for execution, the decree sought to be enforced was barred by limitation, and that notwithstanding the fact that notice of such prior application had been served on the judgment-debtor under sec. 216 of Act VIII of 1859. The time prescribed by the Limitation Act (IX of 1871) within which applications for execution may be made, govern all such applications made during the time that Act, was in force.—3 Cal. 518.

Within 3 years of his first application in execution of a rent-decree A, the judgment-creditor, made a second application to sell certain lands, the alleged property of B, the judgment-debtor. Third parties intervened, who established their claim to the land. A thereupon brought a regular suit, and succeeded in obtaining a decree, declaring the lands in suit to be the property of B. Within a year of the date of this decree, but more than three years after his first application for execution, A filed a third application for attachment of other lands belonging to B. Held, the application was barred by limitation.—3 Cal. 716.

G sued K, as the legal representative of her deceased husband, S, on a bond executed by S in his favour, and obtained a decree. Subsequently he sued K on a bond which she had personally executed in his favour, and obtained a decree. On the 7th September, 1875, he applied for execution of both these decrees, and S's landed estate, which stood recorded in K's name, was attached. This estate was sold on the 20th February, 1877, being put up for sale in one lot, in satisfaction of both decrees, in accordance with an application made by G on the 16th February, and was purchased by G for the amount of the decrees. This sale was subsequently confirmed, and on the 10th December, 1877, satisfaction of the decrees was entered up, and the execution proceedings struck off the file. Subsequently three of the heirs of S in one case, and two in another, instituted suits against G, claiming to recover from him such portion of the proceeds of the sale of S's property as had been appointed for the discharge of G's decree against M, and such heirs obtained decrees for certain sums, which G was obliged to pay. G thereupon, on the 16th May, 1879, applied for execution of his decree against M. Held that such application was not one in continuation of that made on the 7th September, 1875, but was a fresh application and the application made by G on the 16th February, 1877, was not one for a step in aid of execution, within the meaning of Art. 179, Sch. II of Act XV of 1877, from which limitation could be computed, and the application of the 16th May, 1879, was barred by limitation.—1 Al. 355; 3 Al. 484; 4 Cal. 415.

A, the judgment-debtor, opposed an application made by B, the judgment-creditor, for execution under a decree. This objection was overruled on the 17th January, 1876. The appeal by A from this order (B being represented and opposing A's appeal at the hearing) was dismissed on the 2nd October, 1877. On a second application for execution made by B on the 18th March, 1879: Held that such application was barred under Art. 179, Sch. ii. Act XV of 1877.—5 Cal. 595.

In a suit for possession of land brought by A against B, C, and D, a decree was passed on the 14th of April, 1874, for possession and costs against B, C, and D, jointly. This decree was afterwards reversed on an appeal by B, who alone claimed the property. A then preferred a special appeal in the High Court, and on the 29th June, 1877, the decision of the Judge was reversed, and the decree of the Court of first instance restored. On the 30th December, 1878, A applied to the Court of first instance for execution to issue against C and D for the costs specified in the decree passed on the 14th of April, 1874. C and D successfully objected in the Court of first instance and the lower Appellate Court that more than three years having elapsed since the date of the decree, the decree for costs could not be executed, the application for execution being barred. Held, on appeal to the High Court, that inasmuch as B's appeal related to the whole case, and the decree obtained by him dismissing the suit would, if not reversed, have deprived A of his right to any costs at all, A, upon succeeding in getting the original decree restored upon special appeal to the High Court, was entitled to executing such restored decree at any time within three years of the order of the High Court.—6 Cal. 194.

The terms of compromise in a suit for money provided that the debt should be paid by monthly instalments, and that, on the failure to pay any three successive instalments, the entire amount should be recoverable by application to execution the full decree. The decree was dated the 12th

June, 1875 ; the first instalment was due in July, 1875 ; and the last, in October, 1877. Default was made in payment of the first three instalments, but the decree-holder did not apply for execution, and accepted subsequent payments. On the 13th December, 1879, he applied for execution for the amount then remaining due. Held that that the period of limitation prescribed by Art. 179, Sch. ii. of Act XV of 1877, began to run on the third default taking place, and that no subsequent payment could stop limitation once begun.—7 Cal. 56.

Where a decree is one for possession, with wasilat from the date of dispossession to the date of suit, an application for wasilat, if not made within three years from the first application in execution, is barred. An application made by a judgment-creditor to take out of Court certain monies there deposited by his judgment-debtor cannot be considered to be an application to the Court to take a step "in aid of execution," and is not, therefore, within the meaning of cl. 4 of Art. 179, Sch. ii., of Act XV of 1877. Bunsee Singh v. Mirza Nuxuf Ali Beg (22 W. R. 328.) distinguished.—8 Cal. 89.

The plaintiff obtained an ex parte decree on the 7th February 1876, of which he applied for execution on the 31st May, 1876. Thereupon the defendant applied to set aside the decree, on the ground that he had had no notice of the suit, and an order was made staying the execution of the decree. The defendant's application was rejected on the 15th of November, 1876, and an appeal by the defendant, pending which the stay of execution was continued, was dismissed on the 19th of December 1877. Previously viz., on the 21st of February, 1877, the execution case had been struck off the file. Held that, notwithstanding the application was made more than three years after the decree, and the plaintiff was not entitled to any deduction of time during which the execution was stayed by order of Court, an application for execution made on the 10th of December, 1880 was, under art. 179 of Act XV of 1877, not barred, the decree not being final until the order dismissing the appeal on the 19th of December 1877.—8 Cal. 248.

An application for execution of a decree by a mere benamidar is not an application in accordance with law within the meaning of art. 179, cl. 4 of Sch. ii. of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877), such as to afford a fresh starting point for limitation.—9 Cal. 633.

A consent-decree for partition, made between three parties, contained a provision that, if the plaintiffs should not have the property partitioned within two months from the date thereof, any one of the other parties to the suit might obtain partition by executing the decree. One of the parties sued out execution, and obtained partition and possession of his own share. More than three years after the date of the decree, but less than three years from the date of the application just mentioned, another of the parties applied for partition under the decree. Held that the application was not barred by limitation under the provisions of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877), Sch. ii., Art 179, cl. 3, excp. I.—9 Cal. 568.

On the 28th September, 1877, an application was made for execution of a decree. On the 8th July, 1878, the decree-holder deposited Rs. 2 as nilamee-fees, that is to say, costs for bringing certain property to sale in execution of the decree. On the 28th March, 1881, a further application for execution of the decree was made. Held that the deposit of Rs. 2 nilamee-fees on the 8th July, 1878, was a step in aid of execution of the decree, and that the application of the 28th March, 1881, being within three years from the date of the deposit, was not barred by limitation. Quære.—Whether, inasmuch as Act IX of 1871 is repealed by Act XV of 1877, and the latter Act contains no provision similar to that contained in sec. 1 of Act IX of 1871, or XIV of 1859 can be said to have been repealed in respect of suits instituted before the 1st of April, 1873.—9 Cal. 644.

In execution of a decree, dated the 17th January, 1877, the judgment-creditor applied on the 13th May, 1878, to have the property of his judgment-debtor sold on the 16th September, 1878. Subsequently, on the 2nd June, 1881, he made a further application to have the decree executed. Held that the case was governed by the provisions of Art. 167 of Act IX of 1871, and not by those of Art. 179 of Act XV of 1877; and that as the application had not been made within any one of the periods given in the third column of art. 167, it was barred by limitation. Held also following Mungal Pershad Dichit v. Grijā Kant Laburi (I. L. R., 8 Cal. 51), that although there is no corresponding provision in Act XV of 1877 to that contained in sec. 1 of Act IX of 1871, all applications for execution of a decree are applications in the suit which resulted in that decree. Held further that, under sec. 6 of Act I of 1868, the repeal of Act IX of 1871 by Act XV of 1877 does not affect any proceedings commenced before the repealing Act came into force. Re Ratausi Kalianji (I. L. R., 2 Bom. 148) followed.—9 Cal. 446.

An application made by a judgment-creditor to take out of Court certain monies, the sale proceeds realized by the sales of certain properties of his judgment-debtor in a previous execution, cannot be considered to be an application to the Court to take a "step in aid of execution," and is not therefore within the meaning of cl. 4, Art. 179 Sch. II of Act XV of 1877. Hem Chunder Chowdhry v. Brojo Soondury Debee. I. L. R., 8 Cal. 79; Venkatarayalu v. Narasinha, I. L. R., 2 Madr. 174, dissented from.—10 Cal. 549.

An application to a Court to issue a proclamation of sale in respect of property already attached in execution to a decree, is an application, within the meaning of clause 4 of art. 179 Sch. II of Act XV of 1877, "to take some step in aid of execution of the decree." Chunder Coomar Roy v. Bhogobatti Prosoune Roy, I. L. R. 3 Cal. 235; 1 C. L. R., 23 explained.—10 Cal. 851.

An application for execution of a decree having been made on the 19th January 1882 within time, but not in the form prescribed by the Civil Procedure Code, inasmuch as it did not contain the right number of the suit in which the decree was passed, an order was made on the 19th January directing the petitioner to amend the application within four days by giving the correct number. That order was not complied with, and the petition was left on the file of the Court without being disposed of in any way till the 21st September 1882; on which date, more than three years having then elapsed since the date of the decree, it was returned to the vakeel of the petitioner for amendment within eight days. The required amendment was made, and the application again placed on the file of the Court on the 22nd September. On an objection being taken that the decree was barred, and the execution could not issue. Held, following the principles laid down in the case of Syud Mohamed v. Syud Abedoolah, 12 C. L. R., 279, viz., that it was the duty of the Court to dismiss the application when it found that it was informal, and thus to give the applicant an opportunity of putting in a proper application, and that the decree-holder should not be made to suffer for such omission on the part of the Court; that the former application could not, though informal, be treated as a nullity ; and that the application on the 22nd September must be taken as having been presented with the object of amending the original informal application ; and that it was in continuation of the execution proceedings commenced however informally on the 19th January 1882 ; and that consequently the decree was not barred. Held, also, that the fact of the application having been returned to the vakeel for amendment instead of being amended while on the file of the Court, made no difference to the application of the above principle.—10 Cal. 541.

A obtained a decree against B in June 1879, and in execution thereof some time in 1879 attached certain monies in Court which belonged to his Judgment-debtor, and obtained an order for payment out to him. Before receiving payment A died, and the execution proceedings were struck off on the 31st January 1880. On the 14th June 1880, and on the 22nd June 1881, the widow of A, who had taken out probate, applied to withdraw this money from Court, and on the 1st of April 1882 applied for a copy of the decree obtained by A, for the purposes of execution. At the time of these three applications the widow had not applied for substitution of her name on the record in the place of her deceased husband. On the 5th January 1884 the widow applied to have her name substituted on the record, and for execution :—Held, that the application was barred, as the previous applications were not under the circumstances steps in aid of execution. Cal. 220.

Within the period of three years from the date of a decree for arrears of rent under Rs. 500, the judgment-debtor applied for execution of his decree without giving a list of the properties which he sought to attach, but stating that a list was filed with a previous application, and praying that that application might be put up with the present one. Subsequently upon an order made by the Court a fresh list was filed after the period of a year had elapsed :—Held, that though the application was not in strict accordance with the provisions of sec. 237 of the Civil Procedure Code, it was still an application under sec. 235, and that execution of the decree was not barred, but that it must be limited to the property specified in the previous application. Syud Mahomed v. Syud Abedoollah, 12 C. L. R., 279, followed.—12 Cal. 161.

On the 19th of March 1880 a decree for money was passed, and on the 19th of February 1881, certain property belonging to the judgment-debtor was sold in execution thereof. On the 22nd of April, 1881 Court passed an order confirming the sale. On the 10th of January 1882, the decree-holder applied to the Court for a copy of the decree, in order that he might make a fresh application for execution. On the 28th of March 1884 he applied for execution. The judgment-debtor appeared and pleaded that execution was barred by limitation. The Court of first instance held that execution was not barred on the ground that the passing of the order of the 22nd of April 1881 was sufficient, under the provisions of art. 179, cl. 4 to keep the decree alive. The lower Appellate Court also held that execution was not barred by limitation, but solely on the ground that the application of the 10th of January 1882 was sufficient to keep the decree alive. It did not appear that the order of the 19th of February 1881 was passed in consequence of any application by the decree-holder, and neither the application of the 10th of January 1882 nor any copy thereof was put in evidence on the present application :—Held, on appeal to the High Court, that the decree was barred by limitation.—12 Cal. 441.

An application by a judgment-creditor to bring an execution proceeding on the file and to record his certificate of the payment of a sum of money by the judgment-debtor is an application to take some step in aid of execution of the decree within the meaning of cl. 4.—12 Cal. 608.

Where a decree is made payable by instalments, and contains a provision that, on failure of any one instalment, the whole is to become due, the question whether the decree-holder may waive the benefit of the provision or must execute his decree within three years from the due date of the first instalment of which default is made in payment, is a question purely of construction to be decided on the terms of the whole decree in each case. On an application for execution of a decree made payable by instalments:—Held, that the application was barred by limitation, on the ground that the judgment-creditor should have applied for execution within three years from the date of the first default in payment.—13 Cal. 73.

A judgment-creditor applied on the 22nd May, 1882, for execution of a decree, dated 7th November 1881, and certain property of the judgment-debtors was attached. Thereupon a claim was preferred by a mortgagee, and on the 10th August, 1882, the judgment-creditor admitted the claim and applied that the property might be sold subject to the claimant's mortgage, and the proceeds if any paid over to him in part satisfaction of his decree. On the 20th June, 1885, another application was made for execution, and on the 29th November, 1886, a third application was made. To the latter application objection was taken, and it was contended that the decree was barred by reason of more than three years having elapsed between the application of the 22nd May, 1882, and that of the 20th June, 1885. Held, that the application of the 10th August, 1882, by the judgment-creditor to allow the sale of attached property subject to the mortgage of the claimant was "a step in aid of execution of the decree" within the meaning of art. 179, Sch. II, Act XV of 1877, and that execution of the decree was therefore not barred.—15 Cal. 363.

The words "appeal presented" in the Limitation Act, 1877, mean an appeal presented in the manner prescribed in sec. 541 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The words "where there has been an appeal," in Art. 179, cl. 2., of sch. II, of the Limitation Act, 1877, mean where a memorandum of appeal has been presented in Court. In execution of a decree against which an appeal has been presented but rejected on the ground that it was after time, limitation begins to run from the date of the final decree or order of the Appellate Court.—16 Cal. 250.

A plaintiff obtained on the 14th September 1881 a decree against two defendants, the decree as against the first defendant being one for partition; and as against the second defendant (who had set up a julkar right on the lands claimed to be partitioned, and had contended that partition could not be had, and had obtained a partial decree, but had been ordered to pay partial costs to the plaintiff), being one for costs. The first defendant alone appealed against this decree, but unsuccessfully, his appeal being dismissed on the 18th January 1884. The decree-holder applied for execution of his decree as against the second defendant for costs in December 1886. Held, that the application was not barred, for that limitation ran from the 18th January 1884.—16 Cal. 598.

In a suit brought for a declaration of the plaintiff's right to hold certain property free of a mortgage decree, which had been purchased by one G on 13th August 1878, in execution of which decree several applications were made to have the name of G substituted for that of the original decree-holder, but in none of these applications was any further step taken towards execution of the decree, or any order made for substitution of the name of G, until 18th July 1885, when after notice under sec. 232 of the Civil Procedure Code G's name was substituted as decree-holder, and execution taken out against the mortgaged property, G was found to be only a benamidar so far as his purchase of the mortgage decree was concerned. Held, that G being merely a benamidar, the applications made by him for execution of the decree and for substitution of his name as decree-holder under sec. 232 of the Civil Procedure Code were not applications made in accordance with law within the terms of art. 179 of the Limitation Act, 1877, so as to prevent the operation of the Law of Limitation. Execution of the mortgage decree was therefore barred. Abdul Kureem v. Chukhun, 5 C. L. R., 253; Denonath Chuckerbutty v. Lallit Coomar Gangopadya, I. L. R., 9 Cal., 633; 12 C. L. R., 145; and Mis. Ap. 453 of 1885, unreported, followed. Purna Chundra Roy v. Abhoya Chundra Roy, 4 B. L. R., App. 40, and Nadir Hossein v. Pearoo Thovildarinee, 14 B. L. R., 425, dissented from.—16 Cal. 355.

The application contemplated by Art. 179 of sched. ii. of the Limitation Act, and described as "an application for the execution of a decree or order of any Civil Court, &c., &c.," is an application within the terms of sec. 235 of the Civil Procedure Code, that is to say, an application setting the Court in motion to execute a decree in any manner set out in the last column of the form prescribed; but, having so set the Court in motion, any further application, during the continuance of the same proceeding, is an application, to take some step in aid of execution within the terms of cl. 4 in the last column of Art. 179 of the Limitation Act. An application, therefore for the sale of property under attachment, is an application merely in aid of an execution then proceeding.—17 Cal. 53.

Clause 4, Art. 179, Sched. ii of the Limitation Act, 1877, does not include a suit to set aside an order passed in a claim case. R and L obtained a decree against B on the 7th March 1881, and in execution of that decree certain property belonging to B was attached on the 11th June 1883. Thereupon a claim was made to the attached property by third parties, and a two-thirds share therein was released by the Court executing the decree. On the 22nd March, 1884, R and L instituted a suit for a declaration that the entire property was liable to be sold under their decree, and obtained a decree on the 29th March 1886. This decree was reversed by the lower Appellate Court which upheld the order releasing a two thirds share of the property, and, on 22nd July, 1887, the High Court affirmed the decree of the lower Appellate Court. On the 15th August, 1887, R and L applied for execution of their decree in respect of the remaining one-third share. B objected that the application was barred. Held, that the application of the 15th August, 1888 was not a continuation of the application of the 11th June, 1883; Pyaroo Tuhovidarinee v. Nazir Hossein, 23 W. R., 183; Issuree Dasse v. Abdul Khalak, I. L. R., 4 Cal. 415; Chandra Prodhan v. Gopi Mohun Shaha, I. L. R., 14 Cal., 385; and Paras Ram v. Gardner, I. L. R., 1 Al., 355, distinguished. Held, also, that the institution of the suit on the 22nd March, 1884, and the appeal to the High Court from the decree of the lower Appellate Court, were not steps in aid of execution, Akbar Gaze v. Bibee Nufazun, 8 W. R., 99 distinguished.—17 Cal. 268.

On the 23rd March 1886 the plaintiff obtained a decree in the Court of first instance against five defendants, declaring his right to certain specific immoveable property, which was, however, modified on an appeal preferred by the defendants, the decree of the lower appellate Court giving the plaintiff a decree for only two-thirds of the property claimed, and dismissing his suit in respect of the remaining one-third in favour of defendants Nos. 2 and 4. The lower appellate Court's decree was dated the 13th July 1886. Against that decree plaintiff preferred a second appeal to the High Court, making all the defendants respondents, which appeal was, however, dismissed on the 16th June 1887. The plaintiff on the 13th June 1890 applied for execution of the decree in his favour in respect of the two-thirds of the property held to belong to him, and defendants Nos. 1 and 5 objected on the ground that the right to execution was barred, limitation running from the 13th July 1886, the date of the lower appellate Court's decree in the plaintiff's favour. Held, that limitation ran from the 16th June 1887, and that the application was not therefore barred. All the defendants were parties to the second appeal, and the Court to which the application was made for execution was not bound, before allowing execution, to go into all the circumstances of that appeal and consider whether the decree of the lower appellate Court in favour of the plaintiff for the two-thirds of the property was or was not practically secure; the High Court had all the parties before it, and, if it had been right to do so, might have altered the decree against any of them. Quære—Whether under such circumstances the Legislature could have intended the Court executing a decree to go into questions so complicated as to whether in such a case the whole decree was or might have been or become imperilled in the Court of Appeal, and whether the plain words of article 179 might not be followed with less of possible inconvenience and complexity even though in some cases it might result in execution of a decree going against a defendant a little more than three years after such decree was practically secure against him. Nundun Lall v. Rai Joykishen cited with approval.—19 Cal. 750.

Execution is a proceeding to enforce a decree of a Court, and comes under the head of purely adjective law. Such being the case, the law of limitation prevailing at the time of the application must govern.—1 Madr. 52.

Plaintiff obtained a decree against the defendant on the 24th November, 1875, and on the 14th October, 1876, he got execution, and sold some lands of the defendant. On the 9th February, 1876, he applied to the Court for the payment thereout of monies lodged by the purchaser, and got on that day the money. In the meantime an appeal was presented by the defendant, and dismissed on the 28th March, 1877. The present application for execution was made on the 7th February, 1880. Held, that article 179, cl. 2 of the Limitation Act of 1877, which fixes the date of the order of the appellate Court, when there is an appeal, as the point from which the three years is to count, applied, and that the plaintiff was therefore in time. When there is now appeal, the date of the decree or of application is the point from which limitation counts, but not where there is an appeal. Held further that the application by plaintiff to the Court (9th February, 1877) for the money paid in by the purchaser was a step taken to aid in the execution of the decree.—2 Madr. 174.

An insufficiently stamped application for execution of a decree may, under Art. 179 of Sch. ii. of Limitation Act, 1877, suffice to keep the decree alive.—6 Madr. 181.

Certain land having been attached in execution of a decree, the judgment-debtor applied to the Court to postpone the sale of some of the lands until others had first been sold. The vakil for the decree-holder consented in part to this application, but insisted that certain other land should also be sold in the first instance.—Held, that this act of the Vakil was a sufficient application to the Court to take a step in aid of execution within the meaning of Art. 179 of Sch. II of the Limitation Act 1877.—7 Madr. 306.

On the 16th of September, 1879, A, in execution of a decree against V, applied for attachment and sale of certain land, and on the 8th of January, 1880, the sale was confirmed. The purchaser, having heard that V had no title to the land, brought a suit and obtained a decree cancelling the sale on the 2nd April 1881, and on the 2nd of November 1881 obtained an order for restitution of the purchase money, which was thereupon paid to him by A. On the 2nd March 1883 A applied for execution of the decree by arrest of V :—Held, that this application was barred by limitation. I. L. R., 3 Al. 474, followed ; I. L. R., 1 Al. 355, distinguished.—7 Madr. 595.

The application by a decree-holder for a copy of a decree with intent to apply for execution is not a step in aid of execution within the meaning of cl. 4 of art. 179 of sch. ii of the Indian Limitation Act, 1879.—11 Madr. 336.

In a suit for land against several defendants, plaintiff obtained, on 14th June 1884, a decree against the shares of defendants Nos. 3 and 4, the shares of defendants Nos. 5 and 9 being exonerated. The decree-holder appealed against that portion of the decree which exonerated the shares of defendants Nos. 5 and 9, defendants Nos. 3 and 4 being brought on to the record of the appeal as respondents. The appeal having been dismissed, the decree-holder applied on 20th October 1877 for execution against the shares of defendants Nos. 3 and 4 :—Held, the application for execution was barred by Limitation Act, 1877, sch. ii, art. 179.—12 Madr. 497.

If it can be gathered from a decree that payments are directed to be made on dates or at periods which are sufficiently indicated by the terms of the decree the requirements of Limitation Act, sched. II, art. 179, cl. 6, are satisfied.—14 Madr. 396.

An application for execution of a decree was made in February, 1868, and proceedings sufficient to bar limitation under Act XIV of 1859, were going on till 30th September, 1871. The next application for execution of the decree, made in October, 1872, was held to be barred under Act IX of 1871, as more than three years had elapsed on that day from the date of the application in February, 1868. Held also, following Gouree Sunker v. Armem Ali (21 Cal. W.R. 309, Civ. Rul.), that an informal application, made on 30th September, 1871, in the nature of a petition to the Subordinate Judge to give effect to the application of February, 1868, by overruling certain objections of the Collector, and enforcing execution of the decree, was not an application for the execution of a decree such as could bar limitation under Act IX of 1871.—1 Bom. 59.

A decree payable by instalments, with a proviso that, in default of payment of any one instalment, the whole amount of the decree shall become payable at once, is barred, if application for execution be not made within three years of the date on which any instalment fell due, and was not paid. The payment of instalments subsequent to default in payment of first instalment at the date specified does not give the judgment creditor a fresh starting point.—2 Bom. 356.

The "application" spoken of in Art. 160, cl. 4, of Sch. ii. to Act IX of 1871, is merely not such an application as is contemplated by sec. 212 of Act VIII of 1859, but includes an application to keep in force a decree or order. The language of Art. 167, cl. 4, of Sch. ii. to Act IX of 1871 is wide enough to include any application to enforce or keep in force decrees or orders, and, consequently, an application to enforce or keep in force a decree by the attachment of a portion of the property of the defendant, will keep the decree alive against the residue of his property or his person. An order for attachment of a pension in satisfaction of a decree, obtained on the 10th December, 1863, was made on 16th April, 1869. After the passing of the Pensions Act (XXIII of 1871), the Deputy Collector refused to continue paying the pension to the decree-holder, and returned to the Court the warrant of execution issued under the order of 16th April, 1869; and an order finally disposing of the application for attachment, was made on 14th June 1872. On 19th June, 1872, the decree-holder presented a fresh application, praying that the attachment of the pension might be continued, and a letter be written to the Collector, directing him to continue to pay the pension to the decree-holder, as directed by the order of 16th April, 1869. Held that such last-mentioned application came within cl. 4 of Art. 167 of Sch. ii. to Act IX of 1871, and that, consequently, an application, on 24th July, 1874, for execution of the decree of 10th December, 1863, was not barred. Held also that the decree might properly be enforced against property of the defendant, mentioned in the application of 1874, other than the property mentioned in the applications of 1869 and 1872.—2 Bom. 294.

A decree payable by instalments provided that in default of payment of two instalments the whole decree should be executed. The decree-holder applied for execution of the whole decree on the ground that default had been made in payment of the third and fourth instalments. The judgment-debtor objected that application was barred by limitation, as he had made default in payment of the first and second instalments, and three years had elapsed from the date of such default. The decree-holder offered to prove that those instalments had been paid out of Court. Held that he was entitled to give such proof, in order to defeat the judgment-debtor's plea of limitation notwithstanding such payments had not been certified.—4 Bom. 130, and also 416.

The plaintiff obtained a decree against the defendant in 1872. He first applied for its execution in 1874, and his application was deposited of on the ground that the requisite court-fee had not been paid. His next application was in 1876, and it was disposed of because no property could be found to satisfy the decree. His third application, made on the 10th of March, 1879, was one asking merely that the decree might be kept alive. He now applied for the fourth time on the 26th of November, 1881, and sought execution of the decree. Held that the law of limitation, applicable to proceedings in execution, is not the law under which the suit was instituted, but the law in force at the date of the application for execution, in the absence of a legislative provision of the contrary (such as that contained in sec. 1 of Act IX of 1871). The law of limitation, therefore, to be applied to the application of the 10th March, 1879, was Act XV of 1877; and inasmuch as that application did not ask for any step to be taken towards executing the decree, it was not in accordance with Art. 179, Sch. ii. of Act XV of 1877, and did not save the present application from being barred. Mangal Prasad's case (L. R., 8 I. A., 123) explained.—7 Bom. 459.

The plaintiff obtained a decree in 1874 and applied for its execution, first on the 4th of August, 1875, then on the 6th of July, 1878, and again on the 23rd of July, 1880. The third application was withdrawn with permission to apply again. On the 30th November, 1882, the plaintiff made his present application :—Held, that the present application was not time-barred. The rule laid down in sec. 374, of the Civil Procedure Code does not apply to applications for execution.—10 Bom. 62.

On 15th February, 1872, the plaintiff obtained against the defendant a decree for possession upon his mortgage, and in attempting to take possession was obstructed by Naro, another mortgagee of the defendant, whereupon the plaintiff applied for removal of the obstruction, but his application was rejected on the ground that Naro was in possession as mortgagee and that the plaintiff was not entitled to possession until Naro's mortgage was redeemed. The plaintiff did not apply for execution any further. In 1884 the defendant paid off Naro's mortgage, and on 27th August, 1885, the plaintiff presented an application for execution of his decree of 1872. On reference to the High Court:—Held, that the execution of the decree was barred, no application for execution having been made since 1873. The previous application for execution not having been made under sec. 230 of (Act XIV of 1882), the general law of limitation, as laid down in article 179 of Act XV of 1877, governed the case.—11 Bom. 348.

If an application for execution of a decree is duly made so as to satisfy the terms of article 179, paras. 4 and 5, of Schedule II. of Act XV of 1877, but is dismissed, such dismissal does not prevent the application from furnishing a point of time for the beginning of a new term of limitation.—11 Bom. 467.

The application for execution contemplated in clause (4) of article 179 of Schedule II of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877, must be one made in accordance with law, and asking to obtain some relief given by the decree, and to obtain it in the mode that the law permits. A decree provided that the defendant should pay the plaintiff Rs. 156 within one month, and that on receipt of this sum the plaintiff should execute a deed of sale to the defendant. The decree was dated 26th January, 1881. The first application for execution was made on the 24th January, 1884, but dismissed for plaintiff's default. The plaintiff made a second application dated 22nd January, 1887, praying to be put in possession of a certain house which was not awarded by the decree. This application was rejected. On the 23rd June, 1887, the plaintiff made a third application for execution of the decree. Held, that this application was barred by limitation, having been made more than three years after the date of the first application. The intermediate application was not an application for execution, nor a step in aid of execution, of the decree, inasmuch as it asked for what the decree did not give. It could not, therefore, keep the decree alive under article 179, Schedule II of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877).—13 Bom. 237.

An application to the Court to order the sale of property which has been attached, is an application to take some steps in aid of execution; and as the Civil Procedure Code does not require a formal application, it is immaterial whether the application be a verbal one or in writing. Ambica Pershad Singh v. Surdhari Lal (I. L. R., 10 Cal. 51) followed.—15 Bom. 405.

The plaintiff obtained an ex parte decree against the defendant on the 10th March 1886. The defendant applied to have the decree set aside. His application was finally rejected by the appellate Court on 5th March, 1887. The decree-holder presented a darkhast for execution of the decree on 24th September, 1889. Held, that the darkhast was time-barred under article 179, clause 2 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877). The appeal referred to in that clause is clearly an appeal from the decree or order sought to be executed, and not an appeal from an order of the Court refusing to set it aside. The unsuccessful attempts made by the defendants to set aside the ex parte decree could not have the effect of expending the period prescribed by law for execution of the decree.—16 Bom. 123.

Where a redemption decree contained no clause as to the time for payment of the mortgage debt, or foreclosure in default of payment, held, that the mortgagor could still, after the expiration of three years from the date of the decree, execute it by paying the mortgage money, having regard to various darkasts presented by him from time to time, provided the darkasts complied with the conditions of the Statute of Limitation (Act XV of 1877). Dicta to the contrary in Gan Savant Bal Savant v. Narayan Dhond Savant (I. L. R., 7 Bom., 467) and Maloji v. Sagaji (I. L. R., 13 Bom., 567) disapproved of.—16 Bom. 480.

Held that an application under sec. 285 of Act VIII of 1859, being a necessary and decided step towards the execution of the decree, was an application to enforce or keep in force the decree.—1 Al. 525.

Held by the Full Bench that the date on which an application for the execution of a decree is presented, and not any date on which such application may be pending, is "the date of applying" within the meaning of this Art. Held by the Division Bench that an application by the decree-holder for the stay of execution proceedings is not an application to enforce or keep in force the decree.—1 Al. 580.

An application for the partial execution of a joint decree by one of the decree holders is not an application according to law (1) and consequently has not the effect of keeping the decree in force (2). Where a decree of the Sudder Court awarded costs in the lower Court to certain defendants, separately and to eight sets of defendants, collectively and costs in the Sudder Court to three sets, and the only applications which were made for defendants to recover his costs in the lower Court and a fractional share of the costs in the Sudder Court awarded to his set of defendants, a subsequent application by him and the other defendants for execution of the decree was held to be barred by limitation.—1 Al. 231.

The Munsif gave the plaintiffs in a suit for possession of land and for mesne-profits a decree for possession, but dismissed the claim for mesne-profits. An appeal was preferred to the Judge, who affirmed the decree for possession, and remanded the case to the Munsif, under sec. 351 of Act VIII of 1859, to determine the mesne-profits due to the plaintiffs. The Munsif gave the plaintiffs a decree for certain mesne-profits. Subsequently a special appeal was preferred to the High Court against the Judge's decree. While this was pending, an appeal was preferred to the Judge against the decree of the Munsif's for mesne-profits, and on the 7th June, 1873, the plaintiff again obtained a decree for mesne-profits. Finally, on the 6th March, 1874, the High Court modified the Judge's decree for possession, but did not interfere with the order of remand. Held, on the plaintiff's applying for execution of the Judge's decree, dated the 7th June, 1873, that the limitation for the execution of such decree ran, not from the date of such decree, but from the date of the High Court's decree, which was the final decree of the Appellate Court," and the only "final decree."—1 Al. 508.

On the 3rd March, 1875, an application was made by a decree-holder to the Court executing the decree, which did not, as required by sec. 212 of Act V of 1859, state the mode in which the assistance of the Court was required, whether by the arrest and imprisonment of the judgment-debtor or attachment of his property but prayed that the Court would, under sec. 216 of that Act, issue a notice to the judgment-debtor to show cause why the decree should not be executed against him. Under this application notice was issued to the judgment-debtor on the 28th March, 1875. On the 27th April, 1875, the execution case was struck off the file on the ground that the decree-holder did not desire further proceedings to be taken. Held (Per PEARSON & OLDFIELD JJ.) that, the application was one to enforce or keep in force the decree, and further that limitation should be computed from the date the notice to the judgment-debtor was issued. Franks v. Nunek Mal (H. C. R., N.-W. P., 1875, p. 97) impugned. Per SPANKIE, J., contra.—1 Al. 675.

Held that an application to the Court which passed a decree, that it may be sent for execution to another Court, is an application to keep such decree in force within the meaning of the Limitation Act.—2 Al. 284.

A decree for the payment of money by instalments directed that, if the judgment-debtor failed to pay two instalments in succession, the decree-holder should be entitled to enforce payment of the whole amount due under the decree. The decree-holder, alleging that a portion of the ninth instalment was payable, and that the whole of the tenth (the last) instalment was due, applied to enforce payment of the monies due under the decree. Held, Per PEARSON, J. that, whether former instalments had been paid or not was immaterial, and the application, being within three years from the dates on which the ninth and tenth instalments became due, was, within time, Spankie, J. refused to interfere in second appeal, inasmuch as the lower Appellate Court had found as a fact that there had been no such default in the payment of the former instalments as was contemplated by the decree.—2 Al. 291.

Held that the words “appeal” and “Appellate Court” in art. 179 (2), sch. II of Act XV of 1877, include an appeal to Her Majesty in Council. Held, therefore, where an appeal had been preferred to Her Majesty in Council from a decree of the High Court dated the 18th August, 1871, and the High Court’s decree was affirmed by an order of Her Majesty in Council dated the 12th August 1876, and an application for execution of the High Court’s decree was made on the 15th July, 1879, that under art. 179 (2), sch. II of Act XV of 1877, the limitation of such application must be computed from the date of the order of Her Majesty in Council.—2 Al. 763.

An application for execution of a decree against one of the several legal representatives of the deceased judgment-debtor takes effect, for the purposes of limitation, against them all.—3 Al. 517.

An application by a decree-holder for the postponement of a sale in execution of the decree on the ground that he had allowed the judgment-debtor time, is not “an application according to law to the proper Court for execution, or to take some step in aid of execution, of the decree,” within the meaning of art. 179, Sch. II, Act XV of 1877, and limitation cannot be computed from the date of such an application.—3 Al. 757.

An oral application, on a sale of immoveable property in the execution of a decree having been adjourned, for the fixing of a fresh date for the sale, is an application to enforce the decree. An application to enforce the decree made within three years from the date of such an oral application will therefore be within time.—3 Al. 139.

An application by a judgment-debtor, stating that the proceedings in execution had been adjusted, and he had paid the decree holder Rs. 10, and would pay him the balance of the decretal amount subsequently, and praying that the execution case might be struck off, is an application to “keep in force the decree,” within the meaning of art. 167, Sch. II of Act IX of 1871, and a “step in aid of execution of the decree,” within the meaning of art. 179, Sch. II of Act XV of 1877.—3 Al. 320.

The holders of a decree by a Civil Court, which directed, inter alia, that they should be maintained in possession of a share of a village, by cancelment of the order of the settlement-officer directing the entry of the judgment debtor's name in the revenue registers in respect of such share, applied for execution of such decree, improperly asking the Court executing the decree to order the Collector to amend such entry by the substitution of their names for that of the judgment-debtor in respect of such share, instead of asking it to send such officer a copy of such decree for his information, with a view to such amendment. Held that such application, not being one in accordance with law, within the meaning of art. 179, sch. II of Act XV of 1877, was not one which would keep such decree in force.—4 Al. 34.

On the 11th July, 1877, a decree was made against B & J, the defendants in a suit, against which J alone appealed, such appeal not proceeding on a ground common to him and B. The appellate Court affirmed such decree on the 20th November, 1877. On the 23rd September, 1880, the holder of such decree applied for execution against B. Held that, so far as B was concerned, limitation should be computed from the date of such decree, and not from the date of the decree of the appellate Court, and such application was therefore barred for limitation.—4 Al. 36.

Application for execution of a decree was made on the 22nd November, 1875, and in pursuance of such application certain property belonging to the judgment-debtor was advertised for sale on the 27th March, 1876. On the latter date the parties to such decree made a joint application in writing to the Court, wherein it was stated that the judgment-debtor had made a certain payment on account of such decree, and the decree-holders had agreed to give him four months' time to pay the balance thereof, and it was prayed that such sale might be postponed and such time might be granted. The Court on the same day made an order on such application postponing such sale. The next application for execution of such decree was made on the 17th January, 1879. The lower Appellate Court held, with reference to the question whether such application had been made within the time limited by law, that it had been so made as under Art. 178 (6) Sch. ii. of Act XV of 1877, such time began to run from the date of the expiration of the period of time allowed to the judgment-debtor under the application of 27th March 1876. Held that Art. 179 (6) had not any relevancy to the present case; but, inasmuch as the proceedings of the 27th March, 1886, might be considered as properly constituting a 'step in aid of execution,' within the meaning of Art. 179 (4), the application of the 11th January, 1879, was within time.—4 Al. 60.

A decree passed jointly in favour of more persons than one can only be legally executed as a whole for the benefit of all the decree-holders, and not partially to the extent of the interest of each individual decree-holder. Held, therefore, where one of two persons, in whose favour a decree for money had been passed jointly, applied on the 27th April, 1880, for execution of a moiety of such decree, and the other of such persons made a similar application on the 30th April, 1880, that such applications, not being made in accordance with law, were not sufficient to keep the decree in force. Also that the illegality of such applications could not be cured by a subsequent amended application for the execution of the decree as a whole, preferred after the period of limitation had expired.—4 Al. 72.

The words, "where there has been an appeal," in cl. 2, art. 179 of Sch. II of Act XV of 1877, do not contemplate and mean only an appeal from the decree of which execution is sought, but include where there has been a review of the judgment on which such decree is based, and an appeal from the decree passed on such review. Held, therefore, where there had been a review of judgment, and an appeal from the decree passed on review, and such decree having been set aside by the Appellate Court, application was made for execution of the original decree, that time began to run, not from the date of that decree, but from the date of the decree of the Appellate Court.—4 Al. 274.

An application by a decree-holder in the course of an investigation into an objection to the attachment of property to have his witnesses summoned is an application within the meaning of Art. 179 (4), Sch. ii. of the Limitation Act XV 1877.—5 Al. 344.

An application by a decree-holder to be paid the proceeds of a sale of property in execution of the decree, is a “step in aid of execution” of the decree, within the meaning of No. 179 (4), Sch. ii. of Act XV of 1877 (Limitation Act).—6 Al. 366.

Where an application for appeal was presented to the High Court, but rejected, owing to the memorandum of appeal being insufficiently stamped, held that, under such circumstances there had not been an appeal or a final decree or order of an appellate Court within the meaning of No. 179 (2) of the Limitation Act, so as to give a period from which limitation for execution of the decree appealed from could run.—6 Al. 438.

On the 28th May, 1878, application was made for execution of a decree in pursuance of which certain property was attached and proclaimed for sale. On the day fixed for the sale the Court issued an injunction to stay the same until a suit, which certain persons who claimed the property had instituted, had been decided. On the 4th September, 1882, the suit having been finally decided on the 24th January, 1881, the decree-holder applied for execution. Held that the application might properly be considered to be for revival of the former proceedings after removal of the injunction, which Art. 178 of the Limitation Act, 1877, rather than Art. 179, was applicable, and was within the time from the date of accrual of the right apply on the final decision of the suit.—6 Al. 23.

B, the mortgagee of certain property and N. the mortgagor, and T, to whom a part of the mortgaged property had been transferred by sale, for the mortgage-money, and the sale of the mortgaged property. On the 24th September he obtained a decree, which directed N to pay the money, and that it might be realized by the sale of the mortgaged property. T appealed, contending, that as the instrument of mortgage was not registered, it was not receivable as evidence of the mortgage, and therefore the sale of property had been improperly ordered. N did not appeal. The Court of first appeal allowed this contention and set aside the order for the sale of the property. The mortgagee preferred a second appeal, and on the 15th January, 1880, the Court of last appeal modified the decree of the Lower Court, directing that a part of the mortgage-money might be recovered by the sale of the mortgaged property. On the 14th September, 1882, B applied for execution of the decree against N. Held that the period of limitation for the application was governed by Art. 179 of the Limitation Act, and such period would run from the final decree of the appellate Court.—6 Al. 14.

A decree for money was passed in 1871 in favour of two persons jointly, In 1883 the decree-holders applied for execution thereof. By previous applications for execution made in 1875, 1877, and 1880 the decree-holders had sought to recover two thirds of the amount of decree :—Held that inasmuch as the previous executions of the decree by some sharers for their shares whether strictly allowable or not, were allowed, and no objections at the time were taken, they were good for the purpose of keeping the decree alive ; and that the judgment-debtor could not now take exception to them as not being applications to enforce the decree within the meaning of the Limitation Act. Kungul Pershad Dichit v. Grija Kant Lahiri followed.—7 Al. 282.

The holder of a decree for money dated the 7th June, 1879, applied on the 20th July, 1880, for execution thereof, but it appeared that in certain particulars the decree required correction, and it was therefore ordered, at the request of the pleader that the application should be dismissed and the decree returned to him for amendment. The next application was made by the decree-holder on the 19th February, 1883 :—Held that the application of the 20th July, 1880, having been put in and afterwards taken back by the decree-holder, the proceeding became to all intents and purposes as though no application had been made ; that therefore it could have no effect as an application made in accordance with law for execution within the meaning of art. 179 ; that applying the rule contained in sec. 374 of the Civil Procedure Code, in accordance with sec. 647, to the application for execution of the 19th February, 1883, the question of limitation must be determined as if the first application had never been filed ; and that the application now in question was consequently barred by limitation. Ramanaudan Chetti v. Periatambi Shervai dissented from.—7 Al. 359.

An application to execute an attached decree is a “step in aid of execution” of the original decree, within the meaning of art. 179, inasmuch as its object is to obtain money in order to pay off the judgment-debtor.—7 Al. 382.

Where a decree-holder died without taking out execution of his decree, and, two days after his death, his pleader made an application for execution on his behalf, this being the first application of the kind :—Held that, inasmuch as the authority of a pleader ceases at the moment of his client's death, the application was invalid, and was not such an application or step in aid of execution of the decree as could save a subsequent application for execution by the decree-holder's heirs from being barred by limitation.—7 Al. 504.

An appeal from a decree dated the 8th July, 1879, was rejected by the High Court on the 11th June, 1880, in consequence of the failure of the appellants to pay additional court-fees declared by the Court to be leviable. On the 23rd December, 1882, an application was filed by the decree-holder for execution of the decree :—Held, that the order of the 11th June, 1880, rejecting the appeal on the ground of deficient payment of court-fee, was equivalent to a decree, and therefore the application, being made not more than three years from the date of that order, was not barred by limitation.—7 Al. 887.

R, in a suit against S and other persons, obtained a decree on the 24th December, 1878, S being exempted from the decree, and being awarded costs against the plaintiff. In executing his decree, R, on the 16th June, 1880, sought to set off the costs awarded to S against the amount due to himself. On the 6th August, 1880, S preferred objections to this course. On the 19th July, 1883, S applied for execution of his decree for costs :—Held that the application was barred by limitation, inasmuch as art. 179 (4) requires that the decree-holder should make a direct and independent application for execution on his own account, and it was not sufficient to satisfy the requirements of the law to offer objections under the circumstances under which they were offered in the present case.—7 Al. 893.

Cl. (2), must be construed as intended to apply without any exceptions to decrees from which an appeal has been lodged by any of the parties to the original proceedings, and should certainly be applied to cases where the whole decree was imperilled by the appeal.—8 Al. 573.

An application to execute a decree passed in April, 1880, was made on the 19th February, 1884, and rejected on the 26th March, 1884, as being beyond time. This order was upheld on appeal in March, 1885. While the appeal was pending the decree holder in May, 1884, applied to the Court of first instance to amend the decree under sec. 206 of the Civil Procedure Code, and in December 1874, the application was granted. In April, 1885, an application was made for execution of the amended decree, the decree-holder contending that limitation should be calculated from the date of the amendment, and that art. 178 applied to the case:—Held, that No. 179 and not No. 178 was applicable, that the order rejecting the application of the 19th February, 1884, became final on being upheld on appeal, that the amendment could not revive the decree or furnish a fresh starting-point of limitation, and that the application was therefore time-barred. Mungal Pershad v. Grija Kant Lahiri and Ram Kirpal v. Rup Kuari referred to.—8 Al. 492.

Held, following T. D. Bandyopadhyaya v. B. L. Mukhopadaya (Tyrrell, J., doubting), that an application made by a decree-holder, the object of which is that the receipt of certain sums of money paid out of Court may be certified, is a “step in aid of execution,” such as will keep the decree alive, within meaning of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877), sch. ii. No. 179. (4). Gansham v. Mukha referred to.—9 Al. 9.

Sec. 647 of the Civil Procedure Code makes secs. 373 and 374 applicable to proceedings in execution of decree. Kifayat Ali v. Ram Singh and Pirjade v. Pirjade followed. Tara Chand Megraj v. Kashinath Trimbak and Ramanandan Chetti v. Periatambi Shervai dissented from. A first application for execution of a decree was withdrawn by the decree-holder on account of formal defects, the Court returning the application, but without giving permission to the decree-holder to withdraw with leave to take fresh proceedings. Held that, with reference to the second paragraph of sec. 373 read with sec. 647 of the Code, the decree-holder was precluded from again applying for execution; but that, even assuming that permission to apply again could be inferred from the action of the Court in returning the application, sec. 374 was applicable so as to make a subsequent application presented five years after the decree barred by limitation, with reference to art. 179 of the Limitation Act.—10 Al. 71.

The expression “applying in accordance with law” in Act XV of 1877 (Limitation Act), Sch. ii, No. 179 (4), means applying to the Court to do something in execution which by law that Court is competent to do. It does not mean applying to the Court to do something which, either to the decree-holder’s direct knowledge in fact, or from his presumed knowledge of the law, he must have known the Court was incompetent to do. Held, therefore that an application to have the judgment-debtor arrested in execution of decree, which was in contravention of the terms of sec. 341 of the Civil Procedure Code, and an application to bring mortgaged property to sale, which was in contravention of sec. 99 of the Transfer of Property Act IV of 1882), were not applications “in accordance with law” within the meaning of No. 179 (4) of sch. ii of the Limitation Act.—12 Al. 64.

The expression “step in aid of execution” in Act XV of 1877 (Limitation Act) sch. ii, No. 179 (4) was intended to cover any application made according to law in furtherance of the execution proceedings under a decree. It includes applications made by a decree-holder under sec. 258 of the Civil Procedure Code to enter up part satisfaction of the decree. Per Mahmood, J.—Provided that the Payment asserted in the application was actually made.—12 Al. 399.

The granting of an application under sec. 206 of the Civil Procedure Code to bring a decree into conformity with the judgment does not form the starting point of a fresh period of limitation in favour of the decree-holder ; nor is such an application a “step in aid of execution” within the meaning of art. 179, schedule ii, of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877). Kishen Sahai v. The Collector of Allahabad, distinguished.—13 Al. 124.

Where a decree for possession of immoveable property was passed not jointly, but severally, as against all the defendants individually, and specifically stated the proportions of which they were severally in possession, as also the costs separately payable by each of them to the plaintiff ; and where two only of the defendants appealed on pleas which did not assail the decree in respect of any right or ground common to the appellants and all or any of the non-appealing defendants, but referred merely to the specific property alleged to be in the appellants’ hands :—Held by the Full Bench (Brodhurst and Mahmood, JJ., dissenting) that a first application for execution of the original decree against those defendants who had not appealed from it, and which was made five years after the date of the decree, was barred by limitation, and clause 2 of art. 179, sch. ii of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877), did not apply so as to make time run from the proceedings in the appeal preferred by the other defendants. That clause applies only to those cases in which the parties to the execution proceedings were parties to the appeal, or to the class of cases to which sec. 544 of the Civil Procedure Code applies. J. P. Wise v. Rajnrain Chuckerbutty and Mullick Ahmad Zumma v. Muhammad Syad approved. Held by Brodhurst and Mahmood, JJ., contra, that art. 179, clause 2 must be construed as applying without any exceptions to decrees from which an appeal has been lodged by any of the parties to the litigation in the original suit. Nur-ul-Hasan v. Muhammad Hasan followed.—13 Al. 1.

The making of an application by the decree-holder for leave to bid at the sale in execution of his decree is “a step in aid of execution” within the meaning of cl. (4), No. 179, sch. ii of the Limitation Act (Act XV of 1877.)—13 Al. 211.

Where a decree for redemption of mortgage stated that the amount due under the mortgage should be paid within four months, but omitted to state what the result would be if the mortgage debt was not so paid,—Held, that it was competent to the decree-holder to execute such a decree at any time within the period of limitation prescribed by Art. 179 of the second schedule of Act XV of 1877,—14 Al. 350.

See I. L. R., 14 Cal. 348, noted under art. 175 ; 19 Cal. 132, noted art. 178 ; 7 Cal. 82, noted under secs. 12 and 14 of the Civ. Pro. Code ; 2 Madr. 1, noted under sec. 216 of Civ. Pro. Code ; 5 Madr. 141, noted under sec. 230 of the Civ. Pro. Code ; 14 Madr. 252, noted under sec. 231 of the Civ. Pro. Code ; 4 Al. 83, noted under art. 75 ; 9 Cal. 730, noted under sec. 19.

Notes.

The plaintiff obtained a decree in 1864. The first application for execution was made in September 1869 under sec. 216 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act VIII of 1859); and after notice to the defendant as provided thereby, an order was made under that section for execution to issue. In September, 1880, an application for execution was made under sec. 230 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1877, which repealed Act VIII of 1859. Held that the order after notice had the effect of reviving the decree within the meaning of art. 180, sch. ii., Act XV of 1877, and therefore the decree was not barred by the law of limitation. An order for execution under the Code, made after notice to show cause, has, on the original side of the Court, the same effect as an award of execution in pursuance of a writ of scir facias had under the procedure of the Supreme Court,—i. e., it creates a revivor of the decree. The clause of sec. 230 of Act X of 1877, which prohibits a subsequent application for execution, only applies where the previous application has been made under that section, and not where such previous application has been made under Act VIII of 1859.—I. L. R., 6 Cal. 504.

Although an order of Her Majesty in Council may confirm a decree of the Court below, that order is the paramount decision in the suit; and any application to enforce it, is in point of law, an application to execute the order, and not the decree which it confirmed. Such an application is governed by art. 180, sch. ii. of Act XV of 1877.—8 Cal. 218.

The plaintiffs obtained a decree of the High Court of Bombay against the defendant on the 22nd February, 1867. The defendant, after the passing of the decree against him, resided in Ahmedabad. In July, plaintiff assigned his decree to L, who in 1876 assigned it to M. From time to time M obtained orders for the execution of the said decree, but was always unable to proceed to execution. The last order for execution made by the High Court was on the 4th February, 1879. In April, 1879, the decree was transmitted to the Court at Ahmedabad for execution, and that Court in September, 1879, issued a warrant of arrest against the defendant against the order for which the defendant appealed. The said order was confirmed by the High Court on 10th February, 1880. In April, 1881, the defendant was in Bombay, and M the decree-holder, obtained a summons calling on defendant to show cause why the decree should not be executed against him. On 3rd May the summons was made absolute. The defendant appealed, and contended that the application for execution was barred by limitation under sec. 230 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877) which was to be read with clause 180 of sch. ii. of Limitation Act, XV of 1877. Held that the application was not barred. Clause 180 of the second schedule of the Limitation Act, XV of 1877 was intended to be independent of sec. 230 of the Civil Procedure Code, and not to be in any way controlled by it. Sec. 230 does not apply to decrees made by the High Court.—6 Bom. 258.

The Indian Limitation Act XV of 1877, [Schedule II, article 180, applies to a judgment of a Court for the relief of insolvent debtors entered up in the High Court, in accordance with section 86 of the Statute 11 and 12 Vic., cap. 21. Although a Court held under the latter statute determines the substance of the questions relating to the insolvent's estate, the proceedings in execution and the judgment are the High Court's. The judgment is entered up in the ordinary course of the duty cast upon the High Court by the law, not by way of special or extraordinary action, but in the exercise of its ordinary original civil jurisdiction. The latter expression in the charter of 28th December, 1865, being opposed to the "extraordinary" jurisdiction, which the High Court may assume, at its discretion, upon special occasions and by special orders, includes all such jurisdiction as is exercised by the High Court in the ordinary course of law without any step taken to assume it. When an order has been made, under section 86 of the Statute 11 and 12 Vic., cap. 21, that execution be taken out, a present right accrues to the Official Assignee to apply for it; and, therefore, article 180 of Schedule II assigning in reference to judgments of High Courts exercising ordinary original jurisdiction, a starting point of time depending on the accrual of the right to enforce them, is the article applicable.—13 Bom. 520.

CIVIL PROCEDURE CODE.

ACT No. XIV. OF 1882.

(As amended up to date.)

RECEIVED THE ASSENT OF HIS EXCELLENCY THE GOVERNOR-GENERAL
ON THE 17TH MARCH, 1882.

An Act to consolidate and amend the laws relating to the Procedure of the Courts of Civil Judicature.

WHEREAS it is expedient to consolidate and amend the laws relating to the procedure of the Courts of Civil Judicature ; It is hereby enacted as follows:—

Preamble.

PRELIMINARY.

1. This Act may be cited as “ The Code of Civil Procedure :” and it shall come into force on the first day of June, 1882.

Short title.

Commencement.

This section and section 3 extend to the whole of British India. The other sections extend to the whole of British India except the Scheduled Districts as defined in Act No. XIV of 1874.

Local extent.

Notes.

This section applies to Provincial S. C. Courts.

An appeal lies to the High Court from the Sonthal Pergunnahs in all civil suits in which the matter in dispute is over R. 1,000 in value.—I. L.
R., 10 Cal. 761.

On 28th September 1877 (i. e., three days before Act X of 1877 came into operation), an application was made for the enforcement of a money-decree by attachment (inter alia) of a political pension enjoyed by the defendants. Under Act VII of 1859, sec. 216, a notice was issued on the same day to the defendants, calling upon them to show cause why the decree should not be executed. The defendants accordingly appeared on the day fixed (at which date Act X of 1877 had come into force), and contended that, under sec. 266, cl. g. of that Act, the pension was no longer attachable. Held, that all proceedings, commenced and pending when Act X of 1877 became law, were, under Act I of 1868, sec. 6, to be governed by the law therefore in force, the general rule of construction contained in that section not being affected or varied by Act X of 1877, secs. 1 and 3 ; and that a bona fide application for enforcement of a decree in a particular way, coupled with an order of the Court in furtherance of that object, as much constitutes a proceeding in execution commenced and pending as the actual issue of a warrant of attachment.—4 Bom.

2. In this Act, unless there be something repugnant in the subject or context—
Interpretation-clause.

“chapter :” “Chapter” means a chapter of this Code :

“district” means the local limits of the jurisdiction of a principal Civil Court of original jurisdiction (herein after called a ‘District Court’), “District :”
“District Court :”
 and includes the local limits of the ordinary original civil jurisdiction of a High Court : every Court of a grade inferior to that of a District Court, and every Court of Small Causes, shall, for the purposes of this Code, be deemed to be subordinate to the High Court and the District Court :

“pleader” means every person entitled to appear and plead for another in Court, and includes an advocate, a vakil, and an attorney of a High Court :
“pleader :”

“Government Pleader” includes also any officer appointed by the Local Government to perform all or any of the functions expressly imposed by this Code on the Government Pleader :
“Government Pleader :”

“Collector” means every officer performing the duties of a Collector of land-revenue :
“Collector :”

“decree” means the formal expression of an adjudication upon any right claimed, or defence set up, in a Civil Court, when such adjudication, so far as regards the Court expressing it, decides the suit or appeal. An order rejecting a plaint, or directing accounts to be taken, or determining any question mentioned or referred to in section 244, but not specified in section 588, is within this definition : an order specified in section 588 is not within this definition :
“decree :”

“order” means the formal expression of any decision of a Civil Court which is not a decree as above defined :
“order :”

“judgment” means the statement given by the Judge of the grounds of a decree or order :
“judgment :”

“Judge” means the presiding officer of a Court :
“Judge :”

“judgment-debtor” means any person against whom a decree or order has been made :
“judgment-debtor :”

“decree-holder” means any person in whose favour a decree or any order capable of execution has been made, and includes any person to whom such decree or order is transferred :

“decree-holder:”

“written” includes printed and lithographed, and “writing” includes print and lithography :

“written :”

“signed” includes marked, when the person making the mark is unable to write his name ; it also includes stamped with the name of the person referred to :

“signed :”

“foreign Court” means a Court situate beyond the limits of British India, and not having authority in British India, nor established by the Governor-General in Council :

“foreign Court :”

“foreign judgment” means the judgment of a foreign Court :*

“foreign judgment :”

“public officer” means a person falling under any of the following descriptions (namely) :—

“public officer:”

every Judge ;

every covenanted servant of Her Majesty ;

every commissioned officer in the military or naval forces of Her Majesty while serving under Government ;

every officer of a Court of Justice whose duty it is, as such officer, to investigate or report on any matter of law or fact, or to make, authenticate, or keep any document, or to take charge or dispose of any property, or execute any judicial process, or to administer any oath, or to interpret, or to preserve order in the Court, and every person specially authorized by a Court of Justice to perform any of such duties ;

every person who holds any office by virtue of which he is empowered to place or keep any person in confinement ;

every officer of Government whose duty it is, as such officer, to prevent offences, to give information of offences, to bring offenders to justice, or to protect the public health, safety, or convenience ;

every officer whose duty it is, as such officer, to take, receive, keep, or expend any property on behalf of Government, or to make any survey, assessment, or contract on behalf of

* For limitation of suits on foreign judgments, see Act XV of 1877, sch. ii., art. 117, and sec. 3 of this Act,

Government, or to execute any revenue-process or to investigate, or to report on, any matter affecting the pecuniary interests of Government, or to make, authenticate, or keep any document relating to the pecuniary interests of Government, or to prevent the infraction of any law for the protection of the pecuniary interests of Government, and every officer in the service or pay of Government, or remunerated by fees or commission for the performance of any public duty.

And in any part of British India in which this Code operates, "Government" includes the Government of India as well as the Local Government.

"Government .

Notes.

This section applies to Provincial S. C. Courts.

A pleader holding a certificate under sec. 12 of Act XX of 1865 is not thereby entitled to be admitted to practise in the Court of Small Causes at Calcutta.—1 B. L. R., (A. C.) 45; 10 W. R., 82.

When a suit is remitted by order of an Appellate Court for re-hearing or finding on an issue, the proceedings on such order must be regarded as a further proceeding in the trial of the suit, and consequently, under sec. 22 of Reg. XIV of 1816, a vakil cannot change sides, and hold a vakalatnama for the party opposed to the one for whom he appeared at the first hearing.—4 M. H. C. R., App. 43.

The vakil retained by the plaintiff in a suit in which a decree has been given for the plaintiff is competent to plead for his client in answer to a claim advanced (under the first portion of sec. 246 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1859) to property attached in execution of such decree, without the production of a fresh vakalatnama.—5 Bom. H. C. R., (A. C.) 83.

A vakil of the High Court in Calcutta is entitled to practise as a pleader in the Calcutta Court of Small Causes.—2 Ind. Jur., N. S., 133; 7 W. R., 228.

The acceptance of a vakalatnama by a pleader of the High Court should in all cases be unconditional.—14 W. R., 7.

Not merely authorized mukhtars, but other persons generally, are at liberty to appoint pleaders by vakalatnamas.—7 W. R., 481.

The greatest caution should be exercised by the Courts before acting upon statements out of the ordinary scope of the vakil's authority in the particular matter for which he was employed.—6 M. H. C. R., 127.

A consent by the vakil of a party to a decree being made binding on property other than what the parties to the suit may have an interest in, is a consent to what is beyond the scope of the suit, and can neither be binding on the party, nor acted upon by the Court.—2 M. H. C. R., 423.

When a pleader, in the conduct of a suit, makes admissions on behalf of a client, the client is bound by such admissions.—5 N.-W. P. H. C. R., 2.

Pleaders, unless specially empowered so to do, have no authority to compromise cases conducted by them.—2 N.-W. P. H. C. R., 149.

A vakil has no authority under an ordinary vakalatnama to give up a portion of the claim already decreed, and any such abandonment will not be binding on his client. When a case is remanded with the specific declaration that the plaintiff shall obtain "possession of the disputed property," the lower Court has no jurisdiction to debar the plaintiff from any portion thereof by reason of a relinquishment made by the vakil.—3 B. L. R., App. 15.

A vakil, by his ordinary employment as vakil, enjoys no authority authorizing him to transfer a decree.—2 N.-W. P. H. C. R., 195.

Where a vakil, upon a mistaken view of the law, goes beyond and contravenes his instructions, his erroneous consent cannot bind his client.—16 W. R., 246.

A vakil in the Courts of the mofussil is not empowered to make admissions on points of law on behalf of his client, although he may make admissions on points of fact.—Jusoda Koonwar v. Gouree Byjnath Pershad, 1 Ind. Jur., N. S., 365; 9 W. R., 375.

A party is bound by the admission of his duly constituted vakil, when the admission is one of a fact which, but for such admission, the opposite party would have had an opportunity of proving.—9 W. R., 485.

A distinct admission of liability made by a vakil who represented the defendant, and whose authority was not questioned, was held to be sufficient to warrant a decree in favour of the plaintiff.—21 W. R., 332.

The admission of a defendant's vakil in Court was held to be legal evidence of the receipt of money, and to do away with the necessity for other proof.—10 W. R., 322.

It is not within the ordinary scope of a pleader's duties to relinquish any portion of his client's case without express authority from the client, who is not bound by such relinquishment, unless it was authorized by himself.—12 W. R., 279.

Ordinarily a vakil who is employed to conduct the case on behalf of his client has no implied authority to compromise it. In the absence of any express provision in the vakalatnama, he can make no compromise which will be binding upon his client, except with his consent.—2 Agra H. C. R., 222.

Where a pleader, authorized only to conduct the defence in the usual way, pledged his client to relinquish his defence if the plaintiff would assert on oath that the defendant was not the owner of the property in dispute, it was held that he had exceeded his power, and that his client was not bound by his act.—3 Agra H. C. R., 309.

Where a vakil has undertaken the conduct of a suit, he is bound to proceed with it, and cannot sue for his fee, in the absence of a special agreement, until the suit is completed, unless where the client has dispensed with his services.—6 M. H. C. R., 265.

The rule under Reg. XIV of 1816, sec. 30, that each of two vakils appointed by a party to a suit shall be entitled to a moiety of the fees payable, applies only to cases where they are appointed by the same vakalatnama.—1 M. H. C. R., 369.

In a suit for a judicial separation and alimony decided under the Indian Divorce Act (IV of 1869), the only basis for the estimation of pleader's fees is ten times the amount of alimony for one year.—7 M.H.C.R., 394.

The fee to be allowed to a pleader upon a petition to the Court to establish the right to have a document registered under Act XX of 1866, sec. 84, was one-fourth of the fee allowable in a regular suit, as was provided by Act I of 1846, sec. 7.—7 Bom. H. C. R., (A. C.) 132.

The provisions of Reg. II of 1827, sec. 52, cls. 1 and 2, and of Act I of 1846, sec. 7, regarding the award of pleaders' costs by way of a percentage, relate only to costs as between party and party, and (inasmuch as sec. 52 of Reg. II of 1827 is, by sec. 6 of Act I of 1846, expressly rendered inoperative for any purpose except for the purposes of sec. 7 of the latter Act) there is not any statutable provision for costs as between pleader and client, so that, in the absence of an agreement between them, the pleader is left to his remedy on a quantum meruit.—9 Bom. H. C. R., 33.

An application was made for leave to sue defendant in forma pauperis, and he agreed with certain vakils to give them full fees, according to the valuation of the claim, in case they should succeed in having the application rejected. Held that this was a valid agreement, and that the vakils, having performed their part, were entitled to recover upon it.—2 C. L. R., 166.

The ordinary rule for assessing the hearing fee according to the market value of the property in suit is not applicable to a suit for partition, and the Court in each such case ought to fix the amount of the fee.—13 C. L. R., 253.

A suit under sec. 15, Act XVI of 1864, was not a summary, but a regular suit, and full fees were awarded for pleaders.—9 W. R., 101.

A, a pleader, was engaged by B, who was acting on behalf of C, to defend certain persons charged with the offences of rioting and of having caused grievous hurt. Two of the accused persons were relatives of C. A agreed with B that, if all the accused were acquitted, his fee was to be Rs. 500; if the two who were the relatives of C were acquitted, then he was to receive Rs. 250; but in the event of none of the accused being acquitted, he was to receive only Rs. 40. Before the trial B paid A Rs. 475; this having come to the knowledge of C, he telegraphed, saying that the fee was exorbitant, and A, upon being remonstrated with, handed over Rs. 250 to a banker to be placed to his (A's) credit. A alleged that, out of Rs. 225 which remained with him, he paid Rs. 140 to B as commission, and that Rs. 25 were paid to his mohurir. Held that A was guilty of fraudulent and grossly improper conduct. He was suspended from practising for the period of one year. Per Pontifex, J.—If a mukhtar, paid for his services by his employer, were to receive in addition, without the knowledge of his employer, a percentage or commission from the pleader, he would be answerable, not only in the Civil Court, but also in the Criminal Court, to a charge of obtaining money improperly from his employer.—11 B. L. R., 312.

A District Judge has no power to remove a vakil against his will from a Court to which he has once been allotted, except for a criminal offence, misbehaviour, or neglect of duty.—1 Bom. H. C. R., 136.

A Zillah Judge has no authority to oblige a pleader to leave a Court in which he has been practising and to proceed to another.—10 W. R., 332.

Any charge of misconduct against a pleader or mukhtar holding a certificate under Act XX of 1865, other than a recorded conviction of a criminal offence, must be made and substantiated, and a report submitted to the High Court, as provided by sec. 16.—7 W. R., 316.

A Zillah Judge has no power, under Act XX of 1865, to suspend a pleader of the High Court from practising in the Courts of his district on the ground of incompetency. His proper course is to make a representation to the High Court.—14 W. R., 217.

A Zillah Judge has no authority to initiate proceedings against a pleader of the lower grade under sec. 16, Act XX of 1865, which requires that the inquiry should be made by the Court in which the pleader committed the act of misconduct.—11 W. R., 127.

In a case tried under the provisions of sec. 16, Act XX of 1865, where the subordinate Court is of opinion that the pleader should be acquitted, it is not necessary that there should be any report to the Judge.—13 W. R., 67.

It is not expedient that pleaders should by purchase become the persons entitled to execute decrees in suits in which they have been entitled to execute decrees in suits in which they have been engaged.—2 N.-W. P. H. C. R., 46.

The conduct of a vakil who, having acted in that capacity on behalf of a judgment-debtor in certain proceedings in execution of a decree, subsequently became partner with the decree-holder in the purchase of the property, remarked upon. Quære.—Whether, under such circumstances, the purchase by the vakil, or the purchase by the decree-holder in conjunction with him, could not be set aside.—4 B. L. R., (A. C.) 181 : 13 W. R., 209. See also 17 W. R., 480.

The Officiating Advocate-General having claimed pre-audience, the claim was questioned by a senior member of the Bar, but was allowed. Held that, down to the transfer of the Government of India to Her Majesty, the Advocate-General of the East India Company was not entitled as such to pre-audience in the Courts without a patent of precedence: that the Attorney-General and Solicitor-General in England enjoy precedence as representing the Sovereign, and not by patent: and that the Advocate-General and Officiating Advocate-General for the time being are entitled to similar pre-audience as the Attorney-General in England.—Bourke's Rep., O. C. 224; A. O. C. 110.

A Collector's Court, although it exercises certain powers under the Civil Procedure Code, is not a Civil Court within the meaning of sec. 15 of Act VI of 1871; nor is it subordinate to a District Court within the meaning of Act X of 1877, sec. 2.—3 C. L. R., 508.

Notwithstanding the provisions of sec. 12 of the Court-fees Act (VII. of 1870), an order rejecting a plaint on the ground of its being insufficiently stamped is appealable as a "decree" within the definition of "decree" in the Civil Procedure Code as amended by Act XII of 1879.—6 C. L. R., 567.

Where an appeal Court made a decree or order directing a commission to issue directed to an Amin to make a partition of certain property into certain specified shares and to allot the shares to the parties to the suit:—Held, that such order is a decree.—I. L. R., 12 Cal. 209.

An order under sec. 396 declaring the rights of the parties in a partition suit but leaving their shares to be determined in execution of the decree, is a "decree" within the meaning of sec. 2 of the Code, an appeal therefore lies from such order.—12 Cal. 273.

An order rejecting a memorandum of appeal as barred by limitation is a "decree;" it is therefore appealable, and not open to revision under section 622. Gujraj Singh v. Bhagwant Singh and Dionatuallah Beg v. Wajid Ali Shah distinguished.—7 Al. 42.

The plaintiff's claim to redeem certain lands was rejected by a Subordinate Judge on 21st December 1882. On the 1st February 1883, the plaintiff presented an application for review to the Special Judge appointed under the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act. His application was rejected by that Judge, who was of opinion that the plaintiff's remedy lay in an appeal. The plaintiff was not informed of the result of his application to the Special Judge until the following May, at which time the Court of the District Judge was closed for vacation. On the 3rd June 1883, he presented an appeal on the opening of the District Court. The District Judge dismissed the appeal as barred by limitation. On appeal to the High Court a preliminary objection being taken that a second appeal would not lie:—Held, that the order of the District Judge, having the force of a decree, was appealable.—9 Bom. 452.

Section 442 of the Code refers to a case where the plaint on the face of it appears to have been filed by a minor. Where in a suit the plaintiffs described themselves as adults, and on the objection of the defendants an issue was raised and inquired into on the question of age:—Held, that the order passed under the circumstances, although it professed to have been made under sec. 442, must be treated as one rejecting the plaint or dismissing the suit, on the ground that the suit was instituted by persons who were established on the evidence to be minors, and was appealable as a decree. The words, “rejecting the plaint,” in section 2, are not limited to the cases provided for in sections 53 & 54. Held, also, that the defendant, not having taken an objection to the suit on the ground of the minority of the plaintiffs, whilst it was pending in appeal to the High Court, were precluded from raising it on remand.—13 Cal. 189.

On an application under section 232 by the purchaser of a decree to be allowed to execute it, two of the judgment-debtors objected that the purchase was benami for the other judgment-debtor, and that they had paid off the decree to the original decree-holder. The Munsiff found both objections against them, and allowed the purchaser to execute the decree:—Held, that the question was one between the parties to the suit or their representatives relating to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree, and that the decision of that question was a decree under sections 2 and 244 of the Code, and therefore appealable, and a second appeal lay therefrom to the High Court.—12 Cal. 610.

An appeal was preferred against a decree of an Original Court dismissing a suit, and the Appellate Court sent the case back for the purpose of certain evidence being taken, and certified to it. Pending that being done the parties applied to the Appellate Court to refer the case to arbitration, and that Court referred that application to the Original Court for disposal, although the case was still pending in its own file for disposal. Subsequently another application was made to the Original Court to refer the case to arbitration, and on the 10th May the record was sent to the arbitrator with directions to submit his award within seven days. On the 12th September, as the award had not been sent in, the Original Court passed an order, recalling the record, and subsequently the award of the arbitrator, dated the 12th September, was filed. The Original Court thereupon forwarded the record to the Appellate Court for its decision. Objections were taken to the award, but overruled, and the Appellate Court passed an order directing the case to be sent back to the Original Court, with orders to pass a formal decree in accordance with the award of the arbitrator:—Held, that a second appeal lay against the last mentioned order, inasmuch as it amounted to a decree under the provisions of section 2.—12 Cal. 173.

An order refusing leave to institute a suit under sec. 18 of Act XX of 1863 is not a “decree” within the meaning of sec. 2 of the Civil Procedure Code, and is not appealable.—18 Cal. 382.

The ancestors of B mortgaged their share in a certain mehal to A.

Subsequently B became entitled to this share in the mehal, and A obtained a decree on his mortgage, in execution of which the right, title and interest of B was sold and purchased by C. Subsequently to this latter decree and sale, B obtained a decree against D for possession of certain lands which were proved to belong to this mehal. E then obtained a decree against B, in execution of which the right, title and interest of B in this same mehal was sold and purchased by F; C and F transferred their respective rights to E. E thereupon, as purchaser of the right, title and interest of B from F, applied to execute the decree obtained by B against D. This application was rejected by the Subordinate Judge, but on appeal to the District Judge was allowed. B thereupon applied to the High Court to have this order set aside:—Held, that the order should be set aside, inasmuch as no appeal lay from the order of the Subordinate Judge, the order not being a decree within the meaning of secs. 2 & 244 (cls., a, b and c).—11 Cal. 150.

The proceedings contemplated by sec. 396 are proceedings in a suit before decree, and in order to enable the Court in that suit to determine exactly the terms of that decree. Where those proceedings, however, were left to be taken in execution of the decree, the High Court, treating it as an error in point of form, and without deciding whether or not an objection if it had been taken would have been fatal to the proceedings, dealt with the case in the same way as was done in Gyan Chunder Sen v. Doorga Churn Sen, I. L. R., 7 Cal. 318, regarding the further proceedings taken after decree declaring the rights of the several parties as proceedings to obtain a decree on further consideration. Where in a partition suit an order was made in the course of such proceedings by which the position of some of the parties to the suit was determined but no declaration was made of the exact rights of each of the parties:—Held, it was a mere interlocutory order and no appeal would lie from it. Seemle, such an order is not a decree within the terms of sec. 2. Bholanath Dass v. Sonamoni Dasi, I. L. R., 12 Cal. 273, distinguished.—12 Cal. 275.

Held that an order rejecting an application for permission to sue as a pauper, and striking the case off the Court's file, on the ground that the applicant had previously withdrawn the application and entered into a new contract with the defendants, was a "decree" within the meaning of sec. 2 of the Civil Procedure Code, and appealable as such.—9 Al. 129.

The defendant in a redemption-suit, against whom a decree had been passed, appealed to the High Court, which on his application granted the usual stay of execution pending the appeal, upon security being given by him. The Subordinate Judge, feeling doubt as to whether the actual value of the property or the value stated in the plaint should be regarded in fixing the security, referred the case to the High Court, under sec. 617 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV) of 1882. Held that no reference would lie under sec. 617 of the Civil Procedure Code. The question as to the amount of the security was a question relating to execution as contemplated by sec. 244 of the Code, and, therefore, an order determining that question would be appealable under sec. 2 of the Code.—12 Bom. 30.

An order by a District Judge, under sec. 545 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), refusing to stay execution, is a decree as defined in sec. 2, and is therefore appealable.—12 Bom. 279.

The Court of first instance, being of opinion that the plaint bore an insufficient court fee, and the plaintiff not making good the deficiency, dismissed the suit after recording evidence, but without entering into the merits. On appeal the lower Appellate Court held that the court-fee was sufficient, and remanded the case for trial on the merits. Held that sec. 158 of the Civil Procedure Code was not applicable to the case; that the first Court's disposal of the suit must be treated as being under sec. 54, and was therefore a decree within the meaning of sec. 2, and appealable as such; and that such appeal was not prohibited by sec. 12 of the Court-fees Act. Ajoodha Pershad v. Gunga Parshad (I. L. R., 6 Cal. 249; 6 C. L. R., 567) and Annamalai Chetti v. Cloete (I. L. R., 4 Madr. 204) referred to.—11 Al. 91.

For the purpose of determining the proper appellate Court in a Civil suit what is to be looked to is the value of the original suit that is to say, the "amount or value of the subject matter of the suit." Such "amount or value of the subject matter of the suit" must be taken to be the value assigned by the plaintiff in his plaint and not the value as found by the Court, unless it appear that, either purposely or through gross negligence, the true value of the suit has been altogether misrepresented in the plaint. An order of a District Judge returning a memorandum of appeal to be presented in the proper Court on the ground that the value of the suit is beyond the pecuniary limits of his jurisdiction is not a decree within the meaning of sec. 2 of the Civil Procedure Code.—13 Al. 320.

One B. D. was made a party to an application for execution of a decree as one of the representatives of a deceased judgment-debtor. It had been decided in a previous suit that B. D. was not related to the judgment-debtor in such a manner that he could become its legal representative, and in this proceeding also he objected that he was not such representative, and his objection was allowed, and the order allowing it remained unappealed and became final. The Court, however, while allowing the objection, did not give the objector his costs. Held that the objector did not, by being improperly brought into the execution proceedings, lose his right of appeal, and further, that he could under the circumstances appeal on the question of costs alone.—13 Al. 290.

The Court of the Judicial Commissioner, and not that of a Deputy Commissioner, is the "District Court" in Chota Nagpur under secs. 2 and 344 of the Civil Procedure Code. A Deputy Commissioner therefore invested by the Local Government with powers under sec. 360 of the Code has no jurisdiction, apart from any transfer by the "District Court," to entertain an application by a judgment-creditor under sec. 344 to have his judgment-debtor declared an insolvent. In re Waller (I. L. R., 6 Madr. 430) and Purbhudas Velji v. Chugan Raichand (I. L. R., 8 Bom. 196) followed. The question of jurisdiction not having been raised in the lower Court, the order was set aside without costs.—16 Cal. 13.

An order merely determining a point of law arising incidentally or otherwise in the course of a proceeding for determining the rights of parties seeking relief is not a decree within the meaning of sec. 2 of the Civil Procedure Code and is not appealable. Where the judgment-creditor after satisfaction entered upon a compromise, applied for execution, on the ground of the compromise having been obtained from him by fraud, and the Court below, being of opinion that the remedy of the judgment-creditor was by a proceeding in execution, and not by a regular suit, ordered the case to be tried on its merits, held, that no appeal lay from such an order.—18 Cal. 469.

The definition of "decree" in sec. 2 of the Civil Procedure Code means that where the proceeding of the Court finally disposes of the suit, so long as it remains upon the record, it is a "decree." Held by the Full Bench that an order passed under sec. 381 of the Civil Procedure Code, dismissing a suit for failure by the plaintiff to furnish security for costs as ordered, was the decree in the suit, and appealable as such, and consequently was not open to revision by the High Court, under sec. 622 of the Code.—8 Al. 108.

A decree against a married woman provided that the amount due under it should be payable out of the separate estate of the judgment-debtor. The judgment-debtor was entitled to a life-interest in certain trust-funds under a settlement of which the Official Trustee was the trustee. The decree-holder proceeded to execute his decree against this life-interest by notice to the Official Trustee under sec. 272 of the Code of Civil Procedure, but there were no funds in the hands of the Official Trustee which would have been attachable under sec. 268. The decree-holder now applied that the life-interest might be sold. Held that the interest of the judgment-debtor was not validly attached. Semble.—The Official Trustee is a public officer within the meaning of sec. 2 of the Civil Procedure Code.—12 Madr. 250.

An order under sec. 556 of Act X of 1877, dismissing an appeal for the appellant's default, is not a "decree" within the meaning of sec. 2, and is not appealable.—3 Al. 382.

The term "judicial proceeding," as used in Act X of 1877, sec. 2, must be understood to mean a judicial proceeding of the same nature as a suit, or such proceedings as are referred to in secs. 333, 522, 526, and 531. The definition given in the Code of Criminal Procedure, Act X of 1872, is not applicable.—2 Bom. 553.

Where an order, requiring the decree-holder to give security within three days, is made under sec. 546 by the Judge of the Court in which the decree was passed, and in which the execution is pending, such order is appealable as a decree under the provisions of sec. 2, and sec. 244, cl. (c).—8 Cal. 477.

Held by the FULL BENCH (PRINSEP, J., doubting):—That an order in a suit for partition, which declares the specific rights of the parties and the property to be partitioned, decides that the suit must be decreed, as after such an order the suit could not be dismissed by the Court by which it was made, and is therefore an order which adjudicates upon the rights claimed and the defence set up in the suit, and which, as far as the Court expressing it is concerned, decides the suit within the definition of a decree in sec. 2 of the Civil Procedure Code, and is therefore appealable as a decree.—19 Cal. 463.

An order made by a Civil Court under sec. 84 of the Bengal Tenancy Act is not appealable, not being a decree within the meaning of section 2 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and no appeal being allowed by section 588 of the Code or by any special provision of the Bengal Tenancy Act. Goghun Mollah v. Rameshur Narain Mahta referred to and followed.—19 Cal. 485.

A Decree of a Small Cause Court can be executed by it at any place within the local limits of the District Court to which it is subordinate, as defined by Act X of 1877, sec. 2, without having recourse to the procedure under sec. 648, which applies only to cases in which a decree passed in one district has to be executed in another district.—4 Cal. 823.

The expression "person referred to" in section 2 of Act X of 1877 means person referred to in the subsequent sections of the Code, as being required to sign or verify certain documents, and it is not a condition precedent to such person being able to use a stamp that he should be unable to write his name.—3 Al. 575.

A Collector, when acting under sec. 204 of Act XIX of 1873 as the agent of the Court of Wards in respect of the estate of a disqualified person, is a public officer within the meaning of secs. 2 and 424 of Act X of 1877, and consequently, when sued for acts done in that capacity, is entitled to the notice of suit required by the latter section.—3 Al. 20.

In a suit for a share of the cost of a party wall built by the plaintiffs, who, and also the defendant, were adjoining owners of plots of land under the Government for building; portion of the agreement being that all disputes as to the cost and maintenance of party walls to be settled by the Government Surveyor, whose decision was to be final—the Judge, Scott, J., on 11th December 1882, decreed that the defendant was liable to pay half whatever sum the Government Surveyor might certify to be due for the cost, and that the defendant was entitled to set off in the calculation of what was due from him, the cost of any work or materials which the Government Surveyor might find had been contributed by him: and the case was thereupon adjourned for the certificate of the Government Surveyor. The Government Surveyor subsequently gave his certificate as to the cost of the unused portion of the said wall, but stated that on the evidence before him he was unable to decide as to the ownership of the foundations, &c., of the wall. The case came on again before Scott, J., who decided to take evidence on the points left undetermined by the Government Surveyor. Witnesses were accordingly examined, and on 11th December 1883 the Court disallowed the defendant's claim of set-off, and gave judgment for the plaintiff for half the sum certified by the Government Surveyor as the cost of the disputed part of the wall. The defendants appealed. Held that the decree of the 11th December 1882 was not a decree or an "order directing accounts to be taken" within the meaning of sec. 2 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), and that the defendants, although they had not filed an appeal against it within the period allowed by the Limitation Act, were entitled to appeal against it when appealing against the decree of 11th December 1883.—9 Bom. 183.

A. in 1839 obtained a decree against B, a sardar, in the Court of the Agent for Sardars. The decree was executed in the Agent's Court until B's death in 1868. B's status as a sardar under the exclusive jurisdiction of the Agent did not descend to his sons, and the decree was transferred to the Court of the First Class Subordinate Judge at Ahmednagar for execution. Various objections were taken to the execution of the decree by that Court, but none on the ground that the Agent's decree could not be executed by a mere transfer to an ordinary Civil Court. The case went up twice to the High Court, under whose orders the execution was for several years continued in favour of A's representatives against the estate of B's sons. In 1885, one of A's representatives assigned his interest under the decree to C and D. Thereupon the transferees, C and D, applied to the First Class Subordinate Judge at Ahmednagar to have their names substituted in the place of the transferor in the execution proceedings. The Subordinate Judge rejected this application, on the ground that he could not recognise the transfer of the decree either under sec. 372 or sec. 232 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882). He also found that execution had been going on for several years contrary to the ruling in Khusaldas v. Sakharam Ramchandra (10 Bom. H. C. R., 212.) which laid down that the Agent's decree could not be executed by a mere transfer to an ordinary Court, the remedy in such cases being by a suit on the decree. On this ground also, he refused to recognise the transfer of the decree. Held, reversing the order of the lower Court, that the assignment of the decree-holder's rights to execution in this case was one approved by the law as contained in section 232 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882). The transferee of a decree gains by the transfer the rights of the transferor. Held also that though the execution-proceedings in this case had been for many years irregularly conducted by a mere transfer of the Agent's decree to an ordinary Civil Court, still as the Court which carried on the execution had jurisdiction to grant the same relief if a suit had been brought upon the decree, the irregularity, having been acquiesced in, did not vitiate the former proceedings in execution. Where jurisdiction over the subject-matter exists, requiring only to be invoked in the right way the party who has invited or allowed the Court to exercise it in a wrong way, cannot afterwards challenge the legality of the proceedings due to his own invitation or negligence. But if there is no jurisdiction over the subject-matter, the acquiescence of the parties concerned cannot create it. Where a decree is one of continuous operation, taking effect as each year furnishes proceeds for its satisfaction, it must be executed each year according to the law of procedure then in force.—11 Bom. 153.

A decree-holder, within the meaning of the Civil Procedure Code, is the person whose name appears on the record as the person in whose favour the decree was made, or some person whom the Court has, by order, recognized as the decree-holder from the original plaintiff or his representatives. Sec. 235 of the Civil Procedure Code puts on the party applying for execution the obligation of stating any adjustment between the parties after decree; that is, any matter not done through the Court, as well as any agreement through the Court.—2 Madr. 216.

Per SPANKIE, J.—An order refusing an application to file a private award in Court is appealable as a decree. Jokhun Rai v. Bucho Rai (N. W. P. H. C. R., 1888, p. 353) and Hussaini Bibi v. Mohsin Khan (I. L. R., 1 Al. 156) impugned and distinguished: Vishnu Bhan Joshi v. Ravji Bhan Joshi (I. L. R., 3 Bom. 18) distinguished. Per STUART, C. J.—An order refusing an application to file a private award in Court on grounds not mentioned in secs. 520 and 521 is a decree, and appealable as such.—3 Al. 427.

An Appellate Court rejected the application of the legal representative of a deceased sole plaintiff-appellant to enter his name in the place of such appellant on the record, on the ground that such application had not been made within the time limited by law, and passed an order that the suit should abate. Held that the order of the Appellate Court, passed under the first paragraph of sec. 366 of Act X of 1877, not being appealable under cl. 18, sec. 588, of that Act, nor being a decree within the terms of sec. 2, from which a second appeal would lie, was not appealable.—3 Al. 814.

An order under sec. 549 of the Civil Procedure Code, rejecting an appeal because security has not been furnished, as directed under that section, is a "decree" within the meaning of sec. 2, from which an appeal will lie. The discretion conferred on an Appellate Court by sec. 549 to demand security for costs must be properly exercised; and such discretion is not so exercised when the order requiring such security is made without notice to the appellant to show cause why the order should not be made. No order affecting a party should be made without notice to him calling upon to show cause why the order should not be made.—5 Al. 380.

The sharers of a joint undivided estate agreed in writing that such estate should be partitioned and the accounts thereof settled by arbitration and named one of such sharers as arbitrator, and agreed that he should settle all the accounts, show the surplus at each sharer's credit, and prepare lots, after partition of the lands and houses comprehended in such estate, and have them drawn within one year from the completion of the partition. Subsequently, one of such sharers applied, under sec. 523 of Act X of 1877, to have such agreement filed in Court. The other sharers not objecting to this course, such agreement was filed accordingly, and the case was referred to such arbitrator. The arbitrator made an award, whereby he partitioned such estate into lots assigning some only of such lots by name, and wherein he stated that he had not been able to settle the accounts owing to the default of the parties, and that, considering that the partition should take effect without any delay, he did not ask for further time. He further stated that "all the parties state that they will adjust the accounts after renewing the agreement," and that he requested that the unassigned lots might be drawn in Court. The Court made an order confirming the award, and, it being objected that the settlement of the accounts should not be postponed, but that they should be settled as agreed, directed that the arbitrator should settle the accounts, and gave him a year's time for that purpose, and some of the parties, not being willing to draw the unassigned lots, directed the distribution of such lots "in reference to the age and number" of the sharers. Held that such order was a "decree" within the meaning of secs. 2 & 522 of Act X of 1877: that the arbitrator should himself have drawn such lots, or he should have made the parties draw them; but, inasmuch as it would not have strained the agreement to have had such lots drawn in Court, and no objection had been taken to the arbitrator not having himself drawn them, it was not incumbent on the Court to have remitted the award in order that the arbitrator might have drawn them: that the Court, however, should not have distributed such lots in the manner it had done, but should have drawn a lot for each person, and in acting as it had done, it had acted contrary to the award, and for that reason its decree could not be maintained: and that, in confirming the award before the accounts had been settled, and an award made in respect thereof, the Court had acted erroneously, inasmuch as the award had left undetermined a very important matter, viz., the settlement of the accounts, and the Court should, under sec. 520 of Act X of 1877, have remitted the award for the reconsideration of the arbitrator, and as it had power to remit it upon such terms as it thought fit, the Court could have allowed one year, if necessary, for the settlement of the accounts; and on this account, and also because the Court had made an order postponing the settlement of the accounts, and thereby made an order contrary to and in excess of the award, its decree must be reversed.—3 Al. 286.

Where it was shown that a judgment-creditor was himself the purchaser at an execution-sale, and the amount for which he so purchased the property of his judgment-debtor was set-off against the amount due to him under his decree, and where, on the application of the judgment-debtor, the Court passed an order setting aside the sale on the ground of fraud practised by the judgment-creditor on the judgment-debtor in connection with the sale in consequence of which fraud the property had been sold at an under-value, held that, inasmuch as the order involved the decision of a question between the parties to the suit relating to the execution, discharge, or satisfaction of the decree (the decree having been satisfied as far as the purchase-money bid by the decree-holder went), the order cancelling that pro tanto satisfaction, though not appealable under the provisions of sec. 588, cl. 16, was appealable as a decree under the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882,) secs. 2 & 244, cl. (c.)—10 Cal. 410.

An application under sec. 93 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, 1885, is not a suit between a landlord and tenant within the meaning of sec. 143. and no appeal lies from an order rejecting such an application.—14 Cal. 312.

Per BAYLEY, WEST & LATHAM, JJ.—None but Barristers and Attorneys have a legal right to practise in the Bombay Court of Small Causes. Neither secs. 2 and 36 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act No. XIV of 1882), nor secs. 38 and 76 of the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act (No. XV of 1882), give the pleaders of the Bombay High Court that right. The provisions of section 47 of Regulation II of 1827, authorizing persons holding sanads from the High Court to practise in the Mofussil Courts, are still in force. Per BAYLEY, WEST, PINHEY & LATHAM, JJ.—Sec. 2 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1882, does not give every pleader a title to appear and plead; it only enacts that “pleader” means every person entitled to appear and plead for another in Court, and includes an advocate, a vakil, and an attorney of a High Court. Consequently, if pleaders or vakils, who are the same class of practitioners, are not entitled by law to appear or plead for another in Court, the definition of “pleader” gives them no new right or status.

The “words in sec. 36 of the Code of Civil Procedure, (Act XIV of 1882), “by a pleader duly appointed to act on his behalf,” do not simply mean a person duly appointed by the party in the suit, but a pleader duly appointed according to law regarding pleaders in force in the particular Court. Per PINHEY, SCOTT and LATHAM, JJ. (WEST, J, dissentiente).—The High Court has the power of making rules for the admission of pleaders to practise in the Bombay Court of Small Causes; and the Bombay Court of Small Causes under sec. 9 of the Presidency Small Causes Court Act XV. of 1882 also has the power of making similar rules with the sanction of the High Court—8 Bom. 105.

On the day fixed for the hearing of an appeal in the lower appellate Court the appellant appeared by a duly appointed pleader. The pleader applied to the Court for an adjournment, on the ground that he had not time to fully prepare himself in the case. The Court refused to grant any adjournment, and dismissed the appeal for default. Held, that the order of dismissal was bad. The mere fact that the appellant’s pleader was not prepared to proceed with the case would not enable the Court to deal with the case as if there was no appearance at all for the appellant, and to dismiss the appeal for default. Per BIRDWOOD, J.—An order dismissing an appeal for default is one falling within the definition of a “decree” contained in sec. 2 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882), and is, therefore, appealable.—16 Bom. 23.

An order under sec. 373 of the Civil Procedure Code, permitting the withdrawal of a suit, with liberty to bring a fresh one, not being made appealable by sec. 588, or being a “decree” within the meaning of sec. 2, is not appealable. When the plaintiff in a suit applies for permission to withdraw it with liberty to bring a fresh one, such permission should not be granted without the defendant being served with notice to show cause why such permission should not be granted. L. claiming as heir to H, a deceased Hindu, sued K, his widow, and G, a minor, represented by his mother and guardian, B, to have the adoption by K of G set aside, and for certain other reliefs. The matters in difference in the suit were referred to arbitration, and an award was made in favour of the defendants. The plaintiff preferred objections to the award. Before these were disposed of, K died. The Court of first instance subsequently allowed the objections, and set aside the award. The minor defendant then applied to the High Court for revision of the order setting aside the award. This application was rejected on the ground that the order might be impugned on appeal from the decree in the suit. The plaintiff subsequently applied for permission to withdraw the suit, with liberty to bring a fresh one, on the ground that, K having died, he was entitled to possession of immoveable property left by H. This permission was granted. The minor defendant applied to the High Court for revision. Held that it might have been a very good ground for allowing the plaintiff to withdraw the suit that K, the adoptive mother of the minor defendant, had died pendente lite, had no arbitration proceedings taken place in the course of the suit; but when the parties had referred their differences to arbitration, and an award had been made in favour of the defendant, and had been set aside, and an application for revision of the order setting it aside had been refused, on the ground that the matter could be made the subject of appeal from the final decree in the suit, permission to withdraw the suit and being a fresh one should not have been granted. The minor defendant might be seriously prejudiced by such a course, and the suit had not abated against him by the death of K, while on the other hand a decree in the suit, if in his favour, would decide the litigation, and, if in favour of the plaintiff, would not prevent his bringing a suit for possession on the separate cause of action which had arisen. Stahlschmidt v. Walford (L. R., 4 Q. B. D. 217) referred to. The High Court refused to allow the plaint in the suit to be amended by the addition of a claim for possession of the property left by H.—6 Al. 211.

3. The enactments specified in the first schedule hereto annexed are hereby repealed to the extent mentioned in the third column thereof. But all notifications published, declarations and rules made, places appointed, agreements filed, scales prescribed, and forms framed under any such enactment, shall, so far as they are consistent with this Code, be deemed to be respectively published, made, appointed, filed, prescribed, and framed hereunder.

And when, in any Act, Regulation, or notification passed or issued prior to the day on which this Code comes into force, reference is made to Act No. VIII of 1859, Act No. XXIII of 1861, or the "Code of Civil Procedure," or to Act No. X of 1877, or to any other Act hereby repealed, such reference shall, so far as may be practicable, be read as applying to this Code or the corresponding part thereof.

Save as provided by Section 99A, nothing herein contained shall affect any proceedings prior to decree in any suit instituted or appeal presented before the first day of June Saving of procedure in suits instituted before 1st June, 1882.

Enactments repealed.

1882, or any proceedings after decree that may have been commenced and were still pending at that date.

Every appeal pending on the twenty-ninth day of July 1879, which would have lain if this Code had been in force on the date of its presentation, shall be heard and determined as if this Code had been in force on such date; and every order passed before the same day, purporting to transfer a case to a Collector under Act No. X of 1877, section 320, and every notification published before the same day, purporting to be issued under Act No. X of 1877, section 360, shall be deemed to have been respectively passed and issued in accordance with law.

Notes.

A right of second appeal, where it existed prior to Act X of 1877, now exists in the case of any proceedings in execution which were commenced prior to, and were still pending on, the 1st October 1877.—3 C. L. R., 437.

On the 16th June 1877, certain property was sold in execution of decree, and on the 29th June 1877, the judgment-debtor, the owner of the property, applied to the Court to set aside the sale, and the sale was set aside by the Subordinate Judge on the 24th January 1878. The decree-holder, who was the purchaser of the property, appealed to the Court of the District Judge, who reversed the order of the Subordinate Judge. Held that the Judge had no jurisdiction to do so, as the proceedings must be taken to be governed by Act VIII of 1859, and not by Act X of 1877. Runjit Singh v. Mehurban Koer (2 C. L. R., 391) cited and followed.—3 C. L. R., 208.

Proceedings in execution of a decree in a suit begun under the old procedure were regulated by Act VII of 1855.—Bourke's Rep., O. C. 59.

Where a decree for sale of certain property was obtained under Act VIII of 1859, and the property was sold, but an order was passed after the new Code of Procedure, Act X of 1877, had come into force, setting aside such sale, held that an appeal would lie from such an order under Act X of 1877.—I. L. R., 5 Cal. 259; 4 C. L. R., 23.

The effect of Act I of 1868, sec. 6, and Act X of 1877, sec. 3, taken together, is that the Chapter of the new Code of Civil Procedure which deals with execution of decree is prospective, and does not affect proceedings already commenced.—In the matter of the petition of Ratansi Kalianji and six others, I. L. R., 2 Bom. 148 (F. B.). See also I. L. R., 3 Cal. 662 (F. B.); and I. L. R., 4 Cal. 825. But see I. L. R., 2 Al. 74.

The word "decree" in Act X of 1877, sec. 3, means an order final in its nature, and does not include an interlocutory order, such as an order of reference to take accounts, although such order may, in general, be properly termed a "decree"; and therefore a suit which has been referred by the Court to the Commissioner to take accounts is still in a stage "prior to decree" within the meaning of sec. 3.—3 Bom. 161.

The effect of the proviso to sec. 3 of Act X of 1877 (taken in connection with the definition of the word "decree" in sec. 2) is that, in all suits pending when that Act came into force, the practice and procedure to be followed down to the final result of such suits (i. e., when nothing remains to be done but to execute the decree or to appeal from it) are the same as previously existed, but that, in all subsequent proceedings in execution of the decree or in appeal from it, the practice and procedure provided by Act X of 1877 are to be observed.—3 Bom. 161.

Where a suit had been instituted under Act VIII of 1859, but decided at a time when Act X of 1877 had come into operation, and an appeal is presented against such decision, sec. 3 of the latter Act distinctly indicates that such an appeal is to be governed by the law of procedure in force at the date of the presentation of the appeal. Where, therefore, an appeal, presented when Act X of 1877 was in force, has been dismissed under sec. 556 of that Act, the appellant may apply for its re-admission under sec. 558; and if such re-admission is refused, he is entitled to an appeal under sec. 558.—4 Cal. 825; 3 C. L. R., 593.

In all suits instituted before Act X of 1877 came into force, in which an appeal lay to the High Court under Act VIII of 1859, an appeal still lies, notwithstanding the repeal of that Act by Act X of 1877. Per GARTH, C. J.—A suit is a “judicial proceeding,” and the words “any proceedings” in Act I of 1868, sec. 6, include all proceedings in any suit from the date of its institution to its final disposal, and therefore include proceedings in appeal. The word “procedure” in Act X of 1877, sec. 3, has not the same meaning as the word “proceedings” in the above-mentioned section. The proceedings in a suit instituted before Act X of 1877 came into force, including a special appeal if the old Code allowed one, go on to the end of the suit, notwithstanding the repeal of the Code. The “procedure” (i. e., the machinery by which those proceedings are conducted) is, after decree, to be that provided by the new Code.—Per JACKSON, J.—The word “decree,” as defined in Act X of 1877, does not include “orders,” either original or appellate, upon matters arising in the course of a suit or in execution of a decree. The power of the High Court to hear appeals from the Civil Courts in the interior is regulated by Act VI of 1871. Act I of 1868, sec. 6, covers proceedings taken in execution of decree which have been commenced before Act X of 1877 came into force. Per MARKBY, MITTER, and AINSLIE, JJ.—Cl. 16 of the Letters Patent of 1865 empowers the High Court to hear appeals in all cases in which an appeal lay under Act VIII of 1859.—Runjit Singh v. Maherban Koer, I. L. R., 3 Cal. 652 (F. B.). See also I. L. R., 2 Bom. 148 (F. B.); I. L. R., 1 Al. 668 (F. B.); I. L. R., 4 Cal. 825.

Where, an appeal having been filed, the respondent objected that no appeal lay, and by agreement of the parties the case was set down for the argument of this preliminary point, held that the appellant had the right to begin. Clause 3 of section 3 of the Civil Procedure Code Act (XIV of 1882) provides that nothing in that Code shall apply to any proceedings after decree that had been commenced and were still pending on the 1st June, 1882. In case of any question connected with proceedings commenced prior to that date the applicability of the Code of 1882 depends on whether the new proceeding subsequent to that date, out of which the question has immediately arisen, is so intimately connected with the proceedings prior to that date as to be regarded as part of them. A decree was passed in 1870, by which the suit was referred to the Commissioner to take accounts. On the 21st June, 1882, the Commissioner, in the course of taking the said accounts, issued a warrant ordering the defendants to show cause why they should not give inspection of certain books. Held that the question as to inspection was so intimately connected with the taking of the accounts that it should be regarded as part of the same proceedings, and as these had commenced and were still pending on the 1st June, 1882, the question whether the order refusing inspection was appealable or not, was (under sec. 3 of Act XIV of 1882) to be determined by the Civil Procedure Code (Act VIII of 1859), and not by the Code of 1882. Sec. 11 of Act XXIII of 1861 must be read as an amendment to the Civil Procedure Code (Act VIII of 1859). That section is, in terms, confined to questions arising in the execution of decrees, which expression, as used in the said Code, means the enforcement of the decree on the application of one or other of the parties to it. Held that an order of a Judge confirming the report of the Commissioner for taking accounts, by which he refused to require the defendants to give inspection of certain books, was not an order within the contemplation of that section, and was, therefore, not appealable.—8 Bom. 287.

Having regard to sec. 3 of Act XIV of 1882, it is clear that the word "Code" in Sch. II., art 171B of Act XV of 1877, applies to the present Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882); and that, therefore, the word "defendant" in sec. 368 of the Code, when read with sec. 582, must be held to include "respondent."—11 Cal. 694.

Held by the Full Bench (MAHMOOD, J.,—dissenting) that art. 171B of the second schedule of the Limitation Act does not apply to the death of a respondent, whether plaintiff or defendant in the original suit; and that art. 178 applies to an application made by a plaintiff-appellant to bring upon the record the representative of a deceased defendant-respondent. Narain Das v. Lajja Ram (I. L. R., 7 Al. 693) and Balkrishna Gopal v. Bal Joshi Sadashiv Joshi (I. L. R., 10 Bom. 663) referred to. Baldeo v. Bismillah Begam (I. L. R., 9 Al. 118) and Rameshar Singh v. Bisheshar Singh (I. L. R., 7 Al. 734) overruled. Held by MAHMOOD, J., contra, that the word "defendant" in art. 171B includes a defendant-respondent, and, reading art. 171B with cl. 2 of sec. 3 in conjunction with secs. 368 and 582 of the Civil Procedure Code, includes also a plaintiff respondent; and that an application made by a plaintiff-appellant more than sixty days after the defendant-respondent's death to have the representative of the deceased made a respondent is barred by limitation, and the appeal is liable to abatement. Soshi Bhusan Chand v. Grish Chunder Taluqdar (I. L. R., 11 Cal. 694) referred to.—I. L. R., 10 Al. 264.

The judgment of the majority of the Full Bench in Narain Das v. Lajja Ram (I. L. R., 7 Al. 693) only decided that art. 171B, sch. ii., of the Limitation Act of 1877, did not apply to an application by a defendant-appellant to have the representative of a deceased plaintiff-respondent made a respondent. Art. 178 applies to such applications. So held by the Full Bench, MAHMOOD, J., dissenting. Held by MAHMOOD, J., that by reason of sec. 3 (read with secs. 368 and 582) of the Civil Procedure Code, the word "defendant" in art. 171B of the Limitation Act necessarily includes a plaintiff-respondent. Soshi Bhusan Chand v. Grish Chunder Taluqdar (I. L. R., 11 Cal. 694) referred to.—I. L. R., 10 Al. 260.

See I. L. R., 4 Bom. 163 and 10 Cal. 761, noted under sec. 1.

Saving of certain Acts affecting Central Provinces, Burma, Panjab, and

4. Save as provided in the second paragraph of section 3, nothing herein contained shall be deemed to affect the following enactments (namely):—

The Central Provinces Courts Act, 1865 :

The Burma Courts Act, 1875 :

The Panjab Courts Act, 1877 :*

The Oudh Civil Courts Act, 1879 :

or any law heretofore or hereafter passed under the Indian Councils Act, 1861,† by a Governor or a Lieutenant-Governor in Council, prescribing a special procedure for suits between landholders and their tenants or agents :

or any law heretofore or hereafter passed under the Indian Councils Act, 1861,* by a Governor or a Lieutenant-Governor in Council, providing for the partition of immoveable property.

And where, under any of the said Acts, concurrent civil jurisdiction is given to the Commissioner and the Deputy Commissioner, the Local Government may declare which of such officers shall, for the purposes of this Code, be deemed to be the District Court.

Notes.

Whether a decree for rent, under Act X of 1859, made in one district, can be transferred to another for execution, is a question which the High Court can decide in the exercise of its "superintendence over all Courts subject to its appellate jurisdiction," under 24 and 25 Vic., c. 104, sec. 15—I. L. R., 9 Cal. 295 ; 12 C. L. R., 361 : L. R., 9 I. A. 174.

The provisions of the Civil Procedure Code relating to awards are not applicable to suits under the N. W. P. Rent Act, 1881, the matters in dispute in which have been referred to arbitration, as sec. 96A of that Act specifically imports into it the procedure of the N. W. P. Land Revenue Act with regard to arbitrations.—I. L. R., 6 Al. 170.

A sale of the tenant's interest in certain land having taken place under secs. 39 and 40 of the Rent Recovery Act, the Deputy Collector refused to issue a sale-certificate to the purchaser on the ground that the sale had been irregularly conducted. Held that under sec. 35 of the Rent Recovery Act the purchaser was entitled to a sale-certificate. Held further that the High Court had no power to review the proceedings of the Deputy Collector under sec. 622 of the Code of Civil Procedure.—9 Madr. 332.

An appeal from the Court of the Recorder of Rangoon to the High Court is an appeal under the Civil Procedure Code, and must be made within time prescribed by art. 156, sch. ii., of the Limitation Act.—13 Cal. 221.

4A. (1) Where any Revenue Courts are governed by the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure in those matters of procedure upon which any special enactment applicable to them is silent, the Local Government, with the previous sanction of the Governor-General in Council, may, by notification in the Official Gazette, declare that any portions of those provisions shall not apply to those Courts, or shall only apply to them with such modifications as the Local Government, with the sanction aforesaid, may prescribe.

(2) “Revenue Court” in sub-section (1) means a Court having jurisdiction under any local law to entertain suits relating to the rent, revenue, or profits of land used for agricultural purposes, but does not include a Civil Court having original jurisdiction under this Code to try such suits as being suits of a civil nature of which its cognizance is not barred by any enactment for the time being in force.*

5. The chapters and sections of this Code specified in the second schedule hereto annexed extend (so far as they are applicable) to Courts of Small Causes constituted under Act No. IX of 1887,† and to all other Courts (other than the Courts of Small Causes in the towns of Calcutta, Madras, and Bombay) exercising the jurisdiction of a Court of Small Causes.‡ The other chapters and sections of this Code do not extend to such Courts.

Notes.

This section applies to Provincial Small Cause Courts.

Under sec. 360 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the Local Government cannot invest a Mufassal Small Cause Court with the insolvency jurisdiction conferred on District Courts by Ch. XX of the said Code, inasmuch as, by reason of sec. 5, Ch. XX does not extend to such Courts of Small Causes.—I. L. R., 9 Madr. 112.

The effect of Act X of 1877, sec. 5, coupled with sch. 2, is to render the whole of Chap. XX (relating to insolvent debtors) inapplicable to a Mufassal Small Cause Court, notwithstanding the words “any Court other than a District Court” and “any Court situate within his district,” which occur in that section. Consequently the Government Resolution of 3rd April 1878, investing the Judge of the Small Cause Court at Ahmedabad with power under the said chapter, to adjudicate in insolvency matter, is ultra vires and invalid.—2 Bom. 641.

of that Act interposes no obstacle in the way of his dealing with such ap-

Notes.

Whilst the pecuniary jurisdiction of the Small Cause Court was limited to Rs. 1,000, the plaintiffs brought a suit for that amount for damages for breach of a certain contract after abandoning the excess and in that suit they elected a non-suit under sec. 53, Act IX of 1850. Held, in a suit brought in respect of the same damages for the full amount due to them, that the plaintiffs were not precluded, by their having abandoned the excess in the former suit, from recovering the full amount sued for.—I. L. R., 9 Cal. 473.

The Madras Court of Small Causes has no jurisdiction in insolvency. The second paragraph of sec. 8 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1882, which authorized the Local Government, by notification published in the official Gazette, to extend to the Presidency Small Cause Court certain portions of the said Code, is repealed by the Presidency Small Cause Court Act (sec. 2 of Act XV of 1882), and consequently the notification of the Governor in Council of Fort St. George, dated 25th February 1879, conferring on the Madras Court of Small Causes jurisdiction in insolvency, being repugnant to sec. 8 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1882, as amended, if otherwise valid, ceased to have effect when Act XV of 1882 came into force.—6 Madr. 430.

CHAPTER I.

OF THE JURISDICTION OF THE COURT AND RES-JUDICATA.

10. No person shall, by reason of his descent or place of birth, be, in any civil proceeding, exempted from the jurisdiction of any of the Courts.

No person exempt from jurisdiction by reason of descent or place of birth.

Note.—This section applies to Provincial Small Cause Court

11. The Courts shall (subject to the provisions herein contained) have jurisdiction to try all suits of a civil nature, excepting suits of which their cognizance is barred by any enactment for the time being in force.

Courts to try all civil suits unless specially barred.

Explanation.—A suit in which the right to property or to an office is contested is a suit of a civil nature, notwithstanding that such right may depend entirely on the decision of questions as to religious rites or ceremonies.

Notes.

The plaintiff, who was a Smarta Brahman, but had married a widow (whose first marriage had not been consummated), alleged that he had made a vow to present an offering in a certain temple, and that the defendants, who were the committee of the temple, had obstructed and prevented him from entering the inner shrine (where orthodox Brahmans usually make their offerings), asserting that he was disqualified to enter by reason of his having married a widow contrary to Hindu sastras; and he sued for damages for the above obstruction and imputation, for a declaration that he was entitled to enter the shrine as a Brahman, and for an injunction restraining the defendants from interfering with his exercise of this right:—Held, (1) that the right claimed was of a civil nature and within the cognizance of the Civil Courts; (2) that the question to be determined was not a question of the plaintiff's legal status since a Brahman widow is at liberty to re-marry under Act XV of 1856, but it was a question of caste status in respect of a caste institution; (3) that in order to determine the above question, the Courts must inquire (a) what was the usage of the temple as regards admission into the inner shrine for the purposes of worship at the date of the suit, or the presumable intention of the religious foundation as regards such admission and (b) whether according to such usage or presumable intention of the foundation those who secede from the caste custom as to re-marriage of women are outside the class of beneficiaries as regards the right of admission into the inner shrine as above.—I. L. R., 13 Madr. 293.

Act IX of 1861 does not debar a District Munsif's Court from entertaining a suit by a Hindu father to recover possession of his minor son alleged to be illegally detained by the defendant.—9 Madr. 31.

A tenant having received a notice of attachment under sec. 39 of the Rent Recovery Act sued in a District Munsif's Court to have the notice cancelled, no specific damage being alleged. Held that the suit did not lie.—10 Madr. 368.

A obtained a decree against B, in execution of which he was put in possession of certain land by proclamation, the land being in the possession of tenants. A subsequently sued B and the tenants to recover possession of the same land. B pleaded that the decree obtained by A was the result of a collusion between himself and A in fraud of B's creditors. Held that it was not open to B to raise this plea.—10 Madr. 17.

Plaintiffs sued for an injunction to prevent defendant from interfering with their right to present to certain persons at a certain festival in a certain temple a crown and water. The lower courts found that plaintiffs possessed the right claimed, and granted the injunction. Held, that the suit was cognizable by a civil court under sec. 11 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and that the injunction was properly granted.—11 Madr. 450.

Certain Moplahs, described as “the Moktessor and Jamats” of a mosque, sued certain other Muhammadans, described as “members of the Puslar caste,” alleging that the custom was for the defendants to attend the plaintiffs’ mosque on Friday at the reading of the kutbah, and that the defendants had recently built another mosque a short distance off, and had “for two months been attempting to read the kutbah there.” It was further alleged in the plaint that such reading of the kutbah was “quite contrary to the Muhammadan religion “and that the defendants nevertheless proposed to have the kutbah read, “whereby the kutbah or adoration conducted in our mosque will, according to religion, be fruitless.” The prayer of the plaint was for an injunction, restraining the defendants from reading the kutbah in their mosque:—Held, that the plaint disclosed no cause of action.—15 Madr. 355.

A suit will lie to recover a subscription promised, the subscriber knowing that, on the faith of his and other subscriptions, an obligation is to be incurred to a contractor for the purpose of erecting a building to be paid for out of the moneys subscribed.—14 Cal. 64.

A suit for the establishment of a right to the hereditary title of musicians to a satra will lie under sec. 11 of the Code of Civil Procedure, notwithstanding that the right sought to be established is one which brings in no profit to those claiming it.—15 Cal. 159.

The ordinary Civil Courts have jurisdiction to try a suit for dissolution of partnership, their jurisdiction to try such suits not being ousted by sec. 265 of the Contract Act, 1872.—7 Al. 227.

The plaintiff and the defendant belonged to the caste of Visnagra Brahmans, which in 1841 divided into two sections, known as the big and little sections. While this division continued, viz., in the year 1868, certain lands purchased by the small section in the names of the plaintiff, the defendant, and three other persons. In 1873 the members of the small section, with the exception of the defendant, reunited with the other members of the caste. The lands, however, remained in the possession of the defendant. The plaintiff, on behalf of the caste, brought this suit to recover the lands from the defendant. Both the lower Courts held that the case was not cognizable by the Civil Courts, as it involved a caste-question. On appeal by the plaintiff, the High Court reversed the decrees of the Courts below, and sent back the case for retrial. The lands in question had been admittedly purchased out of their own funds and for their own purposes by the members of the caste who had seceded; and the question, as to whom those lands now belonged, being one between the caste and one of the seceding members who had purchased them, could not be a caste-question, unless the small seceding section itself could be regarded (and it was not so contended) as a separate and distinct caste. Under these circumstances it was for the Civil Court alone to determine who was entitled to the property, although it might be incidentally necessary for that purpose to enquire into the usage and practice (if any) of caste sections, situated as the seceding section of this caste had been, with respect to the property in question. If the lands had been originally the property of the caste, the question would have been between the caste and a section of it, and would have been a caste-question, and not cognizable by the Civil Court.—12 Bom. 225.

An administration suit filed in 1870 against executors on behalf of three infant plaintiffs was referred to the Commissioner to take accounts of the administration of the estate by the defendants. In August, 1876, and before the taking of accounts was concluded the plaintiff's guardian withdrew certain surcharges and objections which had been filed to the defendant's accounts and compromised the suit. The Commissioner then made his report, which with the consent of all parties to the suit was confirmed by the Court on the 13th January, 1885. One of the plaintiffs attained his majority in December, 1887, and on the 15th March, 1888, obtained a rule calling on the defendants to show cause why the proceedings in the Commissioner's office subsequent to August, 1876, should not be set aside, and why he should not be at liberty to proceed with the accounts filed in the Commissioner's office. He alleged that the enquiry before the Commissioner had not been conducted in the interest of himself and the other infant plaintiffs; that their guardian had been induced to withdraw objections and surcharges by the threats and coercion of the defendants, and that the compromise had not been sanctioned by the Court. He contended that the proceedings before the Commissioner had been a sham. Held, that the rule should be discharged. The decree was regular in itself and on the face of it correct, and it could only be set aside by a regular suit. Per FARRAN, J. :—The only modes of setting aside a decree prescribed by the Indian Code of Civil Procedure (XIV of 1882), are by review under section 623 and by suit under section 11.—15 Bom. 594.

Sec. 18 as much as sec. 25 of the Bombay Hereditary Offices' Act (III of 1874) excludes by direct implication any right on the part of the Civil Courts to declare that persons are eligible to serve as hereditary officers under the Act. The plaintiffs sued, as vatandar mahars of certain villages, to establish their right to receive the aya attached to their office, as against defendants, who were the vatandar mangs of the same villages, and who claimed the right to receive the aya equally with the plaintiffs. Held that the suit was not cognizable by a Civil Court.—13 Bom. 83.

The effect and intention of the proviso to sec. 148 of the N.-W. P. Rent Act (XII of 1881) is to preserve the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts under sec. 42 of the Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), while prescribing a special period of one year's limitation for such suits when they arise out of adjudications such as sec. 148 contemplates. Neither that section nor the proviso affects the jurisdiction of a Civil Court to entertain a suit by some of a body of co-sharers in a joint and undivided mahal for a declaration of their title to receive a proportionate share of the rent payable by the tenants. Having regard to sec. 11 of the Civil Procedure Code, a suit for the recovery of certain sums of money as the plaintiffs' share of rent alleged by them to have been wrongfully received by the defendants, their co-sharers, and in which the plaintiffs' right to receive any portion of the rent claimed is denied by the defendants, is not barred from the cognizance of the Civil Courts by sec. 93 (h) of the N.-W. P. Rent Act. The provision does not contemplate suits in which such claims of title are so made and resisted. But a suit by some of the co-sharers in a joint and undivided mahal for such declaration and such recovery of a proportionate share of rent as above referred to, is barred by the provisions of sec. 106 of the N.-W. P. Rent Act, in the absence of proof of local custom or special contract authorising such suits.—11 Al. 224.

Reading together secs. 111, 112, and 113 of the N.-W. P. Land Revenue Act (XIX of 1873), as they must be read, the objection contemplated in each of them is an objection to be made by the person upon whom the notice required by sec. 111 is to be served, i. e., a person who is a co-sharer in possession, and who has not joined in the application for partition. So far as secs. 111, 112, 113, 114, and 115 are concerned, a Civil Court is the Court which has jurisdiction to adjudicate upon questions of title or proprietary right, either in an original suit in cases in which the Assistant Collector or Collector does not proceed to inquire into the merits of an objection raising such a question under sec. 113, or an appeal in those cases in which the Assistant Collector or Collector does decide upon such questions raised by an objection made under sec. 112. The remaining sections relating to partition do not provide for or bar the jurisdiction of the Civil Court to adjudicate upon questions of title which may arise in partition-proceedings or on the partition after the time specified in the notice published under sec. 111. Sec. 132 is not to be read as making the Commissioner the Court of appeal from the Assistant Collector or the Collector upon such questions, nor does sec. 241 (f) bar the jurisdiction of the Civil Court to adjudicate upon them. Where, therefore, after the day specified in the notice published by the Assistant-Collector under sec. 111, and after an amin had made an apportionment of lands among the co-sharers of the mahal, the original applicants for partition raised for the first time an objection involving a question of title or proprietary right, and this objection was disallowed by the Assistant Collector and the partition made, and confirmed by the Collector under sec. 131, held that the objection was not one within the meaning of sec. 113, that the remedy of the objectors was not an appeal from the Collector's decision under sec. 132, and that a suit by them in the Civil Court to establish their title to the land allotted to other co-sharers was not barred by sec. 241 (f), and, with reference to sec. 11 of the Civil Procedure Code, was maintainable. Habibullah v. Kunji Mal (I. L. R., 7 Al. 447) distinguished. Sundar v. Khuman Singh (I. L. R., 1 Al. 613) referred to.—9 Al. 429.

All suits of a civil nature.—Thus, the Courts have entertained the following suits: suit to declare the plaintiff's right to be restored to his caste, 7 Suth. Civ. R. 299: suit to declare that an alleged Hindu marriage is invalid, 6 Ben. 243: suits between Hindus for divorce or for restitution of conjugal rights, ibid. 252; 4 N.-W. P. 109: suit for breaking a curd-pot in a temple on a certain day, 9 Bom. H. C. 413: and many others. But they have refused to entertain the following declaratory suits: suit for a declaration that the plaintiff is a member of a Hindu society from which he has been excluded, such exclusion neither depriving him of caste, nor affecting any right of property, 3 Ben. App. Civ. 91: suit for a declaration that the plaintiff is entitled to be summoned to all marriages, and to receive a present of pan from the members of a particular community, S. D. A. 1854, p. 1850: or to offerings made by jajmans to family-priests, S. D. A. 1852, p. 398; 1 Hay 365; 5 Suth. Civ. R. 225: or to a mere dignity unconnected with any emoluments, 2 Bom. 476; 6 Bom. 119: and the following suits for damages: for loss of honours and voluntary offerings at a temple, 5 Madr. 313: for intrusion on an office to which no fees were of right appurtenant, 2 Bom. 470; 7 Madr. 91: for not offering food to an idol, 6 Bom. 122: against a magistrate acting judicially and with jurisdiction, though carelessly and irregularly, 7 Ben. 449: and the following suits for specific performance of alleged obligations: to compel a Hindu widow to adopt a son, 19 Suth. 127; 7 Cal. 288; 7 Moo. I. A. 2062: to compel hereditary priests of a temple to put certain ornaments on the God's image on certain days, 5 Bom. 83: to compel Hindus against their will to invite other Hindus to their houses or their entertainments, 6 Suth. Civ. R. 325. So the Courts have rejected a suit by one purohit against another purohit for interfering with an alleged exclusive right of performing ceremonies at a certain place, Marshall 161, and see the case in 3 Moo. I. A. 198; and suits against barbers to compel them to shave the plaintiffs (Sadr. Decisions, 1854, p. 465), or to pare their nails (1 Snth. Civ. R. 352, col. 1). For other cases in which a suit was held not of a civil nature, see 7 Madr. 91, and supra, p. 391. A suit is not maintainable to establish a right to a mere dignity unconnected with any fees, profits, or emoluments, 6 Bom. 121, following 2 Bom. 476 and a decision of the Privy Council in 3 Moo. I. A. 198. A suit by a temple-servant for damages for omitting to make a daily offering of rice and cake to the idol will not lie, unless indeed he sues as representing the idol, 6 Bom. 122.—Stokes's Anglo-Indian Codes, Vol. II. (Adjective Law), p. 471.

Held that a suit by a landholder for the removal of certain trees planted by the defendants upon land held by them as the plaintiff's occupancy-tenants was cognizable by the Civil and not by the Revenue Court.—I. L. R., 8 Al. 446.

The sale of mortgaged property was decreed by a Subordinate Judge. Before the sale another suit, instituted in the same Court for the purpose of having other property substituted in lieu of part of that mortgaged, was transferred to the Court of the District Judge, who decreed, upon consent, that the substituted property should be sold, and that, for the purpose of this sale, this suit should be taken as supplemental to the former one. On the petition of the mortgagee for execution of the decrees, in both suits, in the District Court, it was objected that execution could not proceed therein, on the ground that the decree for sale was that of the Subordinate Court:—Held, that the decree (which affected the whole property mortgaged) was that of the District Court, which accordingly had jurisdiction to execute it. To have enabled the Subordinate Court so to do, an order by the District Court would have been necessary.—11 Cal. 244.

By an agreement between S and M, members of the same Hindu family, it was arranged that certain immoveable property dedicated to charitable uses by the family should be managed by M, subject to the supervision of S, and that M should render accounts to S and observe certain other conditions. S sued M in the Court of the District Munsif and prayed for a decree for the removal of M as manager and for the appointing of himself as manager of the property. M objected that the Court had no jurisdiction, because the property exceeded in value the pecuniary limits of the jurisdiction of the District Munsif's Court as fixed by sec. 12 of the Madras Civil Courts Act, 1873:—Held, that S was not entitled to sue for the removal of M without paying for his ejectment from the property, and that, as the property exceeded in value Rs. 2,500, the District Munsiff had no jurisdiction.—8 Madr. 516.

The plaintiff sued three defendants on a bond alleged to have been executed by them to the plaintiff. Two of the defendants did not appear, or make any defence, to the suit. The second defendant only appeared, and objected to the jurisdiction of the Court; but his objection was over-ruled, and a decree was made against all three defendants. On appeal the lower Appellate Court reversed the decree, holding that the Court of first instance had no jurisdiction. The plaintiff preferred a second appeal and contended that the first and third defendants had consented to the jurisdiction of the Court, and that the decree was binding as against them:—Held, affirming the decision of the lower Appellate Court on the question of jurisdiction, that the conduct of the defendants, even if it could be held to have amounted to consent or acquiescence, did not give the lower Court any jurisdiction.

On finding that the Court of first instance had no jurisdiction, the lower Appellate Court ought to have ordered the plaint to be returned. It not having done so, the High Court on second appeal ordered the plaint to be returned, in order that it might be presented to the proper Court.—9 Bom. 266.

A bond having been executed, whereby it was stipulated that a debt should be paid by instalment subject to the condition that if any one instalment were not paid within a certain time after it become due, the whole amount remaining due should become payable at once, the creditor evaded the debtor's attempts to pay the instalments as they became due, and the debtor brought a suit to compel the creditor to accept an instalment due :—Held, that such a suit would not lie.—9 Madr. 55.

The plaintiffs and the defendants as members of a family of Ganvkars claimed to be entitled to certain mans consisting of the right to be the first to worship the deity on certain occasions and to receive gifts of rice, cocoanut and vida and venison made by the priest on certain religious ceremonies and other occasions, The plaintiff being obstructed by the defendants in the enjoyment of the mans, sought to obtain a perpetual injunction against the defendants. The Court of first instance dismissed the plaintiff's claim as being one for mere dignities unaccompanied with emoluments, and, as such, not cognizable by a Civil Court. The plaintiff thereupon appealed, and the lower Appellate Court reversed the lower Court's decree, and granted a perpetual injunction against the defendants, prohibiting them from interference with the plaintiff's enjoyment. On appeal by the defendants to the High Court :—Held, restoring the decree of the Court of first instance, that the plaintiff's suit was not maintainable. The mans were mere dignities to which no profits or emoluments were attached. The trifling gifts, made by the priest, of rice, a cocoanut and vida on the occasion of worshipping the deity and of a piece of venison on other occasions could not be regarded as emoluments, being merely symbols of recognition and marks of respect of and to the holders of the mans.—10 Bom. 233.

A suit for recovery of a debt will lie in a Civil Court against a soldier in Her Majesty's service up to judgment under proviso to section 144 of the Army Act however small may be the amount of the debt. The question, whether the defendant is a soldier or not, arises only when the plaintiff seeks to execute his decree.—10 Bom. 218.

Neither under section 12 of Act VIII of 1859, nor in any other way, has the High Court in its appellate capacity power to give jurisdiction to a District Court to inquire into facts, as upon a remand, in a suit decided in the Court of another district, and relating to lands in the latter. Of two mortgages, between the same parties, the first comprised four villages, of which three were in district A, and a fourth property was in district B. The second mortgage comprised, in addition to the above, three other villages in district B. Suits brought in both districts by the assignee of the mortgagee against the mortgagor were thus framed, viz., in the suit in district A for possession upon foreclosure of both mortgages, and for a declaration of the plaintiff's right as purchaser of one of the properties ; and in the suit in district B, for payment of the debt on the second mortgage. Both suits were dismissed. The High Court, hearing appeals in both suits together, affirmed the dismissal of the suit in district B, and remanded the other to the Court of first instance in district A, to have the proportionate value of the properties determined, with a view to the apportionment of the liabilities of the parties by way of contribution. As the defendant who succeeded in both suits in the District Courts raised no question of jurisdiction, each of them might be taken to have had the consent of parties to its hearing the whole suit before it. But no such consent could be deemed to have been given to the order of the High Court made as above stated on contested appeals. This order was, accordingly, unauthorized. Although wide powers of amendment, of framing new issues, and of modifying decrees are conferred upon the High Court by provisions in the Code, of which the plain meaning is not to be narrowed by judicial construction, these powers were exceeded in the change of the suits by the order in question into a suit of a description differing totally from that of either of them, as originally decreed ; and this without the consent of the parties.—12 Cal. 225.

A suit claiming a right to the regular offerings made out of the funds of a temple which are of a substantial value as emoluments is a suit of a civil nature within the meaning of the explanation to sec. 11 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Krishnama v. Krishnasami, I. L. R., 2 Madr., 62, referred to ; Narayan Vithe Parab v. Krishnaji Sadashiv, I. L. R., 10 Bom., 233, distinguished. The plaintiffs based their claim to a goat sacrificed on the 4th day of each month on an alleged custom by which each of five families took certain goats in each month, and sued to establish their right without making the other families parties. Held, that to make any declaration in a suit to which they were not parties would be in effect to partition joint property, and to define the share of each without all the shares being before the Court. Prahlad Singh v. Luchmunbutty, 12 W. R., 256.—17 Cal. 906.

No suit is maintainable to set aside a sale under the provisions of section 174 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The right under the section to have a sale set aside is not an abstract right which can be enforced by suit against any particular person, but is a right to call upon a Judge to set aside a sale, and on his refusal to proceed in revision.—18 Cal. 481.

In execution of a decree certain land belonging to the judgment-debtor was sold ; subsequently the auction-purchaser, who had not got possession, resold the land to a third party and gave him the certificate. The latter then applied to the Court to be put into possession, but having failed in those proceedings, owing to some irregularity in the description of the boundaries of the property, he instituted a regular suit against the judgment-debtor to obtain possession. On a plea that such suit would not lie as the plaintiff could have got possession in the miscellaneous proceedings :—Held that having regard to the provisions of art. 138 of sch. ii of Act XV of 1877 and of sec. 11 of Act XIV of 1882, such suit was maintainable.—9 Cal. 602.

Suits as to religious rites or ceremonies, which involve no question of the right to property or to an office, are not suits of a civil nature, nor are they intended to be brought within the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts. A suit, therefore, by the plaintiffs, as members of a committee of management of a Hindu temple, to compel the hereditary priests of the temple to take out certain ornaments from the treasury of the managing committee, and to obtain a declaration that the said ornaments, after they had been so taken out of the treasury, were in the custody of the priests, and that they were responsible for their safe custody, was held unsustainable. Sec. 11 of the Civil Procedure Code, Act X of 1877, introduces no new law, but merely declares the law as it has always been administered.—5 Bom. 80.

Although it is not the duty of a Civil Court to pronounce on the truth of religious tenets, nor to regulate religious ceremony, yet, in protecting persons in the enjoyment of a certain status or property, it may incidentally become the duty of the Civil Court to determine what are the accepted tenets of the followers of a creed, and what is the usage they have accepted as established for the regulation of their rights inter se. A claim to the exclusive right to perform certain portions of the religious worship in a Hindu temple, and to restrain a rival sect from joining in such worship otherwise than as ordinary worshippers can be enforced by the decree of a Civil Court. A claim to damages for the loss of honours and voluntary offerings which would have been made by worshippers at a temple to the holders of a religious office therein had the latter not been disturbed by the defendants in the performance of the duties of such office, is not enforceable by law.—5 Madr. 313.

12. Except where a suit has been stayed under Section

Pending suits.

20, the Court shall not try any suit in which the matter in issue is also directly and substantially in issue in a previously instituted suit for the same relief between the same parties, or between parties under whom they or any of them claim, pending in the same or any other Court, whether superior or inferior, in British India, having jurisdiction to grant such relief, or in any Court beyond the limits of British India established by the Governor-General in Council and having like jurisdiction, or before Her Majesty in Council.

Explanation.—The pendency of a suit in a foreign Court does not preclude the Courts in British India from trying a suit founded on the same cause of action.

Notes.

This section applies to Provincial Small Cause Courts.

The judgment of a foreign Court, obtained on a decree of a Court in British India, is no bar to the execution of the original decree.—I. L. R., 7 Cal. 82.

Pending the final hearing in appeal of a suit for confirmation of possession of certain land, and for the recovery of the produce of such land alleged to have been carried away by the defendants, the plaintiffs brought a suit again asking for confirmation of possession, but also for the recovery of the produce which had arisen since the institution of the other suit. Held that the second suit, so far as it sought for the recovery of the produce was not barred by the previous suit.—8 C. L. R., 113.

The pendency of litigation regarding rent, malikana, or other demand for one year, does not, under sec. 12 of the Civil Procedure Code, bar a suit between the same parties in which the same demand is made for a subsequent year, inasmuch as the reliefs claimed in the two cases are different. Secs. 12 and 13 of the Code compared. On the 17th August 1885, a suit was instituted for recovery of an annual malikana allowance for the years 1290, 1291, and 1292 faslis. On the 5th October 1885, the Munsif dismissed the suit. On the 10th March 1886, the Subordinate Judge on appeal reversed the Munsif's decree, and decreed the suit. On the 21st June 1886 the defendant appealed to the High Court, which, on the 4th July 1887 reversed the Subordinate Judge's decree, and restored that of the Munsif, on the ground that the plaintiff had never received and was not entitled to malikana. Meanwhile, on the 8th June 1886, the plaintiff brought another suit against the defendant for recovery of malikana for the year 1293 fasli, which accrued after the institution of the former suit. By judgments dated respectively the 21st August and 27th November 1886, the lower Courts decreed this suit, holding that the Subordinate Judge's decree of the 10th March 1886, in the former suit, operated as res judicata, and was conclusive in favour of the plaintiff's title to the malikana. On the 17th May 1887, the defendant appealed to the High Court, and on the 16th May 1888, (the High Court having, in the interval, dismissed the former suit by its judgment of the 4th July 1887), the appeal came on for hearing. Held that the trial of the present suit by either of the lower Courts was not barred by sec. 12 of the Civil Procedure Code by reason of the fact that, at the time of such trial in August and November 1886, the previous litigation between the parties was pending in second appeal before the High Court.—I. L. R., 11 Al. 148.

13. No Court shall try any suit or issue in which the matter directly and substantially in issue Res-judicata. has been directly and substantially in issue in a former suit between the same parties, or between parties under whom they or any of them claim, litigating under the same title, in a Court of jurisdiction competent to try such subsequent suit or the suit in which such issue has been subsequently raised, and has been heard and finally decided by such Court.

Explanation I.—The matter above referred to must, in the former suit, have been alleged by one party, and either denied or admitted, expressly or impliedly, by the other.

Explanation II.—Any matter which might, and ought to, have been made ground of defence or attack in such former suit shall be deemed to have been a matter directly and substantially in issue in such suit.

Explanation III.—Any relief claimed in the plaint, which is not expressly granted by the decree, shall, for the purpose of this section, be deemed to have been refused.

Explanation IV.—A decision is final within the meaning of this section when it is such as the Court making it could not alter (except on review) on the application of either party, or reconsider of its own motion. A decision liable to appeal may be final within the meaning of this section until the appeal is made.

Explanation V.—Where persons litigate bona fide in respect of a private right claimed in common for themselves and others, all persons interested in such right shall, for the purpose of this section, be deemed to claim under the persons so litigating.

Explanation VI.—Where a foreign judgment is relied on, the production of the judgment duly authenticated is presumptive evidence that the Court which made it had competent jurisdiction, unless the contrary appear on the record; but such presumption may be removed by proving the want of jurisdiction.

Notes.

This section applies to Provincial Small Cause Courts.

A, claimed certain property as the adopted son of B, and it was decided in that suit that A had failed to prove that he was the adopted son of B. Held that this decision was no legal bar to A's proving in another suit that he was the adopted son of B, in which A sought to obtain a different property upon a different cause of action, though the parties to the suit were the same.—1 B. L. R. (A. C.) 68; 10 W. R. 100.

A sued B and C in the Civil Court to recover possession of certain lands of which he alleged that they had dispossessed him, under a decree obtained by them in a suit in which he had previously sued B in the Civil Court, before Act X of 1859 had been passed, for rent, in which suit C had been added as a party, and had proved his title to the lands against A. Held that A's suit must fail, on the ground that it involved a material issue of fact which had already been determined by a Court of concurrent jurisdiction in the former suit, which was between the same parties, and which issue disposed of the present suit.—1 B. L. R., (A. C.) 30; 10 W. R. 75.

Where a plaint prayed for possession and wasilat, and a decree was given for possession without mention of the wasilat, and on application for review it was urged, though not in the written grounds of application, that the question of wasilat, ought to have been disposed of, but no decision was given as to it either by the High Court, or by the Court of first instance, to which application was afterwards made, held that the fact that a prayer for wasilat was contained in the plaint in the suit in which only a decree for possession was given was not a bar to a subsequent suit for mesne-profits within sec. 2, Act VIII of 1859.—2 B. L. R., (S. N.) 16; 10 W. R., 486.

A, on the 1st February 1868, entered into a contract with B to supply him with straw for twelve months, the supplies to be sent as ordered daily. On the 12th March B brought an action in the Small Cause Court against A for damages sustained by the plaintiff by reason of A's having failed to supply straw as agreed upon. The Judge decided the questions in issue (namely, of the factum of the contract, and the authority of the person who executed it in A's behalf) in favour of B, and gave him a decree. On the 21st April, a second suit was brought by B against A on the same contract. The claim was for damages sustained by the plaintiff by reason of A's having failed to supply straw as agreed from the 20th February to the 17th April. That suit was dismissed, the Judge holding that the matter was res adjudicata, as he considered that the contract was an entire one, and that B had shown, by suing on it for general damages, that he treated it as such, and had elected to rescind it. On the 9th May a rule nisi was granted for a new trial, and on the 16th May the rule was made absolute. On the 12th June, at the new trial, a decree was made in favour of B for so much of the damages claimed as had been sustained subsequently to the date of the decree of the 25th March. In an action brought by B on the same contract for damages sustained between the 17th April and the 16th June, by reason of A having failed to supply straw according to the terms of the same contract, A denied that there had been any such contract, and further pleaded that the matter of the contract, if there had been one, had already been adjudicated upon. On a reference from the Small Cause Court, held that the finding of the Judge upon the contract in the action brought on the 12th March was conclusive between the parties, and that A's plea of res adjudicata was not well founded.—2 B. L. R., (O. C.) 48.

The defendant had obtained an order under sec. 25, Act X of 1859, to eject the plaintiff, who now sued in the Civil Court for recovery of possession. Held that sec. 2, Act VIII of 1859, did not bar the suit.—2 B. L. R., App., 36 ; 11 W. R., 145.

In a previous suit the plaintiff sought to obtain a kabuliyat from the defendant in respect of land held by him, alleging the quantity to be 8 bighas and 17 cottahs. It was therein determined that the defendant held only 7 bighas and no more. In the present suit brought to eject the defendant from 1 bigha 17 cottahs of land, held that it was not maintainable, as it was for the determination of a question decided in the former suit.—3 B. L. R., App., 34.

A landlord sued his tenants and his tenant's surety in the Collector's Court for arrears of rent, the surety being merely treated as a nominal party, and the decree being given against the tenants. He afterwards sued the surety in the Civil Court on the bond given by him, and in the lower Court obtained a decree, not only for the arrears of rent, but also for the costs in the (Act X.) suit. Held, on special appeal, that the suit was, as regards the arrears of rent, not barred by sec. 2, Act VIII of 1859, but that the costs in the Collector's Court could not be recovered.—3 B. L. R., App. 37 ; 11 W. R., 407.

In a suit for declaration of title to land from which a raiyat had been ejected at the suit of his zamindar by the order of a Collector under sec. 23, Act X of 1859, and wherein the genuineness of the patta upon which the suit was brought was at issue, the order of the Collector could not be pleaded in bar.—3 B. L. R., App., 139 ; 12 W. R., 284.

Two purchasers of holdings in the defendants zamindari at a sale for arrears of revenue applied to the Collector to have the transfer registered in the zamindar's sharista under Act X of 1859, sec. 27. Their application was refused, and then they brought a suit in the Civil Court to set aside the Collector's order, and register their names. Held that proceedings authorized to be taken in the Collector's Court under sec. 27, Act X of 1859, were not proceedings in a suit ; and consequently that such proceedings were no bar to a suit in the Civil Court under sec. 2, Act VIII of 1859.—4 B. L. R., (F. B.) 43 ; 12 W. R., (F. B.) 30.

In execution of a decree, the right, title, and interest of A in a certain property were sold and purchased by B. In execution of another decree, the right, title, and interest of A and C in the same property were sold and purchased by D. In a suit by A the sale to B was set aside, but on appeal the decision of the Court of first instance was, upon consent of the parties, set aside, and the sale allowed to stand good. D sued for possession of the share of A and C in the property purchased by him, and obtained a decree for possession of the share of C only. D now sued to set aside the sale to B and for possession of the share of A. Held that the suit was not barred by sec. 2, Act VIII of 1859.—5 B. L. R., 220 ; 13 W. R., 343.

A Mahomedan died, leaving among others a widow and a sister entitled to shares in his estate. The widow got possession of the whole. The sister died, and after her death her husband, on behalf of himself and grandson, sued the widow to obtain the shares to which the deceased sister was entitled, and obtained a decree for payment of the same, after satisfaction of the widow's lien for dower, in certain proportions to himself and grandson. The husband's interest in the decree was subsequently confiscated by Government for having taken part with the enemy in the Mutiny. He subsequently died leaving his grandson. The widow died during the Mutiny, and her brother was put into possession of the property by the Government as her heir. The grandson now sued the widow's brother to recover his own and his grandfather's share, alleging that the lien for dower had been satisfied. Held, the suit was not barred by Act VIII of 1859, sec. 2.—5 B. L. R., 570; 14 W. R., P. C., 5.

A daughter succeeded to a share of her father's estate, and transferred it in full property by a formal instrument or ikrarnama, dated March 1849, to her grand-daughter, expressly naming her and treating her as her heiress—the transfer being in the nature of a release, reserving maintenance and other advantages to the donor. Upon the application of the grand-daughter before the Collector for the mutation of names according to the terms of the ikrarnama, the reversioners (collateral heirs of the father) affected to contest the unauthorised nature of the alienation, but dropped their opposition. In 1857 the diaras, or alluvial lands attached to the estate, were perpetually settled with the grand-daughter. The alienor quarrelled with her grand-daughter, and in 1857 brought a suit against her to set aside the ikrarnama, upon the ground of the non-performance of a condition subsequent. The plaintiff succeeded in the first Court, but the judgment was reversed (October 1858) on appeal to the Zillah Judge. Pending the appeal the plaintiff died (February 1858), and the reversioners applied to be, and were, admitted as her heirs to conduct the appeal. The grand-daughter remained in possession from the date of transfer until 1866, when she died. In April 1867 the present suit was brought by the surviving reversioner, who claimed to be entitled to recover possession of the property by right of inheritance from the alienor's father. He was one of the reversioners who had been admitted to conduct the appeal in the former suit upon the death of the alienor. Held (on special appeal and review), there had been no adverse possession; the instrument enured as a transfer of the donor's life-interest only; the judgment in the former suit brought to set it aside did not bind or affect the reversioners, who in that suit merely represented the interest of their predecessors, the life-tenant.—5 B. L. R., 585; 13 W. R., 52.

A, a Hindu of Gya, died, leaving a sister, B, and C, the son of a deceased sister. On A's death B took possession of the property left by A. In a suit by C against B for recovery of possession thereof as heir to his maternal uncle, the Court of first instance held that B should retain possession of the property during her lifetime without power of waste, and that on her death C, should be entitled to the possession thereof. This was reversed by the High Court on appeal, who held that the decree should have been simply a decree of dismissal of the plaintiff's suit. B died, leaving an adopted son, D. C sued D for recovery of possession of the property, the subject-matter of the former suit, on the ground that D was not the adopted son of B, and that C, who came within the class of bandhus, was entitled to succeed to the property left by A and B, there being no nearer heir in existence. Held that sec. 2, Act VIII of 1859, did not bar the suit.—5 B. L. R., 663; 14 W. R., 73.

Previous to the institution of the present suit, one of the shareholders of a piece of land brought a suit against the Chairman of the Municipality for recovery of possession of his share. The other shareholders were made by pro forma defendants in the suit. This suit was dismissed as barred by the law of limitation. After the dismissal of the suit, the plaintiff brought the present suit for recovery of his share of the land, on the allegation that his tenant had relinquished the land within three months, in consequence of his having been dispossessed by the Municipal Commissioners. Held that the suit was not barred by sec. 2, Act VIII of 1859.—5 B. L. R., App. 50; 13 W. R., 461.

When a suit has been remanded by the Appellate Court, and then dismissed by the Court of first instance for non-appearance of the parties, the plaintiff is not debarred thereby from bringing another suit upon the same cause of action against the same defendant.—5 B. L. R., App. 64; 14 W. R., 81.

The doctrine laid down in the Duchess of Kingstons' case 2 Smith's, L. C., 6th Ed., 679, as to estoppel by judgment, is applicable to cases tried under Act VIII of 1859, the second section of which is consistent with that rule. But the Judicial Committee, reversing the decision of the Court below, considered that the doctrine had no application in the present case, the judgment relied on not being the judgment of a Court of concurrent jurisdiction directly upon the point upon the same matter; and, after an examination of the whole evidence, restored the judgment of the first Court.—7 B. L. R., 673; 15 W. R., P. C., 30.

S died in 1865, leaving two sons, N and G. M took possession of the property of S under a will alleged by her to have been executed by S. In 1867 G brought his suit, as one of the heirs of S, to set aside the will, and made his brother N a co-defendant. The Principal Sudder Ameen dismissed the suit, finding on the evidence that the will was genuine. In 1869 N brought this suit for his share as heir of S against M. The first Court found that the will was a forgery, and gave the plaintiff a decree. On appeal, the Judge held that N's claim was barred by the decision in the former suit brought by his brother, and reversed the decision of the first Court. Held, on special appeal, that it was not barred by the finding of the Court in G's suit as N was no party to that suit, and he could not in any manner have availed himself of a decree in that suit to enforce a claim to his share.—7 B. L. R., App. 38; 15 W. R., 309.

D and B executed a bond, by which they mortgaged certain lands as security for a loan taken by them from the plaintiffs. A suit was brought and a decree was obtained by the plaintiffs against D and B, under which they recovered a portion of the amount due on the bond. The plaintiffs now sued S and others, on the ground that they were joint proprietors of the land mortgaged, that the loan was taken by D and B, as managers, for the use of all the parties interested and for carrying on their joint business and trade, and that therefore they were all jointly liable. Held that the suit could not be maintained. Ramnath Roy Chowdry v. Chunder Sekhur Mohapattur (4 W. R., 50) dissented from.—10 B. L. R., 200; 18 W. R., 458.

The plaintiffs, as talukdars, brought a suit against their tenant M for recovery of rent at enhanced rates of land held by him, as to two cottahs of which he denied that they were part of his holding, but alleged that they were part of the lakhiraj holding of one H, and H intervened in that suit, and claimed the two cottahs as lakhiraj. The result of that suit was that the rent was assessed on the land admitted by M to be in his possession, excluding the two cottahs. The plaintiffs then brought a suit against H for a declaration that these two cottahs were their māl lands, and obtained a decree simply declaring their māl rights over the land in dispute. In a suit brought by the plaintiffs against H after serving him with notice to quit, for recovery of khas possession of the two cottahs with mesue-profits and praying that he might be ordered to remove a mud house erected by him on the land, the defence was that as the plaintiffs had already claimed khas possession and obtained a decree simply declaring their right to receive rent, the suit was barred, and that as H had been twenty years in possession, and had erected a house without any opposition from the plaintiffs, they had no right now to sue for khas possession. Held that the suit was not barred by sec. 2, Act VIII of 1859, and the plaintiffs were entitled to a decree for khas possession.—10 B. L. R., App., 5 ; 18 W. R., 19.

B had instituted a suit in the Court of the Munsif of the 24-Pergunnahs against A on account of an alleged trespass to a certain drain, which B then alleged to be his property ; that suit was dismissed on the ground that B had not proved his title to the drain in question. In a suit arising out of an alleged trespass to the same drain brought by A against B, in which A stated it was his property, the judgment of the Munsif in the former suit was tendered in evidence on behalf of the plaintiff, and it was contended it was an estoppel. The Court admitted it in evidence, but doubted whether it would be an estoppel.—10 B. L. R., App., 31.

Where a party, failing to obtain judgment for the possession of land claimed by her in her first suit as taufir, brought a fresh suit claiming the land as property belonging to her taluq according to the true boundary line, held, affirming the decision of the High Court, that her suit was barred by sec. 2 of Act VIII of 1859.—11 B. L. R., (P. C.) 158 ; 18 W. R., 163. 2 B. L. R., A. C., 102. 10 W. R., 426 ; 13 W. R., 209.

A, a raiyat, brought a suit in the Court of the Deputy Collector against B, his zemindar, for recovery of possession of a piece of land, on the ground that he was the holder of a mirasi patta, and that he had been illegally ejected by B. The Deputy Collector held that the mirasi patta was genuine, and that B had illegally ejected A. He passed a decree in favour of A, in execution of which A obtained possession of the land in dispute. In a suit brought by B against the heirs of A in the Civil Court for recovery of possession of the said piece of land, on the ground that the mirasi patta was a spurious document, and that no mirasi patta had been granted to A, held (JACKSON, J., doubting) that the decision of the Deputy Collector was not conclusive between the parties.—11 B. L. R., (F. B.,) 434 ; 19 W. R., 322 ; 20 W. R., 105 ; 20 W. R., 455 ; 11 B. L. R., 437, note ; 13 W. R., 417.

Where, in a suit for enhancement of rent, the plaintiff failed to prove notice of enhancement, but the Court enquired into and gave a declaratory decree as to his right to enhance, such decree is decisive of the right in a subsequent suit for enhancement of the rent of the same tenure founded on a valid notice.—12 B. L. R., (P. C.,) 53 ; 19 W. R., 175.

C, a Hindu subject to the Mitakshara law, adopted S, and afterwards B, and made a will, whereby, after providing for his widow, the family worship, &c., he made a division of his real and personal property between his two adopted sons. Provision was also made for forfeiture by either of the sons in case they disputed the will, in which event the whole estate was to go to the other son. This will was registered and filed in the Collector's Court. S was subsequently disowned by C, and declared to have forfeited his right to anything under the will. In 1859 S brought a suit against C, B, and certain persons who claimed portions of the property under deeds executed by C, to cancel those deeds, to cancel the will, to set aside the adoption of B, and for maintenance. In this suit he alleged that C had no power to make any of the devises of real estate contained in the will, inasmuch as the whole estate, consisting of property inherited by C and property acquired by him from the income of such inherited property, was ancestral. The only issue raised in that suit referring to the will was whether it was assented to by S. The first Court found that it had been so assented to ; that the adoption of B was valid ; and that S's conduct justified C in disinheriting him : the suit was accordingly dismissed. S appealed to the High Court, and in his grounds of appeal raised the same contention as before, viz., that the whole of the real property was ancestral, and therefore C had no power to dispose of it without his consent. The High Court, in 1863, varied the decree of the first Court, and held that the will must be set aside so far as it affected the right of S in the ancestral property, but that the ancestral property only included that inherited, and not that acquired by C with the income of the inherited property. In a suit brought by S after the death of B and C, against B's widow and the parties to the former suit, or their representatives, to obtain possession of the whole estate of C on the ground that both the inherited property and the property acquired from the income thereof were ancestral, held (reversing the decision of the High Court) that, although the issue as to the assent of S to the will clearly embraced only a portion of the controversy between the parties, the Court had jurisdiction, and indeed was bound, to decide whether or not the will was operative as to all or to any, and what portion, of the property, and that its decision on that point was binding on the parties. According to the general law relating to res judicata, where a question has been necessarily decided in effect, though not in express terms, between parties to a suit, they cannot raise the same question as between themselves in any other suit in any other form. Sec. 2, Act VIII of 1859, does not prevent the operation of this general law. The words "cause of action" in that section must be construed in reference to the substance rather than the form of the action.—12 B. L. R., (P. C.) 304 ; 20 W. R., 377 ; L. R., I. A., Sup. Vol. 212, reversing the decision of the High Court in Sudanund Mohapattur v. Soorjomonee Dabee, 8 W. R., 455 ; and on review 11 W. R., 436.

A brought a suit in the Court of S against B for certain land as being an accretion to an estate in the District of S. B claimed it as being part of his estate in the District of G, to which district he alleged the land had, in a former decision, been found to belong. The Court of S held that the land was an accretion to A's estate in the district of S. In a subsequent suit brought by B in the Court of G against A for the land to which the subject of the former suit had been found to be an accretion, held that the holding in the former suit necessarily decided that the land claimed by B was in the district of S, and therefore that the Court of G, under Act VIII of 1859, sec. 14, had no jurisdiction.—12 B. L. R., (P. C.) 391 ; 18 W. R., 182.

A deed of gift, valid and operative between the parties thereto, cannot be avoided because in another suit between different parties it has been held to be fraudulent as against creditors. Quere.—Whether a donor can avoid his own deed on the ground of his own fraud.—12 B. L. R., (P. C.) 433.

L and R, the holders of a patni estate, granted in 1856 a dar-patni lease to S at an annual rent, the lease stipulating that S should have full power of sale and gift, but should not sub-let without the patnidar's consent. The lease contained no stipulation for the registration of any vendee or donee. In 1860 S sold the dar-patni lease to K, the deed of sale, which was duly registered, providing for mutation of names in the patnidar's books. No such mutation was ever effected by K, who was never recognised as their tenant by L, and R, the rent of the dar-patni being paid in the name of S. In 1864, the rent due from the patnidars being in arrear, the zemindar proceeded to sell the patni under Reg. VIII of 1819. Thereupon K, in order to protect his under-tenure, deposited in the Collectorate, on 17th November 1864, a sum of money, on which the sale was stayed. K, being then in arrear in the payment of his dar-patni rent, claimed to set off the amount deposited in the Collectorate against the rent due to L and R. This L and R refused to allow, and they brought a suit in the Collector's Court against S and his sureties to recover the arrears of rent. In that suit K intervened, claiming the benefit of the set-off, to which, however, the High Court, on 26th June 1866, on appeal, held that he was not entitled, the deposit being merely a voluntary payment by K. On 30th October 1867 K brought a regular suit against S and L and R to recover the amount of the deposit, and obtained a decree; but the decision was reversed on appeal, and the suit dismissed for want of jurisdiction. On 6th June 1869 K filed his plaint in the proper Court. Held that he was entitled to recover the amount deposited by him in the Collectorate, and that the suit was not barred as being res judicata by the decision of 26th June 1866.—13 B. L. R., (P. C.) 146; 20 W. R., 380.

By a bond, dated 10th February 1857, a certain village was mortgaged by one G to the appellants and their father as security for a loan; the bond providing that, "if I fail to pay the money as stipulated, I and my heirs shall, without objection, cause the settlement of the said village to be made with you." The interest of G in the village was described as that of a Malguzar, and his proprietary right therein was declared by the revenue-authorities shortly after the execution of the mortgage; but his payments of revenue being in arrear, the Board of Revenue granted a lease of the village for ten years to the appellants' father. The mortgagees in a suit on the bond obtained the following decree on 3rd November 1860: "As the defendant acknowledges the plaintiff's claim, it is ordered that a decree be given to the plaintiff's for principal and interest and costs against the defendant and the mortgaged property." In proceedings in the Civil Court taken under this decree, the mortgagees asked for possession of the village, and obtained, on 17th July 1862, an order, in pursuance of which they were put in possession, an appeal by G being rejected. G took various steps to recover possession of the mortgaged property, or a declaration of his proprietary interest therein, but failed in his endeavours; an application for a grant of the proprietary right in the village, and an appeal from an order cancelling his patta, being rejected by the revenue-authorities, on 8th December 1864, and 27th July 1865, respectively; and on 12th August 1867 G conveyed the village by deed of sale to the respondents. In a suit brought by them to redeem the mortgage and obtain possession of the property, held, the suit was not barred by the order of the Civil Court of 17th July 1862, nor had the orders of the revenue-officers of 8th December 1864 and 27th July 1865 effected such a transfer of any right which G might have had to the appellants as to render the sale to the respondents invalid.—13 B. L. R., (P. C.) 205.

The dismissal of a suit for multifariousness is not a hearing and determination of the suit within the meaning of sec. 2, Act VIII of 1859.—13 B. L. R., App., 37; 21 W. R. 105; 2 C. L. R., 10.

A proceeding under sec. 53 of Act XX of 1866 was a suit of a civil nature within the meaning of sec. 1, Act VIII of 1859, independently of any peculiarities in the special procedure to be adopted. Therefore, where a creditor had resorted to the summary procedure provided by sec. 53, and had recovered a portion of his claim in execution of the decree so obtained, a regular suit subsequently brought to enforce his remedies on the bond, giving the defendant credit for the amount already recovered, was barred by sec. 2, Act VIII of 1859.—14 B. L. R., (F. B.) 408 ; 23 W. R., 187 ; 23 W. R., 344. 8 B. L. R., App., 92. 17 W. R., 154.

As a general rule of Hindu law, property given for the maintenance of religious worship, and of charities connected with it, is inalienable. It is competent, however, for the sebait in charge of property dedicated to the worship of an idol, in his capacity of sebait and as manager of the estate, to incur debts and borrow money for the proper expenses of keeping up the religious worship, repairing the temples or other possessions of the idol, defending hostile litigious attacks, and other like objects. The power to incur such debts is to be measured by the existing necessity for incurring them ; the authority of the sebait being in this respect analogous to that of a manager for an infant heir. It being competent for a sebait to borrow money for necessary purposes, it follows that judgments obtained against a former sebait in respect of debts so incurred are binding upon succeeding sebait, who form a continuing representation of the debutter property. But, before applying the principle of res judicata to such judgments, the Court should be satisfied that the judgments relied upon are untainted by fraud or collusion, and that the necessary and proper issues have been raised, tried, and decided in the suits which led to them. Execution of such judgments should be decreed only against the rents and profits of the debutter property.—14 B. L. R., 450 ; 23 W. R., 253 ; L. R. 2 I. A., 145.

Held (JACKSON, J., dissenting) that a judgment by a Collector, in a suit under Act X of 1859, declaring the plaintiff entitled to assess rent upon land alleged by the defendant to be lakhiraj, is not conclusive in a subsequent suit between the same parties for arrears of rent under Bengal Act VIII of 1869. Per JACKSON, J.—A decision in a previous and similar suit upon an issue raised substantially in the same manner by parties in a Revenue Court is binding upon them as evidence in a subsequent suit, which, but for the passing of Bengal Act VIII of 1869, would also have been brought in a Revenue Court.—15 B. L. R., (F. B.) 238 ; 24 W. R., 154.

In a suit for rent under Act X of 1859, the Collector had no jurisdiction to decide a question of mokurari title otherwise than so far as it might be incidental to the determination of the amount of rent, if any, due ; and his decision on such a question was therefore not binding in a subsequent suit to establish the mokurari right.—15 B. L. R., 242 ; 19 W. R., 217 ; 4 W. R., 2 ; 3 Agra H. C. R., 311.

The decision of the Collector in a suit for rent of certain land is conclusive in a subsequent suit between the same parties in a Civil Court for a declaration that the land is liable to pay rent.—15 B. L. R., 248, note ; 22 W. R., 362.

The decision of the Civil Court in a suit for rent under Bengal Act VIII of 1869 was binding in a suit between the same parties for a declaration that the land, the rent of which was the subject of the former suit, is lakhiraj.—15 B. L. R., 251, note ; 21 W. R., 207.

In a foreclosure suit in which A was plaintiff and B, C and D, were defendants, held that a verdict on the point in issue in an ejectment suit in which C and D were plaintiffs and A was defendant was a bar to the suit.—1 M. H. C. R., 245 ; 13 W. R., 64.

A suit between two brothers, A and B, respecting ancestral property, was compromised, and the particulars of the compromise embodied in a razinama presented in Court by both parties. A having died, his widow and B presented in Court another razinama embodying the particulars of an arrangement respecting the property in which she had become interested as widow, and which was comprised in the former razinama ; and of this second razinama they subsequently put in an amended copy. Held that a claim arising out of such arrangement could not, within the meaning of Act VIII of 1859, sec. 2, be considered to have been a cause of action heard and determined in the former suit.—1 M. H. C. R., 240.

To give effect to the plea of res judicata, the Court must be satisfied that the ground of legal right on which the plaintiff sues was a point raised and opened for decision in the former suit, and what it was finally dealt with by the judgment and decree therein.—2 M. H. C. R., 131. Affirmed in Raghoonadda Periya Oodya Taver v. Kattama Nauchear, 10 W. R., P. C., 1. 11 Moore's I. A. 50.

A case decided by a Collector under Reg. V of 1822, from whose decision no appeal was made, was held to be res judicata, and could not be re-opened before a Small Cause Court Judge.—2 M. H. C. R., 475. But see 2 M. H. C. R., 22.

Where A sued B for monies alleged to be due under certain documents, and B pleaded that the demands had been included in a settlement of accounts embodied in a document which he set forth in his answer, and the suit was dismissed on the ground that, being included in the settlement, the demands no longer existed as causes of action, held that A's representative was not stopped from disputing the document in a subsequent action brought by him against the representatives of B. The conclusive effect of res judicata defined. The law of British India, as administered in the mofussil, recognizes no distinction between specialities and other documents. Eastmure v. Laws (5 Bing. N. C. 444) concurred in.—1 M. H. C. R., 312.

The rule which makes a judgment conclusive against parties, and those who claim under them, is subject to certain exceptions, which are the offspring of positive law, and the reason for the exception may be generally stated to be that the nature of the proceedings by which there is a fictitious, though not unjust, extension of parties, renders it proper to use the judgment against those not formally parties. The rule as to judgments in rem, in some peculiar cases, results from the nature of the proceedings, and before attempting to apply the rule in this country, consideration should be given to the question whether there are Courts so proceeding as to warrant the application of the doctrine of decrees in rem. Mr. Smith's definition of judgment in rem discussed and dissented from, and the authorities in English and Roman law on the subject examined and commented upon.—2 M. H. C. R., 276.

A case decided by a Collector under Reg. V of 1822, from whose decision no appeal was made, is res judicata, but cannot be re-opened before a Small Cause Court Judge. Adimulan Pillai v. Kovil Chinna Pillai (2 M. H. C. R., 22) observed upon and doubted.—2 M. H. C. R., 475.

To conclude a plaintiff by a plea of res judicata, it is not sufficient to show that there was a former suit between the same parties for the same matter upon the same cause of action : it is necessary also to show that there was a decision finally granting or withholding the relief sought.—3 M. H. C. R., 84.

In a suit to recover, with mesne profits and other incidents, a jera-yati village alleged by the plaintiff to form part of the zemindari, and to be wrongfully held by defendant by virtue of the execution of a decree of the late Commissioner of the Northern Circars passed in 1844, the defendant pleaded that he held on a permanent lease subject to a fixed quit-rent, that he and his ancestors had held on that tenure since and previously to the permanent settlement, and that the quit-rent had been received from him by the plaintiff. The agent dismissed the suit, on the ground that the matter had become res judicata against the plaintiff by a former decree in 1807. Held that the matter of the present claim was not res judicata, because the question of the existence and validity of the alleged lease, on which the defendant relied, was not determined in the former decree.—3 M. H. C. R., 120.

In 1856 the plaintiff, the zemindar of Tarla (who had attained his majority in 1853), instituted suits for the recovery of the two villages claimed in the present suit on the ground that the villages were jerayati, and had been temporarily alienated, and he claimed a right of resumption. It was decided that the villages had formed a mokasa jaghir from a date prior to that of the permanent settlement, and that, as they did not constitute a portion of the assets of the zemindari at the date of the settlement, there was no right of resumption. Pending those suits, an order was issued by Government which plaintiff construed as a transfer to him of the Government right in the villages, and he founded the present suit upon the lapse of the mokasa to Government, and the order transferring the right to him. Held that the present suit was not res judicata.—3 M. H. C. R., 207.

In a suit brought to set aside the adoption of the first defendant, to declare plaintiff's title to certain lands and for possession, the first defendant pleaded that the question of his adoption was res judicata in a former suit. In that suit, between the present plaintiff's son as plaintiff and his father (the present plaintiff) as the first defendant, and the present first defendant, the alleged adopted son as second defendant, the latter was found to be the adopted son of the undivided brother of the present plaintiff. Held that the first defendant's adoption was not res judicata. Ayyavu Muppanor v. Niladatchi Ammal (1 M. H. C. R. 45) and Udaiya Taver v. Katama Nachiyar (2 M. H. C. R. 131) distinguished.—3 M. H. C. R., 217.

The force of res judicata attaches, not only to the bare condemnation or discharge of a defendant, but to all the objective grounds distinctly found by the Judge as the basis of his decision. The proposition that everything acquired by a woman during coverture is the property of her husband has no foundation in Hindu law.—3 M. H. C. R., 272.

Plaintiff, claiming as grandson of one S M, the only undivided brother of S, sought to recover half of the village sold by S to first defendant's father in 1855; the village having been (as alleged) family property, and sold without the consent of plaintiff's father, who succeeded his father, S M, and not for family purposes. In a former suit (No. 3 of 1855), brought by the plaintiff's father against S and R, the father of the present first defendant, and the present second defendant, the paternal nephew of the first defendant, for possession of the whole of the family property belonging to him and S as coparceners, and to rescind the sale to R, the plaintiff stated, amongst other things, that S was imbecile; and that the sale-deed was obtained by taking a fraudulent advantage of his imbecility, and that it was invalid as being made without plaintiff's consent. The Court decided that S was "both physically and mentally qualified to manage, and legally competent to deal with the estate, supposing it to be undivided, to the extent of his own share," and dismissed the suit. In 1862 the plaintiff again sued the present defendant for the whole of the village on the same ground of imbecility and fraud. The Civil Court decided that the suit was barred by the decree in the first suit, and on appeal the decree was affirmed. Held that the present cause of action—namely, the plaintiff's right as coparcener to a moiety of the property, and the invalidity of the instrument of sale to pass to that right to the defendant—was not res judicata.—3 M. H. C. R., 320.

The plaintiffs, mirasidars of a village, held on pungavaly tenure, sued their co-mirasidars, the owners of the remaining shares, and others, occupants of land in the village, for a partition of the common lands of the village and an allotment to the plaintiffs of specific parts thereof proportionate to the shares which they represented. In a former suit, to which all the present mirasidars were parties, either actually or as previous to those through whom they claim, it was decided that no right existed in any individual shareholder of the village to have allowed to him a distinct portion of the common lands in proportion to his share or shares. Held that the former decree declaring the impartibility of the common land of the village was conclusive in the present suit between the present shareholders upon the same question of right.—4 M. H. C. R., 285.

Plaintiff sued to establish his right to receive certain honours in a temple as appertaining to his office of officiating priest of the temple, and to recover damages for the invasion of his right. In a former suit between the predecessor and the plaintiff and the first defendant, the claim to sit at the right side of the idol at festivals was admitted, but the right to receive a cake on the same occasion was disallowed. Held that the claim of the plaintiff, so far as it sought to establish the plaintiff's right, was res judicata.—4 M. H. C. R., 349.

The plaintiff sued to recover two villages from the defendants, claiming title from C, the purchaser. The first defendant alleged that her husband, not C, was the purchaser. This question was determined in a former suit, in which the present first defendant was plaintiff and the present plaintiff defendant, in favour of the present plaintiff, by the Civil Judge, and the decision was confirmed on appeal by the Sudder Court. An appeal to Her Majesty in Council was dismissed for want of prosecution. Held that the matter in issue was res judicata. Quære.—Whether the former judgment could be deemed conclusive whilst an appeal was pending.—5 M. H. C. R., 176.

Suit brought by plaintiff against the first three defendants as his tenants on kanam, and the fourth, the representative of a rival jenmi, to obtain a declaration of title as jenmi. Plaintiff had previously sued the first three defendants to establish the relation of jenmi and kanamkar, and to recover the land. He failed, and then brought the present suit. Held that this was a case of the employment of the devise of a suit for a declaration of title in order to get back land by a crooked, and not legal, process, after failure to recover by proper legal means, the intention being to cut off the defendants (the tenants) from the plea of res judicata. The Court, which had a discretion as to whether such a suit should be permitted, ought at once to have said that it should not. Where there are no interests to be protected, there is no foundation for a suit for a declaratory decree.—6 M. H. C. R., 117.

Plaintiff sued to recover a zemindari from his step-brother, alleging that the zemindari was hereditary property belonging to the family, the succession thereto being governed by the law of primogeniture ; that his father died in 1859, leaving the plaintiff, defendant, and another, his sons, the former by the first wife, and the latter two by the second wife ; and that the defendant (respondent) unlawfully enjoyed the estate, while plaintiff, as the eldest son, had a legal claim thereto. In defence it was pleaded that the claim was res judicata by the decree in a suit which was brought by plaintiff to obtain a declaration of his status as the son of his father's pattaba stri, of royal wife, in which suit the plaintiff's father was first defendant, and defendant's mother was second defendant, and wherein they both denied that plaintiff was son of the pattaba stri and affirmed that second defendant was first defendant's first wife, and that her sons were preferential heirs to the zemindari. Among the points recorded was for "plaintiff to prove his status and right as alleged," and that issue was set down for defendants to rebut. The Judge dis-believed that plaintiff was the son of his father's first wife, and added, "Plaintiff further pleads that he is the eldest son, a position not denied, but one which cannot confer on him the status he now claims." The Judge decided that plaintiff had failed to prove that his mother was the pattaba stri, and that he was heir to the exclusion of second defendants' sons. On appeal to the Sudder Adawlat the decree below was confirmed, and the Court made the following observation : "It has been attempted at the hearing of the appeal to maintain the plaintiff's right to succeed as being the eldest son. This, however, was not the position taken in the Court below, where the succession was allowed to depend on another circumstance—namely, the mother being the pattaba stri ; and the Court, therefore, held the argument to be an inadmissible one." Held, on appeal, that the present suit was barred by res judicata, a different causa to the former not having been adduced. To the judgment in Chinnaya Mudali v. Venkatachella Pillai (3 M. H. C. R., 326-34), after the words in page 334, "in favour of the defendant all the objective grounds of the decision which have led to the dismissal of the suit," the following ought to be added : "and without the establishment of which the suit could not have been logically or legally dismissed."—7 M. H. C. R., 160.

In a former suit the present defendant sued as owner by right of inheritance to recover the property of her deceased husband, and the present plaintiff resisted that the suit on the ground of her preferable right to inherit. Having failed in that suit, plaintiff brought the present suit to recover half the property on the basis of a family-agreement made between her and the present defendant's deceased husband. This agreement was designedly suppressed at the period of the former suit. Held that the suit should be dismissed ; that plaintiff in the present suit insisted upon a valid family compact varying the ordinary rules of inheritance, having, however, previously appealed to that general rule, and designedly kept back the compact upon which she now sought to insist ; that there could be no stronger case of an absolute waiver of that contract, and of conduct rendering it wholly inequitable to permit her now to insist upon it. Semble, where a defendant has been sued by a plaintiff upon his right of ownership, plaintiff's recovery negatives all grounds of defence to that action then existent, and within the plaintiff's knowledge.—7 M. H. C. R., 263.

Leave to institute a suit relating to property out of the jurisdiction, as well as to property within such jurisdiction, was refused by one Judge on the 30th June 1874. The same application, in the same suit, between the same parties, relating to the same property, and founded on the same cause of action, was made before another Judge on the 15th December 1874, and the leave prayed for was granted. Held that the order should not have been made, and that it should be discharged.—8 M. H. C. R., 21.

In an action to recover fees claimed for services as an hereditary family and village priest, it appeared that a deceased brother of the plaintiff had recovered judgment against one of the defendants and others in an action for similar fees. Held that the former judgment was not conclusive in favour of the plaintiff, nor as against a brother of one of the original defendants.—1 Bom. H. C. R., 141.

The decision of an Appellate Court, on a preliminary issue of fact, which was not at the time appealed against, and which on a subsequent special appeal was not altered or noticed by the Special Appellate Court, is conclusive between the parties, and the issue determined cannot be reopened on a second special appeal.—1 Bom. H. C. R., 173.

It having been decided in a former suit, wherein the present plaintiff and appellant was defendant and the present defendant was plaintiff, that the latter could not claim from the former a share or certain property set apart for the maintenance of a samsthan, held that, after that decision, it was not competent to the present defendant to collect the rents of the property. He was accordingly ordered to make them over to the present plaintiff.—2 Bom. H. C. R., 77.

K sued to establish his title to a house purchased by him from D D's guardians during minority, alleging that the greater part of the purchase-money was employed in paying off a mortgage-claim upon the house; that after he had obtained possession under his deed one D S, the holder of a decree against D D's guardians, attached the house; and that he brought the suit to raise the attachment, in which having failed he paid into Court the amount of D S's claim. Held that K was not estopped from bringing this suit against D D by the decree in his former suit to raise the attachment, which declared that the deed of sale now relied upon was fraudulent and void as against D S.—2 Bom. H. C. R., 369.

A judgment inter partes between A and B cannot be considered to conclude A in a suit between A and C, and is not admissible in the second suit as evidence of the truth of the facts adjudicated in the former one.—2 Bom. H. C. R., 385.

Held that a former judgment by a Court of competent jurisdiction upon the same cause of action was conclusive between the same parties in a subsequent suit brought in another Court, notwithstanding the pendency of an appeal against it; but that the judge passing a decree in the subsequent suit might, upon application made to him, and security being given, stay the execution of it until the appeal in the former suit was decided, and might, if the decree in the former suit was reversed, entertain an application for the review of his own decision in the subsequent suit.—4 Bom. H. C. R., (A. C.) 81.

A B instituted a suit against V B to recover possession of one-half of a field. S N and B N, on their application, were made plaintiffs in that suit, but no alteration in the amount either of stamp or claim was made in the plaint. The Principal Sudder Ameen awarded to A B one-fourth of the field, and to S N and B N conjointly he awarded one-fourth, but as to the remaining one-half he passed no decree, as it had not been claimed in the plaint. S N and B N thereupon filed a fresh suit to recover possession of their remaining one-fourth of the field, and the Principal Sudder Ameen passed a decree in their favour. This decree was confirmed by the Joint Judge. Held that the decrees of the lower Courts were erroneous, and that the claim of the plaintiffs was barred by the provisions of sec. 2 of the Civil Procedure Code, but leave was granted to them to apply to the Court below for a review of the decree passed in the former suit.—5 Bom. H. C. R., (A. C.) 173.

The plaintiff sued to raise an attachment placed upon a certain house, but failed in the lower Court, and the decision of the lower Court was confirmed upon appeal. The house was then sold. The plaintiff sued the purchaser to recover possession of it. Held that he was not estopped from suing by the decision in the former suit refusing to raise the attachment, and that such decision could not be given in evidence in the latter suit.—5 Bom. H. C. R., (A. C.) 199.

When a suit is brought to recover possession of immoveable property, and the decree does not provide for the mesne-profits that accrued during the suit, a separate suit may be maintained for them. Where, however, it can be shown that the omission in the decree to provide for mesne-profits was the deliberate act of the Court, the defendant may set that up as a defence in the separate suit.—6 Bom. H. C. R., (A. C.) 109.

As a purchaser at an auction-sale held by a Court only acquires the right, title, and interest of the judgment-debtor in the property sold, a plea of limitation that would be good against the judgment-debtor is good also against the purchaser. When a person fails to establish a prescriptive title in a suit in which he is plaintiff, it does not follow that the defendant is entitled to recover the subject of such suit in an action brought by him.—6 Bom. H. C. R., (A. C.) 220.

A suit was brought against T and an ex parte decree obtained against him. An application by T to have the decree set aside was dismissed. The defendant afterwards applied to have the attachment and all the proceedings set aside and declared null and void. Quære.—Whether the former refusal to set it aside would be a bar to prevent the setting aside by the Court.—7 Bom. H. C. R., (O. C.) 150.

A decree passed in a suit in a Small Cause Court in which a question of title is incidentally dealt with is not a bar to a suit for a general declaration of title.—8 Bom. H. C. R., (A. C.) 23.

The plaintiff sued to recover certain land, on the ground that he had been forcibly dispossessed of it by the defendant. As the plaintiff did not prove the alleged dispossession his claim was rejected, but the Court suggested that he might recover in a fresh suit, treating the defendant as a trustee, and offering to make certain payments to him. The plaintiff then filed a fresh suit, framing it in the manner indicated by the Court. Held that the latter suit, being based on a different cause of action from the former, was not barred, and that the question at issue between the parties was not res judicata.—8 Bom. H. C. R., (A. C.) 89.

In 1864 the original plaintiff, L, as heir of F, brought a suit against J (the guardian of F), A, B, and C, to recover a piece of land. The suit was rejected as it was proved that (though the plaintiff was the heir of F) F's guardian had mortgaged the land for necessary purposes to C, the two defendants A and B being merely tenants of C. The plaintiff then sued C for redemption of the Mortgaged premises, Held that the second suit was not barred under sec. 2 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Held, also, that the fact of the document under which C held the land being described in the Court's judgment in the earlier suit as an instrument of sale, was not conclusive in the second suit as to the real nature of the instrument.—9 Bom. H. C. R., 65.

S, the mortgagee of a talukdari village, obtained a decree upon his mortgage against his mortgagor, the talukdar of the village, under which S attached the village. The Collector of the district in which the attached village was situated thereupon came in under sec. 246 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1859, and sought to raise the attachment, but, as he failed to appear when the matter came on for adjudication, his application was dismissed. The village was then sold under the decree and was purchased by S, the mortgagee. Upon S seeking to obtain possession of the village, he was resisted by the Collector, whereupon S (after proceedings ineffectually taken by him under sec. 269 of the Code) filed a suit against the Collector praying to be put in possession of the village. Held by the Appellate Court (affirming the decision of Tucker, J.) that the right of S to be put in possession of the village was, as between him and the Collector, res judicata by reason of the dismissal of the Collector's application under sec. 246 of the Code (to set aside which dismissal the Collector had not filed a suit within the year allowed for that purpose), and that S ought therefore to have been at once put in possession of the village without further proof of his title.—9 Bom. H. C. R., 205.

A mortgagee is not affected by the order of a Mamlatdar made under Bombay Act V of 1864 on the application of the mortgagor for possession subsequent to the date of the mortgage.—9 Bom. H. C. R., 275.

If the plaintiff's cause of action might and ought properly to have been made a ground of defence in a former suit, brought against him by the defendant, his suit is barred by sec. 2 of Act VIII of 1859. The father of A and B having died, A alleging that his father's assets amounted in value to Rs. 12,000, and admitting that he (A) had received Rs. 1,000, part thereof in 1866, sued B whom he alleged to be in possession of the rest of the property, for Rs. 5,000, as the residue of A's share, and obtained a decree for a half share in immoveable property of their father of the value of about Rs. 700, and no more. In 1871 B sued A for a moiety of the Rs. 1,000, which A, in his suit in 1866, had admitted to be in his possession. Held that such a suit could not be maintained, as the claim on which it was founded must be deemed a res judicata in A's suit in 1866.—10 Bom. H. C. R., 293

Failure in a suit of simple ejectment does not bar a subsequent suit for redemption, notwithstanding that the defendant had asserted the existence of his mortgage in the former suit.—11 Bom. H. C. R., 224.

The fact that a person failed to establish a prescriptive title in a suit in which he was plaintiff does not debar him from defending his right of possession against another plaintiff suing him for the property.—6 Bom. H. C. R., (A. C.) 220.

So long as a decree subsists unreversed and unvaried, the parties thereto and those claiming under them are bound by it, and no effect can be given to any prior agreement regarding the same matter on the ground that the terms of the decree differ from those of the prior agreement, notwithstanding that the parties had requested the Court which passed the decree to draw it up according to the terms of the agreement.—8 Bom. H. C. R., (A. C.) 241.

Two applications before a Collector, the one by defendants, asking an amendment of the Collectorate record by expunging therefrom plaintiff's names, as being out of possession, and which, after evidence taken, was ordered to be done, and the other by plaintiffs, praying a partition under Act XIX of 1863, which was refused, on the ground that they had not established their possession, were held not to be such an adjudication of rights as to be a bar to a suit by the plaintiffs for establishment of right to and possession of the land referred to in such application.—2 N. W. P. H. C. R., 64.

G executed a deed of gift of his whole property in favour of J. J sued for possession and obtained a decree. On the death of G, his heir sued to set aside the deed of gift, alleging that, notwithstanding the decree, J did not obtain possession till after the death of G, and that the deed of gift was, under the Imames law, invalid. Held that this might have been a good defence on the part of G to the suit brought against him by J, but that after the decision of that suit, it was not open to G to dispute the title of J, nor was it now open for his heir to do so.—5 N.-W. P. H. C. R., 118.

The plaintiff sued to enhance the rent of the defendant's holding. In a former suit between the parties which the defendant had brought to determine the plaintiff's right to enhance, it was held that the plaintiff was not entitled to enhance. Held that the decision in the former case was rightly admitted as conclusive evidence in the present case as to the plaintiff's right to enhance.—5 N.-W. P. H. C. R., 163.

Where a person became security for the due payment of rent by a third party, and on default of such payment the creditor sued both the principal debtor and the surety in the Revenue Courts for the amount owing, and such suit as against the surety was an appeal thrown out by the High Court on the ground that the Revenue Courts had no jurisdiction to entertain it, and the creditor then sued the surety in the Civil Courts, held that the proceedings instituted in the Revenue Courts were no bar to the entertainment of this suit.—6 N.-W. P. H. C. R., 77.

B sued on a bond to recover its amount and to enforce a mortgage lien. He obtained only a money-decree on the 26th August 1871. D, who also held a decree against the same debtor, caused a portion of the property which had been included in the plaintiffs' mortgage to be brought to sale. B instituted a second suit on the 21st January 1873, to enforce the lien. Held (in accordance with the opinions of Turner, Oldfield, and BROADHURST, JJ., STUART, C. J., and PEARSON, J., dissenting) that the suit was unmaintainable.—7 N.-W. P. H. C. R., 17.

Where a Court, without jurisdiction, decreed a claim by a landholder for arrears of enhanced rent, and the tenant subsequently sued to remove an attachment based on the decree, it was held that the decree could not be regarded as binding on the parties, and the second suit should have been tried and disposed of on its merits.—7 N.-W. P. H. C. R., 99.

R obtained, on the 7th January 1862, a decree declaring a deed of sale in his favour, dated the 7th January 1854, to be a genuine, authentic, and valid instrument. The question whether the sale was changed into a conditional sale or mortgage by an agreement entered into by him with the vendors on the same day that the deed of sale was executed, could not be raised by any of the parties to that suit or their representatives in a suit brought by R to obtain proprietary possession of the subject of the sale, in virtue of the deed and the decree.—7. N. W. P. H. C. R., 149.

M brought a suit to obtain her share of the entire property of A, her deceased father. It was pleaded, with respect to a certain portion of the property, that A had made it over by parol gift to his minor son. The case came before the High Court on special appeal, when it was contended on behalf of M, the appellant, that the gift was not proved, and that some portion of the property was "mush'a" (undivided), and the gift in regard to it invalid. The High Court refused to allow the last plea, which had not been taken in the Court of first instance, to be taken in appeal, the point raised being one of fact; and as the gift had been established by evidence, dismissed the appeal. F, the purchaser of the rights and interest in A's estate of W, a defendant in the suit, brought a suit against his vendor, M, and the guardian of the minor, to obtain possession of the property conveyed by the sale in which property affected by the gift was included, and claimed the setting aside of the gift because a portion of the property conveyed by it was undivided. Held that his suit was not barred by sec. 2 of Act VIII of 1859.—77 N.-W. P. H. C. R., 251.

N sued M and K, claiming proprietary possession, under the Mahamedan law, of a share in certain property by right of heirship to her deceased husband. She had previously sued the same persons to recover a portion of the same property under a will of her husband, and obtained a decree which was reversed on the ground of the will being invalid. Held (in accordance with the opinion of the Full Bench) that the second suit was not barred by sec. 2, Act VIII of 1859.—7 N.-W. P. H. C. R., 60.

Held that an entry in the wajib-ul-urz is only good for what it may be worth as evidence, and cannot be held to be like a judgment or to require to be set aside by a regular suit subject to a limitation calculated from the date of the instrument.—1 Agra H. C. R., 233.

The dismissal of a suit in which the plaintiff had claimed a proprietary title in certain land, held not to bar a subsequent suit in which he prayed for a declaration that, as planter of the trees and constructor of a tank in a garden forming a portion of the land, he was entitled to retain possession of the garden and tank.—2 Agra H. C. R., 32.

Held that a former suit which decided the question of relinquishment of the land by defendant, a ryot, did not bar a subsequent suit, which was brought on the allegation that the land being sir land, the defendant, the occupant, had no right of occupancy, and should consequently be ejected.—2 Agra H. C. R., 93.

Held that a decree of the Revenue Court, in a suit for possession brought by one lessee against the zemindar, was no bar to a suit in the Civil Court brought by another lessee to obtain possession against both the zemindar and the first lessee.—2 Agra H. C. R., 127.

Held that the plaintiff having failed in a regular suit in 1853 to establish his right to rent, a subsequent suit for rent was not admissible, unless since that date rent was paid or his title recognized in some way.—2 Agra H. C. R., 221.

The purchaser of the conditional vendor's interest pending the suit to impeach the conditional sale must be bound by the decree on that suit.—2 Agra H. C. R., 301.

Where a widow was treated as an equal sharer in her husband's estate with her sons, and in conjunction with one son applied for partition as a sharer, and objections taken to the partition were overruled and no appeal made to the Civil Court, held that a suit to declare the widow only entitled to maintenance was not maintainable.—3 Agra H. C. R., 137.

Where D sued for redemption, and obtained a conditional decree, and subsequently the plaintiff sued D to establish his right to the mortgaged property and obtained a decree, held that a suit by the plaintiff for redemption was not barred by sec. 2, Act VIII of 1859.—3 Agra H. C. R., 144.

A former judgment, in which a certain document has been held to be genuine between a third person as plaintiff and the present plaintiff and present principal defendant as defendants, was held to be conclusive in this suit on the point of authenticity of the document, though not a res judicata under sec. 2, Act VIII of 1859, in other respects.—1 Hay's Rep., 430.

In a suit for wasilat brought after a decree awarding possession to the plaintiff, the defendant cannot set up the title of a third person.—Marsh. Rep., 105; 1 Hay's Rep., 181.

Where a suit against several defendants for a joint jumma is dismissed on the ground that the jumma is several and not joint, the plaintiff is not precluded by Act VIII of 1859, sec. 2, from afterwards suing each of them severally for the separate jumma.—Marsh. Rep., 418; 2 Hay's Rep., 528.

A mortgagee can resort to all his remedies on the mortgage at the same time, and is not estopped in an action on the covenant to pay the mortgage-money by the fact of his having obtained a decree for sale.—1 Ind. Jurist, (N. S.) 370.

A brought a suit against B in the Collector's Court for rent. In answer, B set up a bond, by the terms of which A, in consideration of a loan of Rs. 10,000, stipulated that B should apply a certain portion of the annual rent to the reduction of the loan, and the payment of the interest thereon. A alleged that the bond was false. The Collector, in an issue directed by the High Court, decided that it was genuine, and this decision was affirmed on appeal. B afterwards sued A in the Civil Court upon the bond. Held per PEACOCK, C. J., and PHEAR, J. (CAMPBELL, J., dissentiente), that the Collector's decision as to the genuineness of the bond did not operate as an estoppel. The two Courts were not Courts of concurrent jurisdiction. Per PEACOCK, C. J.—Quære—Is a judgment of a Court of concurrent jurisdiction between the same parties on the same point conclusive between the parties in another Court in the country?—2 Ind. Jurist, (N. S.) 264; 8 W. R., 175.

A case struck off on the ground of discrepancy between the plaint and the plaintiff's deposition cannot operate as a res judicata.—W. R., 1864, 163.

A decision in a former case, in which a mere question as to the use of the water in a water-course arose, cannot operate as res judicata in a subsequent case, in which the subject-matter is whether the defendants have the right of throwing up an embankment and obstructing the water-way.—W. R., 1864, 167.

In such a suit a Collector had no jurisdiction to try whether a title under a grant made prior to the 1st December 1790 was valid or not.—W. R., (F. B.) 70.

A suit by a zemindar to assess or resume land alleged to be invalid lakhiraj, under sec. 28 of Act X of 1859, had to be brought in the Revenue Courts.—1 W. R., 31.

The dismissal of a suit for rent is no bar to suit for title and possession with mesne-profits.—1 W. R., 99.

A decree of a Civil Court in a suit concerning the title is not of itself in all cases a bar to a suit against a tenant for rent by the person against whom such decree has been obtained. When the decree clearly adjudicates against the plaintiff's right, and the Collector sees that it relates to the property in question and is in force, the Collector should give effect to the decree as a bar to the plaintiff's suit for rent, notwithstanding that the plaintiff may have an actual receipt of rent prior to the institution of the suit.—1 W. R., 331.

A finding in one suit to which A was a party is no bar against A in another suit, unless it is shown that the issue in question in the latter was raised in the former suit, and was a material issue in it.—2 W. R., 79; 2 Agra H. C. R., 192; 16 W. R., 85.

The dismissal of a suit for rent in the Revenue Court for want of jurisdiction (the plaintiff not having proved that he was de facto landlord in possession) was held not to bar a suit in the Civil Court for declaration of right to the same rent.—2 W. R., Act X 1859, 103; 3 W. R., 176.

A decree of a Revenue Court awarding arrears of rent for a certain year under a kabuliyat against a raiyat does not bar the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts in a suit brought by him for a declaration of his title as laknirajdar in the same land.—3 W. R., 227.

A Civil Court is not bound by a Magistrate's view of the genuineness of a document.—5 W. R., 26; 5 W. R., Cr., 50; Marsh. Rep., 43; 1 Hay's Rep., 75.

The conviction in a criminal case is not conclusive evidence in a civil suit for damages in respect to the same act.—5 W. R., 27.

The Tipperah Rajah's Court was a Court of competent jurisdiction within the meaning of sec. 2, Act VIII of 1859. A decision given there bars a fresh suit in respect of the same matter in a British Court.—6 W. R., Civ. Ref., 31.

Where a Deputy Collector declined jurisdiction in a suit for ejectment under sec. 28, Act X of 1859, and the appeal against this decision to the Judge was dismissed, held that that decision was no bar to a suit for ouster in the Civil Court, either in the way of res judicata or otherwise.—7 W. R., 97.

A possessory suit under cl. 6 of sec. 23 of the Rent Act, 1859, by a raiyat against his zemindar, did not bar a suit for confirmation of title by the intervenor in that suit.—7 W. R., 469.

The decision of a Collector on a question of possession and of the right to receive the rent, does not bar an action in the Civil Courts to try the title of the parties.—8 W. R., 68.

A decree made in favour of a plaintiff in a suit is binding upon the defendants collectively and severally, notwithstanding any of them was made a defendant only ikhteatun, i. e., by way of precaution.—8 W. R., 366.

A Collector's judgment as to the genuineness of a patta could not be pleaded as an estoppel in the Civil Court in an action for ejectment on account of trespass.—8 W. R., 487.

A fresh suit will not lie to determine an issue left untried by the Judge. The plaintiff's remedy, where such is the case, should be by special appeal to the High Court.—9 W. R., 524.

When a Court of competent jurisdiction in deciding upon a particular subject-matter thinks it necessary to go into collateral facts for the purposes of its decision, its opinion on those facts is not conclusively binding in a subsequent suit which relates to a different subject-matter.—9 W. R., 592.

A suit for a kabuliyat in which the rate of rent is the subject-matter, and the question of the right of occupancy is not the main point, is not an estoppel to a suit for repossession, under cl. 6, sec. 23, Act X of 1859.—9 W. R., 595.

The Court of the Rajah of Independent Tipperah was not a competent Court within the meaning of sec. 2, Act VIII of 1859.—10 W. R., 337.

Where a suit had been struck off the file on default under the old law, Reg. XXVI of 1814 ("kharij" being the word used), it was held that there was no "decision" such as is contemplated by sec. 148 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1859.—11 W. R., 250.

A plaintiff's failure in a former suit to establish his claim with reference to a different property from which he was dispossessed on a different date cannot render a subsequent suit inadmissible under the provisions of sec. 2, Act VIII of 1859, even though the title set forth in both the suits is identical.—11 W. R., 382.

A litigant is bound to disclose all his titles at once. He cannot be allowed to keep back one, and then, years after, to bring a fresh suit on the ground that he had still a right in reserve.—12 W. R., 55; 15 W. R., 168.

A previous decision against one member of a family suing to recover his own share of certain property is no bar, under sec. 2, Act VIII. of 1859, to a suit by the receiver in the name of the whole family to recover the whole property.—12 W. R., 117.

An affirmation in general terms of the right of a plaintiff in a suit which was based in some measure, upon certain documents, is not such a decision between the parties as precludes the defendant from raising a question as to the genuineness of these documents in a subsequent suit between the same parties.—12 W. R., 525.

A previous suit against the same defendant on a bond having been dismissed on the ground that plaintiff had failed to prove the execution of the bond, defendant sued to recover the identical sum as a balance due on a khatta account. Held that the second suit was not brought on a cause of action previously tried and determined between the parties, and was cognizable by the Court of Small Causes.—13 W. R., 97.

Where a plaintiff's claim to have a property declared ijmalee had been dismissed in a former suit, his suit for a partition of the same property was held to be barred against a defendant who had been a party to that suit, as well as against defendants who were not in possession.—14 W. R., 195.

Where a party claiming certain land by right of pre-emption failed to set up her rights in a suit in which the purchaser of that land sued her for possession and obtained a decree, it was held that she was not entitled to bring a fresh suit to enforce the same rights.—14 W. R., 272.

In a suit to recover possession on the ground of illegal ejectment, a Collector has no jurisdiction to inquire into any matter having reference to the rights of the parties so as to bar a subsequent suit for them.—14 W. R., 301.

Where, for the purposes of a rent-suit, a Revenue Court found that a kabuliyat propounded by the plaintiff was a genuine document, such finding was no bar to a Civil Court trying the question of right between the parties, and for that purpose trying the validity and genuineness of the kabuliyat.—15 W. R., 32.

In a special appeal the general affirmation of a judgment can only refer to the points raised by the appellant, the rejection of the appeal not necessarily affirming the other findings of fact or law incidentally arrived at by the Lower Appellate Court.—15 W. R., --

A plaintiff's cause of action is a very different thing from his title; the one being something done contrary to his interest, which obliges him to seek the aid of a Court of justice, the other being the proof that that something affords him a valid ground for relief.—15 W. R., 168.

Held (MITTER, J., dubitante) that a suit claiming property on a title by inheritance was barred by secs. 2 and 7, Code of Civil Procedure, 1859, where plaintiff's claim on a title derived by gift had already been adjudicated upon.—15 W. R., 168.

The cause of action between two parties cannot be said to be res adjudicata if the first case was disposed of on an appeal on a purely technical point, even though the suit was decided on its merits in the Court of first instance.—15 W. R., 208.

The plea of set off is one form of bringing a suit, the defendant becoming in regard thereto a plaintiff, and he cannot therefore be allowed to set up a claim for which a suit had been previously brought by him and dismissed.—15 W. R., 252.

A decree in a suit for a kabuliyat at an enhanced rate was no bar, under sec. 2, Act VIII of 1859, to a suit for a declaration of the rights of the present plaintiff to hold the land in lieu of maintenance on payment of a quit-rent, which could not be tried by a Collector.—15 W. R., 424.

A suit for possession as the heir of S is not barred by sec. 2, Act VIII of 1859, because plaintiff's former claim to the same property as the heir of S's father was dismissed.—16 W. R., 264.

A suit is not barred as res judicata because, in a former case between the same parties, and in the same cause of action, the plaintiff, after the evidence had been recorded, but before final judgment was passed, obtained the Court's permission to withdraw the suit with reservation of leave to bring another.—16 W. R., 276.

Plaintiff, after failing in a former suit to establish her right to certain land as belonging to her patni taluk, was not allowed to fall back on a different title and bring a separate suit claiming the same land as belonging to her mirasi, the cause of action in both cases being really the same.—17 W. R., 351.

A suit dismissed as being prematurely brought is not a res judicata in a subsequent suit brought at the proper time.—17 W. R., 360.

Sec. 2, Act VIII of 1859, was held not to apply to a case where the present plaintiff's name was ordered by the High Court to be expunged from the list of defendants in a former suit, but, notwithstanding that order, her name by some mistake still appeared some two years afterwards in the decretal order, the onus being on the present defendant to show how that happened, and that the former suit was decided in her presence.—18 W. R., 29.

On a question of fact the decision of one Court cannot bind another in a suit between other parties.—18 W. R., 469.

The dismissal of a suit because it is considered that all the proper parties have not been joined in it, though a decision of the suit, is not a decision on the merits within the meaning of Act VIII of 1859, sec. 2.—21 W. R., 272.

A suit for ejectment, on the ground that the defendant had entered the plaintiff's land wrongfully and forcibly, having been dismissed by the Court, which found that the defendant was not a trespasser but a tenant, held that a subsequent suit by the same plaintiff, on the allegation that the defendant was a trespasser, though lately a tenant, was not prohibited by sec. 2, Act VIII of 1859. The suit, however, was dismissed on other grounds.—22 W. R., 115.

Held, with reference to Act VIII of 1859, sec. 2, that where the cause of action is the same in substance in both suits, and where the former suit was so constituted that the parties to the present suit were in direct contest with each other, and had full opportunity of asserting their rights, the decision in the former suit is res adjudicata—e. g., decrees passed in suits for patni-rent in which the jumma payable is put in issue are decisive as to the amount of such jumma.—22 W. R., 282.

A suit for a declaration of the plaintiff's right to a chur, which they claimed as an accretion to mouzah L, was held to be barred under Act VIII of 1859, sec. 2, by a judgment in a former suit, in which they had claimed the same land as an accretion to mouzah R, because, whether by accretion to the one estate or to the other, the question in both suits was that of title by accretion. A complainant is bound to bring forward in his suit all the grounds of origin of his right. A difference in the origin of the right is not a matter which makes a different cause of action.—22 W. R., 464.

Where a suit for a share of ancestral property was decreed, but the decree was modified on appeal as regards certain immoveables so far as to be made declaratory of plaintiff's right to a specified share without any specific declaration of value, and plaintiff subsequently brought a second suit for the value of the moveables, held that the second suit was not barred by Act VIII of 1859, sec. 2.—24 W. R., 23.

A suit to recover possession of land, on the ground of purchase from the admitted owners, is not barred by Act VIII of 1859, sec. 2, simply because plaintiff's claim as against the same defendant was dismissed in a former suit in which he (defendant) appeared as an intervenor.—24 W. R., 248.

A plaintiff is bound to raise every title on which he can succeed and to obtain a decision upon every part of his case, and if it is found that any part of the case which he made has been neglected by the Court which tried the suit, he is not at liberty to bring a fresh suit in respect of such part.—24 W. R., 304.

If one of the defendants in a suit for possession puts in a written statement disclaiming all interest in the property in suit, and a decree is made by reason and on the faith of such disclaimer, the decree is valid against him, and he is absolutely concluded by it so long as fraud is not proved.—25 W. R., 128.

The old Privy Council and Full Bench Rulings, that a Revenue Court's decision on title in a rent suit under Act X of 1859 is not conclusive, went upon a Collector's incompetency to determine a question of title, but do not now apply to the decision of a competent Civil Court hearing a rent suit under the Rent Act, 1869.—25 W. R., 189.

Where a suit for right of way was once thrown out on the specific ground that, according to plaintiff's own statement, the road in suit was a public one, and that the Court had no jurisdiction, held that, as the real cause of action—namely, the obstruction of the road—was not decided in the first trial, sec. 2 of the Code of Civil Procedure did not bar a second suit for the removal of the obstruction.—25 W. R., 208.

Where, in a suit for some land, a Judge had considered it necessary to find out the boundary between two villages, and had given a decision in favour of one of the parties, who in a second suit of the same kind, but with reference to some other land, brought in the former decision to show that the land in dispute in the second suit must be his if the finding as to the village boundary in the former suit was correct, held that the finding as to the village boundary in the former suit was conclusive only as to the land in dispute in the former case, but did not make the former decision conclusive as to the boundary line itself.—25 W. R., 393.

Where a joint decree, passed against several defendants, has been satisfied out of the property of one of them, and then a subsequent suit for contribution has been brought by the latter against her co-defendants in the former suit, there is nothing to prevent the defendants from showing that, as between themselves and the plaintiff, the latter alone was liable to satisfy the decree in the former suit, and that consequently they are not liable to contribute.—2 C. L. R., 406.

Plaintiff alleged a purchase of land from A and B, of which he afterwards granted them a patta, and retained them in possession, and he put in evidence a consent-decree obtained against B for arrears of rent. Held, in a suit brought to recover possession on the ground of the tenancy having expired, that the decree worked no estoppel against B by virtue of sec. 115 of the Evidence Act, and did not relieve the plaintiff from the necessity of proving his case completely.—1 C. L. R., 528.

When a plaintiff sues for possession and determination of right to a certain property, and to set aside an execution sale of a portion of the property on the ground of irregularity, and his suit is dismissed on the merits, a subsequent suit for possession of the property sold, on the ground that the sale was void ab initio, is barred as res judicata. Wooma Tara Debia v. Unnopoorna Dasse (11 B. L. R., 158) and Periya Odaya Taver v. Katama Natchiar (11 Moore's I. A., 50) cited and followed.—3 C. L. R., 253.

In a suit between A and B a question of title was raised and decided in B's favour in the Court of first instance, but on appeal the Judge refused to go into it, saying that B might bring a fresh suit. Held that a subsequent suit by B raising the same question was not barred as res judicata. Watson v. Collector of Rajshahye (3 B. L. R., P. C., 48; 12 W. R., P. C., 43) cited and distinguished.—3 C. L. R., 447.

A, alleging himself the owner of a certain garden, brought a suit for damages against B and C for forcibly carrying off fruit grown in such garden. In the suit, the question whether A was exclusively in possession of the garden was incidentally raised and decided against A. Thereupon A, who in the meantime had been ousted from possession, brought a subsequent suit, in which B and C together with others were co-defendants, in which he claimed an undivided share in the same garden. Held that under the circumstances the doctrine of res judicata did not apply, and that such suit was maintainable.—3 C. L. R., 540.

In a suit for rent and for ejectment, the defendant pleaded that his tenure was transferable and istimrari, and consequently protected by the Rent Law. In a former suit for arrears of previous years, in which the defendant pleaded that his tenure was istimrari, the plaintiff obtained a decree for ejectment on non-payment of rent within fifteen days. In that case the defendant saved his tenure by payment within the time stated. Held that inasmuch as the defendant might in the former suit, in which the nature of the tenure was put in issue, have urged that his tenure was both transferable and istimrari, he could not in the present suit be allowed to alter his defence, and rely upon the tenure being transferable. Woomatara Debia v. Unnapoorna Dasse (11 B. L. R., 158) cited and followed.—4 C. L. R., 51.

In order to constitute the bar of res judicata, it is not sufficient merely that an issue on the same point should have been raised in the former suit, although that issue may have been incidentally decided; but it must appear that the matter referred to was alleged by one party, and either denied or admitted expressly or impliedly by the other.—5 C. L. R., 251.

In 1814 litigation commenced between a zemindar and his tenants by reason of his having dispossessed them of lands held under a jote tenure, and a decree having been obtained by the tenants the zemindar assessed the jote lands at a certain rent. Subsequently this rent fell into arrear, and under a decree the jote lands were in 1836 sold in satisfaction of the arrears to J., who was put in possession in 1839. Another suit, which was pending between the tenants and their mortgagee, in which a question arose whether these jote lands were included in the mortgage, was decided in favour of the mortgagee in 1841. J, the then jote tenant, was no party to that suit, and continued in possession of his jote lands. Disputes arose, and by an order of the Sudder Court in 1845 the jote lands were directed to be put in possession of the mortgagee. In 1856 a suit was brought by J's representative to set aside that order and to recover possession of the jote lands. The Privy Council held that, as J, the jote tenant, was not a party to the suit under which the decree was made in 1841, the decree was not binding upon him or those deriving title through him, and remanded the case in order that the issue whether the land was parcel of the jote or not might be tried. Held that this order of remand was conclusive that the question of the title of the representatives of J to the jote lands could not be re-opened.—6 C. L. R., (P. C.) 121.

Certain lands having been divided under a butwara between A and B, who together took one portion, and C, who took the remainder, A in 1847 mortgaged his share to B under a usufructuary mortgage. In 1851 a dispute arose as to the boundaries under the butwara, and ended in C surrendering $51\frac{1}{2}$ bighas, which B was allowed to take possession of under an ikrarnamah executed by A to secure the costs incurred by B in the dispute. In 1874 A sued to recover possession of a moiety of the lands held jointly by him with B, and in 1875 obtained a decree for possession and wasilat, no specific mention of the $51\frac{1}{2}$ bighas being made in the decree. In execution of the decree, wasilat in respect of a moiety of the $51\frac{1}{2}$ bighas was allowed, an objection by the defendant to such wasilat being charged having been overruled. In 1878 B sued to recover possession of the moiety of the $51\frac{1}{2}$ bighas, which had been taken by A under his decree. Held that, in rejecting the objection raised by B, and allowing wasilat in respect of the $51\frac{1}{2}$ bighas, the Court had interpreted the decree passed, and declared that under it possession of a moiety of the 51 bighas had been decreed and given to A, and that the suit instituted in 1878 was therefore barred. Held, also, that this matter having been decided under sec. 11, Act XXIII of 1861, between the parties in execution of a decree, could not be made the subject of a suit.—6 C. L. R., 215.

In 1852, T acquired a plot of land, X, under a Government grant. In 1851 N, claiming to be the owner of the adjoining plot Y, granted a lease of it to R; but in 1853 another lease of the same plot was granted by an agent of N to G. In 1859 G sued T to recover possession of lot X as being part of plot Y, and obtained a decree, against which T appealed to the Privy Council. Pending the appeal R sued G for possession of plot Y, and obtained a decree against G. Meanwhile, R having failed to pay rent, plot Y was put up for sale, and purchased by the present respondent. In 1872, the respondent, who was unable to get possession of his purchase, obtained leave to be admitted a party respondent in the appeal to the Privy Council, and filed a case averring that the interests of the original respondents had ceased, and that he was, pending the appeal, precluded from enforcing his rights. The Privy Council held that the plaintiff G had not proved that plot Y included plot X, but they stated that they did not adjudicate upon any question of title between the respondents on that appeal, or N or any other person's interest in plot Y. The present respondent subsequently sued T's representative for possession of plot X as being parcel of plot Y. Held, reversing the judgment of the High Court, that the respondent's claim was res judicata by reason of the previous judgment of the Privy Council.—7 C. L. R., (P. C.) 308.

The father of the appellant obtained a decree against G's widow and his reversionary heirs, who had intervened in the suit for possession of property mortgaged by the widow. In the schedule annexed to the plaint the mortgaged property was described as "mouzah B, usli with dakhili,"—that is, mouzah B K and Mouzah M B,—but in the body of the plaint it was described simply as "mouzah B." On the death of plaintiff in that suit, the reversionary heirs of G sued the appellant for an adjudication of their right to 16 annas of mouzah M B, and it was found that mouzahs B K and M B were not usli with dakhili, but distinct mouzahs, and that the mortgage-deed did not include mouzah M B. Held, affirming the judgment of the High Court, that in the first suit the Court was called on to adjudicate upon the property as described in the body of the plaint, and not as described in the schedule annexed thereto, and that the question in the latter suit was therefore not res judicata.—7 C. L. R., (P. C.) 404.

Pending the final hearing in appeal of a suit for confirmation of possession of certain land, and for the recovery of the produce of such land alleged to have been carried away by the defendants, the plaintiff brought a suit, again asking for confirmation of possession, but also for the recovery of the produce which had arisen since the institution of the other suit. Held, the second suit, so far as it sought for the recovery of the produce, was not barred by the previous suit.—8 C. L. R., 113.

In a suit for possession of a plot of land situate in B, the plot was claimed by the plaintiff as appertaining to mouzah M, and by the defendant as appertaining to mouzah S, and each party set up a patta from the same lessor, the zemindar, in proof of his title. It was held that while the land known as B appertained to mouzah M, the patta of the defendant was prior in date to that of the plaintiff, and that the defendant therefore had the superior title. A second suit for another plot of land situate in B was subsequently instituted by the same plaintiff, and the same title put forward. Held that the matter in dispute was res judicata by the former suit.—9 C. L. R., 216.

Certain property, having been mortgaged, was sold in execution of a decree against the mortgagor, and the decree-holder became the purchaser. The mortgagee subsequently sued upon his mortgage, making the purchaser a defendant, but pending the suit the latter died, and the suit was not revived against his representatives. A decree was, in 1876, obtained, and in execution of that decree the property in question was purchased by the plaintiff, who now sued to recover possession of the same from the representatives of the purchaser at the former execution sale. Held that the matter was not res judicata by reason of the mortgage suit, inasmuch as that suit having been under Act VIII of 1859, the abatement had not the effect which such an abatement under Act X of 1877 would have had, viz., being a bar to a fresh suit in the same cause of action.—10 C. L. R., 229.

An ejectment suit by B's tenant against the defendant having been dismissed, a second ejectment suit was subsequently, after B's death, brought in respect of the same land against the defendant by the successor in title of B. Held that, inasmuch as a lessor cannot be considered as claiming under his own lessee, the principle of res judicata did not apply,—11 C. L. R., 122.

A suit for rent, in which the sole defendant denied the plaintiff's title, alleging that B and A were his landlords, having been dismissed on the ground that the plaintiff had failed to prove his title, another suit was brought by the plaintiff against A, B, and C for possession. Held that the suit was barred under sec. 13 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1882.—12 C. L. R., 38.

In a suit against the Maharajah of Hill Tipperah, which is an independent Sovereign State, for maintenance, it appeared that, in a former suit tried in British India in respect of the same claim, the Court had ordered the amount of the maintenance for which he gave a decree to be paid by the defendant Maharajah from his estate in R, which was in British India. Held that the decree in the former suit was not res judicata to show that the maintenance claimed in the present suit was a charge on the zemindary of Rs. 80 as to give the Court jurisdiction.—12 C. L. R., 473.

In a suit for possession of immoveable property before the Subordinate Judge, it was objected that the suit ought to have been instituted before the Munsif, the value of the property being less than Rs. 1,000. An issue having been framed on this point, other issues were also framed as to the sanity of the plaintiff, his having had possession of the property, and evidence upon all the issues was gone into. The Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit on the first issue, but expressed his opinion that the other issues ought also to have been decided against the plaintiff. In a subsequent suit by the plaintiff for the same relief in the Court of the Munsif, held that the questions depending on the issues raised, other than the issue as to the valuation of the suit, were not res judicata.—13 C. L. R., 83.

Suit to establish plaintiffs' title to certain land alleged by the defendants, who were the Secretary of State for India in Council and the natamaigar of a certain village, to be maniyam land attached to the office of the second defendant, and previously held to be such by a Revenue Court:—Held, the Court was not precluded either by Regulation VI of 1831, sec. 3, or by the decision of the Revenue Court from granting the declaration prayed for.—I. L. R., 13 Madr. 41.

In a summary suit filed by a landlord against his tenant in the Court of the Deputy Collector under the Rent Recovery Act (Madras), sec. 9, to enforce acceptance of a patta by the defendant, it appeared that, in a former suit between the same parties in the same Court, it had been decided that the defendant was the plaintiff's tenant and as such bound to accept a patta from him in respect of the land in question in the present suit:—Held, that the defendant was not entitled in the present suit to dispute the plaintiff's title, since the former decision constituted it res judicata.—13 Madr. 287.

A suit for partition of certain land was withdrawn as against one of the defendants who was entitled to a part of the land. The plaintiff and the remaining defendants entered into a compromise in the terms of which the Court passed a decree for delivery of a share of the land to the plaintiff. The decree-holder having died without executing the decree, his heir now sued for partition of the land and delivery of the above share, joining as defendants the various persons entitled to shares:—Held, that the decree in the former suit could only operate as a declaratory decree and did not preclude the plaintiff from bringing the present suit.—13 Madr. 313.

A suit for land was dismissed in 1886 on the plaintiff's failure to comply with an order to pay a fee for the appointment of a commissioner to value the land. No issues were framed in the suit, and the order directing payment of the fee prescribed no time within which it was to be made. The plaintiff now sued the defendants again for the same land :—Held, that the claim was not res judicata.—13 Madr. 510.

G brought a suit against I for the establishment of her rights as purchaser of certain immoveable properties sold in execution of a decree obtained against I, and for possession of the same. After the settlement of issues but before the suit was finally disposed of, I died, and his brother J was made defendant as his legal representative. J consented to the suit being tried on the defence raised by I and upon the issues already settled. The suit was decreed, it being held that G was the purchaser. In execution of this decree, in which G sought to obtain possession. J objected that he was entitled to a half share of some and to the entire sixteen-annas of the other properties, and that his brother I had no right whatever in the same. This objection was disallowed by the Court executing the decree, on the ground that it had been raised in the original suit, and that, as the decree had been passed in the presence of the party then objecting, he was not entitled to urge it. Thereupon J brought a suit against G to establish his rights. The defence was that the order passed in the execution-proceedings, disallowing the plaintiff's objection, was a bar to the suit under secs. 13 and 244 of the Civil Procedure Code. Held, that the order disallowing the plaintiff's objection did not operate as res judicata under sec. 13 of the Civil Procedure Code. The Delhi and London Bank v. Orchard, I. L. R., 3 Cal. 47; L. R., 4 I. A., 127, relied on. Held, also, that this order was no bar to the suit under sec. 244 of the Civil Procedure Code. Kanai Lall Khan v. Shashi Bhosun Biswas, I. L. R., 6 Cal., 777; 8 C. L. R., 117, followed.—17 Cal. 57.

The refusal of an application for the filing of an award, under sec. 525, Civil Procedure Code, merely leaves the award to have its own ordinary legal effect; and it cannot be contended that an award is not to be relied on as a defence in a suit relating to the subject-matter dealt with by it, only because such an application has not been granted. Separable claims, viz., (a) to share property by right of inheritance, and (b) for the office of lumberdar, had been disposed of, on the reference of the present parties, without the intervention of a court by an arbitrator's award between them. An application under sec. 525 had been rejected, for the reason, among others, that (b) was not a matter of civil jurisdiction. Held, however, that the present suit, which was grounded on (a), was barred by the award made.—18 Cal. 414.

A as ticcadar brought a suit to eject B from certain lands, which he had claimed as majhes land, or land which is ordinarily cultivated by the landlord himself or by the ticcadar. B pleaded his right of occupancy. The Court found that the land was majhes land, but dismissed the suit on the ground that A had failed to prove notice to quit. Afterwards A brought a suit against B for ejectment from the same land. B again pleaded his right of occupancy. Held, that B was not precluded from raising the same plea, inasmuch as the finding in the previous suit upon the issue whether B was an occupancy tenant was not conclusive against him; nor could that issue be said to have been "finally decided" in that suit within the meaning of sec. 13 of the Civil Procedure Code.—18 Cal. 647.

In 1874 the plaintiffs' father filed a suit against the defendants for partition of joint family property. The subject-matter of the suit was referred to arbitration out of Court. The arbitrators made an award to the effect that partition should be postponed till the family debts were paid off. The award was accepted by all the sharers, and so the plaintiffs' father withdrew his suit. In 1880 the debts were paid off. Thereupon the plaintiffs' father demanded partition, but was refused. He therefore filed a partition suit in 1883 against the defendants. In his plaint he made no mention of the award of 1874, but relied on his right as a co-parcener to enforce partition. After the settlement of issues he applied for amendment of the plaint, so as to include his claim on the award. The Court refused the amendment, on the ground that it would materially alter the character of the suit, and dismissed the suit, as barred under sec. 373 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882). Against this decision plaintiffs' father did not appeal. In 1884 the plaintiffs filed the present suit for partition, relying expressly on their title under the award of 1874. Held, that the suit was not barred by the plea of res judicata.—14 Bom. 31.

The plaintiff purchased two distinct plots of land (A and B) from one Gopal by a deed of sale dated 30th September, 1875. In 1884, in execution of a decree against Gopal, plot A was attached and sold as his property, and purchased by the defendant. The plaintiff did not intervene, and at that time took no steps to establish his alleged right to this land. In 1885 the defendant obtained another decree against Gopal, and in execution attached plot B. The plaintiff intervened, and claimed the property attached as his own under the sale-deed of 30th Dec. 1875. The defendant disputed the sale, but the Court found in favour of the validity of the sale-deed, and allowed the plaintiffs claim. The defendant did not file a suit to set aside this order. The plaintiff then filed a suit to establish his title to plot A, relying on his sale-deed of the 30th December, 1875. The defendant again disputed the sale, pleading that it was a colourable and fictitious transaction. Held, that the order in the execution proceeding did not operate as res judicata, and did not estop the defendant from contesting the validity of the sale-deed in the present suit. Per JARDINE, J.:—If the decision as to the validity of the deed had been a final decision in a suit as distinguished from an execution proceeding, it would have created an estoppel by res judicata. Between the parties the orders to which sec. 283 of the Civil Procedure Code refers, are subject to the result of a suit, if any, conclusive, but this conclusiveness exists only as regards the particular property in dispute. —14 Bom. 206.

The plaintiff and defendant in a suit each appealed separately, and defendant's appeal first came on for hearing, and an issue as to whether the plaintiff or the defendant had title to the land in dispute was decided on the facts by the appellate Court adversely to the defendant. Subsequently, the plaintiff's appeal, involving the same issue, came on for hearing before the same Court. Held that although sec. 13 of the Civil Procedure Code did not apply, still the principal of res judicata applied, and the finding on the former appeal barred the trial of the same issue in the latter. Ram Kirpal v. Rup Kuari referred to.—12 Al. 578.

The plaintiffs, as purchasers of a share of an estate, sued to recover their share of the rent of certain tenures held in that estate, by the defendants. The defendants denied being in possession as alleged. Another co-sharer in the same estate had previously brought a suit against the same defendants for the rent of the same tenures, and in that suit the present plaintiffs and other co-sharers of the estate were made co-defendants, and the decision in that suit was that the present defendants were in possession, and were liable to pay to the then plaintiff his share of the rent. Held (MIRREK, J., dissenting) that the decree in the former suit was not a res judicata or even admissible as evidence in the present suit.—13 Cal. 352.

R, a Hindu widow, granted a jungleburi tenure to certain tenants in respect of a chur belonging to her husband's estate. An amulnama was granted to the tenants signed by a karpardaz of R in respect of the tenure. R died in January 1861, and was succeeded by J and P, two daughters, the last of whom died on the 31st December 1880. On her death the grandsons succeeded to the estate. On R's death J and P got possession of all estate papers, and amongst them a dowl granted by the tenants in return for the amulnama. In 1865 proceedings were taken by the tenants to obtain kabuliyats on the footing of those documents, which proceedings came to an end in 1868. In 1873, J and P instituted suits against the tenants, alleging the amulnama and dowl to be forgeries, and seeking to enhance the rents payable to them, as well as to have it declared that R's acts did not bind them. In these suits it was found that J and P had all along been aware of the claim made by the tenants that they held a permanent tenure, and the suits were dismissed on the ground that it was too late for J and P, after the lapse of twelve years from R's death, to raise the question. In 1884, D, a receiver, instituted a suit in the names of the grandsons to eject the tenants on amongst other grounds that the grandsons' reversioners were not bound by R's acts, and that the jungleburi tenure was not binding on them; that the tenants were middlemen and had no right of occupancy; that at all events the plaintiffs were entitled to rent on the area of land then held by the defendants, as there had been large accretions to the amount covered by the amulnama and dowl. The defendants amongst other things pleaded limitation, res judicata, and that R had the power to grant the jungleburi tenure so as to bind the reversioners. Held that, being middlemen, the defendants had no right of occupancy, and that, were the suit not dismissed for other grounds, they were liable to have the rent assessed on the whole amount of lands held by them, which was in excess of that covered by the amulnama and dowl. That the suit was not barred by res judicata as in the suits brought by J and P, the question of whether R's acts bound the reversioners was never decided. That the suit was barred by limitation. Adverse possession began to run on R's death (as J and P who represented the estate were then well aware that the tenants claimed to hold the lands under a permanent lease, and though J and P received rent, the possession of the tenants was adverse to them), and more than twelve years elapsed before Act IX of 1871 came into force, and therefore the defendants had then obtained a good title by adverse possession as against all the reversioners which could not be defeated by the provisions of the subsequent Limitation Acts of 1871 and 1877. Held, further, that the question whether a jungleburi tenure granted by a Hindu widow is binding on reversioners depends on the circumstances of the land. Quære.—Whether such a tenure granted in respect of a chur where no legal necessity on behalf of the widow is shown could under any circumstances be binding on the reversioners.—14 Cal. 323.

A zemindar, having granted a putni lease, mortgaged the zemindari to the putnidar, who, having afterwards obtained a decree against the zemindar upon the mortgage, attached and purchased, at the sale in execution, the zemindari interest, subject to the mortgage. Before that purchase, though after the attachment, another holder of a decree against the zemindar brought the right, title, and interest in the zemindari to sale in execution of his decree, and himself became the purchaser. He then, claiming to have obtained the zemindari estate, sued the putnidar for rent due under the lease. This suit was dismissed, save as to rent due for the time intervening between the two sales in execution, on the ground that the relation of zemindar to lessee had ceased on the purchase by the latter. The present suit was brought by the purchaser from the zemindar, stating his title, acquired at the prior of the two sales, and claiming to redeem the mortgage. Held that the dismissal of the rent suit which involved the title, barred the present one; and the opinion was expressed that the plaintiffs had been rightly adjudged in the rent suit to be bound by the proceedings taken by the mortgagee, pending which the purchase relied upon had been made.—15 Cal. 756.

The present suit was preceded by others in which the plaintiff sought to establish a right in the same part of the talukdari estate that he now claimed to redeem from mortgage. The first suit in which he with another claimed as under-proprietors was dismissed in 1866 on the ground that they had not shown themselves to have held such right under the talukdars within the period since 1841. Proceedings not to be regarded as judicial, subsequently taken under Circular 4 of 1867, resulted in a finding that the dismissal was right upon the merits, the property having been transferred to the talukdar by a conditional sale which had become absolute. Another suit was then brought to recover the talukdari right, under the terms of Circular 106 of 1869, it being alleged that arrears of revenue paid by the talukdar had been paid on the plaintiff's account. That suit was also dismissed. Held that the present suit to redeem the same property under a mortgage was not barred under sec. 13 of Act X of 1877, as amended by sec. 6 of Act XII of 1879. The claim to redeem did not arise out of the former cause of action within the meaning of the section 7 of Act VIII of 1859 relating to the inclusion of the whole claim in a suit. The plaintiff not then being aware of his right when he sued before, it could not be regarded as a "portion of his claim," and he was not precluded, by having omitted it, from bringing it forward.—15 Cal. 800.

The widow of a talukdar, acting under his supposed will, appointed the present appellant to succeed to the taluks and other estate which had belonged to the deceased. The heir of the deceased, under the Oudh Estates' Act, I of 1869, obtained the judgment of the judicial Committee, declaring that he was entitled to the taluks as against the present appellant, whose title was under the will, which had been revoked, as the Committee found. Another suit brought by the present appellant for a decree declaring that, in virtue of his appointment by the widow under the will, he was entitled to the whole of the estate of the deceased, talukdari and non-talukdari, was dismissed by the judicial Committee on the ground that he had no such title to the whole or any part of the estate. Held that this prior judgment was conclusive to bar the present suit which, being founded entirely upon the appellant's appointment in pursuance of the will, was brought for possession of all the estate of the deceased as well as a declaration of right thereto. Although the heir was not entitled to possession of the estate of the deceased other than talukdari, inasmuch as the widow took her estate therein, nevertheless the claim of the present appellant being only founded upon her appointment under the will, as if unrevoked, and not being a claim for property as descending to the widow upon her husband's intestacy, the prior judgment was binding in the present suit.—15 Cal. 808.

The dismissal of a suit in terms of sec. 102, Civil Procedure Code, is not intended to operate in favor of the defendant as res judicata. When read with sec. 103, it precludes a fresh suit in respect of the same cause of action, referring, irrespectively of the defence or the relief prayed, entirely to the grounds, or alleged media, on which the plaintiff asks the Court to decide in his favor. Brother's sons, as nearest agnates of a deceased proprietor, sued for a decree declaring that a gift, before then made by the widow in favour of her daughter's son, of the estate of her late husband, would not operate against their right of succession on her death. A prior suit, before the date of the gift, brought by two of the plaintiffs for a declaratory decree, and an injunction restraining the widow from alienating the same estate, had been dismissed under the provisions of secs. 102 and 103 (Act X of 1877), Civil Procedure Code. Held that the causes of action in the two suits were not identical, and fresh suit was not precluded by sec. 103, the gift having afforded the new ground of claim, which also had subsequently arisen.—16 Cal. 98.

A testator, who died leaving widows and a daughter, also three surviving brothers, bequeathed all the residue, after certain legacies, of his acquired estate to maintain the worship of a family deity, appointing his three brothers and his eldest widow to be shebait, and providing that "the family of us five brothers shall be supported from the prasad," "offerings to the deity." One or other of the brothers then for some years managed the estate as shebait, and the survivor of them was succeeded by his son, one of the defendants in the present suit, which was brought by the testator's only daughter as heiress to his estate, claiming that the Court should determine "those provisions which were valid and lawful, and those which were invalid and illegal." She claimed possession and an account, and also to be the shebait. In a previous suit the present shebait had obtained a decree, to which the daughter, now plaintiff, was a party defendant, affirming the validity of the will and the rights of the members of the family to be maintained under it. Held, that the question of the validity of all the provisions of the will having been substantially decided in the decree in the former suit which pronounced that the will was wholly valid, passing the entire estate of the testator to the deb-sheba, and maintaining the rights of members of the family under the will, this suit was barred under sec. 13 of Act X of 1877 as to all but the claim to be shebait. The plaintiff's claim to a preferential title to this office depended on a sentence in the will constituting, as construed by the Courts below, to be shebait the senior in age of the heirs of the original shebait, the defendant now holding the office coming within this provision according to the judgments of both Courts. As to this no reason had been shown in appeal for a different conclusion.—16 Cal. 103.

To apply the law of estoppel by judgment, stated in sec. 6 of Act XII of 1879 and in sec. 13 of Act XIV of 1882, it must be seen what has been directly and substantially in issue in the suit, and whether that has been heard and finally decided; for which purpose the judgment must be looked at. The decree is usually insufficient for showing this, as, according to the Code, it only states the relief granted, if any, or other disposal of the suit, without the ground of decision, and without affording information as to what may have been in issue and decided. This suit was to establish a right to land, and for possession, against two defendants, who alleged their rights respectively. The claimant had previously obtained a decree against one of the defendants, and in that decree the land now claimed had been excepted. Held that the matter now in issue, not having been directly and substantially in issue in the prior suit, the present suit was not barred under sec. 13, Act XIV of 1882, Civil Procedure Code.—16 Cal. 173.

The decision of an issue in one of two suits tried together, which is not appealed against, cannot be treated as res judicata so far as the same issue is concerned in an appeal from the decision in the other suit. A, a ticcadar, sued B for rent in respect of a holding in the ticca. In that suit B pleaded that he was a partner of A in the ticca transaction, and that no rent was due from him in consequence thereof. B then sued A for an account of the partnership in the same transaction, and A, in that suit denied the partnership. Both suits were heard together by the Munsiff who held A was not a partner. B appealed against the judgment and decree in the account suit, but did not appeal against that in the rent suit. It was contended on the appeal that the question as to whether B was or was not a partner was res judicata, by reason of the decision in the rent suit not being appealed against and having become binding. Held that sec. 13 of the Code of Civil Procedure did not apply, and that the question was not res judicata. There was no bar at the time the issue was tried and decided by the Munsif, and the Appellate Court was bound to decide the appeal upon the evidence.—16 Cal. 233.

A mere statement of an alleged rate of rent in a plaint in a rent suit in which an ex parte decree has been obtained, is not a statement as to which it must be held that an issue within the meaning of sec. 13 of the Code of Civil Procedure was raised between the parties so that the defendant is concluded upon it by such decree. Neither a recital in the decree of the rate of rent alleged by the plaintiff, nor a declaration in it as to the rate of rent which the Court considers to have been proved, would operate in such a case so as to make that matter a res judicata, assuming that no such declaration were asked for in the plaint as part of the substantive relief claimed, the defendant having a proper opportunity of meeting the case.—16 Cal. 300.

In September 1886 the plaintiff sued in a Munsif's Court certain defendants for possession of one biggah of land, and for damages for the cutting and carrying of certain paddy from such land on the 23rd December 1885. This suit was dismissed on the ground that no dispossession had taken place, the plaintiff being referred to a Small Cause Court for his damages. No appeal was made against this decision. In March 1887 the plaintiff sued these defendants in the Munsif's Court for possession of 5 biggahs 6 cottahs of land and for mesne-profits, and obtained a decree for possession of 3 biggahs 6 cottahs of land with mesne-profits; possession of the one biggah, the subject of the suit of 1886, being included in the 3 biggahs 6 cottahs decreed. He subsequently sued the same defendants in a Small Cause Court for damages for the paddy cut and carried on the 23rd December 1885. Held that such suit was not barred by either sec. 13 or sec. 43 of the Civil Procedure Code.—16 Cal. 545.

B sued L N and P V to recover certain property claimed under a nuncupative will of his father N. P V denied the will and alleged that the property was ancestral and had vested in him by survivorship. L N set up title to the property under a will in writing executed by N and denied the title both of B and of P V. The question whether P V was divided or not from N was tried. It was found that the will in writing was valid, that P V was divided, and that B's title was not proved. In a suit by L N against P V to recover certain land granted to her by the will executed by N:—Held that the question whether P V was divided from N was res judicata under sec. 13 of the Code of Civil Procedure by reason of the decision in the former suit, although in that suit P V and L N were both defendants.—11 Madr. 204.

Where the uraima right over a certain devasam was vested in five trustees representing different illams, and a suit was brought by one of the trustees to recover certain property alleged to have been illegally alienated by three other trustees to a stranger and dismissed :—Held that the decree in such suit was a bar to a second suit brought for the same purpose by the fifth trustee, who had not been a party to the former suit, on the ground that he must be deemed to claim under the plaintiffs in the former suit within the meaning of sec. 13, expl. v., of the Code of Civil Procedure.—11 Madr. 191.

A Hindu widow obtained a decree in 1876, which provided that she should receive future maintenance annually at a certain rate, but did not specify any date on which it should become due. In 1887 she filed the present suit claiming arrears of maintenance at the rate fixed in the decree of 1876. Held, that the suit did not lie. Sabhanatha v. Lakshmi (I. L. R., 7 Madr. 80) distinguished.—12 Madr. 183.

A suit for two declarations filed in a Subordinate Court was valued by the plaintiffs at a sum in excess of the pecuniary jurisdiction of a District Munsif. It was pleaded that the matter in dispute was res judicata by reason of decrees passed in District Munsifs' Courts. No objection was taken in the Subordinate Court to the valuation of the suit. Held, that the plea of res judicata failed. Per MUTTUSAMI AYYAR, J.—For the purposes of jurisdiction the value of a suit for a mere declaratory decree must be taken to be what it would be if the suit were one of possession of the property regarding which the plaintiff seeks to have his title declared.—12 Madr. 323.

The karnam in a certain mitta sued to recover certain land as part of the mirasi property attached to his office. It appeared that the plaintiff's father and predecessor in office had sued by virtue of his office to recover the same land and that his suit had been dismissed. Held, that the plaintiff's claim was res judicata.—12 Madr. 235.

In 1883, A, the trustee of a certain charity, executed in favour of X and Y an agricultural lease for nine years and delivered over possession of the lands comprised in it, being part of the trust property. The lease contained a provision that it should be cancelled on default being made in payment of the rent and kist, and it contained no express covenant for quiet enjoyment. In 1887 default was made in payment of the rent and kist. A thereupon cancelled the lease and sued X and Y in a subordinate Court and obtained a decree for the arrear, the total amount of his claim being Rs. 2,807. In that suit X alleged that Y was merely a name-lender for A, who desired to benefit himself at the expense of the charity, and also that certain raiyats setting up a false claim had evicted X from the lands demised at the instigation of A, who had subsequently sought unsuccessfully to obtain further advantages for himself. The Subordinate Judge framed an issue on each of these allegations and recorded findings in the negative. In the same year X filed a suit for damages for breach of contract against A and Y in the High Court, repeating in his plaint the above allegations. When that suit came on for hearing, it was dismissed for default, Y being the only party who appeared. X now sued A again on the same cause of action, making the same allegations. Y was subsequently brought on to the record as being a necessary party to the suit, being joined as second defendant, but he applied to be and was struck off the record on the ground that the dismissal of the former suit in the High Court was final as against him :—Held, (1) that the suit was not bad for the non-joinder of the co-lessee as a plaintiff, nor for the reason that the plaintiff could not prosecute the suit against him ; (2) that the matters put in issue in the Subordinate Court were not res judicata by reason of the decision of that Court; (3) that the plaintiff disclosed a good cause of action against the lessor; (4) that even if the plaintiff had substantiated his allegations against his lessor, he would not have been entitled to recover the cost of civil and criminal proceedings against the raiyats who had evicted him.—15 Madr. 111.

In 1863 Balaji and Gyanu mortgaged certain land to one Gopal under a mortgage deed, which provided that, if the mortgage-deed was not paid at the stipulated time, the land should become the absolute property of Gopal, the mortgagee. In 1871 Gopal filed an ejectment suit against Balaji and Gyanu and one Hari, alleging that he had become owner of the land by operation of the above clause, and that he had subsequently let it to Hari, who now, in collusion with the other two defendants (the mortgagors), denied his title. The ejectment suit was subsequently converted into one for a declaration of Gopal's title as owner as against the mortgagors, Balaji and Gyanu, who claimed a right to redeem. A decree was passed in 1872 ordering Balaji and Gyanu to pay Rs. 100 to Gopal within one month, or, in default, to deliver up to him possession of the land. The money was not paid, and Vishnu, as purchaser from Gopal, got possession in execution of the above decree in August 1873. In September 1885, the plaintiff, as Balaji's heir and legal representative, filed a suit against Gopal and Vishnu to redeem the property. The Court of first instance dismissed the suit, holding that the plaintiff's claim was res judicata by virtue of the decree passed in 1872, and that the right to redeem was lost. In appeal, the Court reversed this decision, and passed a decree for redemption on payment of Rs. 100 by the plaintiff within six months. The defendant Vishnu then applied to the High Court under its extraordinary jurisdiction. Held that the plaintiff's claim was res judicata. In the suit brought by Gopal (the mortgagee) in 1871 he had claimed the land as owner through the forfeiture clause in the mortgage-deed, and the mortgagors insisting in that suit on a right still to redeem, the decree plainly meant to give them, by way of indulgence, one month within which to regain the land by payment of Rs. 100 to Gopal. It renewed the mortgage, but with a condition, which was a material part of the decree. They having failed to pay, the mortgage was extinguished. After the lapse of the month Gopal could not have recovered the Rs. 100. Had he sought to recover that money, he would have been met by the terms of the decree. He was entitled to the land, and nothing else. So, too, was Vishnu as his vendee. As, then, there was no debt that could be recovered, there was, and could be, no subsisting mortgage that could be redeemed. Held, also, that the suit was barred under art. 134 of Sch. II of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877)—Vishnu having purchased the land for value from Gopal, the ostensible owner, more than twelve years before suit. A tenant, repudiating the title under which he entered, becomes liable to immediate eviction at the option of the landlord.—12 Bom. 352.

The plaintiff Fatmabai in this suit alleged that both she and the defendant had been the wives of one Haji Adam Haji Ismail, a Cutchi Memon Mahomedan, who died intestate in 1878, leaving them his widows and other members of his family him surviving. The plaintiff had a daughter named Mariambai. Both plaintiff and defendant had since Haji Adam's death filed separate suits, in which they respectively claimed parts of his estate. In 1879 the defendant Aishabai had filed a suit (No. 616 of 1879) against the executors of her father-in-law's will, to recover certain money belonging to her husband. She obtained a decree, and the suit was referred to the Commissioner to make inquiries. In 1882 the present plaintiff Fatmabai and her daughter Mariambai filed a suit (No. 227 of 1882) against the present fendant Aishabai, claiming a share of the estate of her deceased husband Haji Adam. In that suit she alleged that she had been lawfully married to Haji Adam, and had ever since cohabited with him, and that her child Mariambai was his legitimate daughter; and she prayed (inter alia) for a declaration that she was the lawful wife and that Mariambai was the lawful daughter of Haji Adam. In the written statement filed by Aishabai in that suit she alleged that Fatmabai was not the lawful wife of Haji Adam, but only his kept mistress, and she denied that Fatmabai was entitled to share in his property. On the 3rd May 1882, an order of reference was made, by which both the above suits, viz., No. 616 of 1879 and No. 227 of 1882, "and all matters in difference thereon," were, by consent of all parties thereto, referred to arbitration. The arbitrators were the respective attorneys of the parties. Awards were duly made, and, on the 1st October 1883, decrees were passed in both suits in accordance with the said awards. By the decree and award in Suit No. 227 of 1882 Fatmabai was to be paid by Aishabai a sum of Rs. 55,000 in full satisfaction of all the claims of Fatmabai and her daughter Mariambai upon the estate of Haji Adam, the rest of the estate being declared the sole property of Aishabai. The material part of the decree was as follows: "This Court doth by consent pass judgment according to the said award . . . and doth order that the said Aishabai do pay for the said Fatmabai to her attorneys, Messrs. Tyabji and Dayabhai, within seven days after the date of this decree, the sum of Rs. 55,000 in full settlement of all and singular the claims and claim of the said Fatmabai and Mariambai or either of them against or upon the estate of the said Haji Adam Haji Ismail whatsoever and wheresoever . . . and doth declare that upon the payment of the said sum of Rs. 55,000 by the said Aishabai to the said Fatmabai as aforesaid, all claims whatsoever of the said Fatmabai and Mariambai or either of them upon the estate of the said Haji Adam Haji Ismail, in the hands of any person whatsoever, or upon the said Aishabai as heir of the said Haji Adam Haji Ismail personally or otherwise howsoever, shall be considered to have been fully satisfied by the said Aishabai, and absolutely waived for ever by the said Fatmabai and Mariambai; and doth further declare that the said Aishabai is entitled absolutely to all the rest of the estate and effects of the said Haji Adam Haji Ismail as her sole property as against the said Fatmabai and Mariambai." The defendant Aishabai in 1882 also filed another suit (No. 198 of 1882) against her father-in-law's executors, and recovered certain ornaments which she alleged to be her stridhan. In October 1886, Aishabai married again; and in December 1887, Fatmabai filed the present suit against her, alleging that, by the law and custom of Cutchi Memons, Aishabai had, by reason of such second marriage, forfeited all rights and interests to and in the property of her first husband Haji Adam, and also to the ornaments which she had recovered in the last mentioned suit, and she claimed that the said property and ornaments now belonged to her (Fatmabai) as sole surviving widow of the said Haji Adam. She prayed for a declaration that Aishabai had by her second marriage forfeited her right to the said property and ornaments, and that she (the plaintiff) was now entitled thereto; that the defendant might be ordered to deliver, &c., &c. The defendant Aishabai filed a written statement in which (inter alia) she contended that the plaintiff was never the wife of Haji Adam, but had been merely his kept mistress; that in suit No. 227 of 1882 she (the defendant) had denied that the plaintiff Fatmabai was the widow of Haji Adam; that the award and decree in that suit were not made upon the basis of her (Fatmabai's) being such widow, and she (the defendant) submitted that the said award and decree were a bar to the present suit. It was contended for the defendant (1) that the plaintiff had in the former suit prayed for a declaration that she had been the lawful wife of Haji Adam; that the decree in that suit contained no such declaration, and that her prayer must, therefore, be taken to have been refused under sec. 13 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), and that she was consequently not now entitled to sue as his widow—her claim to be his widow being res judicata; (2) that the decree in Suit No. 227 of 1882 expressly declared that the Rs. 55,000 awarded to the plaintiff by that decree was in full settlement of her all claim; and that she was, therefore, precluded from claiming against the estate in any possible contingency; and that, therefore, the defendant's remarriage gave her no right to sue; (3) that the latter part of the decree amounted to a release and assignment by the plaintiff Fatmabai to the defendant of all her (the plaintiff's right to the property in question. Held (1) that the status of the plaintiff as widow of Haji Adam was not res judicata. The question of the plaintiff's marriage with Haji Adam had not been controverted before the arbitrators and finally decided in a manner sufficient to establish res judicata. An award can only operate as an estoppel in respect of questions properly brought before and considered by the arbitrators. Expl. iii. of sec. 13 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882) does not apply where the Court is silent on a head of relief only claimed as ancillary to the main relief, and which by implication is rather granted than refused. It only applies where the Court is silent on an independent head of relief claimed and duly controverted. (2) That the declaration in the former decree, that the Rs. 55,000 was paid to the plaintiff in full settlement of all her claims upon the estate, did not bar the present suit. The previous suit was brought by Fatmabai as widow against Aishabai as widow. The present suit was brought by Fatmabai as widow against Aishabai remarried. The ground relied upon in the present suit was a new ground not known and not in existence at the time of the former suit, viz., that Aishabai was no longer a widow, and had, therefore, lost all legal right to the estate of her late husband. There was not the necessary condition to establish an estoppel, viz., eadem causa petendi and eadem conditio personarum. (3) But that the award and release contained in the decree constituted a binding agreement, by which the plaintiff Fatmabai for the sum of Rs. 55,000 waived all her rights against Aishabai, including the claim made in the present suit, which existed at the time of the award as a present right dependent on a contingency, and the suit, therefore, should be dismissed. At the hearing of a case on a preliminary issue the defendant, by whom the issue is raised, has the right to begin. Two counsel for the same party may be heard in argument of a preliminary issue. In appeal it was—Held, affirming the decision of Scott, J., that the present suit was not barred under sec. 13 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882) by reason of the former suit No. 227 of 1882. Although Fatmabai litigated in the former suit as widow of Haji Adam as she did in the present suit, the matters "substantially in issue" in the two suits were quite distinct. In the former suit she claimed her share in the estate of Haji Adam as one of his lawful heirs entitled to succeed to him on his death. In the present suit her claim was based on a subsequent event by reason of which she contended that Aishabai's share was by law and custom forfeited, and reverted to the estate of Haji Adam. Held, also (affirming the decision of Scott, J.,) that the status of plaintiff as widow of Haji Adam was not res judicata. The plaint in Suit No. 227 of 1882, no doubt, asked for a declaration that she was the widow of Haji Adam, and no such declaration had been made. But the declaration was not sought for by way of specific relief, but simply as the ground for the real and substantial relief to obtain which the suit was instituted, viz., the payment by Aishabai of Fatmabai's share of Haji Adam's estate. Expl. iii. of sec. 13 was not intended to apply to such a case. Held (reversing the decision of SCOTT, J.), that the declaration in the former decree, that the Rs. 55,000 were paid to the plaintiff in full settlement of all her claims upon the estate, did not bar the present suit. The words of the award and decree were to be read with reference to the character in which the parties were litigating as widows of the deceased Haji Adam claiming to succeed to his property on his death. Such general language was to be controlled by the circumstances of the case. Upon the proper construction of the award there was no such clear intention shown to include in the settlement a contingent claim of the special nature now made as to preclude the plaintiff from setting it up in the present suit.—13 Bom. 242.
